Ⓜ  EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 85148-2. (i) L. Symphony Ch., N. Sinfonia, Hickox; (ii) Lott; (iii) Hodgson, Morton, Roberts, Cambridge University Musical Soc.; (iv) Ch. of King's College, Cambridge, Band of the Royal Military School of Music, New Philh. O, Ledger – PARRY: I Was Glad ***

Ledger is superb in capturing the swagger and panache of the Coronation Ode, flouting all thoughts of potentially bad taste. There is excellent singing and playing, although the male soloists do not quite match their female colleagues. The spectacular (1969) recording, made in King's College Chapel with extra brass bands, makes a splendid impact, with the resonant acoustics creating a jumbo Land of Hope and Glory at the close. The remastering does not seem to make the sound as ideally sharp as it might be, but it remains a compulsive listening experience nevertheless. Hickox conducts a rousing digital version of The Spirit of England, magnificently defying the dangers of wartime bombast, with the London Symphony Chorus on radiant form. With a beautiful performance of O hearken thou, Elgar's rousing version of the National Anthem, and Parry's I was glad, this CD is a must for all Elgarians.

The Dream of Gerontius (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * Warner DVD 3984 22351-2. Langridge, Wyn-Rogers, Miles, BBC Ch. & SO, A. Davis

Andrew Davis is one of the most recent conductors in a distinguished line (including Sargent, Boult and Barbirolli, and even Britten) for whom Gerontius has a special place in his affections. In the introduction to this performance, created to celebrate the BBC's 75th anniversary, he tells us that the work has always been part of his being, and his dedication surely comes out in every bar of the music. It is a truly inspired account with a wonderfully flexible forward momentum – in the great Praise to the Holiest in the Height chorus, the acceleration to the climax and the final pulling back is breathtaking. The BBC Chorus sings superbly, and the close of the work, illuminated by Catherine Wyn-Rogers's infinitely touching 'Farewell' makes an even more moving apotheosis. Philip Langridge is at his very finest as Gerontius, deeply involved and colouring the words with remarkably controlled intensity; and Alastair Miles, resonantly combining the roles of Priest and Angel of Agony, is tremendously commanding, with the augmented BBC Chorus on top form, joining him to make the 'Go forth' sequence at the end of Part One a truly riveting conclusion. Here the rich reverberation of St Paul's Cathedral adds to the magnificence of the climax, underpinned by the organ pedals; and in the infamous Demons' chorus the clouding of the resonance adds to the atmospheric impact when Davis takes it so breathtakingly fast. Altogether this is the finest recorded Gerontius ever, and not only is it an advantage to follow the words of Cardinal Newman's poem in the surtitles, but Bob Coles's imaginative camera placement means that the text is poignantly illustrated by images from the glorious interior of the cathedral itself. Altogether a magnificent achievement, and James Naughtie's introduction is well worth having too.

The Dream of Gerontius, Op. 38 (CD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Hallé CDHLD 7520 (2). Groves, Coote, Terfel, Hallé Ch. & Youth Ch., Hallé O, Elder

 Chan. 8641/2. Palmer, A. Davies, Howell, L. Symphony Ch. & LSO, Hickox – PARRY: Anthems ***

Ⓑ () CfP mono 585 9042 (2). Lewis, Thomas, Cameron, Huddersfield Ch. Soc., RLPO, Sargent – WALTON: Belshazzar's Feast ()

(i) The Dream of Gerontius; (ii) Cello Concerto

() Testament mono SBT 2025 (2). (i) Nash, Ripley, Noble, Walker, Huddersfield Ch. Soc., Liverpool PO; (ii) P. Tortelier, BBC SO, Sargent

(i) The Dream of Gerontius; (ii) The Music Makers, Op. 69

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66540-2 (2). (i) Gedda, Watts, Lloyd, Alldis Ch., LPO Ch., New Philh. O; (ii) Baker, LPO Ch., LPO, Boult

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 91978-2 (2). (i; ii) Baker, (i) Lewis, Borg, Hallé & Sheffield Philh. Ch., Hallé O, Barbirolli; (ii) LPO Ch., LPO, Boult

(i) The Dream of Gerontius; (ii) Sea Pictures

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 73579-2 (2). (i) Baker, Lewis, Borg, Hallé & Sheffield Philharmonic Ch., Amb. S., Hallé O; (ii) Baker, LSO, Barbirolli

Mark Elder's Hallé recording of Gerontius now goes straight to the top of the list, alongside Andrew Davis's DVD version, which has an added dimension. But Elder conjures consistently inspired playing from the Hallé Orchestra and magnificent singing from the choir, creating remarkable warmth and tension in pianissimos and wonderfully expansive climaxes in a recording which has the widest possible dynamic range. One has only to sample the 'Demons' Chorus', Go forth, or Praise to the Holiest to experience the power and weight of the vocal projection. But the wonderful acoustics of Manchester's Bridgewater Hall and Andrew Keener's engineering also come into the matter, adding a bloom to the overall sound, yet (with Mark Elder's direction) showing countless detail in Elgar's wonderfully imaginative score, hardly realized before on record. The soloists are splendid too and every word is clear. Paul Groves is a most affecting Gerontius, warm-toned and intense, and (while one does not forget Janet Baker), Alice Coote sings radiantly as the Angel, especially in her gentle 'Farewell'. Bryn Terfel is predictably commanding in both his roles, while not eclipsing memories of either Alastair Miles (with Andrew Davis) or Robert Lloyd (with Boult). But one of the most memorable parts of the performance is the superbly played Prelude, in which Mark Elder manages to encapsulate the whole work in ten and a half minutes. This is well worth playing separately on its own.

Boult's total dedication is matched by his powerful sense of drama. Robert Lloyd is a magnificent Priest and Angel of Agony and the spiritual feeling is intense throughout, but the human qualities of the narrative are also fully realized. Nicolai Gedda in the role of Gerontius brings a new dimension to this characterization. He is perfectly matched by Helen Watts as the Angel. It is a fascinating vocal partnership and is matched by the commanding manner which Robert Lloyd finds for both his roles. The orchestral playing is always responsive, and often, like the choral singing, very beautiful, while the dramatic passages bring splendid incisiveness and bold assurance from the singers. The 1976 Kingsway Hall recording has been remastered quite stunningly: the sound has great presence as well as ideal ambient warmth and atmosphere. It is technically, as well as musically, a truly great recording. The performance and recording of The Music Makers, made at Abbey Road a decade earlier, is also very successful. If only the whole piece lived up to the uninhibited choral setting of the Nimrod variation from Enigma, it would be another Elgar masterpiece. Neverthless, Boult's dedication, matched by Janet Baker's masterly eloquence, holds the listener throughout, and the current transfer has brought a new vividness to the choral contribution.

Barbirolli's red-blooded reading of Gerontius is among the most heart-warmingly dramatic ever recorded; here it is offered, in a first-rate CD transfer, in coupling with Janet Baker's rapt and heartfelt account of Sea Pictures. No one on record can match her in this version of Gerontius for the fervent intensity and glorious tonal range of her singing as the Angel, one of her supreme recorded performances; and the clarity of CD intensifies the experience. In terms of pure dedication the emotional thrust of Barbirolli's reading conveys the deepest spiritual intensity. The recording may have its hints of distortion, but the sound is overwhelming. Richard Lewis gives one of his finest recorded performances, searching and intense, and, though Kim Borg is unidiomatic in the bass role, his bass tones are rich in timbre, even if his projection lacks the dramatic edge of Robert Lloyd on the reissued Boult set. The alternative coupling of Boult'sMusic Makers* and Barbirolli's Gerontius (with Janet Baker common to both) now comes in EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Sir Malcolm Sargent in 1945 paced the score perfectly, drawing incandescent singing from the Huddersfield Choral Society. The soloists too, superbly led by Heddle Nash as Gerontius, have a freshness and clarity rarely matched, with Nash's ringing tenor consistently clean in attack. Though Gladys Ripley's fine contralto is caught with a hint of rapid flutter, she matches the others in forthright clarity, with Dennis Noble as the Priest and Norman Walker as the Angel of the Agony both strong and direct. The mono recording captures detail excellently; even if inevitably the dynamic range is limited and the chorus lacks something in body, such a climax as Praise to the Holiest has thrilling bite. The first and finest of Paul Tortelier's three recordings of the Elgar Cello Concerto makes an ideal coupling, emotionally intense within a disciplined frame.

Hickox's performance is deeply understanding, not always ideally powerful in the big climaxes but paced most sympathetically, with a natural understanding of Elgarian rubato. The soloists make a characterful team. Arthur Davies is a strong and fresh-toned Gerontius; Gwynne Howell in the bass roles is powerful if not always ideally steady; and Felicity Palmer, though untraditionally bright of tone with her characterful vibrato, is strong and illuminating. Though on balance Boult's soloists are even finer, Hickox's reading in its expressive warmth conveys much love for this score, and the last pages with their finely sustained closing Amen are genuinely moving.

The outstanding alternative Sargent performance of The Dream of Gerontius brings a great spiritual perception and, as with Boult, the closing pages of the first and second parts have a rapt intensity that is very moving, without any hint of emotional indulgence. EMI chose the excerpt of Go Forth Upon Thy Journey (with John Cameron in superb voice) to include in their anthology tribute to Sir Malcolm Sargent and this shows, as does the whole performance, an inspiration which this conductor only rarely found in the recording studio. Richard Lewis is a fine Gerontius and his dialogues with Marjorie Thomas have a beauty and stillness that is totally memorable. The one failure of the Sargent performance is the Demons' Chorus, in which the Huddersfield Chorus fail to let themselves go. But everywhere else the singing is magnificent, one of their finest achievements on disc, and the mono recording is generally worthy of it.

(i) The Kingdom, Op. 51; (ii) Coronation Ode, Op. 34

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 7 64209-2. (i) M. Price, Minton, Young, Shirley-Quirk, LPO Ch., LPO, Boult; (ii) Lott, Hodgson, Morton, Cambridge University Music Soc., King's College, Cambridge, Ch., New Philh. O, Band of Royal Military School of Music, Kneller Hall, Ledger

The Kingdom; Sursum corda; Sospiri

 Chan. 8788/9. Marshall, Palmer, A. Davies, Wilson-Johnson, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

Boult was devoted to The Kingdom, identifying with its comparative reticence, and his dedication emerges clearly throughout a glorious performance. The melody which Elgar wrote to represent the Holy Spirit is one of the noblest that even he created, and the soprano aria, The sun goeth down (beautifully sung by Margaret Price), leads to a deeply affecting climax. The other soloists also sing splendidly, and the only reservation concerns the chorus, which is not quite as disciplined as it might be and sounds a little too backward for some of the massive effects which cap the power of the work. The coupling of the Coronation Ode is handy and certainly welcome, rather than particularly appropriate. Both works are generously cued.

Hickox proves a warmly understanding Elgarian and his manner is ripely idiomatic. His soloists make a characterful quartet. Margaret Marshall is the sweet, tender soprano, rising superbly to a passionate climax in her big solo, The sun goeth down, and Felicity Palmer is a strong and positive – if not ideally warm-toned – Mary Magdalene. David Wilson-Johnson points the words of St Peter most dramatically, and Arthur Davies is the radiant tenor. The fill-ups are not generous: the intense little string adagio, Sospiri, and the early Sursum corda.

The Light of Life (Lux Christi), Op. 29

 Chan. 9208. Howarth, Finnie, A. Davies, Shirley-Quirk, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

Notably more than Sir Charles Groves in the earlier, EMI recording, Hickox conveys the warmth of inspiration of The Light of Life in glowing sound, with the chorus incandescent. The solo singing is richly characterful, even if the microphone catches an unevenness in the singing of the mezzo, Linda Finnie, and of John Shirley-Quirk; nevertheless he sings nobly as Jesus in the climactic 'Good Shepherd' solo. Arthur Davies, as the blind man, and the soprano, Judith Howarth, are both excellent, singing with clear, fresh tone.

The Music Makers; Sea Pictures, Op. 37

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557710. Connolly, Bournemouth Ch. & SO, Wright

Any new recording of either of these works invites immediate comparison with the classic versions with Dame Janet Baker, and Sarah Connolly comes nearer than any current British mezzo to offering a modern alternative, not only in the rich, firm quality of her voice but in the dedication of her singing. In each of the songs of Sea Pictures she brings out the distinctive qualities of Elgar's writing, each one so well contrasted with the others, with finely controlled legato phrasing and shading of dynamic. In her contribution to the big cantata, The Music Makers, she offers the element of dedication so essential, with the chorus singing purposefully and Simon Wright drawing strong playing from the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra. Excellent sound.

The Spirit of England

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7172. Gritton, Kennedy, BBC Ch. & SO, Lloyd-Jones – KELLY: Elegy: In Memoriam Rupert Brooke; ELKINGTON: Out of the Mist ; GURNEY: War Elegy; PARRY: The Chivalry of the Sea ***

In The Spirit of England Elgar's original intention was to have two soloists, giving the outer movements ('The Fourth of August' and 'For the fallen') to a soprano and the middle movement ('To women') to a tenor. Here, for the first time, a tenor, the talented young Andrew Kennedy, takes over for the central setting, and certainly the result is a degree more effective than with a single soloist. David Lloyd-Jones conducts a powerful performance, bitingly dramatic in 'The Fourth of August', with the chorus in superb form, and with the setting of 'For the fallen' – its words much the best known – aptly elegiac, the more powerful for being taken at a flowing speed. Susan Gritton sings brightly and with clarity.

3 Partsongs, Op. 18; 4 Partsongs, Op. 53; 2 Partsongs, Op. 71; 2 Partsongs, Op. 73; 5 Partsongs from the Greek Anthology, Op. 45; Death on the hills; Evening scene; Go, song of mine; How calmly the evening; The Prince of Sleep; Weary wind of the West

 Chan. 9269. Finzi Singers, Spicer

Elgar's partsongs span virtually the whole of his creative career, and the 22 examples on the Finzi Singers' disc range from one of the most famous, My love dwelt in a northern land, of 1889 to settings of Russian poems (in English translation) written during the First World War. The Finzi Singers under Paul Spicer give finely tuned, crisp and intense readings of all the pieces.

Sea Pictures (song-cycle), Op. 37

🔑 ❁ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 62886-2. Baker, LSO, Barbirolli – Cello Concerto (with Cockaigne Overture) *** ❁

 ABC Classics (ADD) 461 922-2. Elkins, Queensland SO, Albert – SHIELD: Rosina; WILLIAMSON: The Growing Castle ***

Like du Pré, Baker is an artist who has the power to convey on record the vividness of a live performance. With the help of Barbirolli she makes the cycle far more convincing than it usually seems, with often trite words clothed in music that seems to transform them. On CD, the voice is caught with extra bloom, and the beauty of Elgar's orchestration is enhanced by the subtle added definition. This unique coupling has now been reissued at mid-price as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Albert's warm-hearted, atmospheric and beautiful account of the Sea Pictures makes an unexpected fill-up to Shield's sparkling rustic opera, Rosina. Margreta Elkins's voice is well captured in the 1983 recording. Though the orchestra lacks richness, it is perfectly acceptable. Texts are included, along with very full documentation.

The Starlight Express (incidental music), Op. 78

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 585 9072. Masterson, Hammond-Stroud, LPO, Handley

It has been left to latter-day Elgarians to revive a 1916 score (incidental music for a children's play) that was not a success in its day but that reveals the composer at his most charming. But the ear is constantly beguiled. Much of the orchestral music has that nostalgically luminous quality that Elgarians will instantly recognize. Both soloists are excellent, and the LPO plays with warmth and sympathy. The 1976 recording is excellent and it matters little that, in order to fit the piece complete on to a single CD, some minor cuts have had to be made.

EL-KHOURY, Bechara

(born 1957)

(i) Piano Concerto, Op. 36; (ii) Méditation poétique for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 41; (iii) Poèmes for Piano & Orchestra: 1, Op. 11; 2, Op. 22; Sérénades for Strings: 1: Feuilles d'Automne; 2, Op. 20

(BB)  Naxos 8.557692. (i) El Bacha; (ii) Poulet; (iii) Lively; Cologne O, Dervaux

The Piano Concerto is very approachable, with its varying conflicting moods well projected by the excellent soloist; it brings opportunities for virtuoso rhetoric. Both here and in the two Poèmes for piano and orchestra, played by a different but equally persuasive soloist, the combination of vividly coloured orchestral drama and lyricism reminds one of film music. But undoubtedly the finest concertante work here is the comparatively innocent Méditation poétique for violin and orchestra, which is beautifully played by Gérard Poulet. (Incidentally, these performances were recorded 'live', which accounts for a couple of slips from the horns.) The two amiable String Serenades, the first autumnal, the second more searching and ardent, would – like the Méditation – be welcome at any concert.

Danse des aigles, Op. 9; Les Dieux de la terre (Image symphonique); Le Liban en flammes (Lebanon in Flames), Op. 14; La Nuit et le fou (Night and the Fool): Suite Symphonique, Op. 29; Le Regard de Christ, Op. 2; Requiem pour orchestre, Op. 18

(BB)  Naxos 8.557691. Cologne O, Dervaux

The CD of orchestral works opens with a catchy and brightly scored Danse des aigles, followed by the darker symphonic poem, Les Dieux de la terre, and the suite, La Nuit et le fou, both highly atmospheric and imaginatively scored. The other two symphonic poemes, Le Liban en flammes (inspired by the same events as the Requiem) and the shorter and much more dramatic Regard du Christ, are full of incident. El-Khoury's orchestral sound-world is very much his own: he uses a remarkable range of orchestral effects. Undoubtedly the finest of these orchestral works is the Requiem of 1980 with its subtitle ('For the Lebanese Martyrs of the War'). Opening like a traditional funeral march, it even quotes briefly the rhythm of Siegfried's funeral music and develops into an agonized lament, interrupted by warlike reminiscences; but it remains affirmative, ending with a dramatic final gesture of regret. Pierre Dervaux is a highly sympathetic exponent of this repertoire and these are all fine, dedicated performances.

(i; ii) Les Fleuves englouties (The engulfed rivers), Op. 64; (i; iii) New York, Tears and Hope, Op. 65; Sextuor (arr. for 24 violins), Op. 58. (iv) (Piano) Fragments oubliées, Op. 66; (v) Waves, Op. 60

(BB)  Naxos 8.570134. (i) LSO; (ii) Harding; (iii) Brabbins; (iv) Dimitri Vassilakis; (v) Hideki Nagano

In many ways this is the finest of these El-Khoury compilations, and in New York, Tears and Hope offers the first major orchestral piece concisely reflecting the human experience of 9/11. Opening poignantly, it moves to a petrifying climax, and ends elegiacally, but without a trace of despair. The intensely concentrated Sextet (arranged for full string ensemble at the request of Shlomo Mintz) is only five minutes in length, and might be regarded as a companion work, a wistfully dark lamentation, but suddenly quickening and moving out of the clouds. Les Fleuves englouties is a series of impressionistic miniatures, contrasting serenity and struggle with confident life-assertion. The two closing piano pieces similarly move from reflection to responses which are more fragmented but positive. The performances are very persuasive indeed and excellently recorded.

Symphony (The Ruins of Beirut); Hill of Strangeness; Twilight Harmonies; Wine of the Clouds

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557043. Nat. SO of Ukraine, Sirenko

The Symphony was composed (in 1985) in the wake of the civil war in the Lebanon and is a powerful, tragically arresting work, laid out in four fairly traditional movements. But it is without any kind of conventional development of ideas; in essence it is a kaleidoscopic set of brief variants. Even more than the vividly scored symphony, the three shorter works rely a great deal on orchestral textures, with contrasting sonorities, dynamics, mood and colouring, all skilfully manipulated to give an illusion of forward movement (rather than development). The brass scoring is emphatic, with exuberant use of the horns. The restless symphonic meditation, Hill of Strangeness ('Colline de l'étrange') 'is a journey through a fog pierced by glimpses of light' and is concerned with 'solitude and the struggle of the light to come through dark clouds'. It is certainly enigmatic. Harmonies crépusculaires was written in memory of the conductor Pierre Dervaux and is essentially valedictory in feeling, but the finality of death is powerfully conveyed by more shattering brass interruptions, with an answering tolling bell. The dream-like Wine of the Clouds ('Le Vin des nuages') 'is a confrontation between silence and the violence of nature', opening impressionistically and ending with a torrent of sound, including the composer's characteristic horn glissandi.

EMMANUEL, Maurice
(1862–1938)

6 Chansons bourguignonnes du Pays de Beaune

 Erato 0630 17577-2 (2). Upshaw, Lyon Op. O, Nagano – CANTELOUBE: Songs of the Auvergne: Series 1–5 ***

Maurice Emmanuel's attractive orchestral arrangements enhance these Burgundian songs from the Beaune region, in very much the same way as Canteloube's Chants d'Auvergne. The six included here are nicely contrasted, and they are delightfully sung and most idiomatically accompanied. Le Pommier d'août and Noël are particularly engaging, but most memorable of all is the haunting closing Farewell to the shepherdess.

ENESCU, Georges (1881–1955)

Romanian Rhapsodies 1–2, Op. 11/1–2

Ⓜ  Chan. 6625. RSNO, Järvi – BARTÓK: Hungarian Pictures; WEINER: Hungarian Folkdance Suite ***

Järvi has a warmly idiomatic feeling for these amiable, peasant-inspired rhapsodies, moulding phrases and linking passages with spontaneity, drawing committed playing, with plenty of subtle touches from the Royal Scottish National Orchestra, ripely recorded. Although the first of the two rhapsodies is much the more popular, and justly so, the second is also lively and colourful. They are now aptly coupled with comparably entertaining and colourful folk-inspired music by Bartók and Weiner.

Romanian Rhapsodies 1–2; (i) Symphonie concertante for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 8; Suites for Orchestra: 1 & 2 in C, Opp. 9 & 20; 3 (Villageoise) Op. 27; (ii) Poème roumaine, Op. 1

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 62032-2 (2). Monte Carlo PO, Foster, with (i) Maggio-Ormezowski; (ii) Male Ch. of Colonne O, & Ens. Audita Nova

The Symphonie concertante is an attractively written piece, again using national dances. The cello soloist is excellent. The first two of the Three Suites for Orchestra are well crafted without being in the very first rank, yet they are expertly laid out for the orchestra and have a charm and appeal that ought to ensure them a wider following. The Third (Village) Suite brings a series of pastoral scenes and more national dances to conclude. The Poème roumaine has lyrical appeal and uses an evocative wordless male chorus with bells at the opening, and later a solo violin; it features the Romanian national anthem as its finale. All this is well enough served by the Monte Carlo Orchestra under Lawrence Foster and is given the benefit of natural, spacious recording.

Symphonies (i) 1 in E flat, Op. 13; 2 in A, Op. 17; (ii; iii) 3 in C, Op. 21; (ii; iii; iv) Vox Maris (Symphonic Poem), Op. 31

🔑 (B)  EMI 5 86604-2 (2). (i) Monte Carlo PO, (ii) O Nat. de Lyon; Lawrence Foster; with (iii) Les Eléments Chamber Ch.; (iv) Brenciu; Sydney

The First and Second Symphonies are scored with great flair. They have never been played with such vigour and conviction as here, nor as well recorded. Lawrence Foster, who has recorded a good deal of Enescu, directs the Monte Carlo Orchestra with tremendous fire and an infectious enthusiasm, and the players respond as if their lives depended on it. The even more opulent Third Symphony (1918) is more intractable; but Foster sustains the fullest tension in the ecstatic finale with its wordless chorus (helped by the passionate singing of the Les Eléments Choir). Vox Maris takes the unearthly evocation a stage further, using offstage soprano and tenor soloists and chorus, and even drawing on a motif borrowed from Oedipe. Performance and recording show Lawrence Foster again at his finest, with another impressive choral contribution, although the wobbly soprano soloist is not an asset.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonatas 1 in F min., 2 in C, Op. 26

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570582. Buruiana, Tchiba

Although published together as Op. 26, the First Sonata comes from 1898 (between the first two violin sonatas) and the Second, written for Casals, from 1935. The First is a long work, a little short of 40 minutes, and is somewhat Brahmsian in character, while its successor lasts half an hour. Both are beautifully crafted, inventive and thoroughly rewarding musically. They are expertly played by the young Romanian cellist Laura Buruiana with her German-based Hungarian partner, Martin Tchiba, and are recorded with great presence and clarity, though the cellist is at times balanced too reticently. Nonetheless strongly recommended.

(i) String Octet in C, Op. 7 (trans. for O by Lawrence Foster); (ii) Violin Sonata 3, Op. 25

(N) (*) Virgin 9 519331-2. (i) Monte Carlo PO, Foster; (ii) Sokolov, Kosenko

The Octet is effectively transcribed for strings and expertly played by the Monte Carlo Orchestra. Readers may well have preferred it in the composer's original form. It is all very musically done, as indeed is the familiar Sonata No. 3 in the Romanian style.

Dixtuor, Op. 14

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554173. Oslo PO Wind Soloists – DVOŘÁK: Wind Serenade; JANÁČEK: Mládí ***

The Dixtuor or Decet is one of Enescu's most glorious scores: its sophisticated counterpoint and idyllic charm are most appealing. The plaintive slow movement is haunting. The Oslo Wind Soloists are artists of quality whose reading challenges the finest at any price. Crisp rhythms, a good sense of line and tonal finesse. These artists recorded this piece on the Victoria label in the early 1990s, but these are different and better accounts in every way.

Impressions d'enfance (for Violin & Piano), Op. 28

 Avie AV 2059. Graffin, Désert – DEBUSSY: Violin Sonata; Nocturne et Scherzo, etc.; RAVEL: Sonata; Tzigane ***

Impressions d'enfance is a series of charming nostalgic glimpses of the composer's childhood, beautifully evoked in the performance here. Opening with the sound of a fiddler on the street, there follow brief portraits, first a melacholy old beggar, then a stream trickling at the bottom of a garden, a bird in its cage and a cuckoo clock, a cricket; then, more atmospherically, moonlight and the wind in the chimney; and, finally sunrise, with night-time banished in a rhapsodic finale in which one feels the composer returning forcefully to the present.

Piano Quartet 2 in D min., Op. 30; Piano Quintet, Op. 29

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557159. Solomon Ens.

The Piano Quartet No. 2 (1943–4) has something of the subtlety and finesse of late Fauré and, like the Quintet, is a work of real substance which rewards the serious listener. This music does not try to impress with effect or originality but by its continuity of thought and finely paced musical development. The Solomon Ensemble play well but the balance is not ideal: there is not enough air round the sound and the first violin is placed too reticently, hence the reservation. Strongly recommended all the same, particularly at its competitive price.

String Quartets 1 in E flat; 2 in G, Op. 22/1–2

(BB)  Naxos 8.554721. Ad Libitum Qt

The Enescu quartets share the same opus number but are separated by over three decades. Few works by this extraordinary musician are without their rewards, and although neither quartet rises to the same imaginative heights as Oedipe or the Dixtuor they are full of good things. They are well played by this fine Romanian team and priced at the right level. The adventurous collector will not baulk at a fiver for repertoire that he or she does not know and will find the outlay worthwhile.

Violin Sonatas 2, Op. 6; 3, Op. 25; Torso

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55103. A. Oprean, J. Oprean

Enescu's Second Violin Sonata is an early work, written in 1899 when he was 17 and still studying in Paris with Fauré. The Third (1926), together with the opera, Oedipe, is his masterpiece and shows an altogether different personality; the difference in stylistic development could hardly be more striking. Adelina Oprean is thoroughly inside the idiom, as befits a Romanian, and she deals with its subtle rubati and quarter-tones to the manner born. She exhibits excellent musical taste but her partner (and brother) is somewhat less scrupulous in his observance of dynamic nuance. The additional Torso is a sonata movement from 1911, which was published only in the 1980s.

Violin Sonata 3 in A min., Op. 25

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111127. Y. & H. Menuhin – BACH: Unaccompanied Violin Sonata in C; PIZZETTI: Violin Sonata 1 in A ()

Yehudi Menuhin and his sister Hephzibah recorded this wonderful Sonata in Paris in 1936 in the presence of the composer. Their evident love for the piece shines through. Yehudi was 19 at the time and Hephzibah 15, and they both possess a captivating youthful ardour – and the sound is remarkably fine for the period.

Violin Sonata 3 in A min., Op. 25/1 (excerpt; DVD version)

(*) EMI DVD 4904529. Y. & H. Menuhin (bonus: MENDELSSOHN: Variations sérieuses, Op. 54) – BARTÓK: Contrasts for piano, violin & cello, etc.; FRANCK: Violin Sonata in A; SCHUBERT: Piano Trio 1 in B flat **(*)

The ORTF recording was made presumably at the Maison de la Radio in 1972 and, like the Bartók Contrasts, is in colour. We are given just the Moderato malinconico, which is a pity. On the whole the camerawork serves us well, though there is some superimposition of the two artists which may not please all tastes, and the colour is a little faded.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonatas: 1 & 3, Op. 24/1 & 3; Nocturne in D flat; Pièce sur le nom de Fauré; Prelude & Fugue in C; Scherzo

 Avie AV 2081 (2). Borac

Suites 1–3

 Avie AV 0013. Borac

Luiza Borac won the 1991 Enescu International Prize. She proves a dedicated and authoritative interpreter of this interesting and rewarding music. This repertoire is rarely (if indeed ever) encountered in the recital room or in broadcast programmes, which enhances the importance of this set. Luiza Borac covers the formative years in the Prelude and Fugue of 1903 through to the Third Sonata of 1934. The First Sonata shows the influence of Debussy and Ravel, while the Third (written after the completion of his masterpiece, the opera Oedipe) will come as something of a revelation to the listener. The three Suites are equally rewarding. Borac plays with total commitment and is well served by the recording, made in St Dunstan's Church, Mayfield.

Oedipe (complete)

(N) (B)  EMI 2 08833-2 (2). Van Dam, Hendricks, Fassbaender, Lipovšek, Monte-Carlo PO, Foster

This is an almost ideal recording (from 1990) of a rare and long-neglected masterpiece, with a breathtaking cast of stars backing up a supremely fine performance by José van Dam in the central role Oedipus. The idiom is tough and adventurous, as well as warmly exotic, with vivid choral effects, a revelation to anyone who knows Enescu only from his Romanian Rhapsody. The only reservation is that the pace tends to be on the slow side; but the incandescence of the playing of the Monte Carlo Philharmonic under Lawrence Foster and the richness of the singing and recorded sound amply compensate for that, making this a musical feast. Fortunately the set is reissued with a full libretto and translation.

FALLA, Manuel de (1876–1946)

(i; ii) Harpsichord Concerto; (iii; iv; v) El amor brujo; (iv, vi, vii) Nights in the Gardens of Spain; (viii) The Three-Cornered Hat; (ix) La vida breve: Interlude and Dance; (x) Homenaje 'Le tombeau de Claude Debussy'; (vii) 4 Spanish Pieces; (xi) 7 Canciones populares españolas; (ii; xii) Psyché

🔑 ✿ (B) * Double Decca (ADD/DDD) 466 128-2 (2). (i) Constable; (ii) L. Sinf., Rattle; (iii) New Philh. O; (iv) Frühbeck de Burgos; (v) Mistral; (vi) LPO; (vii) De Larrocha; (viii) Montreal SO, Dutoit; (ix) SRO, Ansermet; (x) Fernández; (xi) Horne, Katz; (xii) with Jennifer Smith

A myriad of performances have been perceptively gathered together for this 'Essential Falla' compilation, which is surely rightly named. Dutoit's 1984 complete version of The Three-Cornered Hat is wonderfully atmospheric as well as brilliantly played. Recorded in 1966, Frühbeck de Burgos's El amor brujo also enjoys exceptionally vivid sound, yet with plenty of light and shade, and the control of atmosphere in the quieter passages is masterly, while Nati Mistral has the vibrant, open-throated production of a real flamenco singer.

Alicia de Larrocha's later digital version of Nights in the Gardens of Spain is unsurpassed among modern recordings. Her playing of the Four Spanish Pieces glitters. The other shorter works are equally worthwhile. Ansermet's Interlude and Dance from La vida breve, with its melodramatic opening and lively dance section, is always enjoyable, and Marilyn Horne's Spanish Folksongs are vibrantly idiomatic. John Constable's crisply vivid account of the delightful Harpsichord Concerto (with Rattle) and the haunting rarity, Psyché, for voice – Jennifer Smith a fine soloist – and orchestra complete an extraordinarily generous survey.

(iv; vii) Harpsichord Concerto; (i–iii) El amor brujo; (iv–vi) Nights in the Gardens of Spain; (i; ii; v) The Three-cornered Hat; (iv) Piano: Fantasia bética; 4 Piezas espanolas; (i; viii–ix) Psyché; (i; viii); Soneto a Córdoba; (i; iv) 7 Spanish Popular Songs

ⓃⒷ  EMI (ADD) 2 CD 237595-2 (2)

(i) De los Angeles; (ii) Philh. O; (iii) Giulini; (iv) Soriano; (v) Frühbeck de Burgos; (vi) O de la Société des Concerts du Conservatoire; (vii) Debost, Casier, Boutard, Nérini, Cordier; (viii) Challan; (ix) Gérard, Trio à cordes français

Not too much to grumble about here. Giulini's El amor brujo dates from the early 1960s, the Philharmonia's playing is polished, and Guilini produces civilized, colourful performances. The recording too is brightly coloured, although noticeably resonant in The Three Cornered Hat where, although the performance (under Frühbeck de Burgos) is excellent, it has not the red-blooded vigour which others have brought to it. Victoria de los Angeles's contribution is an undoubted point in its favour. She finishes off the first CD with 7 Spanish Popular Songs, colourfully and idiomatically sung, dating from 1962. Nights in the Gardens of Spain, which opens CD 2, is superbly done, with both atmosphere and brilliance in equal amount. The splendid Harpsichord Concerto makes for a sharply piquant contrast, and then de los Angeles returns for a beautiful performance of the comparatively rare Psyché, with the delicious accompaniment of string trio, flute and harp. The piano items are played with much relish by Soriano. Very good 1960s sound throughout, well transferred.

El amor brujo (complete)

🔑 ✿ * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4005-2. Lane, BBC SO, Stokowski – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 7 *(); BRITTEN: Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra **(*)

Stokowski's BBC account of Falla's El amor brujo was given at a Prom in 1964 and has all the electricity of a live occasion. This is an outstanding and thrilling performance. In almost every movement Stokowski opts for fast speeds, with the players of the BBC Symphony Orchestra challenged to the limit, as in the Ritual Fire Dance, which is electrifying. Consistently Stokowski finds colour and atmosphere, and his soloist, Gloria Lane, with her fruity mezzo tone-colours, sounds comparably idiomatic. In short, this is the most gripping and hypnotic performance on or off record, and the recording quality is very good indeed.

(i) El amor brujo (complete); (ii) Nights in the Gardens of Spain. La vida breve: Interlude and Dance

Ⓜ  Chan. 10232X. (i) Walker; (ii) Fingerhut; LSO, Simon

The brightly lit Chandos recording emphasizes the vigour of Geoffrey Simon's very vital account of El amor brujo, and Sarah Walker's powerful vocal contribution is another asset, her vibrantly earthy singing highly involving. The Simon/Fingerhut version of Nights in the Gardens of Spain also makes a strongly contrasted alternative to Alicia de Larrocha's much-praised reading, and the effect is more dramatic, with the soloist responding chimerically to the changes of mood. The Interlude and Dance from La vida breve make a very attractive encore.

(i) El amor brujo (Love, the Magician); (ii) The Three-Cornered Hat (ballets; both complete)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67587-2 (2). De los Angeles, Philh. O, (i) Giulini; (ii) Frühbeck de Burgos – La vida breve ***

(i) El amor brujo (Love, the Magician); (ii) The Three-Cornered Hat (ballet); La vida breve: Interlude and Dance

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 991-2. SRO, Ansermet, with (i) De Gabarain; (ii) Berganza

Listening to Ansermet's early 1960s version of The Three-Cornered Hat, you understand why his recordings are cherished by audiophiles: the sound is glitteringly brilliant and full. The performance has lots of character and shows the conductor and his orchestra on top form. El amor brujo is not quite so brilliant as a recording, or as a performance, but it is still very good, with plenty of nice touches and the Interlude and Dance from La vida breve is especially vivid here. A very colourful and worthy addition to Decca's 'Legends' label.

A beautifully civilized and atmospheric account of El amor brujo from Giulini, warmly and atmospherically recorded. Thoroughly enjoyable, even if the performance is not as vivid and red-blooded as Frühbeck de Burgos's Three-Cornered Hat, where the 'Olés' were recorded separately and dubbed on, but which has greater high spirits. Victoria de los Angeles does not sound quite earthy enough, but she sings splendidly throughout and the CD transfers are excellent. This is now recoupled with La vida breve as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

(i) El amor brujo (complete); The Three-Cornered Hat: 3 Dances; La vida breve: Interlude & Dance

🔑 * RCA SACD (ADD) 88697 04607-2. (i) L. Price; Chicago SO, Reiner (with GRANADOS: Goyescas: Intermezzo) – ALBÉNIZ: Iberia (excerpts) ****

Reiner's complete El amor brujo, from a vintage period with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, is a fiery and colourful account, yet totally seductive in its nudging of rhythms in The Magic Circle and in the languorous Pantomime. Leontyne Price's contribution is riveting: it has all the dark, guttural fire you could ask for, flamenco singing to the manner born, the operatic voice almost unrecognizable. The excerpts from La vida breve and three dances from The Three-Cornered Hat are both sultry and gripping; they have far more sparkle than many recordings made since, and the final dance brings really exciting virtuosity. The recordings from 1958 and 1963 (El amor brujo) have been vividly remastered in their new SACD format, giving sound in the demonstration bracket.

The account of the Goyescas Intermezzo is full of temperament. However, this disc has been reissued at premium price.

Nights in the Gardens of Spain

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89223-2. Heisser, Lausanne CO, López-Cobos – ALBENIZ: Concierto fantástico, etc.; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

The performance by Jean-François Heisser (with López-Cobos a highly idiomatic partner) is first class in every way, combining warm evocation, brilliant colouring and excitement. The playing could hardly be more grippingly spontaneous, and the modern (1996) digital sound is vividly real. The couplings are equally attractive and this comes in the lowest price range.

The Three-Cornered Hat (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  EuroArts DVD 2050136. Chicago SO, Barenboim – BOULEZ: Notations I–IV; DEBUSSY: La Mer ***

The concert comes from the Chicago Symphony Orchestra's European tour in April 2000 and was recorded in the Philharmonie in Cologne. The Falla is obviously close to Barenboim's heart for he gives as sympathetic and convincing a performance of it as we have ever heard. The Chicago orchestra responds with playing of virtuosity and character, as indeed they do in the couplings, La Mer and the Boulez Notations I–IV. Expert camerawork and excellent sound throughout. The DVD also includes a 20-minute conversation between Barenboim and Boulez.

The Three-Cornered Hat (complete; CD version)

🔑  Chan. 8904. Gomez, Philh. O, Tortelier – ALBENIZ: Iberia ***

Yan Pascal Tortelier is hardly less seductive than Dutoit in handling Falla's beguiling dance-rhythms, bringing out the score's humour as well as its colour. The fine Chandos recording is full and vivid, if rather reverberant, and Jill Gomez's contribution floats within the resonance; but the acoustic warmth adds to the woodwind bloom, and the strings are beguilingly rich. The closing Jota is joyfully vigorous.

The Three-Cornered Hat (ballet): 3 Dances

() Testament mono SBT 1017. Philh. O, Cantelli – CASELLA: Paganiniana; DUKAS: L'Apprenti sorcier; RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé: Suite 2 ()

It is good that Cantelli's excellent (1954) performances of these vivid dances are back in such fine transfers. Elegant, polished accounts, given very good mono sound.

The Three-Cornered Hat (ballet): Miller's Dance, Danse finale

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4123-2. Philh. O, Giulini – BRUCKNER: Symphony 7; MUSSORGSKY: Khovanshchina: Prelude ***

The Falla dances, recorded live, make a lively contrast to Giulini's dedicated reading of Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, the main work on the disc.

VOCAL MUSIC

Siete canciones populares españolas (7 Spanish Popular Songs)

🔑 (BB) * EMI Encore 5 86985-2. Monoyios, Barrueco (guitar) – GRANADOS: 12 Danzas españolas ****

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 1311. Souzay, Bonneau – FAURÉ: Mélodies  ✿; RAVEL: Histoires naturelles ()

The late Gérard Souzay is wonderfully captured here in this 1951 set, made only six years after his Paris début and finding the youthful bloom of his voice at its peak. Highly characterized performances, and expertly accompanied by Jacqueline Bonneau. No need to make any allowances for the age of the Decca recording in Paul Baily's scrupulous remastering.

OPERA

La vida breve (complete)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67587-2 (2). De los Angeles, Higueras, Rivadeneyra, Cossutta, Moreno, Orféon Donostiarra Ch., Nat. O of Spain, Frühbeck de Burgos – El amor brujo; Three-Cornered Hat ***

La vida breve is a kind of Spanish Cavalleria rusticana without the melodrama. Unquestionably the opera's story is thin but if the music for the final scene is weakened by a fundamental lack of drama in the plot, Frühbeck de Burgos makes the most of the poignancy of the closing moments. Victoria de los Angeles deepened her interpretation over the years and her imaginative colouring of the words gives a unique authority and evocation to her performance. The flamenco singer in Act II (Gabriel Moreno) also matches the realism of the idiom with an authentic 'folk' style. The recording remains atmospheric but has increased vividness and presence.

FASCH, Johann Friedrich

(1688–1758)

Andante in D, FWVL: D 15; Concertos (for wind and strings): in B flat, FVWL: B3; in D, FVWL: D15; Ouverture grosso in D, FWKV: D8

Ⓝ  Chan. 0751. Tempesta di Mare, Ngai

Concertos: for 2 flutes, 2 oboes, bassoon & strings; for 2 corni da Caccia, 2 oboes, bassoon, violin & strings; Overtures in F, A; Sinfonias in A, G

Ⓝ  CPO 777 424-2. Les Amis de Philippe, Rémy

Johann Fasch was Bach's predecessor at the Leipzig Thomasschule and a considerable composer in his own right. Here are two very agreeable collections of his orchestral music. The Andante on Chandos is very gracious, sounding like Handel with a touch of Gluck, and the Overture grosso is exceptionally lively and colourful – in five movements with often elaborate horn parts. Both Concertos (in B flat and D) are richly scored.

On CPO the Overtures in three movements offer substantial first movements of lively invention, graceful slow movements and light-hearted finales. The Sinfonias offer nicely contrasted movements too: the Andante of the G major is unexpectedly dark and ominous, but the work ends in a joyful manner. As on Chandos, the multi-instrument concertos are most enjoyable, and the florid writing in the D major Concerto is very beguiling, as is the piquant writing for the flutes and bassoon in the finale. The CPO CD offers over 70 minutes of this attractive, rarely performed baroque music, stylishly played and well recorded. The Chandos disc is even more vividly recorded, but offers a playing time of only 60 minutes.

Overture (Suite) in D min.; (i) Passio Jesu Christi (Brockes-Passion)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.570326. Capella Savaria Bar. O; (i) with Zádori, Megyesi, Cser, Budapest Schola Cantorum, Térey-Smith

The Passio Jesu Christi is a real discovery – a truly remarkable work, in many ways anticipating Bach. The text is a substantially shortened version of the Gospel story as told by the poet Barthold Brockes, frowned on by the Church authorities for being too theatrical and sentimental. However, in Fasch's setting it is neither, but it is musically very rewarding, particularly when as beautifully sung and played as it is here. Throughout the work Fasch intersperses eight Lutheran chorales, beautifully sung by the Budapest Schola Cantorum. Before the choral work, the lively Capella Savaria Baroque Orchestra show their excellence in a polished and spirited performance of the sprightly Suite in D minor for two oboes, bassoon, strings and continuo. The recording is in the demonstration class and this is a disc worth seeking out.

FAURÉ, Gabriel (1845–1924)

Ballade for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 19

🔑 ✿ (BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9714. K. Long, Nat. SO, Boyd Neel – LEIGH: Concertino; MOZART: Piano Concertos 15 & 24 ()

 Chan. 8773. Lortie, LSO, Frühbeck de Burgos – RAVEL: Piano Concertos **(*)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550754. Thiollier, Nat. SO of Ireland, De Almeida – FRANCK: Symphonic Variations; D'INDY: Symphonie sur un air montagnard français **(*)

Recorded in 1944, Kathleen Long's classic recording of Fauré's Ballade remains among the most inspired ever, at once subtle and immediate in its communication, a perfect demonstration of Long's refined artistry. A fine supplement to the equally subtle readings of Mozart Concertos and the hauntingly effective Leigh Concertino. A magical (and very generous) CD, very well recorded and transferred.

Louis Lortie is a thoughtful artist and his playing has both sensitivity and strength. This is as penetrating and well recorded an account of Fauré's lovely piece as any now available; however, the coupling is not one of the preferred versions of the Ravel concertos.

Naxos offer an intelligently planned triptych. François-Joël Thiollier shows some imagination and sensitivity in Fauré's lovely Ballade. The orchestral playing is perfectly acceptable, without being in any way out of the ordinary; likewise the recording. All the same, it is worth the money.

Ballade for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 19; Berceuse for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 16; Caligula, Op. 52; Les Djinns (orchestral version), Op. 12; Elégie for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 24; Fantaisie for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 111; Masques et bergamasques, Op. 112; Pelléas et Mélisande, Op. 80; Pénélope: Prélude; Shylock, Op. 57

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI 3 97722-2 (2). Collard, Y. P. & P. Tortelier, Von Stade, Gedda, Bourbon Vocal Ens., Toulouse Capitole O, Plasson

This set of Fauré's orchestral music contains much that is very rewarding indeed. It includes the delightful Masques et bergamasques and the Pelléas et Mélisande and Shylock music, as well as such rarities as Les Djinns and Caligula. Plasson gets an alert and spirited response, and the recordings are very good. Although the vocal items no longer have texts and translations, as on the original issues, the set is now offered at bargain price. Altogether this is a lovely collection in every way, offering many delights, and it cannot be too warmly recommended.

(i) Ballade for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 19; Dolly Suite; (ii) Elégie for Cello & Orchestra; (iii) Fantaisie for Flute & Orchestra (orch. I. Aubert); Masques et bergamasques; Pavane (orch. H. Rabaud); Pénélope: Prelude

🔑 * Chan. 9416. (i) Stott; (ii) Dixon; (iii) Davis; BBC PO, Tortelier

The celebrated Elégie is here tenderly played by Peter Dixon. Kathryn Stott brings out not only the poetry in the Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, but also the scherzando sparkle of the virtuoso passages. Just as convincing are the Fantaisie for Flute (soloist Richard Davis) and the ever-popular Dolly Suite, both arranged by other hands. The four brief movements of Masques et bergamasques are charmingly done and Tortelier's account of the Overture to Masques et bergamasques is second to none. Indeed, he has the measure of all the music on this disc, be it the poignancy of the Pénélope Prelude or the delicacy of the Dolly Suite.

(i) Berceuse, Op. 116; Dolly Suite, Op. 56; Masques et bergamasques, Op. 112; Pelléas et Mélisande (suite), Op. 80; (ii) Shylock (suite), Op. 57

(BB)  Naxos 8.553360. Dublin RTE Sinf., Georgiadis, with (i) Healy; (ii) Russell

John Georgiadis with his rhythmic flair not only brings out the colour and vigour of the fast movements but, as a fine violinist himself, persuades his Irish players to draw out the expressive warmth of such numbers as Tendresse in the Dolly Suite. Masques et bergamasques, the Dolly Suite and the incidental music to Pelléas et Mélisande are all among Fauré's best-loved works, and it is good too to have the rarer music for the Shakespeare-based play, Shylock, complete with two vocal movements sweetly sung by Lynda Russell. Michael Healy is the expressive violin soloist in the lovely Berceuse. Warm, atmospheric recording, transferred at rather a low level.

Dolly Suite, Op. 56 (orch. Rabaud)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 79986-2. Fr. Nat. R. O, Beecham – BIZET: Carmen Suite 1, etc.; CHABRIER: España, etc.; SAINT-SAËNS: Le rouet d'Omphale ***

The consistently imaginative and poetic phrasing that distinguished Beecham's best performances is very apparent here – the Bercesue, Le Jardin de Dolly and Tendresse (in Rabaud's orchestration) are exquisite, while Le Pas espagnole has the kind of dash we associate with Beecham's Chabrier. The 1961 stereo has come up impressively.

Fantaisie for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 111

🔑  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 235-2. De Larrocha, LPO, De Burgos – FRANCK: Symphonic Variations; RAVEL: Piano Concertos in G & for the Left Hand ***

The Fauré Fantaisie is a late work, but an aristocratic one of great distinction, beautifully played and recorded in this 1972 performance. The couplings are recommendable too: altogether this is an impressive anthology.

Masques et bergamasques; Pavane

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 1382. LPO, Handley – CANTELOUBE: Chants d'Auvergne ***✿

These performances under Vernon Handley are very enjoyable, fresh and sympathetic, with excellent recording to add bloom to the fine playing. A fine bonus for the outstanding Canteloube coupling.

Pelléas et Mélisande (Suite)

Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3899-2 (2). Czech PO, Baudo – DEBUSSY: Pelléas: Tone poem; SCHOENBERG: Pelleas: symphonic poem; SIBELIUS: Pelleas & Melisande: Suite ***

Baudo's performance, beautifully played by the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra and very well recorded, comes appropriately coupled with music by Schoenberg and Sibelius, plus an orchestral arrangement of music from Debussy's opera.

Pelléas et Mélisande Suite, Op. 80; (i) Pavane, Op. 50

 Chan. 8952. (i) Renaissance Singers; Ulster O, Tortelier – CHAUSSON: Poème, etc. ***

These finely finished and atmospheric Chandos performances come in harness with a fine account from the soloist-conductor of Chausson's Poème and a perceptive and idiomatic performance of the Poème de la mer et de l'amour. Very good orchestral playing and exemplary recording.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Allegretto Moderato for 2 Cellos; (ii) Andante. Elégie, Op. 24; Papillon, Op. 77; Romance, Op. 69; Sérénade, Op. 98; Sicilienne, Op. 78; Sonatas 1 in D min., Op. 109; 2 in G min., Op. 117

(*) RCA 09026 68049-2. Isserlis, Devoyon; with (i) Waterman; (ii) Greer

Steven Isserlis understands the essential reticence and refinement of Fauré's art. Perhaps he is at times a shade too reticent in the music and could allow himself to produce a more ardent and songful tone. The balance, which slightly favours his partner, contributes to this impression. Pascal Devoyon is a no less perceptive and sensitive artist. A welcome, then, for the artistry of these performances, but tinged with slight disappointment at the less than ideal balance.

Cello Sonata 1 in D min., Op. 109

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40599-2. Noras, Rigutto – DEBUSSY, FRANCK: Cello Sonatas ***

Cello Sonatas 1 in D min., Op. 109; 2 in G min., Op. 117

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 74333-2 (2). Tortelier, Heidsieck – CHOPIN; MENDELSSOHN; RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonatas ***

Cello Sonatas 1–2; Après un rêve, Op. 7/1; Berceuse, Op. 16; Elégie, Op. 24; Papillon, Op. 77; Romance, Op. 69; Sérénade, Op. 98; Sicilienne, Op. 78

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557889. Kliegel, Tichman

Cello Sonatas 1–2; Elégie; Sicilienne

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3316. Igloi, Benson

Noble performances from both Tortelier and Heidsieck, who play with fervour and eloquence within the restrained expressive limits of the music. The fine EMI recording brings both instruments into the living room most vividly.

The two cello sonatas are among the most sublime creations of Fauré's later years and Maria Kliegel and Nina Tichman give warmly sensitive and intelligent accounts of them. They do not displace Tortelier but do compensate by including other cello works by Fauré, including the notably popular Elégie. Collectors needing this repertoire should find this well-recorded set well worth having.

Moving performances from the late Thomas Igloi and Clifford Benson that do full justice to these elusive and rewarding Fauré sonatas, and the recording is clear, if not one of CRD's finest in terms of ambient effect.

An eloquent performance too on Warner Apex of the wonderful D minor Sonata by this aristocratic Finnish cellist, who plays with subtlety and finesse. If the couplings appeal, this makes an excellent bargain.

(i) Cello Sonatas 1–2; (ii) Andante in B flat, Op. 75; Berceuse, Op. 16; Elégie; (iii) Fantaisie, Op. 79; Morceau de concours; (ii) Morceau de lecture; (i)

Papillon, Op. 77; (i–ii) Piano Trio in D min., Op. 120; (ii) Romance, Op. 28; (i) Serenade in B min., Op. 98; Sicilienne, Op. 78; (ii) Violin Sonatas 1 in A, Op. 15; 2 in E min., Op. 108

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 85279-2 (2). Collard; with (i) Lodéon; (ii) Dumay; (iii) Debost

Piano Quartets (i; ii) 1 in C min., Op. 15; (i; iii) 2 in G min., Op. 45; Piano Quintets 1 in C min., Op. 89; 2 in C min., Op. 115; (iii) String Quartet in E min., Op. 121

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 85282-2 (2). (i) Collard; (ii) Dumay, Pasquier, Lodéon; (iii) Parrenin Qt

Dumay and Collard bring different and equally valuable insights, and the performances of the Piano Quartets are masterly. In addition, there are authoritative and idiomatic readings of the two Piano Quintets, the enigmatic and otherworldly Quartet and, on the first set above, the Piano Trio, the two Cello Sonatas (what a fine player Lodéon is!), plus all the smaller pieces. However, one has to accept that, because the Paris Salle Wagram was employed for the recordings (made between 1975 and 1978), close microphones have been used to counteract the hall's resonance.

Cello Sonatas 1 & 2; Piano Trio, Op. 120; Nocturne 13, Op. 119

 Chan.10447. Priya Mitchell, Christian Poltéra, Kathryn Stott

What hypnotic and subtle works these are! Tortelier and Heidsieck are strong contenders in the Cello Sonatas and there are plenty of others (see above), but the present performances are hardly less persuasive and the late Piano Trio enhances the disc's attractions.

Piano Quartet 1 in C min., Op. 15

 Aeon AECD 0540. Schumann Qt – CHAUSSON: Piano Quartet ***

The Quatuor Schumann's precision of ensemble adds greatly to the impact of the early Fauré Piano Quartet, as it does with the Chausson, making an apt and attractive coupling. As in the Chausson, the most compelling playing of all comes in the Schumann Quartet's account of the Adagio slow movement, hushed in deep meditation, leading to an incisive account of the brilliant finale with its dashing triplet rhythms. One looks forward to more discs from this fine group.

Piano Quartets 1 in C min., Op. 15; 2 in G min., Op. 45

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66166. Domus

Domus have the requisite lightness of touch and subtlety, and just the right sense of scale and grasp of tempi. Their nimble and sensitive pianist, Susan Tomes, can hold her own in the most exalted company. The recording is excellent, too, though the balance is a little close, but the sound is not airless.

Piano Quartets 1 in C min., Op. 15; 2 in G min., Op. 45; Piano Quintets 1 in D min., Op. 89; 2 in C min., Op. 115

Ⓑ  Double Decca 475 187-2 (2). Rogé, Ysaÿe Qt

It goes without saying that Pascal Rogé and the Ysaÿe Quartet give performances of great finesse and sensitivity. On the first CD they are more successful in the Quintet No. 1 than in the early Quartet No. 1, where they must yield to Domus (Hyperion), who find greater delight and high spirits in the Scherzo. The recording here is very good, though there is an occasional moment when the reverberant acoustic affects the focus. The Second Quintet and Quartet were recorded in a different location a year later – though, curiously, the aural image is still not quite perfect. That said, the playing of all concerned is excellent, alive and subtle, with expert and sensitive contributions from the distinguished pianist.

Piano Quintets 1–2

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66766. Domus, with Marwood

The playing of Domus in these two masterpieces is as light, delicate and full of insight as one would expect. They make one fall for this music all over again. The second is among the masterpieces of Fauré's Indian summer as he approached his eighties. Excellent sound.

Piano Trio in D min., Op. 120

 Ara. Z 6643. Golub/Kaplan/Carr Trio – DEBUSSY: Piano Trio ; SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Trio **(*)

 Hyp. CDA 67114. Florestan Trio – DEBUSSY; RAVEL: Piano Trios ***

Piano Trio; (i) La Bonne Chanson, Op. 61

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3389. Nash Ens., (i) with Walker

David Golub, Mark Kaplan and Colin Carr give as understanding and idiomatic a performance of the sublime Fauré Trio as is to be found. The recording is very good indeed, with plenty of warmth.

The Florestans offer a very apt coupling of three sharply contrasted French works. Fauré is represented in mellow old age, Debussy as a teenager and Ravel in high maturity. With personnel drawn from the piano quartet group Domus, led by the pianist Susan Tomes, they give an exceptionally strong, unapologetic reading, at once highly polished and flexibly expressive, revealing what power Fauré retained to the end of his life. Vivid sound.

The members of the Nash Ensemble also give a dedicated performance of the late, rarefied Piano Trio, capturing both the elegance and the restrained concentration. They are hardly less persuasive in the song-cycle, where the characterful warmth and vibrancy of Sarah Walker's voice, not to mention her positive artistry, come out strongly in this beautiful reading of Fauré's early settings of Verlaine, music both tender and ardent. The atmospheric recording is well up to CRD's high standard in chamber music.

String Quartet in E min., Op. 121

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.554722. Ad Libitum Qt – RAVEL: Quartet ***

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67664. Dante Qt – FRANCK: String Quartet in D ***

Ⓜ  Wigmore Live 0012. Ysaÿe Qt – DEBUSSY: String Quartet; STRAVINSKY: Concertino 3 Pieces; Double Canon ***

 HM Aeon AECD 0426. Ysaÿe Qt – MAGNARD: String Quartet, Op. 16 ***

The Ad Libitum Quartet are from Romania. Their ensemble and intonation are perfect, their tone is silken and they give a wonderfully expressive and beautifully characterized account of Fauré's elusive late String Quartet – one of the best we have ever heard and one of the best in the catalogue. It is recorded in the Moldava Philharmonic Hall in Iasi and is very natural and lifelike.

The E minor Quartet has an almost detached beauty in its minor-keyed, melancholic way and the Dantes find much nuance in the score. This impressive performance is coupled to an outstanding version of the Franck Quartet. The recording is superb.

There is not a great deal to choose between the Wigmore and Harmonia Mundi performances, so that choice of coupling may be a decisive factor for collectors. The acoustic of the Abbey of L'Epau where the Harmonia Mundi recording was made is particularly warm and rich. But the Naxos disc is a splendid bargain.

Violin Sonatas 1 in A, Op. 13; 2 in E min., Op. 108

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55030. Osostowicz, Tomes

Ⓜ  DG 477 5448 (2). Mintz, Bronfman (with Recital of Encores by ALBENIZ; COUPERIN; GLAZUNOV; GRANADOS; KREISLER; WEBER; WIENIAWSKI) – DEBUSSY; FRANCK; RAVEL: Violin Sonatas ***

Violin Sonatas 1–2; Andante in B flat, Op. 75; Berceuse, Op. 16; Romance in B flat, Op. 28

(BB)  Naxos 8.550906. Kang, Devoyon

Dong-Suk Kang, splendidly partnered by Pascal Devoyon, gives us performances which are very fine indeed. This is most welcome – and very good value for money.

Krysia Osostowicz and Susan Tomes bring an appealingly natural, unforced quality to their playing and they are completely persuasive, particularly in the elusive Second Sonata. The acoustic is a shade resonant but, such is the eloquence of these artists, the ear quickly adjusts. At Helios price, this is highly recommendable.

Splendid playing, too, from Shlomo Mintz, who is also rather swamped by the pianist, Yefim Bronfman, though his virtuosity and sensitivity are not in question, nor is the lyrical intensity of Mintz's playing. It is the resonant acoustic of the Deutschlandfunk Sendesaal which takes some getting used to.

PIANO MUSIC

Solo piano

Ballade in F sharp, Op. 19; Barcarolles 1–13; (i) Dolly Suite, Op. 56; Impromptus 1–5; Impromptu, Op. 86; Mazurka in B flat, Op. 32; 13 Nocturnes; Pièces brèves 1–8, Op. 84; 9 Préludes, Op. 103; Romances sans paroles 1–3; (i) Souvenirs de Bayreuth; Theme & Variations in C sharp min., Op. 73; Valses-caprices 1–4

🔑 ❀  Hyp. CDA 66911/4 (4). Stott, (i) with Roscoe

Ⓑ  CRD (ADD) 5006 (5). Crossley (without Dolly Suite; Souvenirs de Bayreuth)

Both the Thirteen Barcarolles and the Thirteen Nocturnes give a most illuminating view of Fauré's career, gentle and unsensational like the music itself, but with the subtlest of developments towards a sparer, more rarefied style. That comes out all the more tellingly when, as here, they are given in succession and are played with such poetry and spontaneous-sounding freshness. Each of the four discs contains well over 70 minutes of music, logically presented, with the Nocturnes spread between the third and fourth discs, framing the lighter pieces, including such duets as the witty Wagner quadrille, Souvenirs de Bayreuth, and the ever-fresh Dolly Suite, both with Kathryn Stott ideally partnered by Martin Roscoe. A masterly set.

Paul Crossley's recordings come from the 1980s. He shows an instinctive feeling for Fauré's elusive, expressive language and subtle artistry. A drawback to the CRD set is that five CDs are involved, and the piano duet items are not included. Stott must remain a first recommendation. Those who do not want to buy the complete oeuvre but are looking for a very well-recorded anthology of Fauré's piano music should investigate Kun-Woo Paik's Decca CD.

Ballade in F sharp, Op. 19; Barcarolle 1, Op. 26; Impromptu 2, Op. 31; Improvisation (8 Pièces brèves), Op. 84/5; Nocturnes 1; 3, Op. 33/1 & 3; 6, Op. 63; 11, Op. 104/1; 13, Op. 119; Préludes, Op. 103, 2 & 7; Romance sans paroles, Op. 17/3

 Decca 470 246-2. Paik

Kun-Woo Paik continues to impress in French music. This Fauré recital is the finest single-disc anthology of this great composer's music to have appeared for some time. Even if Fauré is well represented in your library, you should add this excellently recorded recital, which would make a fine introduction for those new to this repertoire.

Barcarolles 1–13 (complete); Theme and Variations in C sharp min., Op. 73

() Testament mono SBT 1215

Nocturnes 1–13 (complete)

() Testament mono SBT 1262

Impromptus 1–5; Impromptu, Op. 86; 8 Pièces brèves; Valses-caprices 1–4

() Testament mono SBT 1263. Thyssens-Valentin

These three Testament CDs, superbly transferred from Ducretet-Thomson discs in mono, offer Fauré interpretations that have rarely been matched for their poetry and natural spontaneity of expression, coupled with a flawless technique. These discs, recorded respectively in 1955, 1956 and 1959, consistently have one marvelling at the fluidity of Thyssens-Valentin's playing, which yet is combined with sparkling control, in a way that few rival versions can begin to match. It almost feels as though she herself is actually creating this music as she plays.

Barcarolles 1, 5 & 6; Nocturnes 1, 8 & 13; Romance sans paroles 1–3; Valse-caprice 1; Theme and Variations

🔑 (BB)  Regis (ADD/DDD) RRC 1187. Crossley

This makes an admirable 75-minute recital, taken from Paul Crossley's five-disc coverage for CRD. The engaging Theme and Variations is especially welcome. Crossley never forces the music, yet his purity of style is never chaste and his concentration and sense of scale demonstrate his full understanding of this repertoire. The recorded sound is consistently good, though reflecting slightly different recording balances between 1983 and 1987. A bargain.

Barcarolles 1, Op. 26; 6, Op. 70; Impromptus 2, Op. 31; 3, Op. 34; Nocturnes 1, 3, Op. 33/1 & 3; 4, Op. 36; 6, Op. 63; 13, Op. 119; 8 Pièces brèves, Op. 84; Romance sans paroles 3, Op. 17/3

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67074. Stott

An admirably chosen collection, arranged in the form of a recital, taken from Kathryn Stott's complete survey. A pity the C sharp minor Theme and Variations was not included, but what is (69 minutes) is well worth having when played and recorded so persuasively.

Nocturnes 1–13 (complete)

Ⓝ * Avie AV 2133. Owen

The Nocturnes span Fauré's whole composing career and, while the earlier works inherit a moonlight romanticism from Chopin (although the second includes a turbulent centrepiece), the Fourth in E flat is deliciously sensuous, with a specially Fauréan delicacy. The Ninth in B minor is modally haunting, and the later works are rather more harmonically adventurous and develop an added internal intensity. All, however, are among his most rewarding piano miniatures and could not have been written by any other composer. Charles Owen is obviously completely at home in these sometimes elusive works and plays them beautifully, with subtle feeling for their colour. He is very well recorded.

VOCAL MUSIC

Complete Mélodies

Vol. 1

 Hyp. CDA 67333. Lott, J. Smith, McGreevy, Doufexis, Mark Ainsley, Maltman, Varcoe; Johnson

Vol. 2

 Hyp. CDA 67334. McGreevy, J. Smith, Lott, Doufexis, Mark Ainsley, Fouchécourt, Maltman, Varcoe; Johnson

Graham Johnson's Hyperion survey of the Fauré songs is quite masterly. They are shared among a distinguished team of mainly British singers. As ever in these Hyperion song surveys, the piano accompaniments are highly sensitive and imaginative in their use of keyboard colour while, as so often, Graham Johnson provides immaculate documentation which greatly enhances the value of each volume. The singing radiates a love for and dedication to these wonderful songs, and no one with an interest in Fauré (or in good singing) should miss them.

Mélodies: (i) Après un rêve; Arpège; Automne; Au bord de l'eau; (ii) C'est l'extase langoureuse; Clair de lune; En sourdine; Green; L'Horizon chimérique (cycle); Mandoline; Prison; Spleen

✿ () Testament mono SBT 1311. Souzay, (i) Bonneau or (ii) Baldwin – FALLA: Canciónes populares españolas; RAVEL: Histoires naturelles ***

Writing in 1955, the authors of The Record Guide spoke of Souzay surpassing his earlier achievements, and they hailed these Fauré songs on Decca LXT 2543 (from which this Testament issue in part derives) as 'one of the most satisfactory LP song recitals yet issued'. Half a century later it has lost none of its ability to enchant and remains one of the most eloquent of all Souzay's song records.

Mélodies: Après un rêve; Aurore; Automne; La bonne chanson; Au bord de l'eau; Clair de lune; L'Horizon chimérique; Lydia; 5 Mélodies 'de Venise'; Mirages; Nell; Le Parfum impérissable; Le plus doux; Les Présents; Prison; Les Roses d'Ispahan; Soir; Spleen

 Nim. (ADD) NI 5736/7 (2). Cuénod, Isepp – DUPARC: Mélodies: Chanson triste, etc. ***

Hugues Cuénod was already 70 when he made these well-balanced recordings, though this hardly shows: the voice is light and steady and his sense of style impeccable. Both the accompanists (the documentation does not indicate who accompanies what) are highly sensitive and match the refined intelligence this great artist brings to this repertoire.

Mélodies: Après un rêve; Au bord de l'eau; Les Berceaux; Clair de lune; Lydia; Mandoline; Le Papillon et la fleur; Sylvie

 Virgin 5 45360-2. Gens, Vignoles – DEBUSSY; POULENC: Mélodies ***

Véronique Gens is a highly accomplished artist and certainly makes a beautiful sound. She allows Fauré's art to speak for itself, although there are times when you feel stronger characterization would not come amiss. She is sensitively accompanied by Roger Vignoles and recorded with great naturalness.

La Chanson d'Eve, Op. 95; Mélodies: Après un rêve; Aubade; Barcarolle; Les Berceaux; Chanson du pêcheur; En prière; En sourdine; Green; Hymne; Des Jardins de la nuit; Mandoline; Le Papillon et la fleur;

Les Présents; Rêve d'amour; Les Roses d'Ispahan; Le Secret; Spleen; Toujours!

🔑 ✿  Hyp. CDA 66320. Baker, Parsons

Dame Janet Baker gives magical performances of a generous collection of 28 songs, representing Fauré throughout his long composing career, including many of his most winning songs. Geoffrey Parsons is at his most compellingly sympathetic, matching every mood. Many will be surprised at Fauré's variety of expression over this extended span of songs.

Requiem, Op. 48

🔑 Ⓜ  Teldec 0927 49001-2. Bonney, Hampson, Amb. S., Philh. O, Legrand – DURUFLÉ: Requiem ***

(i) Requiem; (ii) Pavane

Requiem (1893 version); Ave Maria, Op. 67/2; Ave verum corpus, Op. 65/1; Cantique de Jean Racine, Op. 11; Maria, Mater gratiae, Op. 47/2; Messe basse; Tantum ergo, Op. 65/2

🔑 * Coll. (ADD) COLCD 109. Ashton, Varcoe, Cambridge Singers, L. Sinfonia (members), Rutter

Requiem (1893 version); Ave verum corpus; Cantique de Jean Racine; Messe basse; Tantum ergo

 Hyp. CDA 66292. Seers, Poulenard, George, Corydon Singers, ECO, Best

Requiem; Cantique de Jean Racine; La Naissance de Vénus, Op. 29

 Australian ABC Classics 472 045-2. Macliver, Tahu Rhodes, Cantillation, Sinf. Australis, Walker

(i; ii; iv) Requiem; (ii; iii) Les Djinns, Op. 12; (ii) Madrigal, Op. 35

 Ph. 438 149-2. (i) Bott, Cachemaille; (ii) Monteverdi Ch., Salisbury Cathedral Boy Choristers; (iii) Vatin; (iv) ORR, Gardiner – DEBUSSY: 3 Chansons de Charles d'Orléans; RAVEL: 3 Chansons; SAINT-SAËNS: 3 songs ***

John Rutter's inspired reconstruction of Fauré's original 1893 score, using only lower strings and no woodwind, opened our ears to the extra freshness of the composer's first thoughts. Rutter's fine, bright recording includes the Messe basse and four motets, of which the Ave Maria setting and Ave verum corpus are particularly memorable. The recording is first rate but places the choir and instruments relatively close.

Michel Legrand uses the full orchestral version of 1900 in the most dramatic way possible, yet the delicacy of the In paradisum reflects an equally sympathetic response to the gentler, mystical side of the music. Barbara Bonney's Pie Jesu with its simplicity and innocence is very touching. Thomas Hampson makes an eloquent contribution to the Libera me, and after the climax the flowing choral line shows the subtle range of colour and dynamic commanded by the Ambrosian Singers (as well as the orchestra). With superb, spacious recording this performance is very compelling indeed, and it is coupled with an equally fine account of the Duruflé work which was inspired by Fauré's masterpiece.

John Eliot Gardiner, like Rutter but with period forces, also chooses the version of the Requiem with the original instrumentation. The darkness matches Gardiner's view of the work, which he makes more dramatic than it often is. The mellow recording takes away some of the bite but, with excellent soloists – Catherine Bott radiantly beautiful in the Pie Jesu, Gilles Cachemaille vividly bringing out word-meaning – it makes an excellent choice. Les Djinns is specially welcome, with piano accompaniment on a gentle-toned Erard of 1874; and all the other pieces, including Fauré's enchanting Madrigal, are in various ways inspired by early French part-songs, with the medieval overtones brought out in the Debussy and with the humour of the Ravel nicely underlined.

Matthew Best's performance with the Corydon Singers also uses the Rutter edition but presents a choral and orchestral sound that is more refined, set against a helpful church acoustic. In paradisum is ethereally beautiful. Best's soloists are even finer than Rutter's, and he too provides a generous fill-up in the Messe basse and other motets, though two fewer than Rutter.

The Australian artists on ABC give a translucent, sensuous performance, and their well-blended sound and fine balance are enhanced by the singing of Cantillation, which is a relatively small choir. Teddy Tahu Rhodes is a bass-baritone with a slightly grainy finish to his voice, but an uncommon agility, while Sara Macliver's lovely Pie Jesu is effortless and pure. The performance of the Cantique de Jean Racine is very fine too. However, the special interest of this release is the inclusion of La Naissance de Vénus, in essence a single-scene mythological opera, intended for the concert hall. Again Tahu Rhodes, in the role of the deity Jupiter, shows considerable agility, this time in a high baritone register. A worthwhile addition to the catalogue. Full texts and translations are included, with excellent documentation.

FAYRFAX, Robert (1464–1521)

Missa Albanus; Missa O bone Ihesu (with Elevation Motet: Anima Christi ... Resurrexio Christi); Missa O quam glorifica; Missa Regali ex progenie; Missa Tecum principium

Ⓜ  Gaudeamus CDGAX 353 (3). Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

This fine mid-priced set gathers together all Fayrfax's known Masses, plus a bonus in the newly discovered and magnificent O bone Ihesu and an incomplete four-part setting of Anima Christi (an 'elevation motet' sung during the elevation of the host). The surviving text begins with 'Resurrexio' and David Skinner, whose editions are used throughout, tells us in the notes that there is no doubt about the connection of this motet with the Mass. The performances and recordings are of outstanding quality, and anyone who has not yet sampled this glorious music could do no better than start here.

FERGUSON, Howard (1908–99)

Piano Concerto (for piano and strings)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557290. Donohoe, Northern Sinfonia – DARNTON; GERHARD; ROWLEY: Piano Concertos ***

This Concerto for Piano and Strings, written in 1951, is conceived in structure on neoclassical lines, with an opening orchestral tutti, but it follows the warmly attractive idiom that is typical of the composer, very British, with brilliant writing for the soloist, not least in the finale with its jazzy syncopations, slightly Waltonian, leading to a climax in waltz time. The central Theme and Variations comes nearer to the pastoral tradition, building up powerfully. Peter Donohoe, directing the Northern Sinfonia from the keyboard, is the most persuasive interpreter. Well-balanced sound. An excellent, varied and imaginative coupling.

Overture for an Occasion, Op. 16; Partita, Op. 5a; (i) 2 Ballads, Op. 1; (ii) The Dream of the Rood, Op. 19

🔑  Chan. 9082. (i) Rayner Cook; (ii) Dawson, L. Symphony Ch.; LSO, Hickox

This collection includes a striking setting of the Lyke-Wake dirge, written in 1928, long before Britten. The Partita of 1935–6 is surprisingly dark until the last movement, with a weirdly enigmatic second movement and a lamenting slow movement. The Overture for an Occasion, written for the Queen's coronation, has the warmth and colour of comparable Walton works, and further echoes of Walton flavour the Dream of the Rood, a setting of an Anglo-Saxon poem with a radiant soprano solo introducing a sequence of richly atmospheric choruses. Hickox proves an ideal advocate, drawing incandescent singing and playing from his performers, with rich and clear Chandos sound to match.

(i) Octet; (ii; iii) Violin Sonata 2, Op. 10; (iii) 5 Bagatelles

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66192. (i) Nash Ens.; (ii) Chilingirian; (iii) Benson – FINZI: Elegy ***

Ferguson's Octet is written for the same instruments as Schubert's masterpiece, a delightful counterpart. Those seeking a first-class modern version will find that the Nash Ensemble fill the bill admirably. The other works on the Hyperion disc display the same gift of easy, warm communication, including the darker Violin Sonata and Finzi's haunting Elegy for Violin & Piano.

(i) Violin Sonatas 1, Op. 2; 2, Op. 10; (ii) 4 Short Pieces; (iii) 3 Sketches, Op. 14; (iv) Discovery (song-cycle), Op. 13; (v) 5 Irish Folksongs, Op. 17; (vi) Love and reason; (iv) 3 Mediaeval Carols, Op. 3

 Chan. 9316-2. (i) Mordkovitch; (ii) Hilton; (iii) Butt; (iv) Mark Ainsley; (v) Burgess; (vi) Schneider-Waterberg; all with Benson

This generous collection of Ferguson's chamber music, beautifully performed, provides a fine counterpart to Hickox's orchestral and choral disc. It is framed by the two Violin Sonatas (1931 and 1946), both powerful works, with Lydia Mordkovitch a rich and persuasive interpreter. Clifford Benson is the linchpin among the performers, contributing to all the works here. The Four Short Pieces for clarinet and the Three Sketches for flute are delightful miniatures, as is the counter-tenor song, Love and reason, and the Carols and the Discovery cycle for tenor. Best of all is the colourful cycle of Irish folksongs for mezzo, vividly performed by Sally Burgess. Excellent, well-balanced sound.

(i) Partita for 2 Pianos, Op. 56; Piano Sonata in F min., Op. 8

 Hyp. CDA 66130. Shelley, (i) Macnamara

Ferguson's Sonata is here given a powerful and intense performance, a work which, for all its echoes of Rachmaninov, is quite individual. The Partita is also a large-scale work, full of good ideas, in which Howard Shelley is joined for this two-piano version by his wife, Hilary Macnamara. Excellent, committed performances and first-rate recording, vividly transferred to CD.

5 Bagatelles; Sonata in F min.

Ⓜ  Somm SOMMCD 038. Bebbington – GURNEY: Nocturnes ***

Ferguson's muscular Piano Sonata (1938–40), written in memory of his teacher, Harold Samuel, is a work of deep, controlled, yet passionate intensity. Its language is frankly romantic and splendidly laid out for the piano, at times even reminding the listener of Brahms, Rachmaninov or, nearer home, Bliss – and none the worse for that! Mark Bebbington gives convincing performances, though the recording is decent rather than distinguished.

FESCA, Friedrich Ernst
(1789–1826)

Symphony 1 in E flat, Op. 6; Omar & Leila Overture; Overtures in D, Op. 41; C, Op. 43

 CPO 999 889-2. N. German R. Philharmonie, Beermann

Symphonies 2 in D, Op. 10; 3 in D, Op. 13; Overture Cantemire

 CPO 999 869-2. N. German R. Philharmonie, Beerman

This disc follows on from Beermann's CD of the highly entertaining Second and Third Symphonies of Fesca, and this new CD proves every bit as entertaining. Not that this First Symphony is as individual as the two later ones. Indeed, the first movement is clearly modelled on Mozart's No. 39, but it is no less enjoyable with its elegant, tuneful writing, particularly when the performance is so sympathetic. The two concert overtures were originally entr'actes at the court theatre, and both feature slow introductions leading on to exceptionally bright and lively allegros. The dramatic overture to his opera, Omar und Leila, features some pleasing 'exotic' touches in the orchestration. A first-class recording completes the attractiveness of both issues.

FIBICH, Zdeněk (1850–1900)

Symphonies 1 in F, Op. 17; 2 in E flat, Op. 38; 3 in E min., Op. 53

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. Double 9682 (2). Detroit SO, Järvi

There is a strong Bohemian feel to these works and if, like so much of Fibich's music, the First Symphony, which opens so invitingly, is a little square, such is the excellence of Neeme Järvi's performance that it does not feel so. The performances of the Second and Third come into competition with a Supraphon issue from the Brno Orchestra under Jiří Waldhans and Bělohlávek (11 0657-2). But the Chandos recording scores in terms of fidelity and space, and the Detroit Orchestra respond with enthusiasm to these scores. Overall this set is well worth exploring and far preferable to the Naxos alternative. (8.553699)

Piano Quintet, Op. 42

 ASV CDDCA 943. Endymion Ens. – DOHNANYI: Sextet ***

Fibich's Piano Quintet is a relatively late piece; it comes from the last decade of his life and has much lively invention and no mean charm. The Endymions give a first-rate account of it and are excellently recorded.

Piano Trio in F

 Sup. SU 3927-2. Smetana Trio – DVOŘÁK: Piano Trio in B flat; MARTINŮ: Piano Trio 2 ***

With its positive ideas the Trio by Zdeněk Fibich, starting with a bold opening gesture, the urgency of the outer movements very much reflects a young man's inspiration. It is all the more attractive in such a compact format, though the Czech flavours are not very strong.

Moods, Impressions & Reminiscences, Opp. 41, 44, 47 & 57; Studies of Paintings

(BB) (*) Regis RRC 1221. Kvapil

These small vignettes are touching – they are a forerunner of Janáček's Leaves from an overgrown path and most are full of strong poetic feeling and beauty of melodic line. They are played with great subtlety by Radoslav Kvapil. The piano-timbre is a little hard and lacking bloom; nevertheless, the gentler pieces work their full magic and this is a worthwhile disc at its new budget price. It also comes as part of a four-disc Regis anthology of Czech piano music (RRC 4006).

Sarka (complete)

 Orfeo C 541 002H (2). Urbanová, Lotric, Kirilova, Jenis, Vienna Concert Ch., Vienna RSO, Cambreling

(*) Sup. (ADD) SU 0036-2 612 (2). Depoltavá, Pribyl, Randová, Zítek, Brno Janáček Op. Ch., Brno State PO, Stych

Fibich's Sarka is based on the Czech legend of the predatory Sarka and her fellow Amazons. Fibich was aiming directly at writing a Wagnerian opera, especially in his echoes of Tristan und Isolde in the love duet for Sarka and Ctirad, the knight with whom she falls in love against her will. The weakness lies in melodic material that only fitfully sticks in the memory. On Orfeo Sylvain Cambreling conducts a strong and purposeful performance in a good, well-balanced radio recording. Both the principals, Eva Urbanová as Sarka and Janez Lotric as Ctirad, are outstanding, with their characterful Slavonic voices that yet focus beautifully, and the others make a strong team.

The Supraphon version dates from 1978, with warmly atmospheric analogue sound. Its great strength is the idiomatic conducting of Jan Stych, even though Eva Depoltavá in the title-role is less characterful than Urbanová on Orfeo. Vilem Pribyl is a first-rate Ctirad, but the most outstanding singing comes from Eva Randová as the leader of the Amazons, Vlasta, rich and distinctive.

FIELD, John (1782–1837)

(i) Piano Concertos 1–7; Divertissements 1–2; Nocturne 16 in F; (ii) Quintetto

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Chan. 10468 (4). O'Rourke; (i) LMP, Bamert; (ii) Juritz, Godson, Bradley, Desbruslais

The music of these concertos is uneven, but they are all easy to enjoy, and most have their fair share of winning themes, with scintillating passagework, persuasively nocturnal slow movements, and often a catchy closing rondo. The soloist, Míceál O'Rourke, is very persuasive and he receives admirable support from Bamert and the London Mozart Players, and first-class recording. The extra items which complete the CD containing the Seventh Concerto – the two Divertissements and Nocturne – all include a really good tune, while the serene single-movement Piano Quintet is also delicately charming. The concertos are all available on separate discs: Nos. 1 & 2 (Chan. 9368); 3 & 5 (Chan. 9495); 4 & 6 (Chan. 9442); and 7 plus encores (Chan. 9534).

Piano Concertos 1 in E flat; 3 in E flat

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553770. Frith, Northern Sinfonia, Haslam

Benjamin Frith has the bargain field to himself. His playing is characteristically sensitive and fresh, and he is well supported by the Northern Sinfonia and David Haslam. Very good, warm recording, in a decent acoustic.

Piano Concertos 2 in A flat; 3 in E flat

Ⓜ * Telarc CD 80370. O'Conor, SCO, Mackerras

These Telarc performances are beautifully recorded and are distinctly superior. John O'Conor plays throughout with great distinction and always displays the lightest touch – his softly gleaming roulades are very fetching – and Mackerras accompanies with warmth and character. A delightful disc in every respect.

Piano Concertos 5 (L'Incendie par l'orage); 6 in C

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554221. Frith, Northern Sinfonia, Haslam

These two concertos are exhilaratingly performed by Benjamin Frith with the Northern Sinfonia, with Frith's sparklingly clear articulation in rapid scales and figuration magnetizing the attention in music that can easily seem just trivial. The title of the Fifth Concerto, L'Incendie par l'orage ('Fire from Lightning'), reflects a dramatic storm passage in the long and ambitious first movement, while the lovely slow movement of the Sixth Concerto is a nocturne in all but name, with the outer movements full of bright ideas.

Nocturnes 1–9; Piano Sonatas 1 in E flat; 2 in A, Op. 1/1–2

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550761. Frith

Nocturnes 10–17; 18 (Midi); Piano Sonata 3 in C min., Op. 1/3

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550762. Frith

Benjamin Frith's playing is delectably coaxing, and he makes these Nocturnes so often seem exquisitely like Chopin, yet still catches their naïve innocence, especially in the A flat major work. He hops, skips and jumps delightfully in the Irish Rondo finale of the First Sonata and is hardly less beguiling in the rather more imposing opening movement of the Second.

The second CD includes the famous Nocturne 18 whose original title was Midi (or 'Twelve O'clock Rondo'). The Third Sonata occupies the midway point in the recital. Its first movement is just a little hectoring (Beethovenian con fuoco was not Field's natural element) but the closing Rondo simulates another popular air for its basis. As before, the recording is very natural.

Largo in C min.; Nocturnes in B flat; C min.; E min.; Prelude in C min.; Romance in E flat; Waltzes: in A; E (Sehnsucht)

 Etcetera KTC 1231. Antoni – CHOPIN: Recital **(*)

Under the title 'Crossfire' this fascinatingly devised recital readily demonstrates links and influences between the music of John Field (who invented the Nocturne) and Chopin, his young Polish successor. Helge Antoni is a notably sensitive advocate of Field's music, and his simple style readily draws parallels with alternated pieces by Chopin. A recital that is both stimulating and musically enjoyable too, as it is naturally recorded.

Piano Sonatas 1–3, Op. 1/1–3; 4 in B; Collection of Piano Airs; Fantaisire; Rondos and Variations

Ⓜ  Chan. 2x1 241-38. O'Rourke

Míceál O'Rourke plays these two-movement Sonatas with some flair. This disc is now joined with a (nearly 80-minute) recital of shorter pieces, and much of it has that quiet charm one expects from this delightful composer. O'Rourke again proves a dedicated interpreter of real artistry, playing with intelligence and taste. Recorded at The Maltings, Snape, he is admirably served by the Chandos team.

FINZI, Gerald (1901–56)

(i) Cello Concerto, Op. 40; (ii) Concerto for Small Orchestra & Solo Violin; Prelude, Op. 25; Romance, Op. 11 (both for strings)

Ⓜ  Chan. 10425X. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Little; City of L. Sinfonia., Hickox

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Eclogue for Piano and Strings; Grand Fantasia & Toccata

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555766. (i) Hugh; (ii) Donohoe; N. Sinfonia, Griffiths

The Cello Concerto is arguably Finzi's greatest work, not just ambitious but deeply moving, written under the stress of knowing he was terminally ill. Wallfisch finds all the dark eloquence of Finzi's central movement, and the performance overall has splendid impetus, with Hickox providing the most sympathetic backing. The Chandos recording has a very natural balance.

The Naxos version, with Tim Hugh a most sensitive soloist, has the advantage not only of bargain price but of a very apt coupling in two of Finzi's concertante works with piano, originally designed for a concerto. Peter Donohoe is the powerful soloist, not always as tender as he might be, but still very sympathetic. A good bargain alternative choice.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Clarinet Concerto

✿ * Lyrita SRCD 236. (i) Ma, New Philh. O.; (ii) Denman, RPO, Handley

In the Cello Concerto Yo Yo Ma, in his début recording, responds with the utmost sensitivity, sometimes playing on a mere thread of tone in his magical account of the Andante quieto. His is not a big performance but a gently inspired one, and many will like his lightness of touch in the finale. The Clarinet Concerto is a comparable masterpiece. If it lacks the contemplative qualities of the Cello Concerto, its more extrovert character and consistent charm are no less compelling. John Denman's performance is entirely seductive, and in both works Vernon Handley's sensitive accompaniments bring first-rate playing while the recording is of Lyrita's usual excellence. A treasurable disc.

Clarinet Concerto, Op. 31

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55101. King, Philh. O, Francis – STANFORD: Clarinet Concerto ***

(i) Clarinet Concerto, Op. 31; 5 Bagatelles for Clarinet & Strings (arr. Ashmore), Op. 23a; Love's Labour's Lost: 3 Soliloquies, Op. 28; (ii) Introit in F for Solo Violin & Small Orchestra, Op. 6; Romance in E flat for String Orchestra, Op. 11; A Severn Rhapsody, Op. 3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553566. (i) Plane; (ii) Hatfield; N. Sinfonia, Griffiths

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Eclogue for Piano & Strings; Love's Labour's Lost: Suite; Prelude for String Orchestra; Romance for Strings

Ⓜ  Nim. NI 5665. (i) Hacker; (ii) Jones; E. String O, Boughton

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Introit for Violin & Orchestra

Ⓜ * BBC (ADD) BBCM 5015-2. (i) Hilton, BBC N. SO, Thomson; (ii) Jarvis, LPO, Boult – LEIGH: Harpsichord Concertino * (with Concert: 'English Music' ***)

(i) Clarinet Concerto, Op. 31; (ii) 5 Bagatelles for Clarinet & Piano

 ASV CDDCA 787. Johnson; (i) RPO, Groves; (ii) Martineau – STANFORD: Clarinet Concerto, etc. ***

Emma Johnson is even more warmly expressive in the concerto than Thea King on her Helios disc, and with Sir Charles Groves and the RPO ideally sympathetic accompanists. Finzi's sinuous melodies for the solo instrument are made to sound as though the soloist is improvising them.

Thea King also gives a definitive performance, strong and clean-cut. Her characterful timbre, using little or no vibrato, is highly telling against a resonant orchestral backcloth. Alun Francis is a most sympathetic accompanist. With Stanford's even rarer concerto this makes a most attractive bargain reissue, and the sound is excellent.

Finzi's Concerto is also played most nimbly by Janet Hilton, admirably supported by Bryden Thomson, especially in the lovely Adagio, which is memorably intense. The Introit for Violin and Orchestra, which brings another memorable theme, is a meditative, thoughtful piece, very well played by Gerald Jarvis and the LPO under Sir Adrian Boult in 1969. This is part of a 77-minute concert of English music, including the delicious Harpsichord Concertino of Walter Leigh.

Robert Plane's highly responsive performance of the concerto also uses a wide range of dynamic, and movingly brings out the work's sense of improvisatory lyricism. Not to be outdone, the Naxos collection offers the Three Soliloquies, plus an orchestration of the five lovely Bagatelles, which is even more evocative than the original version with piano. The Introit for Violin and Orchestra is most sensitively played by Lesley Hatfield. The Romance is hardly less engaging, while Severn Rhapsody shows its composer spinning his pastoral evocation in the manner of Butterworth. All this music is most persuasively presented by the Northern Sinfonia under Howard Griffiths and the Naxos recording has plenty of warmth and atmosphere.

Alan Hacker's reading of the Concerto is also improvisatory in style and freely flexible in tempi, with the slow movement at once introspective and rhapsodic. The concert suite of incidental music for Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost is amiably atmospheric and pleasing in invention and in the colour of its scoring. The two string-pieces are by no means slight and are played most expressively; the Romance is particularly eloquent in William Boughton's hands. For the reissue a sensitive account of the Eclogue has been added.

(i) Concerto for Violin & Small Orchestra; Prelude, Op. 25; Romance, Op. 11 (both for strings); (ii) In Years Defaced (song-cycle, orchestrated by Finzi, Alexander, Roberts, Matthews, Payne and Weir)

🔑  Chan. 9888. (i) Little; (ii) Mark Ainsley; City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

The Concerto for Violin and Small Orchestra draws on Finzi's distinctive brand of pastoral writing, the outer movements are strong and vigorous, the central slow movement ethereally reflective. The warmly expressive Prelude for Strings was salvaged from a Chamber Symphony that was never completed, while the Romance is the most ravishing piece of all.

Taking their cue from Finzi's own setting of When I set out for Lyonnesse, the five other composers involved, all Finzi admirers, offer sensitive settings of a sequence of poems (four by Hardy) which together form a satisfying cycle, designed to celebrate the composer's centenary in 2001, sympathetically sung by John Mark Ainsley. Colin Matthews brings out the mystery of Flecker's evocative poem, To a Poet a Thousand Years Hence, while Anthony Payne (the understanding 'realizer' of Elgar's Third Symphony) provides a brilliant conclusion, more radical than the rest, with the compound-time setting of Hardy's Proud Songsters, quite different from Britten's setting of the same poem in Winter Words.

Eclogue for Piano & String Orchestra

Ⓑ  CfP 575 9832. Lane, RLPO, Handley – DELIUS: Piano Concerto; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Piano Concerto ***

This is the central movement of an uncompleted piano concerto which the composer decided could stand on its own. It was Howard Ferguson who edited the final manuscript and set the title. The mood is tranquil yet haunting, and Piers Lane gives it a tenderly sympathetic reading.

(i) Eclogue for Piano & String Orchestra, Op. 10; (ii) The Fall of the Leaf (Elegy), Op. 20; (i) Grand Fantasia & Toccata for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 38; (ii; iii) Introit for Small Orchestra and Violin; (ii) Nocturne (New Year Music), Op. 7; A Severn Rhapsody, Op. 3; Prelude, Op. 25; Romance, Op. 11; 3 Solitudes (all for string orchestra), Op. 11

🔑  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 239. (i) Katin, New Philh. O, Handley; (ii) LPO, Boult; (iii) with Friend

This collection of shorter orchestral works has some charming miniatures, the music reflecting the wistful, often death-obsessed side of Finzi's character; thus in the Nocturne the New Year brings regret rather than celebration. The pure beauty of the Introit (a surviving movement from a violin concerto whose outer movements were withdrawn) and the easy Englishness of the Severn Rhapsody are equally characteristic, implying more than they seem to. Boult's affectionate performances are superbly recorded and Rodney Friend is an understanding soloist in the concerto movement. The two recordings for piano and orchestra are very well played by Peter Katin and the orchestra under Vernon Handley, and again are very well recorded.

(i) Music for 'Love's Labour's Lost' (for string orchestra); (ii) Farewell to Arms; (iii) In terra pax; (iv) Let us Garlands bring, Op. 18; (v) 2 Sonnets by John Milton

 Lyrita (DDD/ADD) SRCD 237. (i) RPO; (ii–v) New Philh. O; both cond. Handley; with (ii; v) Partridge; (iii) Manning, Noble, John Alldis Ch.; (iv) Carol Case

Finzi here sets highly compressed Milton sonnets in a way that genuinely intensifies the words, reflecting the composer's own intimations of death at the time of composition. They are beautifully sung by Ian Partridge, who is also the soloist in the introduction and aria, Farewell to Arms. In terra pax is a Christmas cantata in miniature, charming in Finzi's most relaxed folk-based style. John Carol Case is the soloist in five Shakespeare lyrics, delicate and individual. The collection is prefaced by Love's Labour's Lost, a vivid suite for strings. Altogether a valuable collection which helps to fill in the complex personality of a minor composer of distinction. Excellent recording.

Elegy for Violin & Piano

 Nim. NI 5666. Hope, Mulligan – ELGAR: Violin Sonata; WALTON: Violin Sonata ***

 Hyp. CDA 66192. Chilingirian, Benson – FERGUSON: Octet, etc. ***

The Finzi Elegy is a very apt makeweight for the Elgar and Walton sonatas, the only surviving movement from a projected violin sonata written in a hectic period for Finzi at the beginning of the Second World War.

Finzi's moving little Elegy also makes an apt fill-up for the record of chamber music by his friend, Howard Ferguson.

VOCAL MUSIC

Song-cycles: Before and after Summer, Op. 16; I said to Love, Op. 19b; Let us garlands bring, Op. 18

ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.557644. Williams, Burnside

Before and after Summer consists of 10 Hardy songs which Finzi assembled in 1949, notably the dark, powerful setting of Channel Firing which comes as a centrepiece. I said to Love is a collection of five settings assembled after the composer's death by his widow and son, three dating from the 1930s when he was at his most creative, and two, far darker, dating from his last months before he died in 1956. Let us garlands bring, better known, consists of five Shakespeare settings, dedicated to Vaughan Williams, which bring refreshing new illumination to texts set many times before, with Come away Death and Fear no more the Heat of the Sun among the finest of all Finzi songs. Firm, even tone from Roderick Williams and beautifully clear diction, with immaculate playing from Iain Burnside.

Dies natalis; Intimations of Immortality

(*) Hyp. CDA 66876. Mark Ainsley, Corydon Singers & O, Best

Matthew Best, with John Mark Ainsley as soloist in both works, uses a relatively small orchestra. Mark Ainsley has a sweet if small voice, very apt for both works, even if under pressure there is some unevenness. The chorus sings with feeling, though the recording is not as vividly immediate as the Lyrita recording.

God is gone up; Magnificat; Let us now praise famous men; Lo, the full final sacrifice; My Lovely One; Thou didst delight my eyes; Welcome, Sweet and Sacred Feast; 7 Unaccompanied Part-Songs, Op. 17.

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.555792. St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Robinson

Gerald Finzi wrote a handful of anthems and motets for the Anglican Church, here freshly and warmly sung by the choir of St John's College, Cambridge, under their choirmaster, Christopher Robinson. Crowning the collection is the extended setting of Richard Crashaw's poem, Lo, the full final sacrifice, ending on an ecstatic 'Amen' with scrunching harmonies. Unlike most offerings in this excellent St John's series from Naxos, this one includes secular items, unaccompanied part-songs, beautifully wrought, setting poems by Robert Bridges.

Intimations of Immortality (Ode)

 Lyrita SRCD 238. Partridge, Guildford Philharmonic Ch. & O, Handley – HADLEY: Symphonic Ballad: The Trees so High ***

Finzi's music, which is in the richest English choral tradition is here performed with a passionate sense of commitment. In this the beauty and intensity of Ian Partridge's singing are a key factor, and equally the choral singing is richly committed, while the Guildford Philharmonic Orchestra is challenged to playing that would not disgrace a much more famous orchestra. Excellent recording too, and a most enterprising coupling.

Oh Fair to See; Till Earth Outwears; A Young Man's Exhortation

 Linn CKD 253. Gilchrist, Tilbrook

Ⓝ ⒷⒷ (*) Naxos 8.570414. Mark Ainsley, Burnside

James Gilchrist's fine disc of Finzi, with Anna Tilbrook the most sensitive accompanist, makes the perfect complement to the Naxos issue of Finzi songs, with very few duplications. Gilchrist with his clear tenor tone brings out the reflective beauty of Finzi's response to words, and brings vitality to the relatively few vigorous songs. Well-balanced sound.

John Mark Ainsley comes into direct competition with James Gilchrist on Linn, and it has to be said that the Linn performances are even more characterful. Mark Ainsley is at home in this repertoire and his singing is naturally expressive; although his voice is of modest size, he projects it well and his diction is clear. He is persuasively accompanied by Iain Burnside, but the piano is balanced rather closely.

A Young Man's Exhortation

 Hyp. CDA 67459. Padmore, Vignoles – TIPPETT: Boyhood's End; BRITTEN: 7 Hölderlin-Fragmente; Um Mitternacht, etc. ***

Finzi's delightful cycle, dating from 1933, offers 10 more settings of Hardy poems, which are among the most warmly lyrical songs he ever wrote, with the poet's often earthy verse matched by the composer's English pastoral idiom. Mark Padmore is an ideal interpreter, warmly accompanied by Roger Vignoles, who provides a perceptive commentary in the notes. Well coupled with other cycles on the theme of youth and friendship.

FOERSTER, Josef Bohuslav (1859–1951)

Symphony 4 in C min. (Easter Eve), Op. 54; My Youth, Op. 44; Festive Overture, Op. 70

(BB)  Naxos 8.557776. Slovak RSO, Friedel

Foerster's Fourth Symphony is one of the best-kept secrets of Czech music. Composed, like its two companions on this CD, during the early part of Foerster's stay in Vienna, it shows the influence of Bruckner and Mahler. It is a long work, some 47 minutes in length, and of striking quality. Its Scherzo is worthy of Dvořák himself and is among the most captivating movements of its kind composed anywhere at this period. The opening of the work has great nobility and depth, and it leaves the listener in no doubt that this is a symphony of real substance. The Festive Overture of 1907 and the somewhat earlier Op. 44 symphonic poem, My Youth, are both first recordings and are well worth a place in the repertory. The American conductor Lance Friedel is obviously committed to this music and gets a very good response from the Slovak Orchestra. Recommended with enthusiasm.

Symphony 4 in C min. (Easter Eve), Op. 54; Springtime and Desire, Op. 93

Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD/DDD) 111 822-2. Prague SO, Smetáček

This beautiful if overlong symphony is both dignified and noble; its Scherzo is infectiously memorable and could be as popular as any of the Slavonic Dances if only it were known. All the same, the symphony wears well. To this analogue recording Supraphon add a 1985 account, digitally recorded, of Springtime and Desire, a symphonic poem with a strong emphasis on the symphonic, and this, like the symphony, is a most welcome addition to the catalogue. Good performances, decent recording.

FÖRSTER, Christoph (1693–1745)

Horn Concerto in E flat

 Ara. Z 6750. Rose, St Luke's Chamber Ens. – HAYDN; L. MOZART; TELEMANN: Horn Concertos ***

Christoph Förster was a contemporary of Bach and this, the earliest of the four concertos in this outstanding collection, is no less demanding of the soloist's virtuosity. Stewart Rose is a splendid player, secure in technique, his style buoyant and expressive by turns, and the orchestra of which he is principal provides him with warmly stylish accompaniments. The recording is first class.

FOSS, Lukas (1922–2009)

3 American Pieces

(BB)  Encore 2 08124-2. Perlman, Boston SO, Ozawa – BARBER: Violin Concerto; BERNSTEIN: Serenade after Plato's 'Symposium' ***

As the title suggests, Foss's Three American Pieces have a strong element of Copland-like folksiness, married to sweet, easy lyricism and with some Stravinskian echoes. Skilfully orchestrated for a small orchestra with prominent piano, all three of the pieces, not just the final Allegro, Composer's Holiday, but also the first two, Early Song and Dedication, have a way of gravitating into hoe-down rhythms, often with a surprising suddenness.

Fantasy Rondo; For Lenny; Grotesque Dance; Four 2-Part Inventions; Passacaglia; Prelude in D; Scherzo ricercato; Solo

(BB)  Naxos 8.559179. Scott Dunn

An impressive pianist, Lukas Foss was also a prolific composer, and the Inventions and Grotesque Dance were written when he was 16. This disc collects all his piano music from his teens through to Solo (1981) and For Lenny (1987). They are inventive and at times delightful pieces. Highly recommended.

String Quartet 1

🔑  Crystal CD 836. American Art Qt – STRAVINSKY: Divertimento; Duo concertante ***

Written at the age of 23, Lukas Foss's essentially lyrical First String Quartet is a masterpiece, and it is marvellously played here. The American Art Quartet give it a superb performance, playing it without a break. The ethereal opening matches the slow movement in beauty and intensity. The recording is too close and is rather dry, but the music's extraordinary originality comes over unfettered.

FOULDS, John (1880–1939)

Dynamic Triptych for Piano & Orchestra

 Lyrita SRCD 211. Shelley, RPO, Handley – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Piano Concerto ***

John Foulds was working in Paris in the late 1920s when he wrote this ambitious concerto, and the profusion of memorable ideas, not always well disciplined, makes for an attractive piece, particularly so in the last of the three movements, Dynamic Rhythm, with its extrovert references to Latin-American rhythms and the American musical. Played with dedication and beautifully recorded, it makes an interesting coupling for the masterly and underestimated Vaughan Williams Piano Concerto. Howard Shelley and the RPO under Vernon Handley give a highly persuasive account of the Triptych, and the 1984 recording is well up to the usual high Lyrita standard.

April – England; (i) Dynamic Triptych (Piano Concerto), Op. 88; Music-Pictures (Group III), Op.

33; Lament from A Celtic Suite, Op. 29; The Song of Ram Dass

🔑  Warner 2564 62999-2. CBSO, Oramo; (i) with Donohoe

April – England finds Foulds in pastoral mood, while The Song of Ram Dass shows something of his feeling for the East. But the most important piece here is the Dynamic Triptych, for piano and orchestra, deploying the composer's interest in unorthodox scales and rhythms. Donohoe's recording offers a challenge to Howard Shelley's pioneering Lyrita version and makes a competitive alternative. The City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra under Sakari Oramo are persuasive advocates of this highly interesting figure and in Music-Pictures (Group III) offer a valuable première recording. Excellent notes from Malcolm Macdonald and first-rate recording.

Cello Sonata

 British Music Soc. BMS 423CD. Cole, Talbot – BOWEN; WALKER: Cello Sonatas ***

Foulds's Cello Sonata is a passionately romantic work with memorable invention, notably the dolce con semplicita secondary theme in the first movement, and the ardent melody of the Lento, which is surrounded by pizzicatos, with the closing Molto brioso the most original of the three movements. The performance here could not be more expressively dedicated and, if the recording is rather over-resonant, its warmth suits the rich musical flow.

String Quartets 9 (Quartetto intimo), Op. 89; 10 (Quartetto geniale), Op. 97; Aquarelles, Op. 32

✿  Pearl SHECD 9564. Endellion Qt

The Quartetto intimo, written in 1931, is a powerful five-movement work in a distinctive idiom more advanced than that of Foulds's British contemporaries, with echoes of Scriabin and Bartók. Also on the disc is the one surviving movement of his tenth and last quartet, a dedicated, hymn-like piece, as well as three slighter pieces which are earlier. Passionate performances and excellent recording, which is enhanced by the CD transfer. A uniquely valuable issue.

PIANO MUSIC

April, England; Egoistic; English Tune with Burden, Op. 89; Essays in the Modes, Op. 78; Music-Pictures Groups VI (Gaelic Melodies), Op. 81; VII (Landscapes), Op. 13; Variations & Improvisations on an Original Theme, Op. 4

 BIS CD 933. Stott

Kathryn Stott proves brilliant and persuasive in this repertoire. She also has the advantage of quite exceptionally truthful and vivid recording quality. The Essays in the Modes (1928), which opens the disc, is interesting stuff; one is reminded of Petrushka in the first and of Busoni elsewhere. Stott characterizes these pieces and everything here with strong personality. Try Prismic, the last of the Essays, and the intelligence and wit of her playing will make a striking impression. Not great music but, played like this, one is almost persuaded that it is.

A World Requiem

* Chan. SACD CHSA 5058. Charbonnet, Wyn-Rogers, Skelton, Finley, Trinity Boys' Ch., Crouch End Festival Ch., Philh. Ch., BBC Symphony Ch. & O, Botstein

Foulds wrote his A World Requiem for the 1923 Festival of Remembrance, using over a thousand performers. The music is eclectic, with many derivations, and is essentially a cry for world peace. The work subdivides and opens darkly, but the call for deliverance in the second half is exuberant in its message that Christ's promise to mankind is the world's salvation. With these huge forces and four soloists, the vocal spectacle obviously recalls Mahler's Third, Resurrection and Eighth Symphonies, and certainly this performance exerts a gripping hold on the listener. The recording is very much in the demonstration bracket.

FRANÇAIX, Jean (1912–97)

(i) Piano Concertino; Les Bosquets de Cythère; Les Malheurs de Sophie

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67384. (i) Cassard; Ulster O, Fischer

This new account of the Piano Concertino by Philippe Cassard on Hyperion is to be warmly welcomed. The first-movement Presto is exhilaratingly brisk, yet Cassard's articulation is immaculate, and the other three movements are full of the delicacy and charm for which the work is celebrated, especially the whimsical finale. Les Bosquets de Cythère might have been a ballet but is in essence a suite of waltzes. The island of Cythère was traditionally the birthplace of Aphrodite and it is celebrated as the home of intoxicating sensual pleasure. Les Malheurs de Sophie depicts the misadventures of the ill-behaved three-year-old heroine and her cousin, Paul, who is two years older. Like the other works here, the score is played with great affection and elegant attention to detail by the Ulster Orchestra under Thierry Fischer, and the Hyperion recording is in the demonstration class.

(i; ii) L'Horloge de Flore (for oboe & orchestra); (i; iii) Cor anglais Quartet; (iii) String Quartet; (iv) Trio for Oboe, Bassoon & Piano

🔑 * CPO 999 779-2. (i) Lencsés; (ii) Stuttgart RSO, SWR, Segal; (iii) Parissii Qt; (iv) Françaix Trio

L'Horloge de Flore is captivating. Inspired by the Linnaeus Flower Clock (which ingeniously conveys the time by its formation from different floral species, each of which blossoms at a different hour of the day or night) the music forms a suite of seven miniature movements, mainly gentle. It is beautifully played by Lajos Lencsés and the accompaniment is admirably tasteful. In short, this is a miniature treasure and it is supported by other inconsequential chamber works, all playful and presented with much finesse, and each as personable as it is slight. The closing String Quartet is full of whimsy and ends very gently with a molto sostenuo.

Ouverture anacréonique; Pavane pour un génie vivant; Scuola de ballo; Sérénade; Symphony 3 in G

* Hyp. CDA 67323. Ulster O, Fischer

Françaix did not number his symphonies, but this amiable G major work is his Third (1953), composed light-heartedly in memory of Papa Haydn. What a happy work this is! The Sérénade, written 20 years earlier, is even more jocular, opening with fake-rhythmic abrasiveness before a melancholy bassoon introduces the Andantino. But high spirits return in the chirping Poco Allegretto and dashingly ribald finale.

A touching calm then dominates the rather lovely opening of the Ouverture anacréonique (1978). But the music soon livens up vivaciously and reaches a confident, jazzy climax. The exquisite Pavane pour un génie vivant, a homage to Ravel, evokes that composer's world idyllically. The programme then ends winningly with a pastiche Scuola de ballo, based on the music of Boccherini. The whole programme is played with warmth, polish and vitality in equal measure, the recording is first class and this is very highly recommended.

Les Demoiselles de la nuit; Le Roi nu (ballets; complete)

 Hyp. CDA 67489. Ulster O, Thierry Fischer

Le Roi nu is based on Hans Andersen's story, 'The Emperor's New Clothes', and after an imposing fanfare launches into brilliant, illustrative music, light and varied. Les Demoiselles de la nuit of 1948 is much darker, a surreal story based on a scenario of Jean Anouilh, described as 'a cat ballet in one Act'. Starting with a wonderfully evocative Nocturne (repeated later), the predominantly melancholy tone is dotted with lighter passages typical of Françaix, always keenly illustrative. Thierry Fischer conducts the Ulster Orchestra in compellingly idiomatic performances, vividly recorded.

CHAMBER MUSIC

À huit (Octet); Clarinet Quintet; Divertissement for Bassoon & String Quintet; (i) L'Heure du berger

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67036. Gaudier Ens., (i) with Tomes

À huit (Octet); Clarinet Quintet; Divertissement for Bassoon & String Quintet

(*) MDG MDGL 3300. Charis Ens.

À huit, written for the Vienna Octet in 1972 and dedicated to the memory of Schubert, is a delight. The Clarinet Quintet is a relatively late work (1977) but full of the beguiling charm that distinguishes so much of Françaix's invention. Despite its wartime provenance, the Divertissement for Bassoon and String Quintet manages to smile, while L'Heure du berger, background music for a brasserie, comes off equally well. Highly polished and characterful playing from all concerned on Hyperion and excellent recording.

Wind Quintets 1 & 2; (i) L'Heure du berger

 MDG 603 0557-2. Kammervereinigung Berlin; (i) with Zichner

These Berliners put over Françaix's delightful Wind Quintets with great charm and delicacy. These are performances that radiate freshness and fun and, apart from the virtuosity of the performances, the naturalness of the recording and the balance are a continuing source of delight. L'Heure du berger is a piano and wind sextet, but this is as good in its different way. Delicious playing and enchantingly light-hearted music.

FRANCK, César (1822–90)

(i) Le Chasseur maudit; (ii) Les Eolides; (i) Psyché; Rédemption; (i; iii) Nocturne

 Australian DG Eloquence (ADD) 476 2800. (i) O de Paris, Barenboim; (ii) SRO, Ansermet; (iii) Ludwig

What a good idea to gather together Barenboim's 1976 Franck recordings, yet not include the obvious Symphony (which was not one of his recording successes) instead of the rarer works here. Rédemption is given a splendidly convincing performance, with glorious brass antiphonies. Le Chasseur maudit opens with a most evocative Sunday morning ambience, and the devilish chase which follows, with its arresting horn calls, is vividly exciting. The orchestral sections of Psyché are richly done, showing real tendresse, and the relatively simple and brief Nocturne, beautifully sung by Christa Ludwig, makes a beguiling bonus. The 1967 sound for Ansermet's Les Eolides is even more vivid, a work that suits him well, with much expressive feeling in the ebb and flow of the string writing of this haunting piece.

Symphonic Variations for Piano & Orchestra

 Decca 475 8764. Thibaudet, SRO, Dutoit – SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Concertos 2 & 5 ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 376-2. Curzon, LPO, Boult – BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 1; LITOLFF: Scherzo ***

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 235-2. De Larrocha, LPO, Frühbeck de Burgos – FAURÉ: Fantasie ; RAVEL: Piano Concertos in G and for the Left Hand ***

 Sup. SU 3714-2. Moravec, Prague Philh. O, Bělohlávek – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 4 ; RAVEL: Piano Concerto in G **(*)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550754. Thiollier, Nat. SO of Ireland, De Almeida – FAURÉ: Ballade; D'INDY: Symphonie sur un chant montagnard français **(*)

Once played to death, the lovely Variations symphoniques are rarely encountered in the concert hall these days and are relatively seldom committed to disc. Jean-Yves Thibaudet plays them with affection and style, and effortlessly conveys their charm. He receives admirable support from the Geneva Orchestra under Dutoit and splendid recorded sound. This is now first choice among modern recordings.

Clifford Curzon's 1959 recording of the Franck Variations has stood the test of time. It is an engagingly fresh reading, as notable for its impulse and rhythmic felicity as for its poetry. The vintage Decca recording is naturally balanced and has been transferred to CD without loss of bloom.

The Spanish interpreters, Alicia de Larrocha and Frühbeck de Burgos, provide a reading that (perhaps surprisingly) brings out the French delicacy of the Variations more than usual. It is most enjoyable, very well recorded (1972), and makes a very welcome return to circulation in this very recommendable anthology.

François-Joël Thiollier shows imagination, and the orchestral playing is perfectly acceptable without being in any way distinguished. All the same, many will find it tempting at this price.

Moravec's ability to convey expressive warmth without exaggeration comes out in the Franck Symphonic Variations, with the improvisatory writing for the soloist sounding totally natural and spontaneous in free rubato. The faster variations bring bright, clear textures, not just in the piano part but also in the orchestral writing, with Bělohlávek drawing the most responsive playing from the orchestra he founded.

Symphonic Variations; Les Djinns

 Alpha 104. Biret, Bilkent SO, Páris – MASSENET: Piano Concerto ***

Refinement is the keynote of Idil Biret's performance of Franck's Symphonic Variations. The orchestra does not open dramatically but sets a gentler romantic mood which permeates Birit's relaxed performance, full of poetic touches. But when the music gathers pace, rhythms are sparkling, and the closing section is admirably spirited. Les Djinns arrive darkly and sombrely, but Biret enters with great dash to chase after the phantoms, and it is her ready virtuosity which carries the music forward, with warm lyrical contrast and glowing dexterity in the delectable coda, where the apparitions are finally banished by gentleness. An imaginatively contrasted pair of performances in which Alain Páris is an excellent partner and the recording does the performers full justice.

Symphony in D min.

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 67897-2. Chicago SO, Monteux – STRAVINSKY: Petrushka ***

🔑 * PentaTone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186 078. SRO, Janowski – CHAUSSON: Symphony ***

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 720-2. Berlin RSO, Maazel – MENDELSSOHN: Symphony 5 ***

 Universal Accord 476 8069. Liège PO, Langrée – CHAUSSON: Symphony ***

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) Medici Arts (ADD) MM 028. Netherlands RPO, Stokowski – RAVEL: Fanfare: L'Eventail de Jeanne ; PROKOFIEV: Alexander Nevsky ***

(i) Symphony in D min.; Le Chasseur maudit; (ii) Symphonic Variations for Piano & Orchestra

Ⓑ (*) RCA 82876 65833-2. (i) Boston SO, Munch; (ii) Pennario, Boston Pops O, Fiedler

Symphony in D min.; Les Eolides; (i) Symphonic Variations for Piano & Orchestra

🔑  Chan. 9875. (i) Lortie; BBC PO, Tortelier

Symphony in D min.; Psyché: Four Orchestral Extracts

🔑  Avie AV 003. Strasburg PO, Latham-König

Symphony in D min.; (i) Symphonic Variations for Piano & Orchestra

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 5 21854-2. Toulouse Capitole SO, Plasson; (i) with Collard

Monteux exerts a unique grip on this highly charged Romantic symphony, and his control of the continuous ebb and flow of tempo and tension is masterly, so that any weaknesses of structure in the outer movements are disguised. The splendid playing of the Chicago Orchestra is ever responsive to the changes of mood, and the most recent remastering for SACD brings a further improvement; indeed, now the quality reflects the acoustics of Chicago's Orchestra Hall in the same way as the Reiner recordings, with textures full-bodied and glowing, without loss of detail. The newest coupling is Monteux's uniquely authoritative 1962 Boston recording of Petrushka.

Marek Janowski gives us what must be one of the finest accounts of the Franck masterpiece since Beecham and Monteux. The playing of the Geneva Orchestra has richness and an expressive power that do full justice to this score, whose stature is often underrated, thanks to its overfamiliarity. Very rich recorded sound, especially for those with a surround sound facility.

With brilliantly full Chandos recording enhancing Tortelier's warm, urgent reading of the Symphony, this CD makes another outstanding recommendation for Franck's two most popular orchestral works, an ideal coupling not as common as one might expect. Louis Lortie is the excellent soloist in the Symphonic Variations, spontaneously poetic in the slow sections, sparkling and light in the scherzando finale.

Plasson's 1985 performance of the Symphony has conviction and genuine lyrical fervour, equally strikingly in the secondary theme of the first movement and the impulsive gusto of the finale. This may not seem as individual an account as that by Monteux but it is certainly both exciting and satisfying, and the EMI recording is much more impressive than the RCA recording for Monteux, even if it is not top-drawer EMI. Jean-Philippe Collard's performance of the Symphonic Variations is characteristically sensitive, full of imaginative colouring and touched by distinction. Those looking for a budget coupling of these two works should be well satisfied.

Munch's 1957 performance of the Symphony in D minor was always among the finest ever recorded. It is held together very tautly. But it suffered – as it still does – from the internal balance of the orchestra, which lets the trumpets (with a nasal edge to their tone) coarsen the texture of the loud moments. Otherwise the warm Boston acoustics are heard to good effect, although in the slow movement the harp is very forward. The finale begins with tremendous élan, and the quotations from previous movements are not allowed to halt the onward flow of the music. Le Chasseur maudit here sounds spectacular: the horn calls come over arrestingly. The Symphonic Variations are brilliantly played by Leonard Pennario, and if Fiedler's support is strong rather than subtle this is still very enjoyable. A thoroughly worthwhile reissue.

Stokowski's moulding of the basic tempo of the first movement varies with the music's flow, but with the tension highly maintained the performance is easy to enjoy in spite of its indulgences. The Allegretto is beautifully played, its delicacy well maintained, and then the finale produces a thrilling forward impulse which carries the performance to an exciting conclusion. The engaging Ravel Fanfare acts as a piquant prelude. The recording (of a broadcast), made in Rotterdam's De Doelen concert hall, is warmly atmospheric, and the Prokofiev coupling is highly recommendable.

Latham-König also daringly uses constantly varying tempi and the widest dynamic range. His reading is wayward but full of warmth, and he keeps a splendid grip on the structure. He then offers Franck's second orchestral version of Psyché (omitting the chorus), which languorously captures the music's sensuous evocation while the thrilling climax of the third section, Le Jardin d'Eros, is later to be ardently capped by the strings. The recording is spaciously spectacular – very much in the demonstration bracket.

Maazel's DG account is beautifully shaped, both in its overall structure and in incidental details. He adopts a fairly brisk tempo in the slow movement, which, surprisingly enough, greatly enhances its poetry and dignity; his finale is also splendidly vital. The work gains enormously from strong control and deliberate understatement, as well as from the refinement of tone and phrasing which mark this reading, for there is no lack of excitement. The recording is admirably well blended and balanced.

It is good too that the Franck Symphony should be coupled with Chausson's Opus 20 and under Louis Langrée the interpretation of the Franck could hardly be more idiomatic, with subtle nuances of phrasing and variations of tempo consistently reflecting the players' affection for the music and, helped by well-balanced recording, the playing has splendid dramatic bite.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata in A (trans. of Violin Sonata)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40599-2. Noras, Rigutto – DEBUSSY; FAURÉ: Cello Sonatas ***

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 82633 (2). Du Pré, Barenboim – BRAHMS: Sonatas 1 & 2 (); CHOPIN: Sonata **(*)

(*) CRD (ADD) CRD 3391. Cohen, Vignoles (with DVOŘÁK: Rondo) – GRIEG: Cello Sonata **(*)

Franck's Violin Sonata when translated to the cello is mellower, less extrovert, but its originality of structure, based on strikingly memorable material, is underlined all the more.

Arto Noras's performance is as good as any, particularly at this competitive price. He is an elegant player of much finesse, and both the Debussy and Fauré sonatas come off well.

Du Pré and Barenboim also give a fine, mature, deeply expressive reading of a richly satisfying work, beautifully recorded. However, their couplings are uneven in appeal.

Robert Cohen gives a firm and strong rendering of the Franck Sonata in its cello version, splendidly incisive and dashing in the second-movement Allegro, but the recording is more limited than one expects from CRD, a little shallow.

Piano Quintet in F min.

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553645. Levinas, Quatuor Ludwig – CHAUSSON: Quartet in C min. ***

() Testament mono SBT 1077. Aller, Hollywood Qt – SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Quintet ()

Michaël Levinas and the Quatuor Ludwig give a very impressive account of 'the king of piano quintets' (the phrase is Tournemire's). Both the playing and the recorded sound are of a high standard.

Edward Sackville-West and Desmond Shawe-Taylor, the authors of The Record Guide, spoke of the Aller/Hollywood version five decades ago as a 'clean-limbed performance … the players' attack is extraordinarily vivid and the instrumental balance beautifully maintained'. Even if there is no mistaking the (1953) mono sound as being of its time, the performance has such eloquence and power that the music leaps out of the speakers with a vibrant intensity.

The rather high-powered account from Heifetz and his starry team of soloists – which is strongly projected and marvellously played, of course, conveys little of the intimacy of chamber music. The same goes for the Dvorák coupling, but not the Françaix Trio, which is enchanting. (RCA 74321 909652)

(i) Piano Quintet in F min. String Quartet in D

Ⓝ  Phoenix ED. 142. Petersen Qt, (i) with Pizarro

At one time a warhorse, the F minor Quintet of 1879 is nowadays a rarity in the concert hall and is not generously represented on disc. The Quartet, written in the year before his death, was always a rarity and, although there have been impressive recordings (the Fitzwilliams' CD among them), they have been even more elusive. And so this coupling is particularly valuable since Pizarro is a sensitive and imaginative player and the Petersen a masterly ensemble. Those wanting both works will find this coupling very recommendable.

String Quartet in D

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67664. Dante Qt – FAURÉ: String Quartet in E min ***

(i) String Quartet in D; (ii) Violin Sonata in A

🔑  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 476 8463. (i) Fitzwilliam Qt; (ii) Amoyal, Rogé

Franck's Quartet, highly ambitious in its scale, its almost orchestral texture and its complex use of cyclic form, contains some of the composer's most profound, most compelling thought, and this magnificent performance by the Fitzwilliam Quartet, superbly triumphing over the technical challenges with totally dedicated, passionately convinced playing, completely silences any reservations. Richly recorded, with the thick textures nicely balanced, this was one of the finest chamber records of the late 1970s. Amoyal and Rogé, richly recorded in 1995, provide a superb account of the Violin Sonata, a performance full of fantasy and giving the impression of music emerging spontaneously on the moment.

The Dante offer a freshly vibrant account of the Franck String Quartet which brings out all the drama of the score as well as its beauty. It opens with a rich boldness, superbly captured by the Hyperion engineers, and one is instantly grabbed by the intensity of the playing. The Scherzo is very delicately done, and the slow movement hauntingly beautiful. The finale, taken at a fast tempo, is strikingly dramatic in its contrasts between the lyrical and the dramatic writing – as well as the wide range of colours brought out by the four players – and this is one of the finest accounts of this work on CD, if not eclipsing the Fitzwilliam version.

Viola Sonata in A (transcription of Violin Sonata)

 Chan. 8873. Imai, Vignoles – VIEUXTEMPS: Viola Sonata, etc. ***

 Simax PSC 1126. Tomter, Gimse – VIEUXTEMPS: Viola Sonata, etc. ***

An all-Belgian coupling from these two violists, Imai and Tomter. The Franck loses a certain amount of its flamboyance and passion, and gains in a kind of measured dignity. Both performances listed above are exemplary if you want it in this form. There is absolutely nothing to choose between them; both are commanding performances and have an impressive eloquence.

Violin Sonata in A (DVD version)

(*) EMI DVD 4904519. Y. & H. Menuhin (bonus: Mendelssohn: Variations sérieuses, Op. 54) – BARTÓK: Contrasts; Violin Sonata 1: Finale; SCHUBERT: Piano Trio 1 **(*)

The Menuhins must have performed this Sonata many times, but they succeed in making it sound very fresh. The recording comes from the BBC studios in early 1960 and is in black-and-white, and the camerawork is predictably restrained and finely judged.

Violin Sonata in A

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 460 006-2. Chung, Lupu – DEBUSSY: Violin Sonata * ✿ ; CHAUSSON: Poème ****

Ⓜ * Decca 475 8246. Perlman, Ashkenazy – BRAHMS: Horn Trio in E flat **(*)

🔑 (BB)  EMI 208122-2. Chang, Vogt – SAINT-SAËNS: Violin Sonata 1; RAVEL: Violin Sonata ***

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 5903. Danczowska, Zimerman – SZYMANOWSKI: Mythes, etc. *** ✿

 EMI 5 56815-2. Perlman, Argerich – BEETHOVEN: Violin Sonata 9 in A (Kreutzer) ***

 DG 445 880-2. Dumay, Pires – DEBUSSY: Violin Sonata in G min.; RAVEL: Berceuse, etc. ***

 Avie Crear Classics AV 0037. Gleusteen, Ordronneau – DVOŘÁK: Violin Sonatina; GRIEG: Violin Sonata 3 ***

Ⓝ () Testament mono SBT 1442. D. Oistrakh, Yampolski – RAVEL: Tzigane; SCHUMANN: Fantaisie, Op. 131 (arr. Kreisler); SZYMANOWSKI: Myths, Op. 30 ()

The Franck Sonata is exceptionally well served on CD. Kyung-Wha Chung and Radu Lupu give a glorious account, full of natural and not over-projected eloquence, and most beautifully recorded. The slow movement has marvellous repose and the other movements have a natural exuberance and sense of line that carry the listener with them. The 1977 recording is enhanced on CD and, with an apt Chausson coupling, this reissue remains very desirable indeed.

With Perlman and Ashkenazy, after a magical opening, the first movement catches the listener by the ears with the thrust of the forward impulse and the intensity of its lyrical flow. Yet there is no lack of flexibility and the sheer ardour of this interpretation makes it a genuine alternative to the Chung/Lupu account, and worthy of inclusion among Decca's 'Originals'. There are, however, problems with the focus of the (splendidly played) Brahms coupling.

Sarah Chang and Lars Vogt also make a winning partnership and give a commanding account of the Sonata. Vogt proves particularly impressive in the challenging piano part, and if the coupling appeals (and it should) readers need not hesitate. Good recorded sound too.

Kaja Danczowska's account of the Franck Sonata – now reissued as one of DG's Originals – is distinguishd by a natural sense of line and great sweetness of tone, and she is partnered superbly by Krystian Zimerman. Indeed, in terms of dramatic fire and strength of line, this version can hold its own alongside the finest on record, while its Szymanowski coupling is outstanding in every way.

As in the Beethoven Kreutzer Sonata, Perlman and Argerich challenge each other to thrilling effect in this live EMI recording, made in Saratoga in 1999. Some may resist the expressive freedom, whether in phrasing, rubato or in fluctuations of speed, but the magnetism will for most be irresistible. As in the Beethoven coupling, audience noises are intrusive at times.

Kai Gleusteen is a winningly natural player with a lovely tone, and he phrases Franck's melodies with warm lyricism. His partnership with Catherine Ordronneau is one of complete musical affinity, and their account of this much-played sonata can rank with the best, with all four movements bringing playing of sympathetic lyrical feeling and fervour.

The distinguished partnership of Augustin Dumay and Maria João Pires offers as assured and powerful an interpretation of Franck's indestructible Sonata as any now in the catalogue. The DG recording is more than acceptable, and readers wanting this particular coupling need not hold back.

David Oistrakh's performance comes from 1958. It finds Yampolski in tremendous form, with both ardour and virtuosity in abundant supply. The Myths are characteristic and highly individual and make an appealing coupling.

ORGAN MUSIC

3 Chorals (in E; B min.; A min.); 3 Pièces (Fantaisie in A; Cantabile; Pièce héroïque); 6 Pièces (Fantaisie 1 in C, Op. 16; Grande pièce symphonique, Op. 17; Prélude, fugue et variation, Op. 18; Pastorale, Op. 19; Prière, Op. 20; Final, Op. 21)

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 61428-2 (2). Alain (Cavaillé-Coll organ of the Eglise Saint-François de Sales, Lyon)

(B)  Cal. (ADD) CAL 5920/21. Isoir (Cavaillé-Coll organ of Luçon Cathedral)

(BB)  Regis RRC 2054 (2). Bate

Marie-Claire Alain recorded all these works on a Cavaillé-Coll organ at Lyon. These performances are full of spontaneous feeling, and the registration brings some glorious sounds, with the detail quite remarkably clear.

André Isoir's performances are also recorded on a Cavaillé-Coll organ (in 1975), and very impressively too. His performances, with their improvisatory character, are just as authentic as Marie Claire Alain's and his recording justly won a Grand Prix du Disque. The Grande pièce symphonique is especially successful, the Chorals are appropriately cool, and the Pièce héroïque is also strikingly spontaneous. However, the digitally recorded Warner Apex set remains first choice on grounds of both excellence and economy.

Jennifer Bate plays the Danion-Gonzalez organ at Beauvais Cathedral and is given the benefit of an excellent digital recording. The spacious acoustic contributes an excellent ambience to the aural image, and Bate's brilliance is always put at the service of the composer. The Pièce héroïque seems rather well suited to the massive sounds which the Beauvais organ can command and all the music chosen here – the content of three CDs, previously available on the Unicorn label – shows the instrument to good advantage. The only small criticism is that Bate rushes the opening of the A minor Choral, some of whose detail does not register in this acoustic at the speed. However, this is a splendid bargain issue by any standards.

Choral 2

 Chan. 9785. Tracey (organ of Liverpool Cathedral) – GUILMANT: Symphony 2 for Organ & Orchestra; WIDOR: Symphony 3 for Organ & Orchestra ***

Franck's Second Choral is an expansive Passacaglia which reaches a great climax and then gently fades away in the valedictory closing bars. Although the Liverpool organ is not entirely right for it (one needs better definition), Ian Tracey's performance can hardly be faulted, and the result is nothing if not spectacular, enough to make a suitable encore for the two concertante works.

PIANO MUSIC

Choral 3; Danse lente; Grand caprice; Les Plaintes d'une poupée; Prélude, aria et final; Prélude, choral et fugue

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66918. Hough

Stephen Hough's impressive Prélude, choral et fugue is worthy to rank alongside Murray Perahia's account (currently withdrawn), and no praise could be higher. In addition to the piano music, Hough gives us his own transcription of the Third of the organ Chorals, which in his hands sounds as if it had been written for the piano, so splendidly is it played. A most distinguished record in every way.

Eglogue (Hirtengedicht), Op. 3; Les Plaintes d'une poupée; Prélude, aria et final; Prélude, choral et fugue; Premier grand caprice, Op. 5

(BB)  Naxos 8.554484. Wass

What Wass brings out in the major items is the technical brilliance of the keyboard writing. He uses a ravishing range of tone, lightening the Prélude, aria et final with a flowing speed in the Prélude and a mysterious opening for the Final. The two lyrical miniatures are charmingly done, but most impressive is the finest of Franck's piano works, the Prélude and Choral, leading to a powerful, clean-cut account of the Fugue, which makes one want to hear Wass in Bach. Heavy fortissimos tend to clang – partly the eager pianist's fault – but otherwise the sound is full and vivid.

VOCAL MUSIC

Psyché (symphonic fragments)

() Testament mono SBT 1128. René Duclos Ch., Paris Conservatoire O, Cluytens – RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé ***

It is logical that André Cluytens's sensitive account of Daphnis should be coupled with Franck's most sumptuous and imaginative score. Both are inspired by classical mythology. The 1954 recording is mono but the transfer is of high quality and no collector will fail to respond.

FRANKEL, Benjamin (1906–73)

(i) Viola Concerto, Op. 45; (ii) Violin Concerto (In Memory of the Six Million), Op. 24; (iii) Serenade Concertante for Piano Trio & Orchestra, Op. 37

🔑 (M)  CPO 999 422-2. (i) Dean; (ii) Hoelscher; (iii) Smith, Lale, Emmerson; Queensland SO, Albert

The Violin Concerto's emotional core is the expressive and eloquent slow movement. Yet apart from its elegiac centre, the overwhelming impression the work leaves is powerful and positive, a testament to the strength of the human spirit. The Viola Concerto is much later and is hardly less memorable. Frankel's lyricism and his musical ingenuity are always in evidence. The composer describes the Serenata concertante, which is for piano trio and orchestra, as 'a street scene' in which passing traffic, a distant jazz band, lovers dancing and much else besides can be heard. It wears its serial organization lightly. Both Ulf Hoelscher and Brett Dean are impressive soloists in the two concertos and the Queensland Orchestra respond with supportive playing. The recording engineers serve these fine players faithfully and produce an impressive and wide-ranging sound. Strongly recommended.

Symphonies 1–8; Overtures; Mephistoteles Serenade and Dance

(B)  CPO 999 661-2 (4). Queensland SO, Albert

Benjamin Frankel is a master of the orchestra, and the First Symhony (1959) leaves no doubt that he was also a master symphonist. The music develops organically; Frankel has something of the strength of Sibelius combined with a Mahlerian anguish, and his serialism, like that of Frank Martin, never undermines tonal principles. The Fourth Symphony is arguably one of the very finest of Frankel's works. It has a more restrained palette than its predecessors, yet its invention is both powerful and distinctive. The Fifth Symphony, too, is a well-argued and impressive score. The Sixth is dark and powerfully argued and gets very persuasive advocacy. The Seventh was commissioned by the Peter Stuyvesant Foundation for the LSO, who gave its première under André Previn in 1970. A thoughtful and searching piece, it was underrated at the time and we now have the opportunity of getting to know it for ourselves. The opening of the Eighth (1971) is vintage Frankel and the work as a whole has a sense of logic and purpose that marks his best music. The Queensland Orchestra play with dedication, and are very well recorded.

Clarinet Quintet, Op. 28

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55105. Thea King, Britten Qt – COOKE: Clarinet Quintet; HOLBROOKE: Eilean Shona; HOWELLS: Rhapsodic Quintet; MACONCHY: Clarinet Quintet ***

Frankel's Clarinet Quintet (1956) was a BBC commission for the Cheltenham Festival. It is perhaps the least harmonically tractable work in Thea King's Helios anthology, but it communicates strongly in a performance as strong as this, especially the quirky central Scherzo, while the elegiac finale, written in memory of the distinguished clarinettist, Frederick Thurston, is utterly haunting.

FRESCOBALDI, Girolamo (1583–1643)

Keyboard Music: Capriccios; Canzonas; Correntes; Partite sopra un aria Romana detta la Manista Ricercare cromatico; Toccatas

(N) (BB) * Naxos 8. 570717. Folts (harpsichord)

Martha Folts here provides an admirable survey of the keyboard music of a highly influential composer whose music demands a free, improvisatory style of performance, of which she is obviously a master. She plays a most attractive instrument made by Jerome de Zentis in 1658, restored by Keith Hill. The programme is nicely varied between dance-movement Capriccios (including a set of variations using the two-note call of the cuckoo) and Toccatas, and includes also a particularly attractive Partita. The recording is most realistic, but it is important to keep the volume level low.

FURTWÄNGLER, Wilhelm (1886–1954)

Symphonic Concerto: Adagio

() Testament mono SBT 1170. Fischer, BPO, Furtwängler – BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 2 ((*))

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110879. Fischer, BPO, Furtwängler – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 5; WAGNER: Parsifal: Preludes ()

Edwin Fischer's sympathetic account of the Adagio solenne from the B minor Symphonic Concerto is available on both Naxos and Testament. While Mark Obert-Thorn's Naxos transfer is not as full-blooded as Paul Baily's, it is eminently serviceable if the couplings are preferred. The Adagio is a noble piece, with an autumnal feel to it. It may not be great music, but with its echoes of Bruckner leading to passionate climaxes it makes agreeable listening in the 1939 studio recording, even with limited sound.

Symphony 2 in E min.

() DG mono 457 722-2 (2). BPO, Furtwängler – SCHUMANN: Symphony 4 () ✿

Furtwängler spoke of his Second Symphony as his spiritual testament. It is Brucknerian in its dimensions and sense of space. The first movement, lasting 24 minutes, is accommodated on the first CD, and the remaining three on the second. Furtwängler himself thought the present studio recording, made in the Jesus-Christus-Kirche, Berlin, in 1950 'stilted', but it sounds amazingly clear and warm in this transfer and readers should not be put off acquiring it. The Schumann coupling – one of Furtwängler's very finest mono records – makes a superb coupling.

GABRIELI, Andrea (1510–86)

Canzon in the 1st tone for 10 parts; Canzons in the 7th & 9th tone for 8 parts; Canzon in the 7th, 8th & 9th tones for 12 parts; Canzon in the 12th tone for 10 Parts; Sonata for 3 Violins & Organ; Intonations for Organ in the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th & 11th Tones; Ricercar for Organ; 3 Mass Movements; Motets: Anglus ad pastores ait; Deus, qui beatum Marcum; Hodie Christus natus est; In eccelsiis; O magnum mysterium; Plaudite, psallite, Jubilate Deo omnis terra; Regina coeli laetare

(M)  Sony 82876 78762-2. Gabrieli Consort La Fenice; E. Power Biggs (organ); Gregg Smith Singers; Fort Worth Texas Boys' Ch.; Edward Tarr Brass Ens., Negri

E. Power Biggs pioneered more than one stereo recording of the music of Andrea Gabrieli, enlisting the expertise of the late Professor Denis Stevens to edit the scores and instrumental material. Biggs then hired musicians who were equally at home on modern and antique instruments. 'We then mixed purity with common sense. Some pieces sounded very beautiful on old trombones, while some needed the extra power and brilliance that would set the basilica's acoustics ringing.' The result, recorded in the fine sonority of San Marco, Venice, in 1967, is a great success. The singing of the combined choral and brass groups here, admirably directed by Vittorio Negri and excellently balanced, is a total success, and Power Biggs's own organ Intonations make noble interludes. This is indeed worthy of inclusion among Sony's 'Great Performances'.

(i) Ricercar a 4 del primo tuono; Ricercar a 4 del sesto tuono; Ricercar a 4 del duodecimo tuono; Ricercar per sonar a 8. (ii) (Organ) Canzon alla Francese: Petit Jacquet; Intonazione del sesto tuono; Madrigal: Ancor che co'l partire; Ricercar del settimo tuono; (i; ii; iii) Missa Pater peccavi; Motets: (i; iii) De profondis clamavi; (iv; i) O sacrum convivium

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55265. (i) His Majesty's Sackbutts & Cornets; Roberts (organ); (iii) His Majesty's Consort of Voices, Roberts, (iv) with Pickard

It is good to have first-class performances of some of Andrea Gabrieli's Ricercari on record, even if they are less spectacular and, indeed, less varied than those of his nephew, Giovanni. The Mass setting (based on Andrea's own motet, Pater peccavi in coelum) settles for very simple counterpoint but springs to life in the Sanctus.

The solo motet, O sacrum convivium, is simply and beautifully sung by Anna Sarah Pickard, whose vocal line is integrated within the 'accompaniment' by four sackbuts. The organ interludes are played by the group's director, Timothy Roberts, and the concert closes with the eight-part Ricercar per sonar, which is rather impressive. Excellent recording in a well-judged acoustic.

Madrigals: Amami, vita mia, ch'io t'amo anchora; Ancor che col partire; Asia felice hor ben posso chiamarmi; Caro dolce ben mio, perche fuggire; Chi'nde darà la bose al solfizar; etc. Instrumental Pieces: Amami, vita mia, ch'io t'amo anchora; Dunque il comun poter; Fuor fuori a sì bel canto

🔑  Chan. 0697. I Fagiolini, Hollingworth – GIOVANNI GABRIELI: Madrigals: Sacri di Giove augei sacre Fenici (2 versions). Instrumental Pieces: Canzon I: La Spiritata

Andrea Gabrieli has been somewhat overshadowed by his nephew Giovanni, yet his music has an expressive character and colour very much its own. These little-known madrigal settings show a ready musical response to the Renaissance poetic vision of love which, although embroidered with elegant words, is quite explicit in its expressions of earthly desire. The lovely Petrarch setting, Lasso, Amor mi transporta ov'io non voglio, makes it plain that love carries the lover 'where I do not wish to go', while in the intense dialogue between Cloris and Adonis, Io mi sento morire, ecstatic 'death' does not quite mean what it says!

Gabrieli was nothing if not versatile, and his touching tribute on the death of Willaert contrasts with Asia felice, depicting a celebration of the Turkish defeat at the Battle of Lepanto (with cornett, three trombones, organ and percussion), while the love songs could hardly be sung with greater longing. Excellent recording, and full texts and translations are included in this very valuable addition to Renaissance repertoire.

Benedictus Dominus Deus a 8; Gloria in excelsis Deo a 16; Magnificat a 12; O crux splendidior a 8; Ricercar del duodecimo tuono a 4

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 586 0492. Amb. S., String & Brass Ens., Stevens – Giovanni GABRIELI: Angelus ad pastoris ait, etc. ***

There are some splendidly grandiloquent gestures here and the massive sonorities of the Gloria in excelsis Deo, with voice and brass textures interweaving, move towards their climax without strain. The textures in O crux splendidior are lighter and the Ricercar for brass is particularly successful. The singing is impressive throughout and the brass playing has the proper richness of sonority. A pioneering collection that is still highly recommendable.

Psalmi Davidici 6; 31; 37; 50; 101; 129; 143; Antiphon: Ne remimiscaris Domini

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 863-2. Capella Ducale Venetia, Picotti

Andrea Gabrieli's setting of the Seven Penitential Psalms of David, published in 1583, shows a deeper, more expressive side of a composer nearly always twinned with his nephew, Giovanni, with his spectacular brass writing. Picotti has settled for darker brass sonorities, which are blended in with the homophonic choral sound in a resonant acoustic. The singing is warmly mellifluous and the sombre character of the music is preserved throughout; one might have liked more variety of dynamic range and (at times) more vigour, but the beauty of the simple vocal lines is well sustained. The recording is warmly atmospheric rather than clear.

GABRIELI, Giovanni (1554–1612)

Canzoni da sonare: I (La spiritata) a 4; I a 5 (1615); I toni a 10 (1597); II a 4 (1606); III a 6 (1615); VII a 7 (1615); XII toni a 10 (1597; 2 versions); XXIV a 8 (1608); XXVII a 8 (1608); Ricercar sopra 'Re fa me don' a 4

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2×1 5 62028-2 (2). Hespèrion XX, Savall – A. GABRIELI: Canzon sopra 'Qui la dira'; GUAMI: Canzon: 'La accorta' a 4; Canzon sopra 'La battaglia' a 4; Canzon 'La cromatica' a 4; Canzon 'La guamina'; Canzon XXIV a 8; Canzon XXV a 8; SCHEIN: Banchetto musicale; SCHEIDT: Ludi Musici ***

A fine selection of Giovanni Gabrieli's Canzonas, together with half a dozen more by his contemporary Giuseppe Guami, which are in much the same style. Also included is a Canzon sopra 'Qui la dira' by Giovanni's uncle, Andrea (with whom he studied), based on a song. This is played on the harpsichord and makes an attractive interlude. But Jordi Savall varies the scoring throughout, so that some works are for strings (including the solemn Ricercar), others include brass to splendid effect. Guami's 'La accorta' is melancholy, and his 'Battaglia' is disappointingly low key, but many of the others are very jolly, notably Giovanni's dancing Canzon VII a 7 and Guami's Canzon XXV a 8. This and Giovanni's florid closing Canzon XII toni in ten parts demand great bravura from all concerned. The performances are splendid, and so is the recording. This is one of the finest collections of Renaissance music in the catalogue.

Music for Brass, Vol. 1

(BB)  Naxos 8.553609. LSO Brass, Crees

Music for Brass, Vol. 2

(BB)  Naxos 8.553873. LSO Brass, Crees

Music for Brass, Vol. 3

(BB)  Naxos 8.554129. LSO Brass, Crees

Starting with the Canzon XVII of 1615 in 12 parts, involving three choirs of instruments, Eric Crees and his brilliant players from the brass section of the LSO demonstrate at once what variety of tone they can produce, with the finest shading of timbre and texture. In the great Sonata pian' e forte of 1597 in eight parts and the even more striking Double Echo Canzon in 12 Parts, the playing is remarkable as much for its restraint and point as for its dramatic impact. Beautiful sound, both clear and atmospheric, not aggressive.

The Canzon in echo duodecimi toni à 10 in Volume 3 is obviously the most spectacular piece, but the paired Sonatas XX and XXI (with organ) thrillingly combine rich sonorities with complex decoration, and in Volume 2 there are several very striking pieces, notably La Spiritata and Canzon XVI à 12, which closes the disc.

Sonata pian' e forte

() BBC BBCL mono 4059-2. LSO, Stokowski – LISZT: Mephisto Waltz 1; NIELSEN: Symphony 6; TIPPETT: Concerto for Double String Orchestra ***

The Sonata pian' e forte was a repertory piece in the 1940s and '50s, before the period-instrument movement got under way, and Stokowski evokes a rich individual sonority from his fine players.

(i) Angelus ad pastoris ait a 12; Buccinate in neomenia tuba; Canzon septimi toni a 8; Hodie Christus natus est a 10; Hodie completi sunt a 8; O Domine Jesu Christe a 8; O magnum mysterium a 8; Omnes gentes plaudite manibus a 16; (ii) Buccante in neomenia tuba a 19; Canzon septimi toni; In eccelessis a 14; Timor et tremor

(B)  CfP (ADD) 586 0492. (i) King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Cambridge University Musical Soc., Bach Ch., Wilbraham Brass Soloists, Willcocks; (ii) Amb. S., String & Brass Ens., Stevens – ANDREA GABRIELI: Benedictus Dominus Deus, etc. ***

This generous Classics for Pleasure reissue combines the above impressive performances, directed by Sir David Willcocks in 1973, with a pioneering stereo programme from 1966, recorded at Abbey Road. The latter collection, directed by Denis Stevens, pioneered these multi-voiced works; if the massive sonorities of Buccinate in neomenia, with its 19-part ensemble divided into four separate choirs, sounds a little too close, the sound is otherwise very impressive. The lighter vocal texture of Timor et tremor is very successful, and In ecce-lessis, with its attractive answering between higher and lower voices, is more expansive. The King's recordings have much more space, and performances and recordings are of the quality we would expect from this source. A fine disc, and a bargain too.

'A Venetian Christmas'

 DG 471 333-2. Gabrieli Consort and Players, McCreesh – DE RORE: Missa praeter rerum serie

Paul McCreesh adds to his evocative series re-creating great religious occasions with what might have been heard at Christmas in St Mark's in Venice around the year 1600. Punctuated by chant, a variety of pieces by Giovanni Gabrieli for choir, for organ and for brass ensemble sets the central liturgy in context. Gabrieli characteristically exploits the wide-ranging antiphonal effects inspired by St Mark's, with the first motet, Audite principes, involving no fewer than 16 parts, divided into three separate groups, each led by a solo voice. Most striking is the setting of the Mass chosen, dating from half a century earlier, a so-called parody Mass by Cipriano de Rore in seven parts (one more than the complex motet by Josquin Des Prez on which it is based), a magnificent example of polyphony, superbly performed here.

GADE, Niels (1817–90)

Symphonies 1; 8 ( BIS CD 339); 2; 7 ((*) BIS CD 355); 3–4 ( BIS CD 338); 5–6 ( BIS CD 356)

(N) Stockholm Sinf., Järvi

The Gade symphonies are well worth exploring. Their debt to Mendelssohn aside (especially in the first two and No. 4), there is still a sense of real mastery throughout the cycle. No. 3 in particular has great freshness and a seemingly effortless flow of ideas. The Fifth is a delightfully sunny piece and the Sixth is rather more academic, but the Seventh has great geniality and charm, and the Eighth is very civilized. The Stockholm Sinfonietta and Neeme Järvi give very fresh and lively performances, and the recording is natural and truthful.

Violin Sonatas 1 in A, Op. 6; 2 in D min., Op. 21; 3 in B flat, Op. 59

(N)  Da Capo 8.226066. Christina Åstrand, Per Salo

Gade was by training a violinist, though his prowess in this field was overshadowed by his achievements as a conductor in his native Copenhagen and in Leipzig where he succeeded Mendelssohn at the Gewandhaus Orchestra. The first two sonatas come from the 1840s, the second composed immediately after his time in Leipzig in 1849, and the third in 1885. Appealing and fresh if, like the symphonies, Mendelssohnian in idiom, and heard in very accomplished performances by these two artists, both prominent members of the Danish Radio Symphony Orchestra.

GÁL, Hans (1890–1987)

Piano Music

24 Fugues, Op. 108; 3 Sketches, Op. 7; 3 Preludes, Op. 64; 24 Preludes, Op. 83; 3 Small Pieces, Op 64; Sonata, Op. 28; Sonatinas 1 & 2, Op. 58; Suite, Op. 24

Ⓜ  Avie AV 2064 (3). McCawley

Like his slightly older contemporary, Egon Wellesz, Hans Gál composed in a wide variety of genres, and this three-CD set covers his piano music, from his earliest Three Sketches (1910–11) through to the Twenty-Four Fugues of 1980, completed when he was ninety. The music deserves and receives dedicated advocacy from Leon McCawley, who brings this inventive and individual body of music to life and puts us all in his debt by so doing. The Avie recording is lifelike and full-bodied.

GALUPPI, Baldassarre (1706–85)

8 Keyboard Sonatas

Ⓝ * Sony/BMG RCA 88697367932. Bacchetti (piano)

Andrea Bacchetti has already uncovered for us some remarkable piano music of Cherubini. Now he turns to Galuppi, who wrote over 100 sonatas, most of which are still unknown. Those here are of high quality. They are almost always in two movements, usually slow then fast, and playing together for about nine or ten minutes, although the work in B flat included here has an opening Andante which extends to ten minutes in itself. Galuppi's invention is delightful and by no means stereotyped and his music is fully worthy of a modern piano. Bacchetti brings each work to life with his pellucid articulation and always charms the ear. He is very well recorded too. A disc not to be missed, even though it is not key repertoire.

Motets: Laetatus Sum; Lauda Jerusalem; Nisi Dominus

 DG 477 6145. Invernizzi, Cirillo, Mingardo, Agnew, Cooley, Foresti, Zeppenfeld, Körnerscher Singverein, Dresden, Dresden Instrumental Concert, Kopp – VIVALDI: Dixit Dominus ***

These three choral works (première recordings) make for delightful listening, with their florid, Italianate melodies, beautifully and sensitively performed. The darker Nisi Dominus has some splendidly dramatic writing, from the minor-keyed introduction with its scurrying strings to its vivacious aria, Sicut sagittae. This is music which looks forward to the church music of the classical era of Haydn and his contemporaries.

GARDNER, John (born 1917)

(i) Piano Concerto 1. Symphony 1; Overture (Midsummer Ale), Op. 71

(BB)  Naxos 8.570406. (i) Donohoe; RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

This coupling of two of John Gardner's major works, plus a sparkling comedy overture, could not be more welcome, brilliantly played and recorded. Here is one of the most unjustly neglected composers of his generation. The Symphony No.1, the most extended of the works on the new disc, is in four movements, spanning over 40 minutes. The Piano Concerto No. 1 of 1957 offers a contrasted idiom in its percussive echoes of the Bartók Piano Concertos, suiting Peter Donohoe's strong style admirably in another performance brilliantly backed by David Lloyd-Jones and the Royal Scottish National Orchestra. The disc is dazzlingly rounded off with a rumbustious Comedy Overture, Midsummer Ale, written for the orchestra of Morley College, of which Gardner was music director. By rights this disc will bring renewed attention to the music of a most attractive composer.

GAY, John (1685–1732)

The Beggar's Opera (Benjamin Britten version; DVD version)

Ⓝ *() Decca DVD 074 3329. Baker, Pollak, Harper, Coates, Kelly, Jerome, Hartley, Dickerson, McKellar, ECO, M. Davies (V/D: Charles Rogers)

How splendid that this 1963 performance is available on DVD. True, Britten's version of Gay's Beggar's Opera, with Britten adding his own musical personality to the simplicity of the 18th-century writing, does rob the music of some of its intrinsic charm, but the vibrancy of the performance is utterly compelling. Indeed, with such great personality singers as Edith Coates (Mrs Trapes) and Anna Pollak (Mrs Peachum), the results are very characterful indeed. Janet Baker as Polly and Heather Harper as Lucy are other highlights; and all the men, who include the splendid Kenneth McKellar as Macheath, are excellent. The production is first rate and the camerawork very sympathetic. The picture quality is fair for its period but the sound is good.

The Beggar's Opera (arr. Pepusch and Austin)

🔑 ✿ (BB)  CfP 575 9722 (2). Morison, Cameron, Sinclair, Wallace, Brannigan, Pro Arte Ch. & O, Sargent – GERMAN: Tom Jones ***

The Beggar's Opera was the 18th-century equivalent of the modern American musical. It was first produced in 1728 and caused a sensation with audiences used to the stylized Italian opera favoured by Handel. This performance under Sargent is in every way first class, and the soloists could hardly be bettered, with Elsie Morison as Polly, John Cameron as MacHeath and Owen Brannigan a splendid Peachum. The linking dialogue is spoken by actors to make the result more dramatic, with every word crystal clear. The chorus is no less effective and the 1955 recording has a most appealing ambience. It was one of EMI's first great stereo successes and the chorus 'Let us take the road' (where the singers recede into the distance) was understandably included on their Stereo Demonstration disc. It now returns to the catalogue, coupled with a delightful selection from Edward German's Tom Jones which is hardly less vivid.

GEMINIANI, Francesco (1687–1762)

Concerti grossi, Op. 2/1–6; Op. 3/1–4

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553019. Capella Istropolitana, Krecek

Concerti grossi, Op. 3/5–6; Op. 7/1–6

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553020. Capella Istropolitana, Kreček

This is part of an ongoing Naxos project to record all Geminiani's Concerti grossi using modern instruments but in a style which clearly reflects the freshness and vitality of period-instrument practice. The Capella Istropolitana offer excellent accounts of Op. 2, Op. 3, and include the whole of Op. 7. The performances are striking for their freshness and vitality, and they are very well recorded. Bargain-hunters need not hesitate.

Concerti grossi, Op. 3/1–6

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 478 0024. AAM, Hogwood

Hogwood's approach reveals the vigour and freshness of Geminiani's melodious and resourceful invention. The Opus 3 Concerti are given performances of genuine quality and readers normally resistant to the cult of authentic instruments can be reassured that there is no lack of body and breadth here. They are also extremely well recorded (analogue, 1976), though the CD transfer picks up some studio noise and on our copy there was a curious moment of background hum which comes up suddenly and disappears on track 8 (Op. 3/2). But that may have now been cured.

(i) 12 Concerti grossi, Op. 5 (after Corelli); (ii; iii) Cello Sonata in D min., Op. 5/2; Ornamented arrangement of Corelli's Sonata in A for Violin & Cello

* HM HMU 907261/62 (2). (i) AAM, Manze; (ii) Watkin; (iii) McGillivray

The period-instrument performance by the players of the Academy of Ancient Music are led from the bow by Andrew Manze. He is a superb soloist, but so are his colleagues. Allegros are full of vigour (and bravura) while the exquisite delicacy of the solo contribution to slow movements makes the strongest possible case for authenticity in this music. As a bonus, two further arrangements are offered, equally persuasive in performance. The recording is excellent and this makes a clear first choice for Op. 5.

Concerti grossi: in D min. (La folia, from CORELLI: Sonata in D min., Op. 5/12); in G min., Op. 7/2; Trio Sonatas 3 in F (from Op. 1/9); 5 in A min. (from Op. 1/11); 6 in D min. (from Op. 1/12); Violin Sonatas: in E min., Op. 1/3; in A, Op. 4/12

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55134. Purcell Band & Qt

This record comes from Hyperion's 'La folia' series, though the only piece here using that celebrated theme is the arrangement Geminiani made of Corelli's D minor Sonata. Apart from the G minor Concerto, Op. 7, No. 2, the remainder of the disc is given over to chamber works. The Purcell Quartet play with dedication and spirit and convey their own enthusiasm for this admirably inventive music to the listener.

6 Cello Sonatas, Op. 5

(*) Decca/O-L 475 9108. Pleeth, Hogwood, Webb

Geminiani's six Sonatas, Op. 5, appeared first in Paris in 1746 and then in London the following year. The present recording is based on the London edition and, as is the practice in this (originally Oiseau-Lyre) series, uses a replica of an 18th-century cello and bow and a 1766 Kirckman harpsichord. The admirable players do their best to reproduce contemporary practice, though the absence of vibrato (and the prominence of the cello continuo) tends to tire the ear. The music itself is often rewarding and imaginative, and the recording is in the high traditions of this series. The disc is reissued with the original sleeve presentation.

GERHARD, Roberto (1896–1970)

(i) Violin Concerto. Symphony 4 (New York)

 Lyrita SRCD 274. (i) Neaman; BBC SCO, C. Davis

The Violin Concerto dates from Gerhard's early years in Cambridge and, rather like the violin concerto of a fellow pupil of Schoenberg, Alban Berg, it successfully combines a lyrical style with serial method, though the virtuoso writing has one thinking of the violin pyrotechnics of another Spaniard, Sarasate. A brilliant performance from Yfrah Neaman and Colin Davis, who provides highly sympathetic direction, with the BBC Symphony Orchestra playing superbly both here and in the Fourth Symphony. This was written in Gerhard's seventieth year and shows him at his most imaginatively adventurous. The work, bearing the subtitle New York and written for that city's Philharmonic Orchestra, is brilliant and colourful. Gerhard resorts to crypto-electronic sounds which delight the ear rather than baffling it.

GERMAN, Edward (1862–1936)

VOCAL MUSIC

Merrie England (complete; without dialogue)

(BB) (*) CfP Double 575 7672 (2). McAlpine, Bronhill, Glossop, Glynne, Sinclair, Kern, Rita Williams Singers, O, Collins

Although this recording dates from 1960, it cannot compare in stereo sophistication with EMI's Beggar's Opera of five years earlier. All the solo voices are close-miked, usually in an unflattering way, and too often they sound edgy, while the chorus is made artificially bright; the orchestra is lively enough, but the violins are thin. However, it must be said that Michael Collins directs the proceedings in an attractively spirited fashion. Among the soloists, Howell Glynne is splendid as King Neptune, and Monica Sinclair sings with her usual richness and makes O peaceful England more moving than usual. Patricia Kern's mezzo is firm and forward, while William McAlpine as Sir Walter Raleigh sings with fine, ringing voice. The Rita Williams Singers are thoroughly professional even if just occasionally their style is suspect. However, another recording seems unlikely so this is acceptable, faute de mieux.

Tom Jones (operetta: highlights)

🔑 (BB)  CfP 575 9722 (2). Harvey, Minty, Glover, Riley, Nigel Brooks Ch., O, Gilbert Vinter – GAY: The Beggar's Opera *** ✿

Listening to this sparkling selection, one's first impression is how like Sullivan is the basic idiom. The opening chorus might have come straight out of Patience, and there are many ensembles and solos that have a distinct reminder of one or other of the Savoy operas. The librettist here even uses one of Gilbert's rhymes 'Festina lente' as part of a song-title. But there is music, too, that could have come only from German's own pen, the really charming Here's a paradox for lovers and of course the delicate Dream O'day Jill and the famous Waltz Song. They are all extremely well sung here by a solo group who, like the conductor, Gilbert Vinter, convey real enthusiasm for this tuneful score. The 1966 recording is excellent and has transferred vividly to CD. Splendidly coupled, this inexpensive set is not to be missed.

GERSHWIN, George (1898–1937)

An American in Paris; Catfish Row (Suite); (i) Concerto in F. Cuban Overture; Lullaby; Mexican Dance; (i) Rhapsody in Blue (original, 1924 version); (ii) Second Rhapsody; (i) Variations on 'I got Rhythm'; Walking the Dog; (Piano Solo) (i) Rialto Ripples; (ii) O Land of mine, America

Ⓜ (*) Telarc 2-CD 80445. Cincinnati Pops O, Kunzel; with (i) Tritt; (ii) Goodyear; (iii) Central State University Ch., Caldwell

The Telarc two-disc anthology, originally assembled for the Gershwin Centenary in 1998, is pretty comprehensive and includes the 1924 Whiteman scoring of the Rhapsody, with William Tritt lively enough, yet without the breathless momentum of the famous piano-roll account with the composer. The Concerto has a nostalgically memorable slow movement, but the outer movements are somewhat lacking in sheer verve. However, Stewart Goodyear makes a surprising success of the Second Rhapsody and both the Rialto Ripples rag and the engaging 'I got Rhythm' Variations are played with stylish flair by his colleague. The other main items are also available differently coupled, and nearly all the shorter pieces are worth having. The sentimental choral work which ends the concert, although sung ardently, needs more Sousa-like pep than it receives here; the recording, too, is not up to the usual Telarc standard.

(i) An American in Paris; Catfish Row (Suite from Porgy and Bess); (ii) Cuban Overture; (i) Lullaby; (iii) Rhapsody in Blue

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) EMI 2 06628-2. (i) St Louis SO, Slatkin; (ii) LSO, Previn; (iii) Donohoe, L. Sinfonia, Rattle

Slatkin is clearly at home in Gershwin, and the gloriously ample acoustic of Lovell Hall, St Louis, makes everything seem opulent, although American in Paris could be more extrovert. However, Catfish Row, Gershwin's own suite from Porgy and Bess, is played with relish. Donohoe plays brilliantly in the Rhapsody in Blue and Rattle's coaxing of jazz rhythms is agreeably affectionate, but the result is just a little British.

An American in Paris; Piano Concerto in F; Rhapsody in Blue

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Sony 82876 78768-2. (i) NYPO, Bernstein; (ii) Previn, O, Kostelanetz; (iii) Bernstein (piano) with Columbia SO

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66891. Previn (piano & cond.), LSO

Bernstein's outstanding 1960 coupling of An American in Paris and Rhapsody in Blue has stood the test of time. Bernstein's approach in the Rhapsody, which he directs from the keyboard, is exceptionally flexible but completely spontaneous. It is a masterly account in every way, quixotic in mood, rhythmically subtle and creating a great surge of human warmth at the entry of the big central tune. The performance of An American in Paris is vividly characterized, brash and episodic, an unashamed American view, with the great blues tune marvellously phrased as only an American orchestra can do it. Both recordings still sound very good indeed. For this reissue, André Previn's account of the Concerto in F (made at the same time) with Kostelanetz, not surprisingly, has more pizazz and is more telling stylistically than his later HMV version with the LSO. Kostelanetz and his orchestra play a major part in the interpretation, especially in the brilliant finale. Once again, the remastered sound is remarkably vivid. Altogether these classic versions remain unsurpassed.

The digital remastering of Previn's EMI set, made at the beginning of the 1970s, has brought a striking enhancement of the recording itself; there is now much more sparkle. The performance of the Concerto was always an outstanding one by any standards, but now in the Rhapsody one senses many affinities with the famous Bernstein account. An American in Paris is exuberantly volatile, and the entry of the great blues tune on the trumpet has a memorable rhythmic lift.

An American in Paris; (i) Piano Concerto in F; Cuban Overture; (i) Rhapsody in Blue; Variations on 'I got Rhythm'

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 61393-2. (i) Wild; Boston Pops O, Fiedler

The RCA SACD, with just short of 80 minutes' playing time, offers the contents of two 'Living Stereo' LPs, recorded in 1959 and 1961 respectively, now with enhanced sound. Besides the usual triptych, Fiedler'sCuban Overture* is added, which has great élan, and Earl Wild includes a bouncy account of the 'I got Rhythm' Variations, given plenty of rhythmic panache and a nice touch of wit. The outer movements of the Concerto are comparably volatile and the blues feeling of the slow movement is strong. In An American in Paris Fiedler adds to the exuberance by bringing in the bevy of motor horns indicated in the original score (though Paris is without them these days). The slightly brash recording sounds newly minted.

An American in Paris; (i) Rhapsody in Blue

 Telarc SACD 60646. Cincinnati SO, Kunzel, (i) with Eugene List – TCHAIKOVSKY: Capriccio Italien; 1812, etc. **(*)

Eugene List is as always an impressive soloist in Gershwin, and the Telarc performance using the full symphonic scoring is recorded very sumptuously indeed. The rich sound is ideal for those who like to wallow in the melodic richness of An American in Paris. The blues tune certainly sounds expansive and there is no real lack of vitality, although in both works there seems an over-prominence of the bass drum (a characteristic of Telarc CDs). Originally issued on their own, these Gershwin performances now come with an even more spectacular Tchaikovsky triptych.

(i–ii) An American in Paris; (ii–iii) Rhapsody in Blue; (ii; iv) Overtures: Funny Face; Girl Crazy; Let 'em eat Cake; Of thee I sing; Oh Kay!; Strike up the Band; (ii; v) Promenade (Walking the Dog); (ii; v; vi) Fascinatin' Rhythm

⊶ Ⓑ * Sony 82779693018. (i) NYPO; (ii) Tilson Thomas; (iii) composer (from 1925 piano roll), Columbia Jazz Band; (iv) Buffalo PO; (v) LAPO; (vi) Sarah Vaughan

This remarkable re-creation of the composer's own performance was taken from a 1925 piano roll, using Ferdé Grofé's initial scoring for Paul Whiteman. A group of eminent musicians was then gathered in the studio to play Grofé's scoring. Gershwin's solo performance was recorded from the pianola, and the tape was then used by Michael Tilson Thomas and his 'Columbia Jazz Band', who skilfully fitted the accompaniment around it. The spontaneity of the finished performance is quite riveting.

Fortunately the main coupling is a very fine account of An American in Paris with the NYPO on top form, while the excellent Buffalo Philharmonic are equally on their toes and enjoying themseleves in sparkling performances of the six overtures. The two bonuses are also splendidly done, with Sarah Vaughan'sFascinatin' Rhythm* a great closing encore.

Catfish Row (suite from Porgy and Bess)

 Telarc CD 80086. Tritt, Cincinnati Pops O, Kunzel – GROFE: Grand Canyon Suite ***

Catfish Row was arranged by the composer after the initial failure of his opera. It includes a brief piano solo, played with fine style by William Tritt in the highly sympathetic Telarc performance, which is very well recorded.

Porgy and Bess Symphonic Picture (arr. Robert Russell Bennett)

(BB) (*) Resonance CDRSN 3042. Bournemouth SO, Farrer – COPLAND: Billy the Kid; Rodeo **(*)

John Farrer presents the famous Robert Russell Bennett Symphonic Picture with some panache, and the Bournemouth players respond with spirited flair, the brass especially. However, the orchestral sound could ideally be more sumptuous. Dorati's famous Detroit version is not upstaged – see above.

Rhapsody in Blue – see also above

Ⓑ (*) DG 477 6362. Bernstein (piano & cond.), LAPO – BARBER: Adagio for Strings; COPLAND: Appalachian Spring ***

In his last recording of this work for DG, Bernstein rather goes over the top with his jazzing of the solos in Gershwin. Such rhythmic freedom was clearly the result of a live rather than a studio performance. This does not match Bernstein's (1959) analogue coupling on Sony.

Piano Music (Collection)

(BB)  Hyp. CDH 55006. Brownridge

Angela Brownridge offers Gershwin's meagre output of solo concert pieces for piano, opening with a Joplinesque early rag, Rialto Ripples, Gershwin's first instrumental number from 1916. She plays the Three Preludes very well indeed, and also includes piano interludes from various shows, like the pair of Waltzes in C which the composer and Kay Swift played as a piano duet in Pardon My English.

There are also two pot-pourri Overtures which are very spirited and then – by offering just chorus and verse – she finds room for 18 of Gershwin's finest song-arrangements, her playing scintillating and romantic by turns, yet always stylish. The recording is excellent. A bargain.

3 Preludes; An American in Paris (arr. Daly); Songs (arr. Gershwin): Fascinatin' rhythm; I got rhythm; I'll build a stairway to paradise; The man I love; Oh, lady be good; Liza; Somebody loves me; Sweet and low down; 'Swonderful; Who cares?

(*) Nim. NI 5585. Anderson – COPLAND: Piano Sonata, etc. *

Recorded at a live recital in Nimbus's own concert hall, this is an enjoyable enough collection of Gershwin favourites. Mark Anderson plays very well, if without those subtle rhythmic inflexions that mark most American performances and especially Gershwin's own piano-roll recordings. But why transcribe An American in Paris? It sounds so much better in its full orchestral costume.

Piano Rolls

'The Piano Rolls': (i) An American in Paris; (ii) Idle dreams; Kicking the clouds away; Novelette in fourths; On my mind the whole night long; Rhapsody in Blue; Scandal walk; So am I; Swanee; Sweet and lowdown; That certain feeling; When you want 'em you can't get 'em, when you've got 'em you don't want 'em

 None. 7559 79287-2. (i) Milne and Leith; (ii) composer

This series, recorded by the composer between 1916 and 1926 using the Welte-Mignon and Duo-Art piano-roll systems, was reproduced through a 1911 pianola (operated by Artis Wodehouse) and then recorded in digital stereo – with the utmost realism. The result is as if Gershwin himself was playing in the studio. The four-handed arrangement of An American in Paris is a marvellous 'orchestral' performance and matches the composer in its flamboyance and breadth of style. Rhapsody in Blue is the composer's special arrangement. The sound is first class and admirably present.

VOCAL MUSIC

'Kiri Sings Gershwin': Boy wanted; But not for me; By Strauss; Embraceable you; I got rhythm; Love is here to stay; Love walked in; Meadow serenade; The man I love; Nice work if you can get it; Somebody loves me; Someone to watch over me; Soon; Things are looking up; Porgy and Bess: Summertime

(*) EMI 7 47454-2. Te Kanawa, New Theatre O, McGlinn (with chorus)

In Dame Kiri's gorgeously sung Summertime from Porgy and Bess, the distanced heavenly chorus creates the purest kitsch. But most of the numbers are done in an upbeat style. Dame Kiri is at her most relaxed and ideally there should be more variety of pacing: The man I love is thrown away at the chosen tempo. But for the most part the ear is seduced; however, the pop microphone techniques bring excessive sibilants on CD.

OPERA AND MUSICALS

Girl Crazy (musical)

Ⓜ  None. 7559-79250-2. Blazer, Luft, Carroll, Korbich, O, Mauceri

Girl Crazy, despite its hit numbers – Embraceable you, I got rhythm and Bidin' my time – has always been counted a failure; but this lively recording, with an ensemble of distinguished New York musicians conducted by John Mauceri, gives the lie to that. The casting is excellent and the only serious reservation is that the recording is dry and brassy, aggressively so – but that could be counted typical of the period too.

Lady Be Good (musical)

 None. 7559 79308-2. Teeter, Morrison, Alexander, Pizzarelli, Blier, Musto, Ch. & O, Stern

This charming score, dating from 1924 (just after Rhapsody in Blue), emerges as one of the composer's freshest. Lady Be Good was the piece originally written for the brother-and-sister team of Fred and Adele Astaire, and the casting of the principals on the disc is first rate. These are not concert-singers but ones whose clearly projected voices are ideally suited to the repertory, including Lara Teeter and Ann Morrison in the Astaires' roles and Michael Maguire as the young millionaire whom the heroine finally marries. The score has been restored by Tommy Krasker, and an orchestra of first-rate sessions musicians is conducted by Eric Stern.

Oh Kay!

🔑  None. 7559 79361-2. Upshaw, Ollman, Arkin, Cassidy, Westenberg, Larsen, Ch. & O of St Luke's, Stern

The last in this splendid Nonesuch series of Gershwin musicals is in many ways the finest of all. With the music (including hits like Someone to watch over me, Clap yo' hands, Do do do and the very catchy Fidgety feet) fitting neatly on to one CD, this is a fizzing entertainment. Dawn Upshaw is a highly enticing Kay, and she gets vivid support from Kurt Ollman as Jimmy, Adam Arkin as Shorty McGee and Patrick Cassidy as Larry. The cast could hardly be more naturally at home in Gershwin's sparkling score. Eric Stern directs with great flair and the recording is admirably vivid. Not to be missed.

Porgy and Bess (opera; complete published score)

🔑 ✿  EMI DVD 4 92496-9. White, Haymon, Blackwell, Hubbard, Baker, Clarey, Evans, Glydebourne Ch., LPO, Rattle

🔑 Ⓜ ✿  EMI 234430-2 (3). Details as above

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 8663 (3). White, Mitchell, Boatwright, Quivar, Hendricks, Clemmons, Thompson, Cleveland Children's Ch., Cleveland O, Maazel

After the huge success of the Glyndebourne production of Porgy and Bess, EMI took the whole cast to the Shepperton Studios, where it was produced for video by Trevor Nunn and Yves Baignere, using the giant stage to move the actions around freely as in a film. The result is stunningly successful, bringing the story to life with extraordinary vividness. This is one of the most creative of all such productions so far, fully worthy of Gershwin's masterly score.

On CD, Simon Rattle conducts the same cast and orchestra as in the opera house, and the EMI engineers have done wonders in establishing more clearly than ever the status of Porgy as grand opera. By comparison, Lorin Maazel's Decca CD version sounds a degree too literal, Rattle and the LPO capture Gershwin's rhythmic exuberance with the degree of freedom essential if jazz-based inspirations are to sound idiomatic. The chorus is the finest and most responsive, and Willard White is superbly matched by the magnificent Jake of Bruce Hubbard and by the dark and resonant Crown of Gregg Baker. As Sportin' Life, Damon Evans gets nearer than any of his rivals to the original scat-song inspiration. Cynthia Haymon as Bess is movingly convincing in conveying equivocal emotions, Harolyn Blackwell as Clara sensuously relishes Rattle's slow speed for Summertime and Cynthia Clarey is an intense and characterful Serena. EMI's digital sound is exceptionally full and spacious.

Maazel, like Rattle, includes the complete text. The vigour and colour are irresistible, and the recording is of Decca's most spectacular mid-seventies quality. Willard White is again a magnificent Porgy, dark of tone; while Leona Mitchell's vibrant Bess has a moving streak of vulnerability, and François Clemmons as Sportin' Life achieves the near impossible by singing the role and making one forget Cab Calloway. But above all it is Maazel's triumph, and he produces dazzling playing from the Cleveland Orchestra. Full texts are included; even so, this is now upstaged by Rattle's EMI set.

Porgy and Bess (original 1935 Broadway score)

 Decca 475 7877 (2). Powell, Lister, Lynch, McDonald, Mack, Thompson Williams, Rowe, Blair Children's Ch., Tennessee State University Band, Nashville Symphony Ch. & O, Mauceri

This is a new-look (or, rather, old-look) Porgy and Bess, for John Mauceri and Wayne Shirley have here reassembled Gershwin's score as the composer used it in the initial Broadway performances. This version puts aside about 40 minutes of music, something that often happens to a musical during its initial provincial run. Mauceri's new performance has a spicy Broadway atmosphere, and the new principals, Alvy Powell as Porgy and Marquita Lister as Bess, bring a real, idiomatic feel to the music, with no flavour of the opera house. Lester Lynch as Crown is aggressively impressive too, and Clara's Summertime (Nicole Cabell) is truly seductive. Even more compelling is Robert Mack's Sportin' Life, a truly unattractive character. The rest of the cast also measure up, and the back-up accompaniments, chorus and orchestra add plenty of colloquial bite. This is how Porgy and Bess sounded on Broadway in 1935.

Porgy and Bess: Symphonic Picture (arr. Bennett)

* Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9496. Detroit SO, Dorati – GROFE: Grand Canyon Suite, etc. **(*)

Robert Russell Bennett's famous arrangement of Gershwin melodies has been recorded many times, but never more beautifully and sumptuously than on this Decca digital version from Detroit. The performance is totally memorable and the sound quite superb. A real demonstration CD.

Strike Up the Band (musical)

(*) None. 7559 79273-2 (2). Barrett, Luker, Chastain, Graae, Fowler, Goff, Lambert, Lyons, Sandish, Rocco, Ch. & O, Mauceri

Strike Up the Band was the nearest that George and Ira Gershwin ever came to imitating Gilbert and Sullivan, although its two hit numbers, The man I love and Strike up the band, are entirely characteristic. For all its vigour, the performance lacks something of the exuberance which marks the recordings of musicals conducted by John McGlinn for EMI. It may be correct to observe the dotted rhythms of The man I love as precisely as this performance does, but something is lost in the flow of the music, and to latter-day ears the result is less haunting than the customary reading. The singers are first rate, but they would have been helped by having at least one of their number with a more charismatic personality. The second disc includes an appendix containing seven numbers used in the abortive 1930 revival.

GESUALDO, Carlo (c. 1561–1613)

Ave, dulcissima Maria; Ave, regina coelorum; Maria mater gratiae; Precibus et meritus beatae Mariae (motets). Tenebrae responsories for Holy Saturday

🔑  Gimell CDGIM 015. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Ave, dulcissima Maria; Peccantem mei quotidie; Tribularer si nescirem; Tribulationem et dolorem (motets). Tenebrae responsories for Holy Saturday

Ⓑ  HM Musique d'abord HMA 1951320. Ens. Vocal Européen, Herreweghe – GORLI: Requiem

The astonishing dissonances and chromaticisms may not be as extreme here as in some of Gesualdo's secular music but, as elaborate as madrigals, they still have a sharp, refreshing impact on the modern ear which recognizes music leaping the centuries. The Tallis Scholars give superb performances, finely finished and beautifully blended; superbly recorded, this is another of the Tallis Scholars' ear-catching discs, powerful as well as polished.

Herreweghe's performances with his European group of singers are also very fine, not as volatile as those by the Tallis Scholars, but serenely intense and moving. Apart from Ave dulcissima Maria, which he shares with Phillips, he chooses three different motets, all suitably penitential. Moreover, he offers a bonus of an extraordinary, even bizarre Requiem by Sandro Gorli (born in Como in 1948). The composer has provided his own text, and the music's modern dissonances, although even more flagrantly pungent, are curiously in the spirit of medieval writing; and the work ends in a desperately wild call of 'Father, why hast thou forsaken me?'

Leçons de ténèbres: Responsories for Holy Week

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62782-2 (2). A Sei Voce

The performances on Warner Apex cover the complete Tenebrae responsories for Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Holy Saturday. They are smoothly and expressively sung but are on a fairly unvaried dynamic level, refined in feeling and without drama. Other performances find more depth in this music, and the Apex issue has no texts and translations.

Leçons de ténèbres: Responsories for Maundy Thursday

🔑  Signum SIGCD 048. King's Singers

Gesualdo's Responsories for Maundy Thursday of 1611, with their surprising chromatic dissonances, are among the most remarkable and original of all Ténèbre settings. Immediately, as In Monte Oliveti opens, the King's Singers demonstrate a very flexible approach to tempo and dynamic that is to characterize their whole performance. The impeccable intonation and tonal matching also give a special richness to the chordal writing; and its moments of dissonance. The performance closes simply with the chant, Christus factus est, and this is treated as a brief recessional. In short, this is a superbly sung performance, expressively poignant but dramatic too, which brings a new dimension to this remarkable music; and the recording is outstanding.

Madrigals, Books I–III (complete)

 CPO 777 138-2 (2). Gesualdo Consort, Amsterdam, Van der Kamp

Madrigals, Book V (1611)

 Glossa GCD 920935. La Venexiana

It is against the background of the peak period of his extraordinary life that Gesualdo wrote his madrigals. Obviously the 1590s were an extraordinarily creative period for Gesualdo, and the five-part madrigal settings clearly reflected the emotional turmoil of his own life. Their extraordinary unpredictability of feeling, with pain and joy side by side, was exhibited in their chromatic intensity, and the spread of dissonances, the desperation in love of many of their texts, must relate to the composer's personal experiences. We now, at last, have the beginnings of two complete collections on CD, as we assume the disc from La Venexiana is the first of a series. In each case the madrigals are sung by a beautifully blended group of five voices, with Harry van der Kamp's Amsterdam ensemble slightly more robust (and pleasingly so) in tone. Gesualdo's madrigals are essentially a cappella works, but in the First Book of the Amsterdam series a lute or archlute is sometimes discreetly introduced; the Second Book includes a soprano solo with harpsichord, and in the Third a harpsichord is more often featured, and a single madrigal is heard as a harpsichord solo. The recording throughout both sets is excellent, with the acoustic very pleasing in each. Full texts and translations are included, and the documentation is first class.

GIBBONS, Orlando (1583–1625)

Consorts for Viols: Fantasies a 3, 1–4; Fantasies a 6, 1–5; In Nomines a 5, 1–2. Keyboard Pieces arranged for Viols: Fantasia; Galliard; Go from my Window; Pavan; Pavan Lord Salisbury; Peascod Times. Vocal works arranged for Viols: Hosanna to the son of David; O Lord, in thy wrath; The Silver Swan

🔑  Avie AV 0032. Phantasm

The Fantasies for viol consort by Orlando Gibbons are among the most sublime works in the string repertory, leading on to the Fantasias of Purcell, even breathing the same air as the late Beethoven Quartets. Sadly, on disc they have too often been treated to performances that slice your ears off in period abrasiveness; happily, the group, Phantasm, is different, at once authoritative and beautifully matched. The complexity of the Fantasies in six parts, presented here as a cohesive group, is astonishing both in rhythm and in counterpoint, and the two six-part In Nomines, more austere, have a similar intensity. Four Fantasies in three parts demonstrate Gibbons's contrapuntal mastery just as clearly. Quoting the composer, Phantasm supplement this music written specifically for viols with transcriptions of such keyboard pieces as the superb Lord Salisbury Pavan, as well as three of Gibbons's greatest vocal pieces, the anthems O Lord, in thy wrath and Hosanna to the son of David, as well as the lovely madrigal, The Silver Swan. Well-balanced sound, though with a limited dynamic range.

Consort Music: Fantasias a 4: 1–2 in C; In Nomines: a 4 in D min.; a 5: 1 in C; 2 in G min. (i) Ye Sacred Muses (Elegy on the Death of Thomas Tallis)

 Globe GLO 5159. Royal Consort, (i) with Cordier – BYRD: Consort Songs ***

These Fantasias and In Nomines are played with warmth and refinement, and with subtle variations of dynamic light and shade. As we have commented on the Byrd couplings, a consistent atmosphere of dolour pervades. But that lies within the music itself, and David Cordier's sensitive account of Gibbons's posthumous tribute to Tallis, Ye Sacred Muses, is most touchingly sung.

Consort and vocal music

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550603. (i) Rose Consort of Viols; (ii) Roberts; with (iii) Red Byrd; (iv) Bonner

This makes the perfect supplement to the excellent Naxos issue of Gibbons's church music (see below), with 22 items that cover a wide range of songs as well as instrumental music. The players of the Rose Consort, with agreeably tangy string-tone, contribute most of the instrumental pieces, culminating in two magnificent Fantazias in six parts: No. 3 with ear-catching harmonic clashes, No. 5 with side-slipping chromatic writing, pointing forward to later centuries.

Timothy Roberts is the soloist in keyboard music on harpsichord, virginals and organ, while the soprano, Tessa Bonner, is the bright-toned soloist in a sequence of songs with consort accompaniment. Also standing out are two fine anthems, one written for the funeral of a Dean of Windsor, with Red Byrd accompanied by the consort, five voices and five instruments.

Keyboard Music: Almans; The King's Jewel; Coranto; Fancy; Fantasias; Galliards; Grounds; Lincoln's Inn Masque; Pavans; Lord Salisbury Prelude; The Queens Command; Verse

🔑 (M)  Explore EXP 0006. Hogwood (cabinet organ, Italian spinet, harpsichord)

An admirable anthology, thoroughly enjoyable, of Gibbons's keyboard music, very well played and recorded (originally on L'Oiseau-Lyre in 1975). Christopher Hogwood uses period instruments, and much variety is obtained by the contrasting colours of the instruments; and the recording does full justice to their sound and character, with the CD transfer completely faithful. An invaluable addition to the repertoire.

Anthems and verse anthems

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 123. King's College Ch., L. Early Music Group, Ledger; Butt

This invaluable anthology was the first serious survey of Gibbons's music to appear on CD. It contains many of his greatest pieces. Not only are the performances touched with distinction, the recording too is in the highest flight and the analogue sound has been transferred to CD with complete naturalness. Strongly recommended.

Anthems and Verse Anthems: Hosanna to the Son of David; In nomine a 4; O clap your hands; O Lord in thy wrath; This is the record of John

 EMI 3 94430-2. King's College, Cambridge, Ch., with Fretwork – TOMKINS; WEELKES: Anthems

Orlando Gibbons was a chorister at King's College in the 1590s and he served the Crown as court musician for over 20 years. This rich collection is made doubly fascinating by its coupling with the music of his contemporaries, Tomkins and Weelkes, with examples of two or three different settings of the same text by more than one of the three composers. O clap your hands and the six-voice Hosanna to the Son of David show Gibbons at his most exultant, O Lord in thy wrath at his most penitent. This is the record of John and the In nomine setting have accompaniments from Fretwork. Splendid singing and recording.

Anthemes

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553130. Oxford Camerata, Summerly; Cummings

Using his small professional choir, 12 singers at most, and often fewer, Jeremy Summerly directs fresh, finely focused readings of an outstanding collection of Gibbons's anthems. That is particularly so in the six magnificent unaccompanied full anthems which are included, where the astonishing harmonic clashes and progressions in the counterpoint come out with wonderful impact, generally with just a single voice per part.

In addition there are three fine verse anthems, drawing on the full complement of singers, with organ accompaniment, plus Gibbons's two evening services, the short one much simpler than the second one. Three organ pieces are also included, though Laurence Cummings's account of the extended Fantazia in four parts is not as varied as it might be. Fine, clear, atmospheric sound.

Anthems and verse anthems: 2nd Evening Service: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis. Organ Fantasia in A min (MB XX/12)

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55228. Blaze, Varcoe, Winchester Cathedral Ch., Hill; Farr or Baldock

Orlando Gibbons's Hosanna to the son of David is among the very finest anthems of the period, a glory of English music, and aptly that is the opening item for this excellent collection of Gibbons's church music, very well performed and recorded. Robin Blaze is an outstandingly sweet-toned counter-tenor soloist, well matched by Stephen Varcoe in the verse anthems. The only pity is that the collection concentrates on verse anthems, nine of them plus the Second Evening Service, as against only three full anthems with their excitingly elaborate counterpoint. The Fantasia in A minor for organ makes an apt supplement.

Hymnes and Songs of the Church (1623)

(BB)  Naxos 8.557681. Tonus Peregrinus

This Naxos disc collects all Gibbons's Hymnes and Songs of the Church as published in 1623, and arranged for this recording by Antony Pitts, the director of Tonus Peregrinus. They are divided into eight groups, Songs of Joy, Love, Sacrifice, Lamentation, Triumph, Unity, Faith and Hope. Each Hymne is brief, and each is based on one of 'fifteen or so' tunes 'depending on how you count them', and underpinned by simple bass lines. Tonus Peregrinus can be relied on for scholarship and vocal excellence; even so, the result is unexpectedly rewarding. Excellent documentation too.

GILLIS, Don (1912–78)

The Alamo; (i) The Man Who Invented Music; Portrait of a Frontier Town; Saga of a Prairie School; Symphony 5½ (for Fun)

Ⓜ () Dutton mono CDLK 4163. New SO, composer, (i) with Kilty (nar.)

Don Gillis had a long and active career in America from the 1930s to the 1970s. His Symphony No. 5½ is undoubtedly his best-known piece, enjoying quite a vogue in the 1950s. It is indeed a fun work, brightly and wittily scored. The Alamo is a 1947 tone-poem depicting the dramatic events associated with the famous fort in San Antonio, Texas. The folk-like atmosphere of the opening and closing sections is nostalgically caught here, contrasting with the later melodrama. The Saga of a Prairie School is overtly sentimental, but it similarly shows the composer's skill at evocative scene-painting, with the reflective 'prayful' scenes set against more vigorous writing where one marvels at the brilliance of the orchestral playing under the composer, especially the brass. The Portrait of a Frontier Town is a bright and breezy portrayal of Fort Worth, Texas, including everything you would expect to find, from square-dancing to 'Prairie Sunsets', scenes of Night Life as well as (less believably) a portrait of The Chamber of Commerce! The Man Who Invented Music acts as a kind of young person's guide to the orchestra. It is a charming period piece. The performances on this CD can be thought of as definitive, and the (originally Decca) sound is remarkably bright and vivid, with Dutton's remastering technique heard at its finest.

GINASTERA, Alberto (1916–83)

Cello Sonata, Op. 49; 5 canciones populares argentinas, Op. 10; Pampeana 2; Puneña 2, 'Hommage à Paul Sacher'

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570569. Kosower, Jee-Won Oh

The prolific Argentine composer Alberto Ginastera (not to be confused with Fred Astaira) had a vivid sense of colour, as the orchestral Pampeana No. 3, once available on Chandos, displays. The more restrained palette of cello and piano still shows him as unfailingly inventive and these fine soloists argue his case most persuasively. All these pieces are diverting and this makes a most attractive introduction to his music.

GIORDANO, Umberto
(1867–1948)

Andrea Chénier (DVD versions)

* TDK DVD DVWW OPACH. Guleghina, Cura, Guelfi, Ch. & O Teatro comunale di Bologna, Rizzi (Dir: Giancarlo di Monaco, V/D: Paula Langobardo)

🔑  Warner NVC Arts DVD 5050466-8357-2-7. Tomowa-Sintow, Domingo, Zancanaro, ROHCG Ch. & O, Rudel (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

Dating from 1985, the DVD of Michael Hampe's production offers a traditional staging that vividly captures the atmosphere of Giordano's melodramatic presentation of Revolutionary France. Under the experienced conducting of Julius Rudel, the three principal characters are powerfully drawn, all three at the peak of their powers. Plácido Domingo cuts a flamboyant figure as Chénier, with the widest range of tone and expression in his key monologues. Though Anna Tomowa-Sintow's creamy soprano grows a little rough under pressure, she makes a tenderly sympathetic Maddalena; but it is Giorgio Zancanaro as Gérard who emerges as the most powerful figure, singing gloriously and bringing out the more human side of this revolutionary leader, convincingly making the transition from the defiant flunky he is in Act I. Other roles are well taken, too. No booklet is provided and no synopsis, with no indication on the box who is singing which roles.

Recorded in Bologna in 2006, the DVD from TDK offers a traditional production with handsome stage pictures, strongly conducted by Carlo Rizzi. Act II even includes a statue of Marat murdered in his bath. José Cura in the title-role of the poet is not always as refined as he can be, though his singing in the big numbers is powerful, and for Come un bel dì di maggio in Act IV he does find a gentle half-tone. Maria Guleghina as Maddalena sings with tender beauty, though she grows unsteady under pressure, as does the powerful Carlo Guelfi in the key role of Gérard, the proud servant in Act I who, after the French Revolution, becomes a leader. Very impressive among the lesser characters is Carlo Cigni as Roucher.

Andrea Chénier (CD versions)

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 358676-2 (2). Corelli, Stella, Sereni, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Santini

Ⓜ () Orfeo mono C 682 062 (2). Tebaldi, Corelli, Bastianini, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Matačić

The glory of the 1964 EMI version is the Chénier of Franco Corelli, one of his most satisfying performances on record, with heroic tone gloriously exploited. The other singing is less distinguished. Though Antonietta Stella was never sweeter of voice than here, she hardly matches such rivals as Scotto. The 1960s recording is vivid, with plenty of atmosphere, and has been transferred to CD most naturally, but the deleted RCA set in the same price range, with Domingo and Scotto, remains a clear first choice.

This broadcast recording of 1960 from the Vienna State Opera may have thinnish (mono) sound, but the performance is often electrifying. Ettore Bastianini is superb as Gérard, the servant who becomes an official in the government after the French Revolution. Not only is his voice rock-steady in its darkness, he characterizes vividly, above all in his two big arias, at the start and in Nemico della patria in Act III. Though Renata Tebaldi's voice as Maddalena lacks its full warmth thanks to the recording, she sings beautifully, while Franco Corelli in the title-role is at his peak, singing totally without strain, if sounding heavy-handed in his Act IV aria, Come un bel dì di maggio. Lovro von Matačić conducts powerfully, bringing out the many moments of high drama, not least in the final duet when Chénier and Maddalena face the guillotine.

Fedora (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  TDK DVD DVWW OPFED. Freni, Domingo, Scarabelli, Corbelli, Ch. & O of La Scala, Milan, Gavazzeni (Dir: & V/D: Lamberto Puggelli)

(*) DG DVD 073 2329. Freni, Arteta, Domingo, Croft, Hartman, Met. Op. Ch. & O, R. Abbado (V/D: Brian Large)

Recorded at La Scala in 1993, the TDK version of Giordano's Fedora is valuable for capturing not only the moving characterization of the heroine, Fedora, by Mirella Freni, but also the glorious singing of Plácido Domingo as the hero, Loris. It is he who has the one sure-fire hit item, the brief aria, Amor ti vieta. The two other principals, Olga and De Siriex, are strongly taken by Adelina Scarabelli and Alessandro Corbelli, if with limited beauty of tone. The production is grandly traditional, with the darkness of the first two Acts giving way to lightness and beauty in the Alpine scene of Act III. Freni gives herself totally to the culminating scene, when she poisons herself rather than reveal that it is she who has betrayed Loris as a revolutionary to the police. The veteran conductor, Gianandrea Gavazzeni, is brilliant at bringing out the colour and drama of the piece.

The DG video, taken from a live performance in 1997, offers a typically lavish production by Beppe de Tomasi from the Met. in New York with a cast as starry as could be assembled anywhere. Mirella Freni in 1997 was vocally past her best but the voice is still very beautiful, and maturity is an apt quality for a singer characterizing the beautiful widow, Fedora. Plácido Domingo makes a handsome Loris, relishing his big moment in Amor ti vieta. In the subsidiary roles Ainhoa Arteta as Countess Olga and Dwayne Croft as the diplomat, De Siriex, both sing with clear, firm tone, while Roberto Abbado paces the work well. The big snag is that the enthusiasm of the Met. audience involves prolonged applause at Freni's entrance and after the big moments of both Freni and Domingo. Brian Large's sensitive video direction homes in on the principals effectively but fails to display the grandeur of Ferruccio Villagrossi's sets fully enough.

GIPPS, Ruth (born 1921)

Horn Concerto, Op. 58

 Lyrita SRCD 316. Pyatt, LPO, Braithwaite – ARNOLD; BOWEN; JACOB: Horn Concertos; VINTER: Hunter's Moon ***

In its sense of fantasy, Ruth Gipps's Concerto is quite different from its companions in this collection of British horn concertos, opening with gentle orchestral radiance and a largely reflective mood. Throughout, passages demanding dashing virtuosity are made subservient to the atmospheric feeling created by the rich but often delicate colouring of the orchestral tapestry. The finale could not be more infectiously good-humoured and buoyant, but it also has a magical, tenderly lyrical interlude before the rumbustious return of the jaunty main theme.

Symphony 2, Op. 30

 Classico CLASSCD 274. Munich SO, Bostock – BUTTERWORTH: Symphony 1 ***

Ruth Gipps studied with Vaughan Williams and during the war years played the oboe in the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra. She became a tireless champion of neglected repertoire and an excellent teacher. Her Second Symphony comes from 1945 and, though indebted to Vaughan Williams, is well argued and inventive. It is decently played and recorded.

GIULIANI, Mauro (1781–1829)

(i; ii) Guitar Concertos 1 in A, Op. 30; 2 in A, Op. 36; 3 in F, Op. 70; Introduction, Theme with Variations & Polonaise (for Guitar & Orchestra), Op. 65; (i) Grande ouverture, Op. 61; Gran sonata eroica in A; La Melanchonia; Variations on 'I bin a Kohlbauern Bub', Op. 49; Variations on a Theme by Handel, Op. 107; (i; iii) Variazioni concertanti, Op. 130

🔑 Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 454 262-2 (2). (i) Pepe Romero, (ii) with ASMF, Marriner; (iii) with Celedonio Romero

Pepe Romero is a first-rate player, and his relaxed music-making and easy bravura bring an attractive, smiling quality. But what makes these concertos so distinctive are the splendid accompaniments provided by the Academy of St Martin-in-the-Fields under Marriner, and throughout there are many delightful touches from the orchestra. The Variations concertanti for two guitars, in which Pepe is joined by Celedonio, is played with affection and ready virtuosity. The mid-1960s recording is warm and refined throughout, very easy on the ear.

GLASS, Philip (born 1937)

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Concerto Fantasy for 2 Timpanists and Orchestra

🔑  Dunvagen Music (ASCAP) 0014. (i) Julian Lloyd Webber; (ii) Glennie, Haas; RLPO, Schwarz

Glass's Cello Concerto opens darkly and atmospherically; but the work's warmly lyrical strain is immediately apparent, and Glass's writing is genuinely melodic, hauntingly so, especially in the central movement, which brings what the soloist describes as 'an almost trance-like serenity'. A remarkable work, marvellously played.

The Concerto Fantasy is in four movements, all dominated by thundering timpani, with the third a cadenza duet for the two soloists. It is very noisy and invigorating. You will find it either thrilling or sonically overwhelming. Both performances here are surely definitive.

(i; ii) Concerto for Saxophone Quartet & Orchestra; (ii) Symphony 2; (iii) Orphée, Act II, scene III: Interlude

 None. 7559 79496-2. (i) Rascher Saxophone Qt; (ii) Stuttgart CO; (iii) V. RSO; composer

Philip Glass's Symphony No. 2, in three substantial movements, represents his music at its most mellifluous, his second-generation brand of minimalism. Written in 1993, it uses polytonality as a basic element, to a degree taking the place of contrasts traditional in symphonic form. The Interlude from Orphée is vintage Glass, while the more compact Saxophone Quartet Concerto brings the liveliest music, with jazzy syncopations in the second movement and Spanish-American flavours in the finale varying Glass's persistent moderato writing. Excellent performances and well-balanced recording.

Violin Concerto

🔑  Telarc CD 80494. McDuffie, Houston SO, Eschenbach – ADAMS: Violin Concerto ***

(i) Violin Concerto; Company; Akhnaten: Prelude & Dance

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554568. (i) Anthony; Ulster O, Yuasa

Glass's Violin Concerto, with its hypnotic minimalist exploration of simple basic material, is one of his best and most approachable works. The repeated four-note downward scale on which the soloist weaves his serene soliloquy in the slow movement is particularly haunting, the effect very like a chaconne, which links it readily to the coupled Adams concerto. On Telarc McDuffie gives a first-class performance and is very well recorded indeed.

Adele Anthony is a talented violinist from Tasmania, who here gives a sweetly expressive reading, despite a rather plodding account of the very opening. In the central movement she finds a rare tenderness, as well as on the high harmonics at the end of the whole work. The concerto makes an excellent centrepiece for a complete disc of Glass's music, with Yuasa and the Ulster Orchestra equally persuasive in the four brief movements of Company and the two orchestral passages from the opera, Akhnaten.

Company; Façades

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI 2 06624-2. LCO, Warren-Green – ADAMS: Shaker Loops ; REICH: 8 Lines ; HEATH: Frontier ***

Company consists of four brief but sharply contrasted movements for strings; Façades offers a haunting cantilena for soprano saxophone, suspended over atmospherically undulating strings. The performances are full of intensity and are expertly played, and the recording is excellent.

Heroes Symphony; The Light

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559325. Bournemouth SO, Alsop

The Light is an undulating, minimalist piece, with changing orchestration eventually leading to a 'transformation' of the initial motive and a final cessation of the pulsing. It lasts for 24 minutes and some listeners may find it difficult to stay the course. The Heroes Symphony, however, has six movements (chosen from ten) to make a varied but fairly cohesive structural whole with attractive and changing invention and imaginative scoring and percussive detail to match the character of the six named sections. The result is hardly a masterpiece, but is undoubtedly entertaining in Marin Alsop's persuasive performance, excellently played by the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, and very well recorded.

Symphonies 2 & 3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559202. Bournemouth SO, Alsop

Marin Alsop's accounts of these two symphonies are magnetically performed and brilliantly recorded. No. 2, much the longer work in three substantial movements, dates from 1994 and this is unreconstructed minimalism with unrelenting kaleidoscopic repetitions. No. 3, first heard in 1995, is little more than half the length, a piece for 19 strings and optional percussion, with the gentle opening movement serving as prelude to the second and third movements, the one fast, the other a measured chaconne. The fourth movement is brief and brilliant, drawing threads together.

String Quartets 2 (Company); 3 (Mishima); 4 (Buczak); 5

 None. 7559 79356-2. Kronos Qt

Happily, the quartets here are presented in reverse order, for the last of the four, No. 5, dating from 1991, presents Glass at his most warmly expressive and intense. Textures are luminous, shimmering in their repetitions rather than thrusting them home relentlessly. The Kronos Quartet, for whom the work was written, give a heartfelt performance, as they do of the Quartet No. 4 (1990), written in memory of Brian Buczak, who died of Aids. The valedictory mood is intensified by a lyrical and poignantly beautiful middle movement, leading to a noble finale. Though Nos. 4 and 5 most clearly reveal the hand of a master, the earlier works also represent Glass at his most approachable, the more so when they are treated to magnetic performances by the Kronos Quartet, superbly recorded.

ORGAN MUSIC

(i) Dances 2 & 4; (ii) Duets & Canons (suite); (i) Satyagraha (opera), Act III: Finale

 Nim. NI 5664. (i) Broadbent; (ii) Bowyer (Marcusson organ in St Augustin's Chapel, Tonbridge School, Kent)

Dance 2 represents the most basic form of minimalism, offering a hypnotically relentless ostinato for nearly 25 minutes, with very minor changes of the harmonic implications in the pedals. Dance 4 is more musically eventful. Below the toccata-like sequence there is a galumphing figure in the bass and frequent if repetitious harmonic movement. The shorter (seven-minute) Satyagraha finale is sandwiched in between the two Dances, more lyrical in feeling, but hardly more motivated. All three pieces are played with devoted determination by Christopher Bowers Broadbent, who never puts a foot or finger wrong. Kevin Bowyer takes over for the Duets and Canons (1996) creating a thoughtful, improvisatory feeling. All ten are brief and have liturgical titles, which the composer tells us are based on the plainsong of the Third Mass of the Nativity, but the closing Agnus Dei and Benedictus finally leave the listener in mid-air. The recording of the fine Marcusson organ at Tonbridge cannot be faulted.

OPERA

La Belle et la bête (opera based on the film of Jean Cocteau; complete)

 None. 7559 79347. Felty, Purnhagen, Kuether, Martinez, Neill, Zhou, Philip Glass Ens., Riesman

What Glass has done here is to provide a new musical accompaniment to a showing of Cocteau's 90-minute film, La Belle et la bête, dispensing with Auric's original film-music and synchronizing the singing-parts with the speech of the actors in the film. In the opening scenes the music is far lighter and more conventionally beautiful than most Glass, but then the poignancy of the story is more and more reflected in the score, both tender and mellifluous. Glass's justification lies in the intensity of the score overall, with Janice Felty and Gregory Purnhagen both clearly focused in the central roles, though Purnhagen's baritone suggests from the start a heroic, not a bestial, figure. Vividly atmospheric sound.

Einstein on the Beach (complete)

 None. 7559 79323-2 (3). Soloists, Philip Glass Ens., Riesman

Glass himself explains the need for a new recording of this bizarre and relentless opera – as the surreal title implies, more dream than drama. Where the earlier recording had an abrasive edge, this new one is more refined, melding the different elements, electronic alongside acoustic, more subtly and persuasively than before. Even so, the first train episode, over 20 minutes long, remains mind-blowing in its relentlessness. The impact is heightened by the vividness of the recording, with spoken voices in particular given such presence that they startle you as if someone had burst into your room. The vision remains an odd one, but with a formidable group of vocalists and instrumentalists brilliantly directed, often from the keyboard, by Michael Riesman, the new recording certainly justifies itself.

Satyagraha (DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 100 136. Goeke, Harster, Danniker, Nielsen, Greiwe, Württemburg State Theatre O, Russell Davis

Philip Glass's second opera, Satyagraha, is a curiosity, an opera with virtually no plot, using a text in Sanskrit, a tribute to Mahatma Gandhi as peace-maker. The title Satyagraha means 'dedication to the truth', and each of the three long Acts, almost an hour each, has a superscription paying tribute to other leaders, Tolstoy, the poet Rabindranath Tagore, and Martin Luther King. Reflecting Glass's minimalist score, the dream-like staging involves little movement, though Glass's detailed inventiveness induces a hypnotic effect, clearly related to oriental meditation. Dennis Russell Davis with an excellent cast, led by three singers sharing the role of Gandhi, conducts a persuasive performance.

GLAZUNOV, Alexander
(1865–1936)

A la mémoire de Gogol, Op. 86; A la mémoire d'un héros, Op. 8; (i) Chant du ménestrel for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 71; Concerto ballata for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 108; 2 Pieces for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 20

(BB)  Naxos 8.553932. Moscow SO, Golovschin, (i) with Rudin

The Chant du ménestrel has an easy charm that delights the ear. A la mémoire de Gogol is a dignified, well-shaped piece which belies (as does the Concerto ballata) Glazunov's reputation for scoring too thickly. Alexander Rudin's playing here is eloquent. The Moscow Orchestra plays well for Igor Golovschin and the sound has pleasing warmth and clarity.

Carnaval Overture, Op. 45; Concert Waltzes 1–2, Opp. 47 & 51; Spring, Op. 34; Salomé (incidental music), Op. 90: Introduction; Dance

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553838. Moscow SO, Golovschin

There are some attractive ideas in Spring (Vesna), a charming work, refined and transparent in its orchestration, playing on birdsong and building to a sensuous climax. The more familiar Concert Waltzes contain some of Glazunov's most winning tunes. The novelty most likely to excite curiosity here is Glazunov's music for Oscar Wilde's Salomé, with Salome's dance leading to a Polovtsian climax. Salome sheds her veils in a most unerotic fashion. But this cannot be blamed on the conductor, and generally these are warm, idiomatic performances, richly recorded.

(i) Concerto ballata for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 108; (ii) Piano Concerto 1, Op. 92

 Chan. 9528. (i) Dyachkov; (ii) Pirzadeh; I Musici de Montréal, Turovsky – ARENSKY: Violin Concerto ***

The highly romantic First Piano Concerto is already well served by Stephen Coombs (see below). The Concerto ballata is also available on Naxos, but Yegor Dyachkov is a fine soloist, and the young Iranian-born Canadian pianist, Maneli Pirzadeh, proves a most poetic and brilliant exponent of the Piano Concerto. All in all, this makes a highly recommendable coupling.

Piano Concertos 1 in F min., Op. 92; 2 in B flat

(*) Hyp. CDA 66877. Coombs, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – GOEDICKE: Concertstück **(*)

These two piano concertos are ripely lyrical, like a mixture of Brahms and Rachmaninov, but the inspiration is anything but tired or faded. As in his survey of Glazunov's piano music for the same label, Stephen Coombs is a persuasive advocate, and he always leaves one with the feeling that this music means more than it does. The BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra under Martyn Brabbins give sympathetic support, and the only serious reservation one might make concerns the over-resonant recording acoustic.

Piano Concerto 2 in B flat, Op. 100

(*) Chan. 9622. Herskowitz, I Musici de Montréal, Turovsky – DAVIDOV: Cello Concerto 2 (*); CONUS: Violin Concerto **(*)

Matthew Herskowitz is not quite as persuasive an artist as, say, Stephen Coombs on Hyperion. However, the merit of this record is to explore Russian concertos of the second rank which deserve a place in your library.

Violin Concerto in A min., Op. 82

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 059. Fischer, Russian Nat. O, Kreizberg – KHACHATURIAN: Violin Concerto ; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 1 ***

🔑 ✿  RCA 74321 87454-2. Znaider, Bav. RSO, Jansons – PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2; TCHAIKOVSKY: Méditation *** ✿

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 457 064-2. Shaham, Russian Nat. O, Pletnev – KABALEVSKY: Concerto; TCHAIKOVSKY: Souvenir d'un lieu cher, etc. ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49567-2. Vengerov, BPO, Abbado – PROKOFIEV: Concertos 1–2 ***

 BIS SACD 1432. Gluzman, Bergen PO, Litton – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto; Souvenir ***

The unique coupling of three Russian violin concertos on Pentatone could hardly be more recommendable, with warmly compelling performances from the brilliant young German virtuoso, superbly recorded in full, bright, clear sound, given added sonority in SACD. In the Glazunov Concerto it is the clarity and subtlety of Julia Fischer's playing that marks her reading out, in rivalry with even the finest. She finds yearning tenderness in the slow middle section of this one-movement work and gives an easy swing to the bouncy rhythms of the final section.

Nikolaj Znaider's Glazunov reveals an artist who not only has commanding technical address but eloquence and taste. His approach is fresh and so he makes one fall for this glorious work all over again. He is given splendid support by Mariss Jansons and the excellent Orchester des Bayerischen Rundfunks. A special mention should be given to the recording engineer, Wolfgang Karreth, who gets the ideal balance between soloist and orchestra and a very natural and lifelike sound.

Gil Shaham gives a pretty dazzling account of the Glazunov Concerto with Mikhail Pletnev and the Russian National Orchestra which can well hold its own with the current opposition. The couplings are unusual, and this is an enterprising choice for Universal's 'Critics' Choice' series.

Originally coupled with Tchaikovsky, Vengerov's version is now paired, even more attractively, with his outstanding Prokofiev performances. His account of the Glazunov is hardly less exceptional, for again he gives a familiar concerto extra dimensions, turning it from a display piece into a work of far wider-ranging emotions, when he contrasts and shades the tone-colours so magically, keeping the richest tone in reserve for the third theme. Predictably, his dashing final section is breathtaking in its brilliance.

Born in the Ukraine, Vadim Gluzman, moved to Israel in 1990, where Isaac Stern befriended him, and then on to the USA. His performance of the engaging Glazunov Concerto has a pleasing simplicity, and there is no absence of virtuosity, so that he can be brilliant and touching by turns. He has a fine supportive accompanist in Andrew Litton and a truthful balance in first-class surround sound from BIS. The Tchaikovsky couplings show him at his finest.

In the winter of 1934 Heifetz came to London to record the Glazunov, a work previously unrecorded. The exuberance of his playing, well matched by Barbirolli's sympathetic accompaniment, makes it a uniquely compelling version, freely improvisational, with a dedicated account of the Andante sostenuto and an exuberant one of the swaggering finale. The Naxos transfer (8.110940) is well balanced, if not quite as sophisticated as the previous, EMI remastering (7 64030-2), with surface hiss occasionally intrusive.

For those who accept slightly dated 1963 stereo sound, Heifetz is again incomparable, his later account among the strongest and most passionate in the catalogue, and the RCA orchestra under Hendl gives fine support. The remastered recording sounds really good in its new SACD format. (8287 6 66372-2)

From the Middle Ages, Op. 79; Scènes de ballet, Op. 52

 Chan. 8804. SNO, Järvi – LIADOV: A Musical Snuffbox ***

From the Middle Ages (suite), Op. 79; The Sea, Op. 28; Spring, Op. 34; Stenka Razin, Op. 13

Ⓜ  Chan. 7049. SNO, Järvi

Järvi makes out an excellent case for these charming Glazunov suites. Although this music is obviously inferior to Tchaikovsky, Järvi has the knack of making you think it is better than it is, and the Chandos recording is up to the best standards of the house. The disc also includes a fine account of Liadov's delightful A Musical Snuffbox.

The tone-poem Spring was written two years after The Sea and is infinitely more imaginative; in fact it is as fresh and delightful as its companion is cliché-ridden. At one point Glazunov even looks forward to The Seasons. Stenka Razin makes a colourful enough opening item for this alternative collection.

Raymonda – 'Dancer's Dream' (Documentary)

Ⓝ Arthaus DVD 107 015. Principal Dancers & Corps de Ballet, with Paris Nat. Opéra O, Anissimov (Dir. François Roussillon)

A fascinating documentary (from 1999) about Glazunov's colourful ballet Raymonda, and its comparatively recent success with Rudolf Nureyev. The documentary is dedicated to the great ballet productions Nureyev created at the Opéra National de Paris, of which he was its artistic director from 1983. The documentary focuses on both the history of the ballet and Nureyev's work on it, and offers a fascinating series of interviews interspersed with scenes from the ballet. Some of the material is archival, but the majority is of very beautiful recent productions, where both the colour of the music and the beauty of the dancing are well conveyed. The picture- and sound-quality are both first class. A thoroughly rewarding and civilized documentary – and a must for balletomanes.

Raymonda (ballet; complete; DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 719. Bessmertnova, Vasyuchenko, Taranda, Nobrova, Bolshoi Ballet, directed Grigorovich; Bolshoi Theatre O, Zhuraitis (V/D: Shuji Fujii)

Glazunov's Raymonda (his first major theatrical score, premièred in 1898) is a traditional romantic ballet with a simple story and a happy ending; and this admirable DVD is especially valuable for preserving a lavish (1989) Bolshoi production which draws on the original choreography (Raymonda was the last ballet in which Petipa participated). Undoubtedly this is the Bolshoi at their peak, and the orchestral playing under Algis Zhuraitis is first class, as is the recording. The camerawork cannot be faulted, although the Bolshoi stage is huge, and some of the long shots are inevitably rather distantly focused.

Raymonda (complete; CD version)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553503/4. Moscow SO, Anissimov

This Naxos version is played elegantly and affectionately, and the Moscow upper strings are full and warm as recorded. It does not lack life. But in seeking atmosphere, the playing creates a less than vibrant effect, although this is partly caused by Alexander Anissimov's tendency to luxuriant tempi.

The Seasons (ballet; complete), Op. 67

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 455 349-2 (2). RPO, Ashkenazy – PROKOFIEV: Cinderella ****

Ⓜ (*) Decca 460 315-2. SRO, Ansermet – KHACHATURIAN: Gayaneh; Spartacus: excerpts ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550079. Czech RSO (Bratislava), Lenárd – TCHAIKOVSKY: Sleeping Beauty Suite **

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9754. SO, composer – PROKOFIEV: Romeo and Juliet: Suite 2 ()

The Seasons; Concert Waltzes 1 & 2; Stenka Razin

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence 480 038 (2). SRO, Ansermet – GLINKA: Jota argonesa, etc.; LIADOV: Baba-Yaga, etc, ; SCHUMANN: Carnaval **(*)

The Seasons (ballet; complete); Scènes de ballet, Op. 52

🔑 Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80347. Minnesota O, Edo de Waart

Ashkenazy's account of Glazunov's delightful ballet is the finest it has ever received. The RPO playing is dainty and elegant, refined and sumptuous, yet the strings respond vigorously to the thrusting vitality of the Autumnal Bacchanale. The Decca engineers, working in Watford Town Hall, provide digital sound of great allure and warmth, very much in the demonstration bracket. As can be seen, this recording is available on a Double Decca, coupled with Prokofiev's Cinderella ballet.

The very attractive Minnesota performances of The Seasons and the delightful Scènes de ballet make an ideal coupling, and this is doubly attractive now it has been reissued at mid-price.

Ansermet's recording dates from 1966 and is of vintage Decca quality. The performance takes a little while to warm up, but perhaps that is not inappropriate in the opening Winter sequence, where the conductor's meticulous ear for detail is a plus point, for the wind playing throughout is engagingly pointed. At the opening of Summer one might wish for a richer, more sumptuous sound from the Suisse Romande violins, but the zestful opening of Autumn is firm to the point of fierceness.

Ansermet's Seasons is also available on an Australian import, differently coupled. Indeed, the alternative couplings are all worth having and the two Concert Waltzes are as delightful as ever.

Ondrej Lenárd gives a pleasing bargain account of Glazunov's delightful score, finding plenty of delicacy, while the entry of Glazunov's most famous tune at the opening of the Autumn Bacchanale is very virile indeed. The sound is atmospheric, yet with plenty of fullness.

Recorded for the Columbia label in 1929, the composer's own reading of The Seasons brings a vigorous and colourful performance, with surprisingly good ensemble from what was evidently a pick-up orchestra. The impact of the performance, not least in the exuberant Bacchanale for Autumn with lifted rhythms, is greatly heightened by the vivid and full-bodied transfer by Michael Dutton.

Symphonies 1–8; Ballade in F, Op. 78; From Darkness to Light; Mazurka in G, Op. 38

Ⓑ  BIS CD 1663/4 (5). BBC Nat. O of Wales, Otaka

A valuable set, offering all eight symphonies on five CDs for the price of two. They span just over two decades; the First being composed when Glazunov was a boy of sixteen and the Eighth completed when he was just forty. The symphonies are very consistent, both in substance and in character: if you have heard and liked one, its companions will offer few surprises and much satisfaction. The ideas are appealing and the craftsmanship and orchestration show an impressive mastery. Arnold Bax used to play them in duet form – understandably, for they are musically rewarding and are unlikely to be encountered in concert programmes. But they are decently represented on CD and have been out on individual discs for some time. The present issue represents a true bargain and the performances and recordings can hold their own against the Polyansky cycle on Chandos and other rivals.

Symphonies 1 in E, Op 5; 5 in B flat, Op. 55

(*) Orfeo C 093101A. Bav. RSO, Neeme Järvi

Symphony 2 in F sharp min., Op. 16; Concert Waltz 1

(*) Orfeo C 148101A. Bamberg SO, Järvi

Symphony 3 in D, Op. 33; Concert Waltz 2

 Orfeo C 157101A. Bamberg SO, Järvi

Symphonies 4 in E flat, Op. 48; 7 in F, Op. 77

(*) Orfeo C 148201A. Bamberg SO, Järvi

Symphony 6 in C min., Op. 58; Poème lyrique, Op. 12

 Orfeo C 157201A. Bamberg SO, Järvi

Symphony 8 in E flat, Op. 83; Overture solennelle, Op. 73; Wedding Procession

(*) Orfeo C 157201A. Bav. RSO, Järvi

Neeme Järvi's cycle of the Glazunov Symphonies has been restored to the catalogue. Alas, they are all still at full price, but they are also all available separately, and they include some attractive bonuses. The Third and Sixth Symphonies are among the finest of the set, full of vigour and benefiting from the polish of the Bambergers' playing. But all these performances are cultivated. No. 1 is highly sympathetic in Järvi's hands, cogent and engagingly fresh. No. 2 is comfortable, both in music and in sound, but is undoubtedly enjoyable; and Järvi brings out the full charm of No. 4. No. 5 (like No. 8 played by the Bavarian Radio Orchestra) may lack something in glitter, but the balance is full and pleasing. Above all, Järvi avoids bombast which can too easily take over in these works, which are nothing if not civilized.

Symphony 1; (i) Violin Concerto, Op. 82

 Chan. 9751. Russian State SO, Polyansky, (i) with Krasko

What a remarkable and delightful work the Glazunov First Symphony is! Polyansky's pacing keeps the music alive throughout, and manages the tempi changes in an engagingly spontaneous way, and the Chandos sound, full and with glowing wind colouring, is flattering. Julia Krasko plays the Violin Concerto warm-heartedly and with confidence and ready bravura, and she receives fine support from the Russian orchestra. The Chandos sound is well up to standard.

Symphony 2 in F sharp min., Op. 16. (i) Coronation Cantata, Op. 56

 Chan. 9709. Russian State SO, Polyansky, (i) with Lutiv-Ternovskaya, Kuznetsova, Grivnov, Stepanovich, Russian State Symphonic Capella

Though Polyansky's performance loses some concentration in the finale, it is warmly expressive and colourful, helped by rich, full recording. What makes the disc especially attractive is the substantial fill-up, the première recording of the Coronation Cantata which Glazunov wrote to celebrate the coronation of the last Tsar, Nicolas II. A winning rarity, very well performed, with a strong team of soloists, all attractively Slavonic in timbre, even if the soprano grows edgy under pressure.

Symphonies 4 in E flat, Op. 48; 5 in B flat, Op. 55

 Chan. 9739. Russian State SO, Polyansky

 ASV CDDCA 1051. Philh. O, Butt

The Fourth Symphony is a charming and well-composed work, held together structurally by a theme which Glazunov uses in all three movements. The Fifth, written two years later, is more imposing, but not so very different really, although the first movement is more vigorous. Throughout both works the Philharmonia playing under Butt is persuasively warm and sympathetic, helped by the spacious, well-balanced recording.

However, Polyansky's Chandos competitor has the advantage of a fine Russian Orchestra which immediately establish a richly Slavonic atmosphere of melancholy for the languorous opening theme of No. 4. The Chandos recording is glowingly warm in capturing string and woodwind timbres alike, yet the Scherzos of both symphonies sparkle translucently. The resonance means that the finales have less bite than with the ASV recording and, while they are played with robust, Russian-dance vigour, Butt is exceptionally spirited in the finale of No. 5. It is a case of swings and roundabouts, for the ASV recording is clearer, if not more lustrous.

Symphonies 4; 7 in F, Op. 77

🔑  Warner 2564 63236-2. RSNO, Serebrier

Serebrier gets very characterful and brilliant performances from the Royal Scottish National Orchestra and his account of No. 4 in particular has a good claim to be a first recommendation. What a charming work the Seventh is, sometimes dubbed the Pastoral after the similarity of the opening to the opening of Beethoven's Sixth. It never fails to captivate. The writing for horns is striking in all four movements, with the RSNO's soloists outstandingly fine, as are the woodwind. The finale brings together ideas from all the preceding movements in a Lisztian transformation. Very good recorded sound too.

Symphony 5 in B flat; The Seasons (ballet; complete)

🔑  Warner 2564 61434-2. RSNO, Serebrier

Jose Serebrier with the Royal Scottish National Orchestra here couples two of Glazunov's most warmly attractive works. The one-Act ballet The Seasons is the most popular of his orchestral works, deservedly so. The Fifth Symphony, here given an exhilarating performance. With outstanding recorded sound giving clarity and weight, the refinement and power of the performance are superbly caught.

Symphonies 5; 8 in E flat, Op. 83

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553660. Moscow SO, Anissimov

Alexander Anissimov does his best to make the textures as clear and well ventilated as possible, and pays great attention to details of dynamics and balance. Try the Scherzo of the Fifth Symphony and you will find much lightness of touch and a greater transparency than is often encountered in records of these works. Strongly recommended, especially at such a modest cost.

Symphony 6 in C min., Op. 58; Characteristic Suite in D, Op. 9

🔑  Chan. 10238. Russian State SO, Polyansky

Symphony 6; The Forest (tone-poem), Op. 19

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554293. Moscow SO, Anissimov

Polyansky's reading of the Sixth Symphony has plenty of impetus and excellent detail, and the Characteristic Suite is well worth having on disc. Very good playing from the Russian State Symphony Orchestra and excellent Chandos recording make this another desirable addition to the catalogue.

Anissimov also handles the symphony admirably and, with the Moscow players responding persuasively, the performance is a great success. However, The Forest is an over-extended pantheistic tone-poem with an ingenuous programme. Yet the work is rarely if ever performed, and the fine account of the symphony is worth its modest Naxos price.

Symphony 8, Op. 83; Poème lyrique, Op. 65; (i) Commemorative Cantata, Op. 65

🔑  Chan. 9961. Russian State SO, Polyansky; (i) with Kuznetsova, Grivnov, Russian State Symphonic Capella

Symphony 8 in E flat; Raymonda (Ballet Suite), Op. 57a

(*) Warner 2564 61939-2. RSNO, Serebrier

Polyansky's performance of the Eighth Symphony is thoroughly persuasive throughout, especially in the finale, which is both exciting and satisfyingly cumulative. The Poème lyrique, too, is given a rapturous account, with Polyansky revelling in the Russianness of the melodic line. But what makes this disc especially compelling is the lovely cantata commemorating the centenary of the birth of Pushkin. Soloists, chorus and orchestra combine to give a passionately dedicated performance of what is surely one of the composer's finest choral works. The recording is well up to Chandos's excellent standard.

Serebrier pairs the Eighth with an attractive selection from the Raymonda ballet. The symphony comes off very well, although the Scottish performance is rather less vibrant than Polyansky's Chandos version. However, the Raymonda Suite shows the composer at his finest, with consistently more memorable writing than in the symphony, full of melodic charm and felicitous scoring. The orchestral playing here is most sympathetic and the sound very pleasing.

CHAMBER MUSIC

5 Novelettes, Op. 15

() Testament mono SBT1061. Hollywood Qt – BORODIN: String Quartet 2; TCHAIKOVSKY: String Quartet 1 ()

The Hollywood Quartet bring a freshness and ardour to these charming compositions that are most persuasive.

String Quartets 2 in F, Op. 10; 4 in A min., Op. 64; Elegy, Op. 105

 MDG 603 1237-2. Utrecht Qt

String Quartets: 3 in G (Slave), Op. 26; 5 in D min., Op. 70

 MDG 603 1236-2. Utrecht Qt

Both Quartets on MDG 603 1237-2 are youthful. The 'Slavonic' influences in the Mazurka third movement of Op. 26 and the Fête slave finale bring Russian dance influences at their most civilized, while the slow movement of the A minor Quartet is particularly beautiful. What elegantly written music this is! For those starting to collect these works, the Utrecht versions can be thoroughly recommended. They are warmly and pleasingly recorded.

String Quartet 3 in G (Slavonic)

(B)  Cal. CAL 6262. Annesci Qt – DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 12 (American) ***

Glazunov's Slavonic Quartet is so named because of its finale ('Une fête slave'), which the Annesci players despatch with attractive geniality, neatly catching the dance rhythms. They are equally fetching in the Alla Mazurka, with its underlying drone, while the first two movements are full of lyrical warmth. A first-rate coupling, for the Dvořák performance is no less endearing.

String Quintet in A, Op. 39

 Chan. 9878. ASMF Chamber Ens. – TCHAIKOVSKY: Souvenir de Florence ***

Glazunov's String Quintet (with second cello) is a work of characteristic warmth and lyricism. The performance is thoroughly committed and persuasive, and very well recorded too.

(i) String Quintet, Op. 39; 5 Novelettes

(BB)  Naxos 8.570256. Fine Arts Qt, (i) with Rosen

Glazunov's warmly attractive lyricism as well as his technical mastery come out winningly in both these works, not least the Novelettes, charming genre pieces, each echoing a different national dance, Spanish, Hungarian, Oriental, and so on. The String Quintet is beautifully fashioned and mellifluous, with the first movement introduced by the viola unaccompanied, a sonata movement full of attractive themes. The Fine Arts Quartet plus Nathanial Rosen on the second cello give brilliant performances, warmly understanding as well as polished, and very well recorded in New York.

Piano Music

Piano Sonata 1 in B flat min., Op. 74; Grande valse de concert, Op. 41; 3 Miniatures, Op. 42; Petite valse, Op. 36; Suite on the name 'Sacha'; Valse de salon, Op. 43; Waltzes on the Theme 'Sabela', Op. 23

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 66833. Coombs

Easy Sonata; 3 Etudes, Op. 31; Miniature in C; 3 Morceaux, Op. 49; Nocturne, Op. 37; 2 Pieces, Op. 22; 2 Preludes-improvisations; Sonatina; Theme & Variations, Op. 72

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55222. Coombs

Marking the start of a Russian series, each of these two discs contains a major work, the Piano Sonata No. 1 on the first and the Theme and Variations, Op. 72, on the second. For the rest, you have a dazzling series of salon and genre pieces, full of the easy charm and winning tunefulness that mark Glazunov's ballet, The Seasons. Stephen Coombs proves a most persuasive advocate, consistently conveying sheer joy in keyboard virtuosity to a degree rare in British pianists.

(i) Piano Sonata 2 in E min., Op. 75; Barcarolle sur les touches noires; Idyll, Op. 103; 2 Impromptus, Op. 54; In modo religioso, Op. 38; Prelude & 2 Mazurkas, Op. 25; Song of the Volga Boatmen, Op. 97 (arr. Siloti); (ii) Triumphal March, Op. 40

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55224. (i) Coombs; (ii) Holst Singers, Layton

The most substantial work here is the Second Sonata of 1901, which is better played than by any of its rivals we have heard. The most unusual piece is the transcription of a Wagnerian Triumphal March, written for the Chicago Exposition, which eventually introduces Hail Columbus, sung in Russian! Not all the music on this generously filled CD is of equal merit but most of it is rewarding, and the recording serves the music well.

4 Preludes & Fugues, Op. 101; Prelude & Fugue in D min., Op. 62; in E min. (1926)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55223. Coombs

One does not think of Glazunov in terms of preludes and fugues, but these are all impressive pieces and this Helios reissue is most welcome.

ORGAN MUSIC

Fantasy, Op. 110; Preludes & Fugues: in D, Op. 93; in D min., Op. 98

 BIS CD 1101. Ericsson – DVOŘÁK: Preludes & Fugues (*); SIBELIUS: Intrada, etc. ***

The Prelude and Fugue in D was composed in the immediate wake of the Eighth Symphony, and the D minor (which also exists in a version for piano), with its powerfully wrought fugue, will surprise those who think of Glazunov as a dyed-in-the-wool conservative. The Fantasy is well worth getting to know. Hans Ola Ericsson produces some splendid effects from the powerful new Gerald Woehl organ at St Petrus Canisius, Friedrichshafen. The recording is in the demonstration class and has tremendous presence and range.

VOCAL MUSIC

Tsar Iudesyskiy (King of the Jews)

 Chan. 9467. Russian State Symphony Ch. & SO, Rozhdestvensky

Tsar Iudesyskiy (King of the Jews); Salome (incidental music): Introduction and Salome's dance

 Chan. 9824. (i) Russian State Symphonic Capella; Russian State SO, Polyansky

Glazunov's incidental music to Konstantin Romanov's Tsar Iudesyskiy (King of the Jews) offers considerable artistic rewards. Rozhdestvensky shapes each phrase with feeling and imagination, and he gets good results from his chorus and orchestra. Moreover, the quality of the recorded sound is first rate in every respect.

Astonishingly Chandos have followed up Rozhdestvensky's CD with another, using similar forces conducted by Valéry Polyansky. His version is hardly less compelling, although perhaps Rozhdestvensky is that bit more dramatic at the opening, and in portraying the Levites' trumpets (actually horns). But Polyansky's account is richly atmospheric and his singers are splendid. There is little in it, although some may be swayed by the more recent CD's inclusion of the music that Glazunov wrote in 1908 for a production of Oscar Wilde's Salome.

GLIÈRE, Reinhold (1875–1956)

(i) Concerto for Coloratura Soprano, Op. 82; (ii) Harp Concerto, Op. 74

🔑  Chan. 9094. (i) Hulse; (ii) Masters; City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox – GINASTERA: Harp Concerto ***

This digital recording of Glière's lush concertos is highly competitive in both works. The recording is suitably rich and opulent, yet every detail is audibly in place. Eileen Hulse is an impressive soloist with excellent control, well-focused tone and a good sense of line, and she is excellently supported by the City of London Sinfonia and Richard Hickox. Nor need Rachel Masters fear comparison with her predecessor, Osian Ellis; so, given such excellent sound, this is all highly self-indulgent and sybaritic.

Symphony 3 in B min. (Ilya Mourometz), Op. 42

🔑  Telarc CD 80609. LSO, Botstein

 Chan. 9041. BBC PO, Downes

Fine as its Chandos competitor is, this new Telarc recording of Glière's Ilya Mourometz Symphony is even more impressive. Botstein uses the uncut original score of 1911, and even though both outer movements run to over 22 minutes, their length is well sustained. What Botstein also does is to bring out the underlying Russian folksong inspiration of the writing. The spaciously spectacular recording is well up to the high standard we expect from this label.

Downes and the BBC Philharmonic in magnificent form give an urgently passionate performance of this colourful programme piece. Downes, taut and intense, relates the writing very much to the world of Glière's close contemporary, Rachmaninov. The recording, made in the concert hall of New Broadcasting House, Manchester, is one of Chandos's finest, combining clarity and sumptuousness. But the new Telarc recording is even finer.

Octet, Op. 5; Sextet, Op. 11

 MDG 308 1196-2. Berlin Philharmonic String Octet

Glière's Octet comes from 1900, when the composer was in his mid-twenties, and the Sextet, his third essay in the medium, was composed five years later. Both works show a mastery not only of the genre (Glière was a fine violinist) but the impeccable craftsmanship that one would expect from a pupil of Taneyev, while the melodic ideas are both beautifully fashioned and finely paced. The Berlin Philharmonic String Octet play with enthusiasm and persuasiveness, and the MDG sound is very lifelike. An appealing and welcome issue.

GLINKA, Mikhail (1804–57)

Capriccio brillante on the Jota aragonesa (Spanish Overture 1); Kamarinskaya; Souvenir of a Summer Night in Madrid (Spanish Overture 2); Valse-fantaisie; A Life for the Tsar: Overture & Suite (Polonaise; Krakowiak; Waltz; Mazurka; Epilogue)

 ASV CDDCA 1075. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

Capriccio brillante on the Jota aragonesa (Spanish Overture 1); Kamarinskaya; Overture in D; Ruslan and Ludmilla: Overture & Suite; Souvenir of a Summer Night in Madrid (Spanish Overture 2); Symphony on Two Russian Themes; Valse-Fantaisie

🔑 * Chan. 9861. BBC PO, Sinaisky

Kamarinskaya is a kaleidoscopic fantasy on two Russian folksongs. Tchaikovsky said it contained 'the whole of Russian music, just as the acorn holds within itself the oak tree'. The two Spanish overtures created another genre, the orchestral 'picture postcard', which Russian composers brought home from their travels abroad. Glinka's two pieces have a glitter and atmospheric appeal all of their own, especially the Capriccio brillante, featuring a 'jota aragonesa' also used by Liszt. But the seductive scoring of Summer Night in Madrid was in some ways even more influential. The Valse-fantaisie is a charmer, but the overture and suite from A Life for the Tsar are more conventional. The whole programme is played under Tjeknavorian with a natural vitality and a delightful feeling for its Russianness under a conductor who is a composer himself. The bright recording, full-bodied and glowing, is one of the finest we have received from ASV.

Sinaisky duplicates the main items in Tjeknavorian's programme, but includes also the seductive Symphony on Two Russian Themes. Many will also prefer the fizzingly brilliant Overture, March and Dances (effectively a charming ballet suite) from Ruslan and Ludmilla to the excerpts from A Life for the Tsar. Moreover, not only is the playing of the BBC Philharmonic under Sinaisky both warmly responsive and sparkling, but the state-of-the-art Chandos recording (brass, woodwind and strings alike) is even finer than the ASV alternative. Highly recommended.

Jota aragonesa; Kamarinskaya; A Life for the Tsar: Overture. Ruslan and Ludmilla: Overture; Valse-Fantasie

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence 480 038 (2). SRO, Ansermet – GLAZUNOV: The Seasons etc.; LIADOV: Baba-Yaga, etc.; SCHUMANN: Carnaval **(*)

This is real Ansermet repertoire. All the Glinka items on this 2-CD set are highly enjoyable: Ruslan and Ludmilla is given a relaxed outing compared to Solti's LSO version, but is no less enjoyable for that, while in the rarer Kamarinskaya and A Life for the Tsar Overture, Ansermet brings all the bright colours of the score to vivid life. The Valse-Fantasie is delightful indeed, and its tune hard to get out of one's head. The lively Jota aragonesa is especially enjoyable, with its glittering castanets and percussion, and the crescendo starting at 7 minutes 18 seconds is most excitingly played.

Polka 1 (orch. Balakirev); Spanish Overtures 1 (Jota aragonesa); 2 (Summer Night in Madrid); Waltz Fantasia; Ivan Susanin (A Life for the Tsar): Overture. Prince Kholmsky: Overture and Entr'actes to Acts II–IV; Ruslan and Ludmilla: Overture; Chernamor's March

(BB)  Regis (ADD/DDD) RRC 1142. USSR SO & Bolshoi Theatre O, Svetlanov

These Russian recordings have been selected from a two-disc Melodiya set that last appeared on BMG/RCA. The performances embrace a considerable time-span (1963–84). The playing of the USSR Symphony Orchestra, which provides the majority of the items, is nothing if not expert and idiomatic, and the remastered recordings, though variable in quality, are generally very good indeed.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Grand Sextet in E flat

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55173. Capricorn – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Quintet for Piano & Wind ***

Glinka's Sextet is rather engaging, particularly when played with such aplomb as it is here. The contribution of the pianist, Julian Jacobson, is brilliantly nimble and felicitous. The balance places the piano rather backwardly, but the CD provides good detail and presence.

Trio pathétique in D min.

 Chan. 8477. Borodin Trio – ARENSKY: Piano Trio ***

Glinka's Trio is prefaced by a superscription: 'Je n'ai connu l'amour que par les peines qu'il cause' ('I have known love only through the misery it causes'). It is no masterpiece – but the Borodins almost persuade one that it is. The Chandos recording is vivid and has excellent presence.

OPERA

A Life for the Tsar (Ivan Susanin)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111078/80. Mikhailov, Spiller, Antoneva, Yelepp, Hosson, Skobtsov, Svetlanov, Bolshoi Ch. & O, Melik-Pasheyev (Acts I–IV); Nebolsin (Epilogue)

The bass Maxim Mikhailov was the finest Ivan Susanin of his day and he sang the role some 400 times. Natalia Spiller, who sings his daughter, Antonida, was one of the greatest of the Bolshoi's heroines. The singing is superb and it is difficult to imagine a vocally or dramatically finer cast or finer conducting. The Epilogue was recorded in 1950 and is conducted by Vasili Nebolsin. The third CD is completed by some isolated arias sung by Antonina Nezhdanova (1913), Chaliapin (recorded in London in 1923) and Helge Rosvænge (in Berlin, 1940). Readers who can remember what Soviet recordings sounded like in the days of 78s and LP will be amazed at the quality of this set.

Ruslan and Ludmilla (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Ph. DVD 075 096-9 (2). Ognovienko, Netrebko, Diadkova, Bezzubenkov, Gorchakova, Kirov Op. Ch. & O, Gergiev – (Prod: Wilson, V/D: Hulscher) (Bonuses: Gergiev: 'Introducing Ruslan' and 'Catching up with Music' – biographical tour)

🔑  Ph. DVD 075 099-9 (6). As above – BORODIN: Prince Igor; MUSSORGSKY: Boris Godunov

Gergiev in his Kirov recording, done live on stage, launches into this classic Russian opera with a hair-raisingly fast and brilliant account of the overture, and then characteristically brings out the subtlety of much of the writing, as well as the colour. The voices come over well, with Vladimir Ognovienko characterful as Ruslan, bringing out word-meaning, most impressively in his big Act II aria. Anna Netrebko is fresh and bright as Ludmilla, as well as agile, not as shrill as many Russian sopranos, but it is Galina Gorchakova as Gorislava who takes first honours; she is rich and firm, as is Larissa Diadkova in the travesti role of Ratmir, especially impressive in the delightful duet with Finn (Konstantin Pluzhnikov). In addition there are two bonuses, the first an introduction to the opera of some 18 minutes and a 50-minute feature about Gergiev. The staging is colourful, if at times a bit static, and the whole production will give much pleasure.

GLUCK, Christoph (1714–87)

Don Juan (ballet; complete)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2440. ASMF, Marriner – HANDEL: Ariodante; Il Pastor Fido (suites) ***

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89233-2. E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Gluck's Don Juan is a wonderful score, revolutionary in its day, and it comes across to modern ears as a tuneful work full of striking ideas, with plenty of charm and drama. This classic 1967 recording has great lightness of touch, beautiful playing and vintage Decca sound. If Gardiner's (Erato) version brought out more of the work's drama, there is nothing in the least bland about Marriner's direction and, with its very enjoyable coupling, this makes a welcome return to circulation.

Originally part of the Collection, the alternative Gardiner version has much to recommend it at Apex price. The 1981 recording is full and modern. The performance too has a clean and dramatic profile.

OPERA

Alceste (DVD version)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101 251. Naglestad, Kaasch, Rydh, Ch. & O of Stuttgart Opera, Carydis (Dirs: Jossi Wieler, Sergio Morabito, V/D: Nele Munchmeyer)

The Arthaus DVD of Gluck's Alceste in the 1776 Paris version offers a performance in modern dress, mainly impressive for the fine singing of Catherina Naglestad in the title-role and the strong support given by the chorus, a key player in this reform opera. Naglestad rises splendidly to the challenge of the big numbers, not least Divinités du Styx. The conductor Constantinos Carydis draws playing from the orchestra that has clearly been influenced by period practice and though the stylized movements of the chorus in a modern setting are not always effective the result is strong and convincing, with the incidental roles also well sung.

Alceste (Vienna version 1767; complete; CD version)

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.660066/68 (3). Ringholz, Lavender, Degerfeldt, Treichl, Martinsson, Drottningholm Theatre Ch. & O, Östman

This is the first recording of the Vienna version of Alceste, rather simpler and more direct in manner than the far-better-known French version of 1776. Here, Alceste's powerful aria Divinités du Styx becomes Ombre, larve, less imposing, and the intimate scale of the Drottningholm presentation reflects that, with a cast of young singers remarkable for their freshness rather than for their power. At the Naxos price one can hardly complain that the opera is laid out rather extravagantly on three discs, when in any case that brings the advantage of one disc per Act. Well-balanced sound, with voices well to the fore. Full libretto, synopsis and translation are provided.

Armide (complete)

🔑  DG 459 616-2. Delunsch, Workman, Podles, Naouri, Ch. & Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

Using a libretto set by Lully almost a century earlier, Gluck develops a compellingly flexible structure, with arias, duets and recitatives merging in quick succession. Minkowski's treatment could not be more dramatic, persuasively leading one on at speeds on the brisk side. The cast is strong, powerfully led by Mireille Delunsch in the title-role, singing with rich, firm tone, and with Charles Workman fresh and clean-cut as the tenor hero, Renaud. In the brief but important role of La Haine, Ewa Podles sings with commanding intensity, and the minor roles are also well taken. The live recording gives weight and bite to the substantial instrumental band.

Iphigénie en Aulide (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Erato 2292 45003-2 (2). Van Dam, Von Otter, Dawson, Aler, Monteverdi Ch., Lyon Op. O, Gardiner

Gardiner here reconstructs the score as presented in the first revival of 1775; the recording conveys the tensions of a live performance without the distractions of intrusive stage noise. The darkness of the piece is established at the very start, with men's voices eliminated, and a moving portrait built up of Agamemnon, here sung superbly by José van Dam. In the title-role Lynne Dawson builds up a touching portrait of the heroine. Her sweet, pure singing is well contrasted with the positive strength of Anne Sofie von Otter as Clytemnestra, and John Aler brings clear, heroic attack to the tenor role of Achilles. The performance is crowned by the superb ensemble-singing of the Monteverdi Choir in the many choruses. A highlights disc is also available on Apex (2564 61507-2).

Iphigénie en Tauride (complete; CD versions)

 DG 471 133-2 (2). Delunsch, Keenlyside, Beuron, Naouri, Louvre Ch. & O, Minkowski

 Telarc CD 80546 (2). Goerke, Gilfry, Cole, Salters, Baker, West, Boston Baroque, Pearlman

Marc Minkowski launches into his characterful, highly distinctive reading in a performance of the overture with characteristically extreme speeds in both directions. It sounds idiomatic, thanks to having a cast almost entirely made up of French speakers, who enunciate their words clearly to heighten the meaning. That is especially true of Mireille Delunsch in the title-role, golden-toned and deeply affecting in her great aria, O malheureuse Iphigénie! Simon Keenlyside as Oreste is hardly less idiomatic and characterful, with his sharply focused baritone. Yann Beuron as Pylade and Laurent Naouri as Thoas complete an outstanding team. Balance of merits between Minkowski and Pearlman could not be closer.

With an excellent cast, led by Christine Goerke radiantly pure-toned in the title-role, Martin Pearlman directs his Boston forces in a fresh, direct reading of the last of Gluck's 'reform' operas, which unaffectedly brings out the dramatic bite as well as the beauty. Pearlman's choice of speeds is never extreme, always natural, and, besides Goerke, Rodney Gilfry as Oreste and Vinson Cole as Pylade with clean, heady tenor tone are both excellent. An excellent, safe choice for anyone wanting this masterpiece in a period performance.

Orfeo ed Euridice (DVD versions)

(*) Warner DVD 5050467-3921-2-0. Baker, Speiser, Gale, Glyndebourne Festival Ch., LPO, Leppard (V/D: Rodney Greenberg)

Peter Hall's classic Glyndebourne production of Orfeo, here recorded in 1982, is valuable above all for marking one of Dame Janet Baker's last operatic appearances. It is good to be reminded how powerful the result is when her passionately intense singing is matched by her equally involved and compelling acting. To see her cradling the dead Euridice in her arms as she sings Che farò is deeply moving. Raymond Leppard draws biting attack and warm expressiveness from the LPO, though the impact of the musical clarity is slightly muted by the rather soft focus of the camerawork. Leppard has opted for a version of the score broadly based on the composite Berlioz edition, but using the Italian rather than the French text, including at the end Gluck's sequence of ballet numbers as a grand finale, here imaginatively staged. John Bury's sets are stylized and evocative. As Euridice, Elisabeth Speiser sings powerfully but has an edge on her voice, less noticeable on video than on the Erato CD. As Amor, Elizabeth Gale sings brightly, seemingly unhampered by being suspended at a height, pantomime-wise, throughout the opera. The Glyndebourne Chorus sings with superb attack.

Orfeo ed Euridice (complete; CD versions)

Ⓜ  EMI 2165779 (2). Hendricks, Von Otter, Fournier, Monteverdi Ch., Lyon Op. O, Gardiner

Ⓜ  Erato 2292 45864-2 (2). J. Baker, Speiser, Gale, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Leppard

 Teldec 4509 98418-2 (2). Larmore, Upshaw, Hagley, San Francisco Op. Ch. & O, Runnicles

EMI have reissued Gardiner's earlier recording of the Berlioz edition of Gluck's opera, sung in French. It is now at mid-price and many will be glad to have this set, which aimed at combining the best of both the Vienna and Paris versions, although he omits the celebratory ballet at the end of the opera. Anne Sofie von Otter is a superb Orphée; and both Barbara Hendricks as Euridice and Brigitte Fournier as Amour are also excellent. The chorus is Gardiner's own Monteverdi Choir, superbly clean and stylish, and the recording is full and well balanced.

Leppard presents the score with freshness and power, indeed with toughness. Nowhere is that clearer than in the great scene leading up to the aria, Che farò, where Baker commandingly conveys the genuine bitterness and anger of Orpheus at Eurydice's death. Elisabeth Speiser as Eurydice and Elizabeth Gale as Amor are both disappointing but, as in the theatre, the result is a complete and moving experience centring round a great performance from Dame Janet. The complete ballet-postlude is included, delightful celebration music. The recording has been enhanced in the CD transfer, bright and vivid without edginess, and there is an excellent (74-minute) budget CD of highlights, including the Ballet Music, on Apex (2564 61497-2).

Donald Runnicles also conducts a performance based on the 1869 Berlioz edition, generally adopting speeds a degree broader than those preferred by Gardiner in his EMI set, and with a smoother style. Jennifer Larmore makes a strong and positive Orphée, brilliant in the aria which in this edition ends Act I, rich and warm in rather broad treatment of the big aria, J'ai perdu mon Eurydice. Next to Von Otter for Gardiner she sounds very feminine, and not quite as flexible. Dawn Upshaw is a charming Eurydice, and Alison Hagley a sweet-toned Amour, though she is balanced very backwardly, as is the chorus at times in what is otherwise a good recording. Unlike Gardiner, but like Leppard on Erato, Runnicles includes ballet music at the end.

Using the original Italian text of the first Vienna version of 1762, Östman's Naxos version offers a refreshingly robust account using period forces, recorded live in the beautiful Drottningholm Theatre near Stockholm. Without any of the extra items that Gluck composed for Paris, the result fits neatly on a single CD, which, unlike many bargain opera issues, includes a complete libretto and translation. The performance has its uneven moments, but all three soloists have fresh, clear voices, with the warm mezzo, Ann-Christine Biel, sustaining the title-role well, even if she is not specially characterful. Clear, undistracting sound. Not a first choice, but well worth having. (Naxos 8.660064)

Orphée et Eurydice (1774, Paris version)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.660185/86 (2). Fouchécourt, Dubose, Le Blanc, Lafayette Ch. & O, Brown

Ryan Brown's set, recorded at the University of Maryland in 2002, uses the 1774 Paris version of the score, with a tenor in the title-role. Lightness is the keynote of the whole performance, with rhythms crisp, textures sparklingly clear, and speeds which never fall into heaviness or sentimentality, flowing easily. Not only that, Brown has the great advantage of having in the title-role one of the finest tenors in the French 18th-century tradition, Jean-Paul Fouchécourt. Having too few tracks is one of the very few flaws in an outstandingly stylish set, with Catherine Dubosc as Eurydice and Suzie Le Blanc as Amour, both sweet-toned but nicely contrasted, as with Fouchécourt benefiting from being native French-speakers. Though the 1774 text is complete, Brown omits the ballet music at the end, pointing out in his excellent note that Gluck drew it largely from other sources after the initial performances. Clear, fresh sound.

Paride ed Elena (complete)

🔑  DG 477 5415 (2). Kožená, Gritton, Sampson, Webster, Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

First heard in 1770, Paride ed Elena remains a masterpiece, as Paul McCreesh amply demonstrates in his starrily cast version with the Gabrieli Consort and Players. In the castrato role of Paris, Magdalena Kožená sings ravishingly, not least in the glorious finale of Act II, with comments not just from Helen (the excellent, characterful Susan Gritton) but from Cupid, here called Amore. Carolyn Sampson sings that role very sweetly, and Gillian Webster is well cast too as Pallas Athene, the goddess predicting doom at the end. This ideal set includes two versions of the final scene, the revised and shortened version as well as the published one. Beautifully balanced sound.

Arias from: Iphigénie en Tauride; Orphée et Eurydice; Paride ed Elena

 Erato 8573 85768-2. Graham, OAE, Bicket – MOZART: Arias ***

Masterly as is Susan Graham's singing of Mozart, in a wide range of arias, her Gluck performances are if anything even more revelatory, making one of the outstanding recital discs of recent years. These are all characters that she has portrayed on stage, and the characterization and ease with French words could not be more compelling, particularly in the three contrasted Iphigénie arias. The voice is creamily beautiful, and though the best known of these items, Orpheus's J'ai perdu mon Eurydice, is on the slow side, Graham sustains her line flawlessly. Polished playing and well-balanced sound.

Arias: Orfeo ed Euridice: Che farò; Che puro ciel. Telemaco: Se per entro

 Virgin 5 45365-2. Daniels, OAE, Bicket – MOZART; HANDEL: Arias ***

Even in a generation that has produced an extraordinary crop of fine counter-tenors, the American David Daniels stands out for the clear beauty and imagination of his singing. The best-known items here – the two principal solos from Gluck's Orfeo – are done with a tender expressiveness that matches any performance by a mezzo, with Daniels's natural timbre, at once pure and warm, completely avoiding counter-tenor hoot. Not only that, his placing of the voice is flawless, with the florid singing equally impressive in its brilliance and precision.

GODARD, Benjamin (1849–95)

(i) Concerto romantique for Violin & Orchestra, Op. 35; Violin Concerto 2, Op. 131; Scènes poétiques for Orchestra, Op. 46

(BB)  Naxos 8.570554. Slovak State PO, Trevor, (i) with Hanslip

The Violin Concerto No. 2 begins in a dramatic manner, though richly romantic melodies quickly take over. A brooding slow movement follows, followed by an exceptionally gay and vivacious finale – where the sprit of Offenbach enters. The much earlier Concerto Romantique has a lively, rustic quality which is very appealing, while the two slower central movements have much sentimental charm. The finale begins dramatically with the orchestra, but the violin enters, contrastingly, and the work ends brilliantly with a riot of double-stops and the like from the soloist. The Scènes poétiques are four bucolic movements depicting outdoor scenes. They are delightfully picturesque, in the manner of Massenet's Scènes for orchestra. Whilst none of the music on this CD is especially deep, or even great music, it is all thoroughly entertaining and tuneful, made all the more enjoyable when so persuasively presented. Well worth the asking price.

GOEDICKE, Alexander (1877–1957)

Concertstück in D (for piano and orchestra), Op. 11

(*) Hyp. CDA 66877. Coombs, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – GLAZUNOV: Piano Concertos 1 & 2 **(*)

Alexander Goedicke's Concertstück is far from negligible, both in its melodic invention and in its musical structure. Stephen Coombs is a brilliant and sympathetic interpreter of this music and the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra under Martyn Brabbins give every support. The recording is too reverberant – and this perhaps inhibits a full three-star recommendation.

GOEHR, Alexander (born 1932)

(i) Little Symphony; (ii) PianoTrio; (iii) String Quartet 2

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 264. (i) LSO, Mar; (ii) Orion Trio; (iii) Allegri Qt

The Piano Trio and String Quartet – two powerful and individual works - were originally released on Argo in 1973, and the quality of the performances readily communicates their distinction to any open-minded listener. The Quartet, written for Lord Dyvenor in 1967, is the tougher and more challenging work, but the serene finale has obvious links with late Beethoven. The Trio, written for the Menuhins at Bath in 1966, is rather less introspective, with dance rhythms and bell effects prominent. The Little Symphony (originally released on Philips in 1965) is 'little' only in the forces required. Each strand tends to be thought of as a solo, and the result is a virtuoso piece for any orchestra, lasting well over half an hour. In keeping with so many composers at that time who relied on twelve-note techniques, Goehr seems to be reluctant to let his powers of invention have full freedom. Norman Del Mar conducted the first performance at the York Festival, and the LSO responds here magnificently. The transferred sound is very good indeed, though the 1973 recordings are even finer.

GOLDMARK, Karl (1830–1915)

Violin Concerto in A min., Op. 28

🔑 ❀  Delos DE 3156. Hu, Seattle SO, Schwarz – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 2 ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.553579. Tsu, Razumovsky Sinfonia, Yu Long – KORNGOLD: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓜ  EMI 5 09676-2. Perlman, Pittsburgh SO, Previn – KORNGOLD: Violin Concerto; SINDING: Suite in A min. ***

The Taiwanese soloist Nai-Yuan Hu (pronounced Nigh-Yen Who) makes an outstanding début on CD with a coupling of two underrated concertos which on his responsively lyrical bow are made to sound like undiscovered masterpieces. The Goldmark is a tuneful and warm-hearted concerto that needs just this kind of songful, inspirational approach: Hu shapes the melodies so that they ravishingly take wing and soar. Moreover, Schwarz and the Seattle Orchestra share a real partnership with their soloist and provide a full, detailed backcloth in a natural concert-hall framework.

Vera Tsu is another outstanding soloist. Her tone is rich, bringing out to the full the ripe romanticism of the Goldmark Concerto. Her attack is fearless in the many bravura passages, so that the dance rhythms of the dance-finale have a rare sparkle, and her hushed playing in the central slow movement at a very broad speed movingly demonstrates her inner concentration, helped by the equally beautiful, finely varied playing of the Razumovsky Sinfonia of Bratislava. Rich, full, open sound.

Goldmark's attractive concerto is also beautifully played by Itzhak Perlman, whose effortless virtuosity and lyrical pulse challenge all-comers. He is balanced very much in the foreground, but the sound-quality is fresh and Previn accompanies sympathetically. This is very charming and likeable music and Perlman plays it most winningly. Moreover, with his new coupling he includes the attractive Sinding Suite.

Rustic Wedding Symphony, Op. 26

Ⓑ (*) Decca Eloquence 476 8743. LAPO, López-Cobos – GRIEG: Symphony ***

Rustic Wedding Symphony, Op. 26; Overtures: In Italy, Op. 49; In the Spring, Op. 36

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550745. Nat. SO of Ireland, Gunzenhauser

Rustic Wedding Symphony, Op. 26; Sakuntala Overture, Op. 13

 ASV CDDCA 791. RPO, Butt

Yondani Butt and the RPO clearly enjoy themselves. The recording has brightly lit violins, but plenty of bloom on the woodwind, and the only miscalculation of balance concerns the trombone entry in the first movement, which is too blatant and too loud. Otherwise this is in every way enjoyable. The Overture Sakuntala opens impressively but does not quite sustain its 18 minutes. Butt presents it with persuasive vigour and lyrical feeling, and does not shirk the melodrama.

López-Cobos directs a refreshing and attractively spirited reading. As with Gunzenhauser, below, his generally fast tempi detract somewhat from the charm of the piece, but the wide-ranging sound, which presents the Los Angeles orchestra untypically at a distance, means that this is a more than acceptable bargain coupling for the rare Grieg Symphony.

Gunzenhauser gives a fresh, bright-eyed account. He takes both the opening movement and the Andante (In the Garden) appreciably faster than does Butt, and he loses something in poise and spacious eloquence in consequence. But the overall performance is spontaneous and enjoyable. It is well recorded and, although the violins sound thin, that is almost certainly not the fault of the engineers. Of the two jaunty overtures, In Italy is especially vivacious and sparkling.

Symphony 2 in E, Op. 35; In Italy Overture, Op. 49; Prometheus Bound, Op. 38

 ASV CDDCA 934. Philh. O, Butt

Goldmark's Second Symphony is a highly confident piece with a strong opening movement, an ambivalent but appealing Andante, a vivaciously delicate Scherzo which is Mendelssohn undiluted, and a characteristically folksy, dance-like finale. Yondani Butt has the work's full measure. The Lisztian Prometheus Bound on the other hand is overlong and melodramatic, and the main Allegro is routine in its working out. Yet it has some winning lyrical ideas and Butt does his very best for it. The Italian Overture is genuinely vivacious, though not especially Italianate: it has a rather beautiful nocturnal sequence as a central episode. The ASV recording is in every way excellent.

String Quartet in B flat, Op. 8; (i) String Quintet in A min., Op. 9

(*) ASV CDDCA 1071. Fourth Dimension String Qt, (i) with Smith

Goldmark's String Quartet in B flat is a fluent, beautifully fashioned piece, very much in the Schumann and Mendelssohn tradition, though one is in no doubt that the musical argument is guided by a sense of purpose. The String Quintet is an even stronger piece, sure in its feeling for musical movement and with some good ideas. The Fourth Dimension String Quartet makes its début, with David Smith as the second cello in the Quintet. Decent performances, though the tonal blend leaves something to be desired, and one would welcome greater richness of timbre.

GOODALL, Howard (born 1958)

Missa Aedis Christi; Ecce Homo; In Memoriam Anne Frank; Marlborough Canticles; Psalm 23; They were not here

Ⓝ  Universal 476 3331. Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Oxford, Darlington; String Quartet, David Goode (organ)

Requiem (Eternal Light); Love Divine; Psalm 23; Spared

Ⓝ (*) EMI 215047-2. Marsh, Boe Maltman, Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Oxford, Darlington

Howard Goodall really came to the fore when his catchy setting of Psalm 23 was used for the remarkably successful 'Vicar of Dibley' TV series. He has also contributed Ecce Homo to 'Mr Bean'. He writes in an easy, flowing, melodic style, which many enjoy and others find a trifle bland. Yet his In Memoriam Anne Frank has a plangent climax and They were not here is a rather striking setting of a poem by David Geraint Jones commemorating VE Day in Europe. The Missa Aedis Christi has many telling moments too, not least the echo effects in the Sanctus, while the closing Nunc Dimittis from the Marlborough Canticles is richly expansive. The Christ Church performances are committed and eloquent, and very well recorded, so if you are intrigued to find more music like the Vicar of Dibley theme, this CD will meet that need admirably.

The Requiem (Eternal Light) is even more eclectic, unashamedly drawing on a variety of popular styles, the opening Kyrie and the Agnus Dei (which could easily become another Goodall hit) both contemporary-romantic in different ways, while the second section (Revelation – Factum est silentium) even has a flavour of Carl Orff. The hymn Lead kindly light is attractively upbeat, and the closing In Paradisum is unexpectedly full-throated and passionate, and brings another striking melody. There is no doubt that, whatever one's preconceptions, all this music communicates, and Goodall's ready tunefulness underpins his great skill in vocal writing, while there are many imaginative touches in the simple accompaniments. The Requiem is followed by Love Divine, a luscious hymn setting, and the 23rd Psalm returns (in the performance used on TV) before the final haunting Spared, a poignant setting of a poem by Wendy Cope, recalling the experience of the telephone farewell by a separated couple in New York on 9/11. Throughout these fine Oxford performances, the sincerity of Howard Goodall's writing shines through. It may at times be simplistic but is far preferable to atonal, barbed-wire music. The recording is excellent.

GÓRECKI, Henryk

(born 1933)

(i) Harpsichord Concerto; (ii) Little Requiem for a Polka (Kleines Requiem für eine Polka); (iii) Good Night (In Memoriam Michael Vyner) for soprano, alto flute, 3 tam-tams and piano

 None. 7559 79362-2. L. Sinf.; (i) Zinman; (ii) Chojnacka, cond. Stenz; (iii) Upshaw, Bell, Constable, Hockings

The Little Requiem (1993) opens with a single quiet bell-stroke; a piano (John Constable) then engages in a tranquil dialogue with the violins, to be rudely interrupted by a burst of bell-ringing; the energetic, marcato Allegro impetuoso follows. The piece ends with a raptly sustained elegiac Adagio, still dominated by the quietly assertive tolling bells. The two-movement Harpsichord Concerto, written a decade earlier, combines soloist and strings in a vibrant, jangly ménage. Good Night is nocturnally serene. The soprano voice enters only in the third movement, with a cantilena to Shakespeare's words from Hamlet: 'Good night ... and flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!' Both here and in the Little Requiem the very atmospheric recording brings an added dimension to the communication from performers who are obviously totally committed to the composer's cause.

Symphony 3 (Symphony of Sorrowful Songs), Op. 36

 None. 7559 79282-2. Upshaw, L. Sinf., Zinman

 Australian ABC Classics 472 040-2. Kenny, Adelaide SO, Yuasa

Symphony 3 (Symphony of Sorrowful Songs), Op. 36; 3 Pieces in the Olden Style

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550822. Kilanowicz, Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

Scored for strings and piano with soprano solo in each of the three movements, all predominantly slow, Górecki's Symphony 3 sets three laments taking the theme of motherhood. The London Sinfonietta's fine performance, beautifully recorded, is crowned by the radiant singing of Dawn Upshaw.

Zofia Kilanowicz on Naxos has also obviously become immersed in the word-settings. In the work's closing section, with its hint of a gentle but remorseless tolling bell, Wit achieves a mood of simple serenity, even forgiveness. The Three Pieces in Olden Style make a fine postlude, the second with its dance figurations, the third with its fierce tremolando violins, like shafts of bright light, suddenly resolving to a very positive ending. All in all, this seems in many ways a 'best buy'.

Despite its several predecessors, this Australian recording of Górecki's Third Symphony finds new things to say. Yvonne Kenny treats the work almost like an opera, comprising three very distinct dramatic soliloquies and she is well supported by the Adelaide Symphony Orchestra. However, there is no coupling, whereas the fine Naxos version includes also the Three Pieces in the Olden Style.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Good Night (Requiem for soprano, alto flute, 3 tam-tams and piano), Op. 63; (ii) Little Requiem for a Polka (for piano & 13 instruments), Op. 64; 3 Pieces in Old Style for Strings

 Telarc CD 80417. I Flamminghi, Werther; with (i) Szmytra, Edmund-Davis, Righarts; (ii) Gleizes

Górecki's Requiem was written for and dedicated to Michael Vyner. He died in 1989, and Górecki immediately set about writing this simple valedictory piece for solo soprano, darkly resonant alto flute and, in the epilogue, three tam-tams (gongs of indefinite pitch), played very gently indeed. The quotation in the title is from Shakespeare's Hamlet – 'Good night ... flights of angels sing thee to thy rest' – and the work's prevailing elegiac quietness has much in common with the Little Requiem, written three years later. The Three Pieces in Old Style make a perfect foil and are beautifully played by this excellent group under Roldof Werther. Needless to say, the Telarc recording is in the demonstration bracket.

(i) Miserere, Op. 44; Amen, Op. 35; Euntes ibant et flebant, Op. 32; (ii) Wuslo moja (My Vistula, Grey Vistula), Op. 46; Szeroka woda (Broad Waters): Choral Suite of Folksongs, Op. 39 (Oh, our River Narew; Oh, when in Powistle; Oh, Johnny, Johnny; She picked wild roses; Broad waters)

 None. 7559 79348-2. (i) Chicago Symphony Ch. & Lyric Op. Ch., Nelson; (ii) Lyra Chamber Ch., Ding

Górecki's powerful Miserere was prompted by the political upheaval in Poland in 1981. The combined Chicago choirs maintain the sombrely atmospheric opening pianissimo with impressive concentration, and the dynamic climax of the piece, when they sing in 10 parts, is very compelling. The following Euntes ibant et flebant (for unaccompanied chorus) is simpler, more serene. The five folksong settings are also essentially expressive (even Oh, Johnny, Johnny is marked Molto lento – dolce cantabile) and all are harmonically rich. They are beautifully sung by the smaller group. The recording, made in the Church of St Mary of the Angels in Chicago, is admirable.

GOTTSCHALK, Louis

(1829–69)

(i) La Casa del Joven Enrique por Méhul – Gran overture; (ii) Célèbre tarentelle pour piano & orchestre; Symphonies 1 (Romantique); 2 (A Montevideo); (ii) Variations de concert sur l'hymne portugais du Roi Louis; (iii) Ave Maria; (iv) Escenas Campestres Cubanas – Opéra en 1 acte

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.559320. Hot Springs Festival O, Rosenberg, with (i) John & Richard Contiguglia, Draghícescu, Lin, Pepper; (ii) Gurt; (iii) Barrick; (iv) Noggle, Taylor, Ziebarth

A very appealing disc of Gottschalk's attractive orchestral music, much of it available (in these versions) for the first time. As the sleeve-note writer says, in his Escenas Campestres

Cubanas (Cuban Country Scenes), Gottschalk 'combines high art, populist sensibilities and mass appeal'. The music is tuneful and catchy, even if the singing is rather wild. Melissa Barrick sounds like a boy treble in the Ave Maria.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete solo piano music: 'An American Composer, bon Dieu!'

Vol. 1 * Hyp. CDA 66459.; Vol. 2 Hyp. CDA 66697.; Vol. 3 Hyp. CDA 66915.; Vol. 4 Hyp. CDA 67118.; Vol. 5 Hyp. CDA 67248.; Vol. 6 Hyp. CDA 67349.; Vol. 7 Hyp. CDA 67478.; Vol. 8 Hyp. CDA 67536. Philip Martin

Gottschalk invented the conception of the composer/recitalist in America, just as Liszt had in Europe. As a touring virtuoso he had great audience appeal, and if his music is lightweight it is well crafted and tuneful, paying homage to both Liszt and Chopin. Its exotic folk-influences are drawn colloquially and naturally from the Deep South, with syncopated rhythms the strongest feature.

Philip Martin's complete survey on Hyperion is in every way distinguished. He is naturally sympathetic to the transatlantic idioms, yet he treats the music as part of the romantic mainstream, bringing out its various derivations. He plays with elegance, brilliance, style and, above all, spontaneity. He is very well recorded in an ideal acoustic.

Bamboula; Le Banjo; Le Bananier; The Dying Poet; L'Etincelle; La Gallina; La jota aragonesa; Manchega; Pasquinade; La Savane; Souvenirs d'Andalousie; Souvenir de Porto Rico, Marche des Gibarois; Suis-moi!; Tremolo; Tournament Galop; The Union: Paraphrase de Concert on the national airs, Star-Spangled Banner, Yankee Doodle and Hail Columbia

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559145. Licad

If you want a single representative disc of Gottshalk's music, this is it. Cecile Licad is right inside this repertoire. She obviously enjoys every bar and conveys her enthusiam to us, playing with character, polish and rhythmic gusto. Le Banjo, which opens the programme, has great zest, Bamboula (the 'Danse de nègres') thumps vigorously, and the Tournament Galop chases along with infectuous bravura. Yet Le Bananier has an almost sinuous charm and La Savane is played with winning delicacy. Even The Dying Poet is made to sound delicate rather than too overtly sentimental, partly because here, as elsewhere, Licad's rubato is naturally spontaneous. The programme closes with the spectacular Union Paraphase, presented with genuine bravdo. Very well recorded, this disc is irresistible.

GOUGH, John (1903–51)

Serenade for Small Orchestra

 Chan. 9757. BBC PO, Handley – BAINTON: Symphony 2 in D min.; CLIFFORD: Symphony ***

The short but charming Serenade for Small Orchestra reveals a genuine creative talent and was written in 1931 for Hubert Clifford's wedding. Exemplary playing and first-rate recorded sound.

GOULD, Morton (1913–96)

Fall River Legend (ballet; complete)

🔑  Albany TROY 035. Peters, Nat. PO, Rosenstock (with recorded conversation between Agnes de Mille and Morton Gould)

This complete recording of Fall River Legend opens dramatically with the Speaker for the Jury reading out the Indictment at the trial, and then the ballet tells the story of Lizzie Borden in flashback. Gould's music has a good deal in common with the folksy writing in Copland's Appalachian Spring, and it is given a splendidly atmospheric performance and recording by the New York orchestra under Rosenstock. There is also a 26-minute discussion on the creation of the ballet between Agnes de Mille and the composer.

2 Marches for Orchestra

Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0526. NBC SO, Stokowski – DEBUSSY: Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune, etc. ((*)); HOLST: Planets ()

These two stirring wartime marches were 'written in tribute to two of our gallant allies': the first is Chinese in character (complete with marching effects), the second colourfully employs two Red Army songs. An enjoyable end to a fascinating Stokowski disc; and the sound, emanating from an NBC broadcast from March 1943, is fully acceptable.

Symphony 3

(*) Albany SACD TROY 515. Albany SO, Miller – HARRIS: Symphony 2 **(*)

Morton Gould proves to be a symphonist of quality, though his musical personality is too indebted to Stravinsky, Copland, Roy Harris and William Schuman for a distinctive and individual voice to be discerned. But there is an engaging vigour and a keen feeling for the cut-and-thrust of the musical argument. Decent, well-characterized playing, though the strings could perhaps have greater richness of sonority.

GOUNOD, Charles (1818–93)

Faust: Ballet music

Ⓑ  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2724. ROHCG O, Solti – OFFENBACH: Gaîté Parisienne  ; RESPIGHI: Rossiniana **(*)

Solti's 1959 account of the Faust ballet music is undoubtedly one of the liveliest (and most vividly recorded) versions committed to disc. While Beecham et al. have offered more elegance in this repertoire, no one beats Solti for sheer energy; he has a style all his own, and the final Entrée de Phryné almost goes off the rails with its hard-driven but exciting brilliance.

Symphonies 1 in D; 2 in E flat

🔑  ASV CDDCA 981. O of St John's, Smith Square, Lubbock

The beautifully sprung and subtly phrased performances from John Lubbock and the Orchestra of St John's bring out the charm of these delightful symphonies. Lubbock's care for detail and the refreshingly polished playing is matched by a pervading warmth. We hope ASV will decide to reissue the Gounod pairing on their bargain label, when it would again be fully competitive.

Petite symphonie in B flat (for 9 wind instruments)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. (ADD) 6543. Athena Ens. – IBERT: 3 Pièces brèves; POULENC: Sextet ***

An astonishingly fresh and youthful work, the Petite symphonie in fact has impeccable craftsmanship and is witty and civilized. It makes ideal listening at the end of the day, and its charm is irresistible in a performance as full of joie de vivre as that provided by the Athena group, who are particularly light-hearted in the finale.

Mélodies and songs

 Hyp. CDA 66801/2. Lott, Murray, Rolfe Johnson, Johnson

Graham Johnson here devises an enchanting programme of 41 songs, presenting the full span of Gounod's achievement not just in French mélodie (on the first of the two discs) but also in songs Gounod wrote during his extended stay in England. The soloists here are at their very finest. So on the first disc, after charming performances of the opening items from Felicity Lott, Ann Murray enters magically, totally transforming the hackneyed lines of Ave Maria, before tackling the most joyous of Gounod songs, the barcarolle-like Sérénade. Anthony Rolfe Johnson is comparably perceptive in Biondina, bringing out the Neapolitan-song overtones, as well as in six of the English settings. As in the Schubert series, Johnson's notes are a model of scholarship, both informed and fascinating.

Messe Chorale

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89235-2. Lausanne Vocal Ens., Corboz; Alain (organ) – SAINT-SAËNS: Mass **(*)

Gounod's Messe Chorale, an early work, could not be more different from his Messe solennelle de Sainte-Cécile. Drawing on the 18th-century tradition of French organ Mass, it intersperses choral sections with organ interludes, all based on the chosen Gregorian theme which acts as a leitmotif, reaching an expressive peak in the Hosanna in excelsis of the Sanctus. Gounod's setting has an endearing simplicity, and it is beautifully sung and recorded here under Michel Corboz, with Marie-Claire Alain making a splendid foil for the choir on the magnificent organ of Lausanne Cathedral.

Messe solennelle de Sainte-Cécile

 EMI 7 47094-2. Hendricks, Dale, Lafont, Ch. and Nouvel O Philharmonique of R. France, Prêtre

Ⓜ  DG 477 7114. Seefried, Soltze, Uhde, Czech Ch. & PO, Markevitch

Gounod's Messe solennelle, with its blatant march setting of the Credo and sugar-sweet choral writing, may not be for sensitive souls, but Prêtre here directs an almost ideal performance, vividly recorded, with glowing singing from the choir as well as the three soloists. However this is still at premium price.

Reissued in DG's Originals series, Markevitch's vintage version, recorded in the mid-1960s, still sounds remarkably well. In his straight-faced way Markevitch makes the incongruity of Gounod's jolly and vulgar tunes all the more delectable; soloists, chorus and orchestra are all first rate. A good alternative to Prêtre's more modern EMI account.

Faust (complete)

🔑 ✿  Teldec 4509 90872-2 (3). Hadley, Gasdia, Ramey, Mentzer, Agache, Fassbaender, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Rizzi

 EMI 5 56224-2 (3). Leech, Studer, Van Dam, Hampson, Ch. & O of Capitole de Toulouse, Plasson

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 67967-2 (3) [5 67975-2]. De los Angeles, Gedda, Blanc, Christoff, Paris Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Cluytens

Ⓜ (*) Ph. 475 7769 (3). Te Kanawa, Araiza, Nesterenko, Schmidt, Coburn, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, C. Davis

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111083/85 (3). Bjoerling, Kirsten, Siepi, Met. Op. Ch. and O, Cleva (Appendix: Bjoerling: SCHUBERT: Ständchen; SIBELIUS: Var det en dröm?; Svarta rosor; Säv, saäv, susa; HERBERT: Princess Pat: Neapolitan Love Song. Excerpts from: PUCCINI: La Bohème (with Anna-Lisa Bjoerling); GOUNOD: Roméo et Juliette; DONIZETTI: L'elisir d'amore; MASCAGNI: Cavalleria rusticana; WAGNER: Lohengrin)

Rizzi, with an outstanding cast and vividly clear recording, makes the whole score seem totally fresh and new. Jerry Hadley as Faust has lyrical freshness rather than heroic power, brought out in his headily beautiful performance of Salut! demeure and, like Rizzi's conducting, his singing has more light and shade in it than that of rivals. The tenderness as well as the bright agility of Cecilia Gasdia's singing as Marguerite brings comparable variety of expression, with the Roi de Thulé song deliberately drained of colour to contrast with the brilliance of the Jewel Song which follows. Her performance culminates in an angelic contribution to the final duet, with Rizzi's slow speed encouraging refinement, leading up to a shattering moment of judgement and a fine apotheosis. Alexander Agache as Valentin may be less characterful than Hampson on the EMI Toulouse set, but his voice is caught more richly; but it is the commandingly demonic performance of Samuel Ramey as Mephistopheles that sets the seal on the whole set, far more sinister than José van Dam on EMI. Like that EMI set, the Teldec offers a valuable appendix, not just the full ballet music but numbers cut from the definitive score – a drinking song for Faust and a charming aria for Siebel. EMI's supplementary items, four, all different, are more generous but musically less interesting.

On EMI, Plasson comes near to providing another recommendable Faust, even if José van Dam's gloriously dark, finely focused bass-baritone does not have the heft of a full-blooded bass voice such as is associated with the role of Mephistopheles. Cheryl Studer conveys the girlishness of Marguerite, using the widest range of dynamic and colour. If Richard Leech's voice might in principle seem too lightweight for the role of Faust, the lyrical flow and absence of strain make his singing consistently enjoyable. As Valentin, Thomas Hampson is strongly cast, with his firm, heroic baritone. The sound has a good sense of presence, set in a pleasantly reverberant acoustic which does not obscure necessary detail. In addition to supplementary numbers, the appendix offers the complete ballet music.

In the reissued Cluytens set, the seductiveness of Victoria de los Angeles's singing is a dream and it is a pity that the recording hardens the natural timbre slightly. Christoff is magnificently Mephistophelian. Gedda, though showing some signs of strain, sings intelligently, and among the other soloists Ernest Blanc has a pleasing, firm voice, which he uses to make Valentin into a sympathetic character. Cluytens's approach is competent but somewhat workaday. The set has been attractively repackaged and remastered to make a good mid-priced choice for this popular opera. There is a particularly generous set of highlights (75 minutes) on CfP 3 93376-2.

Davis's Faust may not always be idiomatic but, with fine singing from most of the principals, it is a refreshing version. Dame Kiri, more than you might expect, makes a light and innocent-sounding Marguerite, with the Jewel Song made to sparkle in youthful eagerness, leaping off from a perfect trill. Evgeni Nesterenko as Mephistopheles is a fine, saturnine tempter. Andreas Schmidt as Valentin sings cleanly and tastefully in a rather German way, while Pamela Coburn as Siebel is sweet and boyish. The big snag is the Faust of Francisco Araiza, a disappointing hero, with a voice, as recorded, gritty in tone and frequently strained. He underlines the simple melody of Salut, demeure, for example, far too heavily, not helped by a syrupy violin solo.

Taken from a Metropolitan Opera broadcast in 1950, the Naxos historical set offers a vividly dramatic performance under Fausto Cleva featuring three of the star singers of the time in a theatre sometimes dubbed the Faustspielhaus. Jussi Bjoerling as Faust is in ringing voice, full-bloodedly caught at full throttle, firm and clear. Cesare Siepi, a pillar of the Met., sings magnificently as Mephistopheles, happier in French than most Italian singers, while Dorothy Kirsten makes a clear, firm Marguerite, fresh and forthright rather than charming. The voices come over superbly, and one quickly adjusts to the limited orchestral sound. Exceptionally, the ballet music is included in Act IV, and as a supplement on the third disc there are arias and songs from Schubert and Wagner to Sibelius and Victor Herbert, recorded by Bjoerling in American and Swedish broadcasts.

Faust (complete; in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 3014 (3). Clarke, Plazas, Miles, Magee, Montague, Walker, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Philh. O, Parry

Faust, in a good English translation by Christopher Cowell, works brilliantly. The dramatic intensity is consistently heightened by David Parry's lively conducting, with the music paced to bring out the full impact of the big climaxes, and with freshness and sparkle given to such familiar numbers as the Soldiers' Chorus. The chorus is electrifying, and the cast of principals is first rate. Paul Charles Clarke sings strongly in the title-role (if not always sweetly), well experienced from appearing in the Welsh National Opera production. Alastair Miles, who also sang with WNO, is outstanding in every way as Mephistopheles, dark, firm and incisive, if not always sinister. Mary Plazas brings out the girlish innocence in Marguerite, sweet and pure, making light of the vocal challenges, above all giving joy to the Jewel Song. With singers as characterful as Diana Montague and Sarah Walker in smaller roles, this is one of the finest issues yet in the excellent 'Opera in English' series promoted by the Peter Moores Foundation. The third disc includes the complete ballet music as a supplement.

Roméo et Juliette (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 58624-2. Alagna, Gheorghiu, Vallejo, Van Dam, Keenlyside, Capitole de Toulouse Ch. & O, Plasson

With Gheorghiu and Alagna inspired as the lovers, the EMI Toulouse set offers the finest performance on disc yet, in almost every way. Gheorghiu does not just sing sweetly, without strain, the subtlety of her expression and her ability to rise to the demands of tragedy set her apart, and Alagna – who made such an impact in this role at Covent Garden early in his career – is youthfully ardent and unstrained. The rest of the cast is generally excellent too, with José van Dam as Frère Laurent and Simon Keenlyside as Mercutio both outstanding, though Marie-Ange Todorovitch, bright and agile as Stephano, is rather shrill. Given absolutely complete with the Act IV ballet music (not a dramatic gain) the set takes three discs instead of two, but is well worth it. Warm, atmospheric sound.

GRAINGER, Percy (1882–1961)

Blithe Bells; Colonial Song; English Dance; Duke of Marlborough's Fanfare; Fisher's Boarding House; Green Bushes; Harvest Hymn; In a Nutshell (Suite); Shepherd's Hey; There Were Three Friends; Walking Tune (symphonic wind band version); We Were Dreamers

 Chan. 9493. BBC PO, Hickox

Hickox is masterly here, with rhythms always resilient, both in bringing out the freshness of well-known numbers like Shepherd's Hey and in presenting the originality and charm of such little-known numbers as Walking Tune. The BBC Philharmonic is in superb form, warmly and atmospherically recorded. By far the longest item is the suite, In a Nutshell, which includes pieces like the Arrival Platform Humlet, well known on their own, and which has as its core a powerful and elaborate piece, Pastoral, which with its disturbing undertow belies its title.

Blithe Bells (Free Ramble on a Theme by Bach: Sheep may safely graze); Country Gardens; Green Bushes (Passacaglia); Handel in the Strand; Mock Morris; Molly on the Shore; My Robin is to the

Greenwood Gone; Shepherd's Hey; Spoon River; Walking Tune; Youthful Rapture

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 6542. Bournemouth Sinf., Montgomery

For those wanting only a single Grainger orchestral collection, this could be first choice. Among the expressive pieces, the arrangement of My Robin is to the Greenwood Gone is highly attractive, but the cello solo in Youthful Rapture is perhaps less effective. Favourites such as Country Gardens, Shepherd's Hey, Molly on the Shore and Handel in the Strand all sound as fresh as new paint. The 1978 recording, made in Christchurch Priory, has retained all its ambient character in its CD transfer.

Irish Tune from County Derry; Lincolnshire Posy (suite); Molly on the Shore; Shepherd's Hey

Ⓜ  ASV (ADD) CDWHL 2067. L. Wind O, Wick – MILHAUD; POULENC: Suite française ***

First-class playing and vivid recording, with the additional attraction of delightful couplings, make this very highly recommendable.

(i) Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon; (ii) Colonial Song; Country Gardens; (i) The Gum-Suckers' March; Faeroe Island Dance; Hill Song 2; (ii) Irish Tune from County Derry; (i) The Lads of Wamphray March; (ii) Lincolnshire Posy; (i) The Merry King; Molly on the Shore; (ii) Shepherd's Hey

 Chan. 9549. Royal N. College of Music Wind O, with (i) Rundell, (ii) Reynish

Even more than most issues in the Chandos Grainger series, this is a fun disc, with the brilliant young players of the Royal Northern College relishing the jaunty rhythms. Many of the pieces are well known in Grainger's alternative arrangements, but this version of Grainger's most popular piece, Country Gardens, is not just an arrangement of the piano version, but, as he explained himself, 'a new piece in every way'. The Faeroe Island Dance in this late band version of 1954 has a pivoting ostinato for horns that echoes the opening of Vaughan Williams's Fifth Symphony, before launching into the dance proper with echoes of The Rite of Spring.

PIANO MUSIC

Country Gardens; In a Nutshell (suite): Gay but Wistful; The Gum-Suckers' March; Jutish Medley; March-Jog (Maguire's Kick); Molly on the Shore; One More Day My John; Ramble on the Last Love-Duet from Strauss's 'Der Rosenkavalier'; Sheep and Goat Walkin' to the Pasture; Shepherd's Hey; Spoon River; Sussex Mummers' Christmas Carol; Turkey in the Straw; The Warriors. STANFORD: Irish Dances, arr. GRAINGER: Leprechaun's Dance; A Reel

🔑  Nim. NI 8809. Grainger (from Duo-Art piano rolls)

We have always been admirers of the Duo-Art player-piano recording system, and here Grainger's personality leaps out from between the speakers, yet the original rolls were cut between 1915 and 1929! It is good to have such a winningly vigorous Country Gardens and such a characterful Shepherd's Hey, while Sheep and Goat Walkin' to the Pasture has rhythmical character of the kind that makes one smile. Gay but Wistful is neither – nonchalant, rather – but endearing. The lyrical numbers like the touching Sussex Mummers' Christmas Carol, One More Day My John and the lilting Zanzibar Boat-Song have a winningly relaxed flair, and Grainger makes his arrangement of the Richard Strauss love-duet from Der Rosenkavalier sound intimately luscious and deliciously idiomatic. The recording is first class.

Complete: 'Dished up for Piano', Volumes 1–5

Volume 1: Andante con moto; Bridal Lullaby; Children's March; Colonial Song; English Waltz; Handel in the Strand; Harvest Hymn; The Immovable 'Do'; In a Nutshell (Suite) (Arrival Platform Humlet; Gay but Wistful; The Gum-Suckers' March; Pastoral); In Dahomey; Mock Morris; Peace; Sailor's Song; Saxon Twi-Play; To a Nordic Princess; Walking Tune

Volume 2: Arrangements

Volume 3: Folksong arrangements

Volume 4: Arrangements

Volume 5: Arrangements: Original works for up to six hands

Ⓑ  Nim. NI 5767 (5). Martin Jones (with McMahon; Martin)

Martin Jones's splendid Nimbus survey of Grainger's piano music is no longer available on separate CDs, but they do now come together in a slip-case at bargain price. The playing is refreshingly alive and spontaneous and splendidly secure technically, and the performances not only have panache but also readily convey the enjoyment of the participants. The pianos are recorded reverberantly in the Nimbus manner – but it rather suits this repertoire, and the image is absolutely truthful.

VOCAL MUSIC

Anchor song (setting of Rudyard Kipling); Thou gracious power (setting of Oliver Wendell Holmes); Arrangements of folksongs

 Chan. 9499. Padmore, Varcoe, Joyful Company of Singers, City of L. Sinf., Hickox; Thwaites

In the darkly intense Shallow Brown Hickox has a clear advantage in opting for an excellent baritone soloist (Stephen Varcoe), with an equally fine choral ensemble. In Hickox's version of the County Derry (the 'Londonderry air') he has chosen an extended, elaborate setting. Ye banks and braes is another item given in a version previously unrecorded, with a whistled descant. Among the pieces completely new to disc are the Marching tune and Early one morning. Also most striking is the brief, keenly original choral piece, The lonely desert-

man sees the tents of the Happy Tribes, here given a dedicated performance, with the tenor intoning a theme from Grainger's orchestral piece, The Warriors, and the distant chorus chattering a chant borrowed from his Tribute to Foster.

(i) Bell Piece. Blithe Bells; (ii) Children's March; Hill Songs I & II; The Immovable 'Do'. Irish Tune from County Derry; Marching Song of Democracy; The Power of Rome and the Christian Heart

 Chan. 9630. Royal N. College of Music Wind O, Reynish or Rundell; with (i) Gilchrist; (ii) vocal group from band

Where in their first collection (above) the splendid players of the Royal Northern College of Music Wind Orchestra clearly so enjoy Grainger's rhythmic buoyancy, here they equally relish his feeling for wind colour, as in the engaging Hill Songs, and rich sonorities, as in the powerful and remarkable The Power of Rome and the Christian Heart, and equally so in this characteristically imaginative arrangement of the Londonderry Air for band and pipe organ. Bell Piece (a 'ramble' on Dowland's melancholy air, Now, O Now I Needs Must Part) begins with a tenor solo with piano, before the wind players gently steal in. In the Children's March members of the band are invited twice to sing a vocalise when they are not playing. Altogether a fascinating and greatly enjoyable programme, strikingly well directed by Timothy Reynish and Clark Rundell.

The Crew of the Long Serpent; Danish Folk Song Suite; Kleine Variationen-Form; Stalt Vesselil (Proud Vesselil); To a Nordic Princess; (i) (Vocal) Dalvisa; Father and Daughter (Fadit og Dóttir); The Merry Wedding; The Rival Brothers; Song of Värmland; Under un Bro (Bridge)

 Chan. 8721. Danish Nat. RSO, Hickox; (i) with Stephen, Reuter, Danish Nat. R. Ch.

From his earliest years Grainger was drawn to Scandinavian and Icelandic literature. This stimulating and rewarding collection centres on music directly influenced by his immersion in those cultures, all little known, except perhaps the Danish Folk Song Suite, with its highly exotic orchestration, winningly presented here. Among the other orchestral items the rollicking Crew of the Long Serpent, the colourful Variations, and the much more extended and lusciously scored Tribute to a Nordic Princess stand out. In the complex opening choral piece, Father and Daughter, a traditional Danish folk dance is mixed up with a theme of Grainger's own. The jolly, concerted Merry Wedding is sung in English: it draws on a folk poem for its text, but is musically original. Dalvisa is a delightful vocalise, using the same melody Alfvén featured as the centrepiece in his Midsummer Rhapsody. Splendid performances and top-class Chandos sound.

Bold William Taylor; Colonial song; The Bridegroom Grat; Died for love; Free music; Harvest hymn; Hubby and Wifey; The Land o' the Leal; Lisbon; Lord Maxwell's goodnight; Lord Peter's Stable-Boy; Molly on the Shore; The Nightingale; The old woman at the christening; The only son; The power of love; The shoemaker from Jerusalem; The twa corbies; The two sisters; Walking tune; Willow willow; Ye Banks and Braes O' Bonnie Doon

(*) Chan. 9819. D. Jones, Hill, Varcoe, ASMF Chamber Ens.

The present volume of the Chandos Grainger series is devoted to pieces (with or without vocal contributions) accompanied by various chamber ensembles. Grainger's scoring is as vividly captivating as ever, and never more so than in his arrangements of Lisbon and Walking tune (both for wind quintet), or in accompanying the delightful melody of The shoemaker from Jerusalem (with flute, trumpet, strings and piano (four hands)). Excellent recording, as usual from this source.

Duke of Marlborough Fanfare; Green Bushes (Passacaglia); Irish Tune from County Derry; Lisbon; Molly on the Shore; My Robin is to the Greenwood Gone; Shepherd's Hey; Piano Duet; Let's Dance Gay in Green Meadow. Vocal and Choral: Bold William Taylor; Brigg Fair; I'm Seventeen Come Sunday; Lord Maxwell's goodnight; The Lost Lady Found; The Pretty Maid Milkin' Her Cow; Scotch Strathspey and Reel; Shallow Brown; Shenandoah; The Sprig of Thyme; There Was a Pig Went Out to Dig; Willow Willow

🔑  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 467 234-2. Pears, Shirley-Quirk, Amb. S. or Linden Singers, Wandsworth Boys' Ch., Britten or Bedford

This collection is one of the best single-disc anthologies of Grainger's music. The bulk of the collection derives from Britten's 1969 LP, and the sound in this transfer is extraordinarily full and vivid: indeed, the clarity of There Was a Pig Went Out to Dig has uncanny presence. It is altogether a delightful anthology, beautifully played and sung throughout. If Grainger's talent was smaller than his more fervent advocates would have us believe, his imagination in the art of arranging folksong was prodigious. The Willow song is a touching and indeed haunting piece and shows the quality of Grainger's harmonic resource. The Duke of Marlborough Fanfare is strikingly original, and so is Shallow Brown. Vocal and instrumental items are felicitously interwoven, and Decca's Australian team are to be congratulated in making this CD available.

GRAM, Peder (1881–1956)

Symphonies 2, Op. 25; 3, Op. 35; (i) Avalon, Op. 16

 DaCapo 8.224718. (i) Andrea Pellegrini; Danish PO, Matthais Aeschbächer

Even for those with a keen interest in Danish music, Peder Gram is just a name among the younger contemporaries of Carl Nielsen. He was an influential figure and administrator in his day and ended up as the wartime head of music at Danish Radio. His pre-war Second Symphony caused something of a stir. though after its completion he felt that his creative fires were beginning to cool. And so, as a retirement present and to encourage him to continue to compose, his colleagues and friends gave him a sumptuously bound volume of scoring pages with the words Symphony No. 3 handsomely engraved on the spine! Both symphonies are inventive and well worth recording and they encourage curiosity as to his other work. Eminently serviceable performances and recording.

GRANADOS, Enrique
(1867–1916)

(i) Dante (symphonic poem); Goyescas: Intermezzo; (ii) La maja y el ruiseñor; 5 Piezas sobre cantos populares españolas (arr. Ferrer)

 ASV CDDCA 1110. Gran Canaria PO, Leaper; with (i) Herrera; (ii) Lucey

Dante is unexpectedly confident in its use of the orchestral palette. Granados evokes his narrative using luscious post-Wagnerian chromaticism and even introduces voluptuous hints of Scriabin and early Schoenberg. Francesca's Story is a straightforward setting of Canto V of Dante's poem, and here there are even hints of Puccini's Madame Butterfly. The vocal line is affectingly sung by Nancy Herrera, her fully coloured mezzo darkening the lower notes entreatingly. Adrian Leaper and the excellent Gran Canaria Orchestra play this remarkable score with languorous intensity. The enchanting highlight of Goyescas, La maja y el ruiseñor, is simply and beautifully sung by Frances Lucey, and the opera's Intermezzo follows vibrantly. Anselm Ferrer's orchestration of five of the Piezas sobre cantos populares skilfully re-creates the music orchestrally – sultry and sparkling by turns. They are most winningly and flexibly presented, to make an entertaining centrepiece in a first-class collection, atmospherically and vividly recorded.

12 Danzas españolas (orch. Ferrer)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555956. Barcelona SO & Catalonia Nat. O, Brotons

This overtly nationalistic music, using original tunes, has encouraged various composers to orchestrate them, of which this set by Rafael Ferrer is colourful and effective. The flutes and oscillating strings in No. 2 have a haunting atmosphere, and the delicacy of writing in the central sections of No. 5, flanked with its strong, brooding theme, is imaginative also. If, in its orchestral format, this is hardly the most subtle music, it is all colourful and enjoyable. The recording is vivid and bright, matching the performance, and this inexpensive CD is worth its modest price.

12 Danzas españolas; Escenas poeticas, Book I (arr. for guitar and orchestra)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553037. Kraft, Razumovsky Sinf., Breiner

These are attractive transcriptions for guitar and orchestra of Granados's piano pieces. The Canadian guitarist Norbert Kraft is a brilliant and effective player. If you want to try Granados in this orchestral garb rather than in its original, keyboard form, you can invest in this with confidence.

(i) Piano Quintet in G min. Piano music: A la Cubana, Op. 36; Aparición; Cartas de amor – Valses intimos, Op. 44; Danza caracteristica; Escenas poéticas (2nd series)

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3335. Rajna; (i) with Alberni Qt

The Piano Quintet is a compact work, neat and unpretentious, in three attractive movements, including a charming lyrical Allegretto and a vigorous finale where the piano is most prominent. Among the solo items, the evocative pieces in the Escenas poéticas II are the most valuable, but even the more conventional colour-pieces that make up the rest of the disc are worth hearing in such perceptive readings. The CRD analogue recording is very good indeed and so are the CD transfers.

GUITAR MUSIC

Cuentos de la juventud, Op. 1: Dedicatoria. Danzas españolas 4 & 5, Op. 37/4–5; Tonadillas al estilo antiguo: La maja de Goya. Valses poéticos

🔑 ✿ (BB) * RCA 74321 68016-2. Bream (guitar) – ALBENIZ: Collection (with pieces by MALATS and PUJOL) **** ✿

Like the Albéniz items with which these Granados pieces are coupled, these performances show Julian Bream at his most inspirational. The illusion of the guitar being in the room is especially electrifying in the middle section of the famous Spanish Dance No. 5, when Bream achieves the most subtle pianissimo. Heard against the background silence, the effect is quite magical. But all the playing here is wonderfully spontaneous. This is one of the most impressive guitar recitals ever recorded, and for this super-bargain reissue RCA have generously added the Tres piezas españolas of Rodrigo, recorded a year later and no less distinguished.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Music (complete)

(BB)  Nim. NI 1734 (6). M. Jones

Allegro de concierto; Escenas románticas; Goyescas (complete); Goyescas: Intermezzo. Goyesca (El pelele); Oriental, canción, variada, intermedio y final; Rapsodia aragonesa; Valse de concert; Reverie (Improvisation; transcribed from a Duo Art piano roll)

(BB)  Nim. NI 5595/8 (4). M. Jones – ALBENIZ: Iberia, etc. ***

The Nimbus six-disc set is described as 'the complete published works for the piano', but you will look in vain in the contents list for the Goyescas: as they are listed (on the second CD) as Los majos enamorados, Parts I and II. The Libro de horas come between the two Books (which works well enough), with El pelele played quite separately. No reason is given for this in the sparse notes, the one drawback to the set which is otherwise highly recommendable at its modest price. As can be seen, there is an equally recommendable shorter collection (which includes the Goyescas and also the Duo Art piano-roll transcription of the composer playing an improvisation).

A la pradera; Barcarola, Op. 45; Bocetos; Cuentos de la juventud, Op. 1; Mazurka, Op. 2; Moresque y Arabe; Sardana; Los soldados de cartón

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3336

Allegro de concierto; Capricho español, Op. 39; Carezza vals, Op. 38; 2 Impromptus; Oriental; Rapsodia aragonesa; Valses poéticos

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3323

Danzas españolas, Op. 37

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3321

Escenas románticas; 6 Piezas sobre cantos populares españolas; Danza lenta

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3322

6 Estudios espresivos; Estudio, Op. posth.; Impromptu, Op. 39; 3 Marches militaires; Paisaje, Op. 35; Pequeña suite (In the garden of Elisenda)

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) 3337

Goyescas; Escenas poéticas (1st series); Libro de horas

Ⓜ  Rajna CRD (ADD) 3301

Thomas Rajna plays with great sympathy and flair. Apart from the Danzas españolas, some of the finest music is to be found in the Escenas románticas and in the other pieces on CRD 3322 and 3323. The later volumes, however, excellently played and recorded, are well worth considering, and not merely for the sake of completeness. The eight pieces on CRD 3336, opening with the beguilingly innocent Moresqe y Arabe, are delightful, pleasingly contrasted in style and played with great character and spontaneity. The Six Estudios serve to point the formative influences in Granados's style – Schumann and, to a lesser extent, Fauré – while the other pieces, including the Marches militaires (in which Rajna superimposes the second piano part) are unfailingly pleasing. His account of Goyescas must yield to Alicia de Larrocha, but his interpretations are clear and persuasive and the music's greatness does not elude him. The fill-ups, more immediately charming, less ambitious, are valuable, too. A distinguished set, welcome in the CD catalogue at mid-price.

12 Danzas españolas; Goyescas (complete);

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 60863-2. De Larrocha

Alicia de Larrocha has recorded much of this repertoire before, both for Spanish Hispavox and later, perhaps definitively, for Decca (see below). Her view of these pieces has not changed substantially since, although her responses in the earlier recordings are sometimes marginally fresher. However, her newest, RCA set of the Danzas españolas is every bit as perceptive and sparkling, and her Spanish temperament remains naturally attuned to this music. The RCA recording is natural, fully coloured and with fine sonority; it is very present and vivid: the listener is closer to the instrument than with Decca.

Goyescas (complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  Double Decca 448 191-2 (2). De Larrocha – ALBÉNIZ: Iberia, etc. ***

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 61514-2 (2). De Larroccha – ALBÉNIZ: Iberia; Navarra ***

Goyescas: Los majos enamorados, Parts I–II

Ⓑ  Nim. 2-CD NI 7718/9. Martin Jones – ALBÉNIZ: Iberia ***

Alicia de Larrocha brings special insights and sympathy to the Goyescas (given top-drawer Decca sound in 1977); her playing has the crisp articulation and rhythmic vitality that these pieces call for, while she is hauntingly evocative in Quejas ó la maja y el ruiseñor. The overall impression could hardly be more idiomatic in flavour or more realistic as a recording. This Double Decca coupling with Albéniz's Iberia is very distinguished.

Alicia de Larrocha's EMI set of Goyescas derives from the Spanish Hispavox catalogue and was made in 1962, a decade before her Decca set. The performance is more impulsive, at times more intensely expressive, if less subtle in feeling than the later version, and the recording, if not as fine as the Decca, is eminently realistic.

As in the coupled Iberia of Albéniz, Martin Jones's instinctive sympathy with the Spanish idiom brings a remarkable freshness to the music of Granados, and the recording is very real and natural.

GREENE, Maurice (1696–1755)

Hearken unto Me, ye Holy Children (motet)

 Hyp. CDA 67298. Blaze, Daniels, Harvey, King's Consort Ch. & O, King – HANDEL: The Choice of Hercules ***

Maurice Greene, Handel's contemporary and for many years his unfriendly rival, cannot compare with that master in originality of invention, but this extended motet makes an attractive and valuable fill-up for the rare Handel cantata, equally well performed by the King's Consort.

GREGSON, Edward (born 1945)

(i) Concerto for Piano & Wind (Homages); (ii) Saxophone Concerto; (iii) Trumpet Concerto

Ⓝ  Chan. 10478. (i) Goerner; (ii) Sugawa; (iii) Antonsen; BBC PO, Rundel

Edward Gregson tells us that he is particularly attracted to the concerto form. The Concerto for Piano and Wind uses Stravinsky as model without losing its own originality. Its central Passacaglia is capped by the rhythmic impetus of the Rondo Burlesque finale, which then by sleight of musical hand transforms itself into an anonymous twelfth-century carol.

The Trumpet Concerto is also full of sparkle, based on a three-note motif heard at the opening on the timpani; but it too has an elegiac, haunting soliloquy for a slow movement, followed by a vibrant rondo-capriccio finale demanding and receiving great virtuosity from the soloist, Ole Edvard Antonsen.

Perhaps most remarkable of all is the Saxophone Concerto (written for its soloist, Nobuya Sugawa), a dazzling cornucopia of ideas and jazzy dance episodes, even reaching pandemonium at times, but again with a lyrical core and another haunting slow movement. All three performances here are outstanding and show the bravura and sensitivity of the three soloists while Clark Rundell directs the accompaniments with spirit and sensuous warmth. The recording is of Chandos's demonstration standard.

GRIEG, Edvard (1843–1907)

'Ballad for Edward Grieg': DVD Documentary, with Leif Ove Andsnes; includes Arietta, Op. 12/1; At Your Feet, Op. 68/3; Ballade in G min., Op. 24; Folk Tune, Op. 12/5; Homesickness, Op. 57/6; Wedding Day at Troldhaugen, Op. 65/6; (i) Piano Concerto in A min.

🔑 * EMI DVD 5 12128-9. Andsnes, (i) with Bergen PO, Ruud; Richard Peel (narrator) (Dir: Thomas Hellum, DVD prod: Jans Saure)

In this documentary we accompany Leif Ove Andsnes as he prepares to record the Ballade in G minor, which Grieg himself felt unable to play in public, because of its personal associations with the death of his parents. We follow the pianist as he travels the world, following in the composer's footsteps, preparing himself to play the Ballade. Grieg was very restless and visited many of the major European capital cities (including a very successful visit to London), but then he usually became homesick and returned to Troldhaugen, where we also return, to hear Andsnes play some Lyric Pieces, introducing and using the composer's own Steinway piano (which he greatly likes) in his living room, with comments between each of the pieces. En route we learn a great deal about Grieg and his music, and if this is not a documentary to return to more than once or twice, the performances which follow are all outstanding, and are not duplicated on Andsnes's other CDs. The performance of the Concerto includes encores. The recording is of high quality and the video direction is excellent.

Complete Orchestral Music: Bell Ringing; (i) Piano Concerto; 2 Elegiac Melodies; Funeral March in memory of Rikard Nordraak (2 versions); Holberg Suite; In Autumn; 2 Lyric Pieces; Lyric Suite; 2 Melodies; 2 Nordic Melodies; 4 Norwegian Dances; Old Norwegian Melody with Variations; 4 Symphonic Dances; Symphony in C; (ii) Bergliot (Melodrama). Vocal works: At the Cloister Gate; At Rondane; Den Bergtekne (The Mountain Thrall); Landkjenning (Land Sighting); Peer Gynt (concert version; complete + Suites 1–2); Sigurd Jorsalfar (incidental music); 6 Songs with Orchestra. Olav Trygvason (Opera fragment)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  BIS CD 1740/2 (8). (i) Ogawa; (ii) Mauseth (nar.); soloists, including Hagegård, Kringelborn, Solberg, Bergen Vocal Ens., Philharmonic Ch. & O, Ruud

This valuable collection of Grieg's music is offered very inexpensively (8 discs for the price of 3), handsomely packaged and well documented.

(i) Bergliot (melodrama for orchestra), Op. 42; (ii) Piano Concerto in A min.; 2 Elegiac Melodies, Op. 34; Funeral March in Memory of Richard Nordraak; Holberg Suite, Op. 40; In Autumn, Op. 11; 2 Lyric Pieces, Op. 68; Lyric Suite, Op. 54; Norwegian Dances, Op. 35; 2 Norwegian Folk Melodies, Op. 53; 2 Nordic Melodies, Op. 63; Old Norwegian Romance with Variations, Op. 51; Sigurd Jorsalfar (suite) Op. 56; 4 Symphonic Dances, Op. 64; Symphony in C min.; Choral: (iii) Before a Southern Convent, Op. 30; (iv; v) Orchestral Songs: The First Meeting; From Monte Pincio; Henryk Wergeland; Spring; A Swan; (v; vi) Landkjenning, Op. 31; (v) The Mountain Thrall, Op. 32; (v; vii) Olav Trygvason (scenes), Op. 50; (viii) Peer Gynt (complete incidental music); (ix) Sigurd Jorsalfar (incidental music)

Ⓑ  DG 471 300-2 (6). Gothenburg SO (& Ch.), Järvi; with (i) Tellefsen (nar.); (ii) Zilberstein; (iii) Bonney, Stene, Women's Ch.; (iv) Bonney; (v) Hagegård; (vi) with Men's Ch.; (vii) Stene, Gjevang & Ch.; (viii) Bonney & Soloists

This comprehensive coverage of Grieg's 'music with orchestra', with many of the performances unsurpassed, would make an ideal basis for any Grieg collection. Most are discussed below, although not Lilya Zilberstein's account of the Piano Concerto, one of the few disappointments. It is a good narrative performance and could never be called routine, but her reading is comparatively conventional, with few fresh insights. The documentation is excellent but the surprise is the omission of texts and translations for the vocal music, with only synopses deemed necessary. But the standard of recording is consistently high, and this six-disc bargain box is still remarkable value.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min. (original 1868/72 version); Larviks-polka (1858); 23 Small Pieces (1859)

 BIS CD 619. Derwinger, (i) Norrköping SO, Hirokami

This CD offers us a fascinating glimpse of how the concerto must have sounded to its contemporaries. Love Derwinger is the intelligent and accomplished soloist with the Norrköping Orchestra, and he proves a sensitive guide in the collection of juvenilia that completes the disc. The concerto is well balanced and Derwinger's solo pieces are well recorded too.

Piano Concerto in A min., Op. 16

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * EMI 5 03419-2. Andsnes, BPO, Jansons – SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto *** ❀

🔑 Ⓜ * Ph. (ADD) 475 7773. Kovacevich, BBC SO, C. Davis – SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto ***

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony 518810-2 [SK 92736]. Perahia, Bav. RSO, C. Davis – MENDELSSOHN: Concerto 2: Finale; SCHUMANN: Concerto ***

Ⓝ 🔑 * Chan.10509. Shelley, Opera N. O – SAINT-SAËNS: Concerto 2; SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto ****

 EMI 7 54746-2. Vogt, CBSO, Rattle – SCHUMANN: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 383-2. Lupu, LSO, Previn – SCHUMANN: Concerto ***

Ⓝ Ⓑ  CfP 2 28368-2. Devoyon, LPO, Maksymiuk – SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto ***

(i) Piano Concerto; Ballade in G min.; (ii) Lyric Pieces, Op. 57/6; Op. 62/6; Op. 65/6; Wedding Day at Troldhaugen, Op. 68/5; Evening in the Mountains, Op. 68/4; Remembrances, Op. 71/7

Ⓜ  EMI 3 94399-2. Andsnes; (i) BPO, Jansons; (ii) Recorded on the composer's own piano

It was with the Grieg Concerto that Leif Ove Andsnes made his concerto début in 1990 on the Virgin label. This new version, recorded live in Berlin, is just as spontaneous-sounding, with soaring flights of imagination, while the Berlin Philharmonic is at its warmest under Mariss Jansons; his virtuosity is commanding, but it is never at the expense of tenderness and poetic feeling. The Schumann too brings glorious playing from both soloist and orchestra, with both offering warm, clear sound; in short, this is a gramophone classic for the present decade.

The G minor Ballade was written in the wake of Grieg's parents' death. Much of his grief was poured into the Ballade, a set of variations on an old Norwegian folk song. Poignant and deeply felt, it is among his greatest works and, such was the emotion it aroused and the pain which accompanied its composition, that Grieg himself could hardly bear to play it in later life. Leif Ove Andsnes has the full measure of its depth and his beautifully recorded account must be a mandatory acquisition.

Whether in the clarity of virtuoso fingerwork or the shading of half-tone, Kovacevich is among the most illuminating of the many great pianists who have recorded the Grieg Concerto. He plays with bravura and refinement, the spontaneity of the music-making bringing a sparkle throughout, to balance the underlying poetry. The 1972 recording has been freshened most successfully and this now returns to the catalogue, effectively remastered as one of the finest of Philips's Originals.

Perahia revels in the bravura as well as bringing out the lyrical beauty in radiantly poetic playing. He is commanding and authoritative when required, with the blend of spontaneity, poetic feeling and virtuoso display this music calls for. He is given sympathetic support by Sir Colin Davis and the fine Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, and it now comes at mid-price with the finale of the Second Mendelssohn Concerto as an encore.

Howard Shelley is gifted with keen intelligence and consummate artistry, and his accounts of the Grieg and Schumann (which he directs from the keyboard) belong in the most exalted company. Shelley succeeds in balancing the concerto's overall structure without ever sacrificing the lyrical freshness and poetry of its invention. The disc is particularly generous in including the extra work by Saint-Saëns. Fine orchestral playing and excellent recording add to the attractions of this coupling.

Lars Vogt never allows his personality to obtrude; he colours the familiar phrases with great subtlety yet without the slightest trace of narcissism. He is very well supported by Rattle and the CBSO, and excellently recorded. An unusually sensitive player, his version, with the inevitable Schumann coupling, is eminently satisfying.

Decca's remastering of Radu Lupu's fine (1973) Kingsway Hall recording, one of Decca's very best of the period, suits the style of the performance, which is boldly compelling in the outer movements, but has warmth and poetry too, especially striking in the slow movement, where Previn's hushed opening is particularly telling. Indeed, the orchestral contribution is a strong one throughout, while Lupu's playing has moments of touching delicacy, and this Decca performance must stand high on the list of mid- and bargain-priced recommendations.

Devoyon's account is characteristic of him: aristocratic without being aloof, pensive without being self-conscious, and brilliant without being flashy. He is a poetic artist whose natural musicianship shines through, and this excellent account is very competitive, with fine, supportive playing from the LPO under Jerzy Maksymiuk.

Dinu Lipatti's classic 1947 version of the Grieg Concerto, intensely poetic, like the Schumann with which it is coupled, has been a staple of the catalogue from when it was made, but here in the superb Dutton transfer the sound is fuller and clearer than ever before, preferable to the EMI remastering, with the additional advantage that the disc comes at super-bargain price. (Dutton CDBP 9717)

Piano Concerto; 6 Lyric Pieces, Op. 65/1–6

Ⓑ  Virgin 391369-2. Andsnes, Bergen PO, Kitayenko – LISZT: Piano Concerto 2 ***

In his earlier (1991) Virgin recording, Andsnes again wears his brilliance lightly. There is no lack of display and bravura here, but no ostentation. Indeed, he has great poetic feeling and delicacy of colour, and Grieg's familiar warhorse comes up with great freshness. His piano is perfectly balanced in relation to the orchestra and anyone wanting the Liszt coupling should be well satisfied.

2 Elegiac Melodies, Op. 34; Erotik; 2 Melodies, Op. 53; 2 Norwegian Airs, Op. 63

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550330. Capella Istropolitana, Leaper – SIBELIUS: Andante festivo, etc. **

Adrian Leaper secures responsive and sensitive playing from the Capella Istropolitana in this Grieg collection, the recording is very good indeed and the balance natural.

(i) 2 Elegiac Melodies, Op. 34; Holberg Suite; (ii) In Autumn, Op. 11; (iii) Lyric Suite, Op. 54; Norwegian Dances, Op. 35; (iv) Old Norwegian Romance with Variations; Symphonic Dances, Op. 64; (iii) Sigurd

Jorsalfar: Homage March; (Piano): (v) Lyric Pieces, Op. 12 & Op. 28

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86513-2 (2). (i) N. Sinfonia, Tortelier; (ii) RPO, Beecham; (iii) Hallé O, Barbirolli; (iv) Bournemouth SO, Berglund; (v) Adni

A most attractive bargain anthology, recorded over 25 years. Yet how well the very first recording, Beecham's_In Autumn_, still sounds. (It was made in the Kingsway Hall in 1955.) Tortelier gives most affecting performances of the Elegiac Melodies and Holberg Suite, very well recorded and still among the best in the catalogue. Barbirolli's three items are also available on a Dutton CD (see below). How delightfully he presents the Allegretto tranquillo, the second of the Four Norwegian Dances. Berglund's highly dramatic Symphonic Dances are also available on an Encore disc, but his highly sympathetic and imaginatively volatile performance of the delightful Old Norwegian Romance with Variations (all separately cued) are well worth having. Daniel Adni's_Lyric Pieces_, which act as an appendix, are most beautifully played and very well recorded indeed. All the CD transfers are excellent.

2 Elegiac Melodies; Holberg Suite, Op. 40; 2 Lyric Pieces, Op. 68; 2 Melodies, Op. 53; 2 Nordic Melodies, Op. 63

🔑 ✿ * BIS SACD 1491. Bergen PO, Ruud

This is simply the most beautiful record of Grieg's string music in the catalogue, and one of the most beautiful and realistic recordings of strings we have ever heard – made appropriately in the Grieg Hall in Bergen. The wonderfully vital account of the Holberg Suite is unsurpassed, not even by Karajan's famous account, and the gentler pieces are exquisite, especially the Two Nordic Melodies, which are Elysian, and the closing At the Cradle from the Lyric Pieces, Op. 68. Truly marvellous playing from the Bergen Orchestra and inspired conducting from Ole Kristian Ruud, while the BIS producers, Hans Kipfer and Thore Brinkmann, and sound engineer Jens Braun deserve to share the Rosette and the fourth star unique to this volume. Try and hear the disc on SACD equipment with four speakers, and you will be amazed; but it sounds pretty marvellous through just two.

Holberg Suite, Op. 40

(M)  Decca (ADD) 470 262-2. ASMF, Marriner – TCHAIKOVSKY: Serenade  ; DVOŘÁK: Serenade **(*)

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 43075-2. Norwegian R. O, Rasilainen – NIELSEN: Little Suite; STENHAMMAR: Serenade *** ✿

Marriner's richly lyrical account of the Holberg Suite is outstanding in every way: the Air has a pleasing graciousness and the Rigaudon plenty of sparkle. The 1970 (Argo) recording remains splendidly fresh.

An unaffected account of the Holberg Suite from Ari Rasilainen and his Norwegian players that serves to enhance the attractions of the coupling, Stenhammar's glorious Serenade for Orchestra.

Holberg Suite, Op. 40; Peer Gynt Suites 1–2

 DG 439 010-2. BPO, Karajan – SIBELIUS: Finlandia, etc. ***

Holberg Suite, Op. 40; Peer Gynt Suites 1–2; Sigurd Jorsalfar: Suite, Op. 56

🔑 (B)  DG 2-CD (DDD/ADD) 474 269-2 (2). BPO, Karajan – SIBELIUS: Finlandia, etc. ***

Karajan's performance of the Holberg Suite has wonderful lightness and delicacy, with cultured phrasing not robbing the music of its immediacy, while in Peer Gynt many subtleties of colour and texture are revealed by the vividly present recording, clear and full and with a firm bass-line, especially in the thrillingly gutsy In the Hall of the Mountain King. The digital recording now proves to be one of the best to have emerged from the Philharmonie in the early 1980s. For their 'Karajan Collection' reissue, DG have added the three pieces from Sigurd Jorsalfar and joined this CD economically to an equally outstanding Sibelius programme. This is Karajan and the BPO at their very finest, and the coupling is outstanding in every way. Very fine sound, too.

In Autumn Overture; Lyric Piece: Erotik, Op. 43/5; Norwegian Dances; Old Norwegian Romance with Variations

 Chan. 9028. Iceland SO, Sakari – SVENDSEN: 2 Icelandic Melodies for strings ***

The Icelandic orchestra play very responsively for their Finnish conductor, Petri Sakari, who gives very natural and straightforward accounts of this endearing music. Highly musical performances, with no lack of personality, truthfully recorded. Very recommendable.

Old Norwegian Romance & Variations, Op. 51; Sigurd Jorsalfar: Suite, Op. 56; Symphony in C min.

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557991. Malmö SO, Engeset

Bjarte Engeset makes an excellent case for the Grieg Symphony – not one of his most characteristic works, but it has many pleasing qualities. Engeset injects plenty of vigour into his performance, making it seem more dramatic than usual. The Variations are superbly done, with plenty of the fresh charm and detail brought out. No complaints about the Sigurd Jorsalfar items, which are as enjoyable as ever, with the Intermezzo wonderfully atmospheric. Good, well-balanced sound.

Symphony in C min.

(B)  Decca Australian Eloquence 476 8743. Bergen SO, Anderson – GOLDMARK: Rustic Wedding Symphony **(*)

The Symphony is a student work, written while Grieg was living in Denmark, but he forbade performances of the work after hearing Svendsen's First Symphony in 1867, and the score was bequeathed to Bergen Public Library on the understanding that it was never to be performed. The work takes just over 37 minutes, and those expecting characteristic Grieg will be disappointed. In some ways the finale is the most confident of the four movements, though its seams are clearly audible. The ideas are fresher than in the inner movements and, although it is no masterpiece, the work is uncommonly assured for a youth of 20. It is persuasively played in Bergen, and the Decca recording is truthfully balanced, with good perspective and colour.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Andante con moto (for piano trio)

Ⓝ  Simax SACD PSC 1279 (2). Grieg Trio – SMETANA: Piano Trio, Op. 15; TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Trio ***

Grieg's Andante for piano trio was only published posthumously and is virtually unknown. But it is a substantial movement (perhaps intended as part of a major work), opening and closing evocatively but with an ardently passionate central section. Very well played here, it is well worth having as a bonus in this two-disc package. The surround sound adds to the presence (and resonance) of the recording.

Cello Sonata in A min., Op. 36

(*) CRD 3391. Cohen, Vignoles – FRANCK: Cello Sonata **(*)

Cello Sonata in A min.; Intermezzo in A min.; Piano Sonata, Op. 7

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550878. Birkeland, Gimse

Oystein Birkeland and Håvard Gimse give the Sonata an alive and sensitive account, coupled with the early and unrepresentative Intermezzo in A minor. They are both imaginative players and are decently recorded. Given the modest outlay involved, this competes very strongly with its rivals, but even if it were at mid- or full-price it would be highly recommendable. Gimse's performance of the early Piano Sonata, Op. 7, is also very good indeed. Altogether a first-rate bargain.

In the folk element Cohen might have adopted a more persuasive style, bringing out the charm of the music more, but certainly he sustains the sonata structures well. The recording presents the cello very convincingly. It has been most naturally transferred to CD.

(i) Cello Sonata; (ii) String Quartet 1

 Virgin 5 45505-2. (i) Mørk, Gimse; (ii) Sigerland, Sponberg, Tomter, Mørk

Like Leif Ove Andsnes's recent set of Lyric Pieces, the Cello Sonata was recorded at Grieg's home, Troldhaugen, on his own piano. It is Truls Mørk's second recording and he plays with characteristic sensitivity and refreshing ardour. Håvard Gimse is an impeccable partner: he has the keenest musical instincts and great keyboard finesse. This is arguably the best and most compelling account of the Sonata to be had. Apart from the Ballade, Op. 24, the String Quartet, also in G minor, is Grieg's most deeply felt instrumental piece. The four artists assembled for the excellent Virgin recording can hold their own with the best, and they bring an intensity, freshness and imagination to this fine score.

String Quartets 1–2 in F (unfinished)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550879. Oslo String Qt – JOHANSEN: String Quartet ***

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55299. Chilingirian Qt

String Quartets 1–2; (i) Andante con moto for Piano Trio. Fugue in F min.

(BB)  Regis RRC 1279. Raphael Qt; (i) with Röling

The Naxos account of the quartets from the Oslo String Quartet, a relatively new group, proves the best of the lot – indeed it is the best version we have had since the Budapest. They would easily sweep the board even at full price, on account of their sensitivity, tonal finesse and blend, and the keenness of their artistic responses. They play only the first two movements of the F major Quartet, leaving room for a fine quartet by Grieg's biographer, David Monrad Johansen. The recording balance, made in the Norwegian Radio studios, is excellent, neither too forward nor too recessed.

The Chilingirians leave off where Grieg did, just as the Oslo Quartet do on Naxos. They have lavished much care on it and their disc is expertly engineered by Arne Kaselborg and Andrew Keener. Recommended alongside the Naxos.

The Raphael Quartet performances of these two Quartets are spirited and well recorded. If the F major is not quite in the class of the account by the Oslo Quartet, their Regis CD enjoys two points of special interest: they give us Julius Röntgen's conjectural realization of the sketches of the remaining two movements Grieg had planned for the Second Quartet, and they also include another rarity in the shape of the Andante con moto for piano trio, which is worth having on disc.

The version of the First Quartet from the New Helsinki Quartet couples it with the Sibelius Quartet. It is dramatic, well shaped and vital, yet full of sensitivity, and can be strongly recommended among modern recordings, and the disc now comes in the lowest price-range. (Warner Apex 0927 40601-2)

The Budapest Quartet's recording dates from 1936, but its attractions in terms of coupling here are strong. The Sibelius Voces intimae and the Hugo Wolf Italian Serenade are both superb performances and still remain unsurpassed. The Biddulph transfer is excellent. (Biddulph mono LAB 098)

Violin Sonata 1 in F, Op. 8

🔑  Challenge CC 72171. Van Keulen, Brautigam – ELGAR: Sonata; SIBELIUS: Humoresques ***

The Op. 8 Sonata comes between the E minor Piano Sonata and the Piano Concerto. But to present-day ears it has the perennial freshness and immediacy of all Grieg and sounds fresher than ever in the hands of this masterly partnership. The Elgar Sonata is equally desirable, while the Sibelius wartime Humoresques are captivating, and the three they give us are beautifully played.

Violin Sonatas 1 in F, Op. 8; 2 in G, Op. 13; 3 in C min.

🔑  Simax PSC 1162. Tonnesen, Smebye

 Chan. 9184. L. and E. Mordkovitch

In each sonata Terje Tonnesen plays with much sweetness of tone and tenderness of feeling. His virtuosity is disarmingly effortless and there is a lyric and expressive grace that is captivating. His partner, Einar Henning Smebye, is sensitive and responsive, and the balance is excellent. For many this will be a first choice.

Yet the same goes for Lydia and Elena Mordkovitch (mère et fille) on an admirably recorded Chandos CD. They, too, give splendidly fresh and well-shaped accounts of all three sonatas which give much pleasure in music-making. Affectionate yet virile performances – thoroughly recommendable.

Violin Sonata 3 in C min., Op. 45

 Avie Crear Classics AV 0037. Gleusteen, Ordronneau – DVOŘÁK: Violin Sonatina; FRANCK: Violin Sonata ***

Kai Gleusteen and Catherine Ordronneau, Canadian- and French-born respectively, have teamed up to make an impressively close partnership, and their performance of the Grieg C minor Sonata has plenty of vitality and is especially successful in sharing its endearingly warm lyricism. They are recorded at Crear, a centre for the arts in the Scottish Highlands (in Argyle) with a wonderful view of the 'Paps' of Jura as a backcloth. The recording is resonant but gives an impression of live music-making, and the couplings are equally enjoyable.

PIANO MUSIC

Old Norwegian Romance with Variations (for 2 pianos), Op. 51; arr. for 2 Pianos of Mozart's Fantasia in C min., K.475

Ⓝ  Blu-ray Lindberg Lyd SACD Surround Sound 2L57SABD. Dena Piano Duo – MOZART: Sonata for 2 Pianos, K.448 ****

The Blu-ray recording process (played through an SACD system) produces a piano image of exceptional clarity and presence, and these performances by the Dena Piano Duo are of high quality. It cannot be said that Grieg's eclectic but diverting variations are as effective in a piano duet format as they are in their orchestral form, but the music-making here is certainly spontaneously enjoyable. Grieg however blotted his copybook by making a clumsy and thick-textured transcription of Mozart's solo piano Fantasia in C minor for piano duo and, although the Dena Duo do their best with it, it still sounds much less effective than Mozart's original version for just one instrument.

Einar Steen-Nøkleberg Complete Naxos Series

(BB)  Naxos 8.550881. Vol. 1: Early and Late Pieces
(BB)  Naxos 8.550882. Vol. 2: 19 Norwegian Folksongs
(BB)  Naxos 8.550883. Vol. 3: Ballade; Melodies of Norway
(BB)  Naxos 8.550884. Vol. 4: 17 Norwegian Peasant Dances
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553391. Vol. 5: Norway's Melodies 1–63
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553392. Vol. 6: Norway's Melodies 64–117
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553393. Vol. 7: Norway's Melodies 118–52
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550394. Vol. 8: Lyric Pieces, Books 1–4
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550395. Vol. 9: Lyric Pieces, Books 5–7
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550396. Vol. 10: Lyric Pieces, Books 8–10
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550397. Vol. 11: Orch. Transcriptions, I
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550398. Vol. 12: Orch. Transcriptions, II
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550399. Vol. 13: Orch. Transcriptions, III
(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550400. Vol. 14: Sketches: Concerto; Sonata

Einar Steen-Nøkleberg has recorded every note of music Grieg composed for the piano. He has impressive musical credentials and is, among other things, the author of a book on Grieg's piano music and its interpretations. His survey displaces earlier sets in quality: he is responsive to mood and is searchingly imaginative in his approach. He is beautifully recorded throughout in the Linderman Hall of the Norwegian State Academy of Music.

Lyric Pieces: Op. 12/1; Op. 38/1; Op. 43/1–2; Op. 47/2–4; Op. 54/4–5; Op. 57/6; Op. 62/4 & 6; Op. 68/2, 3 & 5; Op. 71/1, 3 & 6–7

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 449 721-2. Gilels

With Gilels we are in the presence of a great keyboard master whose characterization and control of colour and articulation are wholly remarkable. An altogether outstanding record in every way. This recording has been admirably remastered for reissue in DG's 'Originals' series and now sounds better than ever.

Lyric Pieces, Op. 12/1, 2, 3 & 6; Op. 18/6–8; Op. 47/1; Op. 54/3–4; Op. 57/2, 3 & 6; Op. 62/1, 4–6; Op. 65/6: Wedding Day at Troldhaugen; Op. 68/3; Op. 71/2, 6–7

🔑 ❀  EMI 5 57296-2. Andsnes

The Op. 65 Lyric Pieces on the Andsnes bargain recital derive from the young Norwegian pianist's début recordings of the Grieg A minor and Liszt A major Concertos, while the remainder come from the following year when he was 22 years old. The playing has great freshness, and Andsnes almost succeeds in making listeners feel that they have not heard such oft-played pieces as Butterfly, Solitary Wanderer, To Spring or Shepherd Boy before. Andsnes commands great tonal subtlety and a wonderful range of keyboard colour, yet there is no pursuit of surface beauty at the expense of artistic truth. At its price, this is outstanding.

Lyric Pieces, Opp. 12/8; 38/1 & 6; 43/1 & 2; 47/1, 3 & 7; 54/3–4; 57/4, 5 & 6; 62/4; 68/2; 71/2–3

Ⓑ  CDK CDKM 1003. Pletnev

It is good to see this masterly Grieg recital return to circulation, as it contains playing of great poetic feeling and keen sensibility. It was briefly available on Melodiya in the late 1980s and, though by no means the equal of Gilels's famous anthology on DG in terms of recorded sound, was artistically a worthy successor. As usual with Pletnev nothing is routine and there is a concentration that gives these miniatures a freshness and depth that few artists can match. One had forgotten just how good this revealing recital is. If the distinction of the playing is not matched by the quality of the recorded sound, it is still eminently serviceable.

25 Norwegian Folk-Songs and Dances, Op. 17/1, 5, 7–8, 10, 12, 18, 19, 22, 24–25; Norwegian Folk Dances, Op. 66/1, 7–8, 12, 14–15, 18–19; Norwegian

Peasant Dances, Op. 72/2, 7, 8, 14–16; Songs, Op. 41/1, 4, 6; Op. 52/1–3

Ⓑ  Naim CD 059. Gimse

Håvard Gimse is among the most impressive and imaginative of Norwegian pianists, and he offers an expertly chosen anthology of dances from the Op. 17 set of 1870 and a handful of pieces from the much later Op. 66 and Op. 72 collections from 1896 and 1902. He also gives us half a dozen of Grieg's own song transcriptions. The lifelike recording (if slightly closely balanced) is made on a well-regulated Steinway in the fine acoustic of the Sofienberg Church in Oslo, and this is a most distinguished and satisfying addition to the Grieg discography.

VOCAL MUSIC

A cappella choral music: (i) At the Halvdan Kjerulf monument; Ave maris stella; Dona nobis pacem; (ii) 4 Psalms, Op. 74; Holberg Cantata. Male-voice choruses: Election song; Impromptu; Inga Litamor; The late rose; Westerly wind

 Simax PSC 1187. (i) Sandve; (ii) Vollestad; Oslo Philharmonic Ch., Skiöld

Grieg's a cappella output is among the least known. This disc by the Oslo Philharmonic Choir offers a generous helping of it and presents it persuasively. His last work, the Four Psalms, Op. 74, dates from 1906 and is based on traditional tunes of popular Norwegian origin. The Oslo Philharmonic Choir produce a beautiful and well-blended sound. Good recording.

Orchestral songs: Album lines, Departed; En svane (The swan); Eros; Fra Monte Pincio; Spillemænd (Fiddlers);The mountain thrall, Op. 26; The Princess; 4 Songs, Op. 60; 6 Songs, Op. 48; To the motherland. A vision; With a water-lily; Peer Gynt: Solveig's cradle song

 Dinemec DCCD022. Farley, LPO or Philh. O, Serebrier

This anthology collects 23 Grieg songs, three in the composer's own orchestrations but the vast majority in transcriptions by the conductor, José Serebrier. Some of them, like Prinsessan (The Princess) do not gain in the process, but the vast majority do, and Serebrier's orchestrations are both expert and idiomatic. Carole Farley does not use the white-toned, vibrato-free style favoured by some of the younger generation of Norwegian singers, but her disc is none the worse for that. Only occasionally is her vibrato obtrusive. For the most part she commands a wide expressive range and exhibits considerable feeling for the character of each of the songs. Moreover the orchestral support is sensitive and the recording well balanced.

Songs: At Rodane; A bird song; The first primrose; From Monte Pincio; Hope; I love but thee; I walked one balmy summer evening; Last spring; Margreta's cradle song; On the water; The Princess; Spring showers; A swan; To her II; Two brown eyes; Upon a grassy hillside; 4 Poems from Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson's Fishermaiden, Op. 21; 6 Songs, Op. 48; Peer Gynt: Solveig's song; Solveig's cradle song

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553781. Arnesen, Eriksen

An inexpensive and, at 70 minutes, well-filled CD, beautifully recorded and pleasingly sung. Bodil Arnesen has a voice of great purity and radiance. She sings marvellously in tune, though some may find that in this repertoire she has something of a 'little-girl', innocent quality that does not give the whole picture. This perhaps is troubling when you are listening to all the songs straight off. Taken a group at a time, she will touch most hearts, particularly in the setting of Bjørnson's Prinsessen and Det første møte. Erling Eriksen is an excellent accompanist.

6 Elegiac Songs of John Paulsen, Op. 59; Fædrelangssang (National Song); Gentlemen-menige (Gentlemen Rankers); Norway, 5 Songs of John Paulsen, Op. 58; Soldaten (The Soldier); 9 Songs, Op. 18; Taaren (Tears); Vesle Gut (Little Lad)

BIS-CD-1657. Groop, Vignoles

10 Songs by Otto Benzon, Op. 69/70; Clara's Song; Easter Song; Election Song; The Fair-Haired Maid (2 versions); Morning Prayer at School; The Mountain Thrall; The Princess; Ragnhild; Sighs; The Singing Congregration; To a Devil The Tryst

Ⓝ  BIS CD 1757. Groop, Vignoles

The Finnish mezzo Monica Groop is a supremely polished artist and penetrates the very essence of the Grieg songs with an artlessness that conceals art. Roger Vignoles is a masterly accompanist who matches her artistry.

Haugtussa (song-cycle), Op. 67; Hjertets melodier, Op. 5; 6 Ibsen Poems, Op. 25; 6 Lieder, Op. 48; Prinsessen, EG133

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67670. Karnéus, Drake

The Grieg songs are well served already, but this recital by Katarina Karnéus and Julius Drake makes a most desirable supplement. Karnéus was the Cardiff Singer of the World way back in 1995 and she made a much-admired Sibelius song recital. The highlight of the present issue is Haugtussa, Grieg's masterpiece among his song output, and these artists prove worthy of it. Excellent sound and authoritative notes by Robert Matthew-Walker.

Haugtussa (song-cycle), Op. 67; 6 Songs, Op. 48; Songs: Beside the stream; Farmyard song; From Monte Pincio; Hope; I love but thee; Spring; Spring showers; A swan; Two brown eyes; While I wait; With a waterlily (sung in Norwegian)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  DG 477 6326. Von Otter, Forsberg

This recital of Grieg's songs by Anne Sofie von Otter and Bengt Forsberg is rather special. Von Otter commands an exceptionally wide range of colour and quality, and in Forsberg she has a highly responsive partner. Altogether a captivating recital, and beautifully recorded, too; it rightly won the Gramophone Solo Vocal Award in 1993 and was also the magazine's 'Record of the Year'. It now reappears in Universal's 'Gramophone Award Collection' at mid-price, with full documentation included.

Peer Gynt (Concert version by Alain Perroux; complete)

🔑 * Aeon ACD 0642 (2). Actors: Jennings, Gwynn; D. Jacobi (narrator); Singers: Henschel, Dam-Jensen, Koch; Le Motet de Genève Ens. Vocale, SRO, Tourniaire

Ibsen's epic play Peer Gynt in a complete performance, with Grieg's incidental music, can run to more than five hours. In achieving this concert version, Alain Perroux gave top priority to the 26 numbers of Grieg's complete score, presented in the context of a concise version of the dramatized story. So he devised a narrative to link the episodic story – superbly spoken here by Sir Derek Jacobi. The play itself is simply and sparsely dramatized and is here acted out in English translation, with Peer and the other characters brought convincingly to life in a folksy dialect. Peer himself is excellently played by Alan Jennings, while Inger Dam-Jensen sings Solveig's role. The musical performances include other soloists, an impressive choir of Trolls, and fine orchestral playing from the Suisse Romande Orchestra under Guillaume Tourniaire. With the most vivid recording Tourniaire's performance must be counted a great success – not the only way to approach this music (see below) but a convincing musical and dramatic experience. This, in spite of the inevitable fragmentation of a concise version which, inevitably, misses out much detail in the interest of a viable time-span of rather more than two hours. Full documentation includes a complete text of the vocal numbers, which are sung in Norwegian. A remarkable achievement.

Peer Gynt (complete dramatized version); Before a Southern Convent, Op. 20; Bergliot, Op. 42

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.570871/2. Actors: Sand, Jacobson, Gericke, Hivju, Galdos, Boys' & Girls' Choruses of Lund Cultural School, Malmö Chamber Ch. & SO, Engset

This is a full dramatized version like the Aeon set above, but with the spoken text pruned and spoken in Norwegian. This seems perverse in a recording designed for a market where most of the customers will understand English. Even so, it must be said that, even without a translation, this epic drama projects very well indeed when the music itself is played with the utmost freshness and is most vividly recorded.

Peer Gynt: extended excerpts

🔑  Virgin 5 45722-2. Mattei, Tilling, Hellekant, Ellerhein Girls' Ch., Estonian Nat. SO & Male Ch., Paavo Järvi

Peer Gynt: extended excerpts; Bridal Procession, Op. 19/2; 4 Norwegian Dances

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 65834-2. Dam-Jensen, L. Symphony Ch., RPO, Temirkanov

Paavo Järvi conducts his Estonian forces in warmly expressive, full-blooded readings of 20 items from Grieg's complete Peer Gynt music. There are several discs which offer more than the two popular orchestral suites, but Järvi's selection is more generous than most of them, simply omitting the items where spoken words predominate. The extra warmth of his performance is helped by full, forward sound, recorded in a rather reverberant acoustic. His account of the celebrated number, In the Hall of the Mountain King, is very exciting, with a wild accelerando and vigorous vocal contributions. Though their roles are limited, the three soloists are first rate, with the baritone, Peter Mattei, giving a virile portrait of Peer Gynt in his Serenade.

Even though this repertoire is so well served on CD, Temirkanov's fine RCA disc should not be passed by. He seems to have an innate feeling for Grieg, and this is one of his very finest records. He offers 16 numbers from Peer Gynt and has a vigorous response from the London Symphony Chorus (who are enthusiastically angry trolls in The Hall of the Mountain King), while he conjures most sensitive playing from the RPO. Moreover, he also includes sprightly, colourful and dramatic accounts of the Four Norwegian Dances, while the delightful Bridal Procession is a closing lollipop. The resonance means that the choral focus is not absolutely sharp, but in all other respects the recording is excellent.

(i) Peer Gynt: excerpts; In Autumn (overture); An Old Norwegian Romance with Variations; Symphonic Dance 2

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  EMI 5 66914-2. (i) Hollweg, Beecham Ch. Soc., RPO, Beecham

Beecham showed a very special feeling for this score, and to hear Morning, the gently textured Anitra's Dance or the eloquent portrayal of the Death of Aase under his baton is a uniquely rewarding experience. Ilse Hollweg makes an excellent soloist. The recording dates from 1957 and, like most earlier Beecham reissues, has been enhanced by the remastering process. The most delectable of the Symphonic Dances, very beautifully played, makes an ideal encore after Solveig's Lullaby, affectingly sung by Hollweg. The In Autumn overture, not one of Grieg's finest works, is most enjoyable when Sir Thomas is so persuasive, not shirking the melodramatic moments. Finally for the present reissue, we are offered An Old Norwegian Romance with Variations (not previously released in its stereo format). It is a piece of much colour and charm, which is fully realized here.

Peer Gynt: Suites 1 & 2; Bell Ringing, Op. 54/6; Funeral March in Memory of Rikard Nordraak; Old Norwegian Romance with Variations

🔑 * BIS-SACD 1591. Bergen PO, Ruud

Ole Ruud's BIS SACD is now a clear first choice for the two Peer Gynt Suites. The freshness of Morning recalls Beecham, and the string playing in the Death of Aase, Anitra's Dance and Solveig's Song has exquisite delicacy of feeling; yet In the Hall of the Mountain King, opening gently, accelerates to a terrific climax, demonstrating the recording's wide range. The Funeral March is powerfully and sombrely played and the charming Old Norwegian Melody with Variations (another Beecham speciality) makes a vivid contrast, with Bell Ringing a spectacular encore. Excellent playing and superb recording, especially when heard in surround sound.

Peer Gynt: Overture; Suites 1–2; Lyric Pieces: Evening in the Mountain; Cradle Song; Sigurd Jorsalfar: Suite, Op. 56; Wedding Day at Troldhaugen, Op. 65/6

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550140. CSSR State PO, Košice, Gunzenhauser

A generous Grieg anthology on Naxos (70 minutes, all but 3 seconds) and the performances by the Slovak State Philharmonic Orchestra in Košice are very fresh and lively and thoroughly enjoyable. There is wide dynamic range both in the playing and in the recording, and sensitivity in matters of phrasing.

GRIFFES, Charles Tomlinson (1884–1920)

Bacchanale; Clouds; The Pleasure-Dome of Kubla-Khan; (i) Poem for Flute and Orchestra; 3 Tone-Pictures (The Lake at Evening; The Vale of Dreams; The Night Winds); The White Peacock. (ii) 3 Poems of Fiona McLeod (The Lament of Ian the Proud; The Dark Eyes to Mine; The Rose of the Night)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559164. Buffalo PO, Falletta; with (i) Wincenc; (ii) Quintiliani

This invaluable disc gives a warm and colourful portrait of this late-romantic American composer, sadly short lived. It includes not only his three best-known orchestral works, but a clutch of rarities as well, otherwise unavailable on disc. The shimmering beauty of his writing matches that of Debussy on the one hand, Delius on the other, with his inspiration regularly coming from English literature. Apart from Debussy and Ravel, Griffes was drawn to Mussorgsky and Scriabin, as well as to oriental music. The White Peacock (1915) comes from a suite for piano (Four Roman Sketches), which he later scored for orchestra. The Pleasure-Dome of Kubla Khan (1919) and the Poem for Flute and Orchestra (1918) are probably his masterpieces. Performances here are outstanding and very well recorded, with JoAnn Falletta as music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic drawing refined and atmospheric performances from her players, with Barbara Quintiliani as the bright soloist in the songs and Carol Wincenc, principal flute in the orchestra, a most sympathetic soloist in the Poem. This fine compilation fills an important gap in the catalogue.

Roman Sketches: The White Peacock; Nightfall; The Fountain of the Acqua Paola; Clouds

🔑  ASV Gold GLD 4020. LSO, Pittau – KORNGOLD: Symphonic Serenade ***

Charles Griffes, the American impressionist composer, is most remembered for The White Peacock, but all four of the richly evocative miniature tone-poems here have the shimmering, sensuous textures that made that piece famous, with influences from Debussy, Delius and Respighi glowingly apparent. Yet the music is still all his own, and it is very beautifully played and recorded here, with the similarly luscious Korngold Symphonic Serenade as an ideal coupling. Demonstration sound quality.

GROFÉ, Ferde (1892–1972)

Grand Canyon Suite

🔑 Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80086 (with additional cloudburst, including real thunder). Cincinnati Pops O, Kunzel – GERSHWIN: Catfish Row ***

Ⓜ (*) RCA (ADD) 82876 67904-2. O, Gould – COPLAND: Billy the Kid ; Rodeo **(*)

The Cincinnati performance is played with great commitment and fine pictorial splendour. What gives the Telarc CD its special edge is the inclusion of a second performance of Cloudburst as an appendix with a genuine thunderstorm laminated on to the orchestral recording. The result is overwhelmingly thrilling, except that in the final thunderclap God quite upstages the orchestra, who are left trying frenziedly to match its amplitude in their closing peroration.

Morton Gould's account of the Grand Canyon Suite is as spectacular as you could want. The 1960 recording was made in RCA Victor's ballroom studio in New York's Manhattan Center, with the orchestra repositioned during the recording for maximum sonic effect. The horns, for instance, were separated and relocated round the room for the succession of horn calls which open the Sunset movement, and elsewhere echo-chamber effects were used, notably for the trombone duet in On the Trail, during which the players used megaphones. A similar treatment was given to the strings at the opening of the Cloudburst sequence.

(i) Grand Canyon Suite; (ii) Mississippi Suite

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 442 9496. (i) Detroit SO, Dorati; (ii) Eastman-Rochester O, Hanson – GERSHWIN: Porgy & Bess Symphonic Picture *

Antal Dorati has the advantage of a superlative Decca recording, very much in the demonstration class, with stereoscopically vivid detail. Yet the performance combines subtlety with spectacle, and this version is very much in a class of its own. The Mississippi Suite, a much lesser piece, is also persuasively presented, in the vivid Mercury manner, especially the exuberant portrait of Huckleberry Finn. But the canyon storms rage much more spectacularly on the Telarc version.

GUARNIERI, Carmargo (1907–93)

Symphonies 2 (Uirapuru); 3. Abertura Concertante

Ⓝ  BIS CD-1220. São Paulo SO, John Neschling

Guarnieri was a native of São Paulo, though he studied briefly in Paris with Koechlin. Best known for his piano music (which aspiring pianists used to play at BBC auditions), his symphonies are colourful and exuberant, full of vitality and impetus. They are very well played and recorded here, and this CD is worth exploring.

GUERRERO, Francisco
(1528–99)

Missa Sancta et Immaculata; Hei mihi, Domine; Lauda mater ecclesia; Magnificat septimi toni; O lux beata Trinitas; Traha me post te, virgo Maria; Vexilla Regis

Ⓝ (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55313. Westminster Cathedral Ch., O'Donnell

A boy chorister and brilliant instrumentalist in his youth, Guerrero spent virtually his entire career as maestro at Seville Cathedral. His Missa Sancta et immaculata is based on the celebrated four-part motet of that name by his one-time master, Christobel de Morale. The two serene motets, Hei mihi, Domine and Trahe me post te, virgo Maria, and the three hymns composed for Passion Sunday are of striking quality and character. The Westminster Cathedral Choir and James O'Donnell give performances of quite outstanding eloquence and poetry and the recording is first class.

GUILMANT, Félix Alexandre (1837–1911)

Symphony 1 for Organ & Orchestra, Op. 42

🔑  Chan. 9271. Tracey (organ of Liverpool Cathedral), BBC PO, Tortelier – WIDOR: Symphony 5  ; POULENC: Organ Concerto **(*)

This Guilmant Symphony (the composer's own arrangement of his First Organ Sonata) is a real find, with all the genial vigour of the famous work of Saint-Saëns. The first movement has a galumphing main theme and an equally pleasing secondary idea. It is followed by a tunefully idyllic Pastorale (with some delicious registration from Ian Tracey) and a rumbustiously grandiloquent finale. All great fun, and well suited to the larger-than-life resonance of Liverpool Cathedral with its long reverberation period.

Symphony 2 for Organ & Orchestra, Op. 91

 Chan. 9785. Tracey (organ of Liverpool Cathedral), BBC PO, Tortelier – FRANCK: Choral 2; WIDOR: Symphony 3 ***

Guilmant's Second Symphony is a hugely effective transcription of his Eighth Organ Sonata. It opens gently with an anticipatory, fanfare-like figure on the violins; then, after the grandiose organ entry with tutti, the allegro sets off with infectious vigour. The Adagio con affetto is romantic but still reminds us we are in a cathedral, as does the shorter Andante sostenuto, which follows the rumbustious Scherzo. The finale opens evocatively and then becomes instantly animated, working towards a splendidly grandiloquent ending. The performance has great gusto and, if the wide resonance of Liverpool Cathedral prevents any chance of internal clarity, it certainly gives the music a superb impact. Full marks to the Chandos engineers.

GURNEY, Ivor (1890–1937)

Songs: All night under the moon; An epitaph; Bread and cherries; By a bierside; The cloths of Heaven; Cradle song; Desire in spring; Down by the Salley Gardens; Epitaph in old mode; 5 Elizabethan Songs; Even such is time; The fields are full; The folly of being comforted; Hanacker mill; In Flanders; I will go with my father a-ploughing; Most holy night; Nine of the clock; Severn Meadows; The singer; You are my sky

 Hyp. CDA 67243. Agnew, Drake

Ivor Gurney was born in Gloucester and became a chorister at the cathedral, later studying composition under Stanford and (after his wartime service) Vaughan Williams. Soldiering in the trenches in the First World War ruined his physical health, and probably led to a later mental deterioration and eventually complete mental collapse. But during his comparatively short creative life he composed over 300 songs, the best of which are among the finest settings in the English language, their pervasive dolorous mood often drawing parallels with Dowland. Paul Agnew moulds the melodic lines with great sensitivity, his use of vocal colour illuminating the words, and Julius Drake accompanies with natural understanding. The recording is excellent, and this is another fine addition to the Hyperion treasure-house of vocal recordings.

War Elegy

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7172. BBC SO, Lloyd-Jones – KELLY: Elegy: In Memoriam Rupert Brooke; ELKINGTON: Out of the Mist ; ELGAR: The Spirit of England; PARRY: The Chivalry of the Sea ***

This deeply moving orchestral piece offers a totally new view of the tragic Ivor Gurney. It is quite different from the charming songs and poems he wrote, even after he had been incarcerated in a mental home for 20 years of his life. That mental illness had been brought about by his terrible experiences in the trenches in the First World War, something which this piece directly reflects in a powerful funeral march. After a single rehearsal run-through in 1920, it was totally neglected, and here it receives its very first professional performance, superbly conducted. On a fascinating disc of war-inspired pieces it stands out as a heart-stopping work, chilling in its power.

PIANO MUSIC

Nocturnes: in A flat; B. 4 Unpublished Pieces: Despair; The Sea; Sehnsucht (Longing); Song of the Summer Woods. Preludes 1–9

Ⓜ (*) Somm CD038. Bebbington – FERGUSON: Bagatelles; Sonata ***

Ivor Gurney is remembered more for his songs (he was also a poet) than for his piano music. The four unpublished pieces written when he was in his late teens show a strong poetic feeling and, though the idiom is eclectic, there is a real emerging musical personality and a strong sense of Englishness. Most of these pieces cast a certain spell, despite a limited range of moods. Mark Bebbington plays them very sensitively.

HAAS, Pavel (1899–1944)

String Quartets 1, Op. 3; 3, Op. 15

 Sup. SU 3922-2. Pavel Haas Qt – JANÁČEK: String Quartet 1 ***

String Quartet 2 (From the Monkey Mountains), Op. 7

 Sup. SU 3877-2. Pavel Haas Qt – JANÁČEK: String Quartet 2 ***

Pavel Haas was destined to die in Auschwitz in 1944, so these superb recordings of his three Quartets by the eponymous Czech quartet are particularly welcome. The First, written in 1921, is short, powerful in utterance and succinct. The Second, subtitled From the Monkey Mountains and written four years later, has a distinctly bizarre flavour, and goes over the top in its finale with its jazz drumming. The Third Quartet (1938) is undoubtedly the finest of the three, passionate, pungent and heartfelt, with a closing set of variations, plus fugue, and has great vitality. Marvellous performances and the couplings are equally impressive both as performances and as recordings.

HAHN, Reynaldo (1875–1947)

Le Bal de Béatrice d'Este (ballet suite)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55167. New L. O, Corp – POULENC: Aubade; Sinfonietta ***

Le Bal de Béatrice d'Este is a charming pastiche, dating from the early years of the century and scored for the unusual combination of wind instruments, two harps, piano and timpani. Ronald Corp and the New London Orchestra play it with real panache and sensitivity.

Piano Concerto in E

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66897. Coombs, BBC Scottish SO, Ossonce – MASSENET: Piano Concerto ***

Entitled Improvisation, the opening movement of this charming work starts with a theme which surprisingly has an English flavour, easily lyrical, leading on to variations full of sharp, sparkling contrasts. A brief, light-hearted Scherzo leads to a combined slow movement (Reverie) and finale (Toccata). What Stephen Coombs's inspired performance demonstrates is that, though no deep emotions are touched, this is a delightful piece, well worth reviving.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Nocturne in E flat for Violin and Piano; Piano Quartet 3 in G; Romance; Si mes vers avaient des ailes (trans. for cello and piano); Soliloque et Forlane for Viola and Piano; Violin Sonata in C

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67391. Room-Music

Stephen Coombs, who is the pianist of Room-Music, here plays with great sensitivity and intelligence. So, too, do his companions, the violinist Charles Sewart, violist Yuko Inoe and Philip de Groote, cellist of the Chilingirian Quartet. The C major Violin Sonata of 1926 breathes much the same air as the Fauré of the Piano Quartets and the A major Sonata; and much the same goes for the shorter pieces: the Romance and the Nocturne. The Piano Quartet No. 3 reflects nothing of the darkness of the times. Its slow movement has all the enchantment of a balmy Mediterranean night. It has fluency and grace, and an innocent delight in life.

Piano Quintet in F sharp min.

 Hyp. CDA 67258. Coombs, Chilingirian Qt – VIERNE: Piano Quintet ***

Hahn's Piano Quintet is both compelling and fresh, although the debt to Fauré (not so much the later music as the Fauré of the A major Sonata and the Piano Quartets) is pervasive. Stephen Coombs and the Chilingirians play with conviction and character, and are given the benefit of present and vivid recorded sound.

Mélodies

L'Air; A Chloris; L'Automne; 7 Chansons grises; La Chère Blessure; D'une prison; L'Enamourée; Les Etoiles; Fêtes galantes; Les Fontaines; L'Incrédule; Infidélité; Offrande; Quand je fus pris au pavillon; Si mes vers avaient des ailes; Tyndaris

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55040. Hill, Johnson

If Hahn never quite matched the supreme inspiration of his most famous song, Si mes vers avaient des ailes, the delights here are many, the charm great. Martyn Hill, ideally accompanied by Graham Johnson, gives delicate and stylish performances, well recorded.

Melodies

 Hyp. CDA 67141/2. Lott, Bickley, Bostridge, Varcoe, L. Schubert Chorale, Layton, Johnson

This is the most comprehensive collection of Hahn songs ever recorded. As in his Schubert edition for Hyperion, Graham Johnson masterminds the project to give endless new insights, whether in his ideal choice of soloists, his inspired playing or his illuminating notes. Specially valuable are the ten Etudes latines, both pure and sensuous in their classical evocation. Fine, atmospheric sound.

'La Belle Epoque': Mélodies: A Chloris; L'Automne; D'une prison; L'Enamourée; Dans la nuit; Fêtes galantes; Les Fontaines; Fumée; L'Heure exquise; Infidelité; Je me souviens; Mai; Nocturne; Offrande;

Paysage; Le Printemps; Quand je fus pris au pavillon; Quand la nuit n'est pas étoilée; Le Rossignol des lilas; Si mes vers avaient des ailes; Trois jours de vendange; Etudes Latines: Lydé; Phyllis; Tyndaris

🔑  Sony SK 60168. Graham, Vignoles

The solemnity of Susan Graham's first song, A Chloris, with its Bachian pastiche may surprise those who think of Hahn as merely a dilettante tunesmith, and Graham finds the fullest range of expression in this charming collection. A good single-disc choice, made the more attractive by the glowing beauty of Graham's voice, sensuous in the most famous song, Si mes vers avaient des ailes. Fine, sensitive accompaniment from Roger Vignoles.

HALÉVY, Jacques Fromental
(1799–1862)

La Juive* (complete; DVD version)

 DG DVD 073 4001 (2). Shicoff, Stoyanova, Ivan, Zhang, Fink, Daniel, V. State Op. Ch. & O, Sutej (V/D: Johannes Muller – described as the DVD Producer, no video director identified)

Recorded at the Vienna State Opera in 2003, Gunter Kramer's production of Halévy's most famous opera seeks to make the story of Jewish persecution in 1414 relevant to today by updating it broadly to the 20th century. With Gentile characters and the chorus wearing Austrian traditional costume, 'Trachten', the date becomes slightly ambiguous. The central character of Eleazar, the Jew, is very much a figure such as the Nazis might have condemned, a characterization that Neil Shicoff relishes (as he does in the earlier CD set), singing nobly. His daughter, Rachel (touchingly sung by Krassimira Stoyanova), is later revealed to be adopted and in fact a Gentile, daughter of Eleazar's enemy, Cardinal de Brogni, powerfully sung by Walter Fink. Though Jianyi Zhang as Leopold is hardly a romantic figure, he sings with freshness and clarity, his tenor well contrasted with that of Shicoff. Simina Ivan as Princess Eudoxie sings with sweetness and poise, and Boaz Daniel is fine as Ruggiero, firm and dark. Vjekoslav Sutej draws warmly expressive playing and singing from the orchestra and chorus, making the most of melodramatic situations even when backed by less than inspired music. Bright, forward sound. The second disc contains an hour-long bonus in two films, 'Finding Eleazar', a portrait of Shicoff, and a film of Shicoff singing one of his big arias as directed by Sidney Lumet in New York.

HALVORSEN, Johan (1864–1935)

Air norvégien, Op. 7; Danses norvégiennes

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550329. Kang, Slovak (Bratislava) RSO, Leaper – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto; SINDING: Légende; SVENDSEN: Romance ***

Dong-Suk Kang plays the attractive Danses norvégiennes with great panache, character and effortless virtuosity, and delivers an equally impeccable performance of the earlier Air norvégien.

Askeladden: Suite; Gurre (Dramatic Suite), Op. 17; The Merchant of Venice: Suite

 Simax PSC 1198. Latvian Nat. SO, Mikkelsen

Festival March; Kongen (The King): Suite; Tordenskjold (Suite); Vasantasena: Suite

 Simax PSC 1199. Latvian Nat. SO, Mikkelsen

Halvorsen composed extensively for the stage. The suite from The Merchant of Venice on the first CD is second-rate salon stuff, but that is the only disappointment. The music to Holger Drachmann's play Gurre is not only expertly laid out for the orchestra but delightfully fresh. The idiom is indebted to Grieg but he obviously knew his Berlioz and Svendsen. Sommernatsbryllup ('Summer night's wedding') has much charm and brilliance and so has the opening Aftenlandskap ('Evening scene'), an atmospheric and appealing piece. Askeladden is a play for children, and the suite recorded here has abundant charm. The second disc brings music for Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson's play, Kongen ('The King'), whose delightful second movement, Hyrdepigernes Dans ('Dance of the Shepherdesses') is quite irresistible; it is difficult to get it out of your head. Vasantasena aspires to an oriental exoticism which is quite endearing and charming. The Latvian National Orchestra play splendidly for Terje Mikkelsen, and the recording is state of the art, with beautifully transparent strings and with plenty of space round the sound.

HANDEL, George Frideric
(1685–1759)

'Masterworks': (i) Concerti grossi, Op. 3/1–6; Op. 6/1–12; (ii) Concerto grosso in C (Alexander's Feast); (iii) Concerti a due cori 1–3; (iv; i) Oboe Concertos 1–3; Largo in F; Arrival of the Queen of Sheba (Solomon); (v; i) 12 Organ Concertos, Op. 4/1–6; Op. 7/1–6; 13 (Cuckoo & Nightingale); 14–16; Sonata: Il Trionfo del Tempo e del Disinganno; (i) Music for the Royal Fireworks; Water Music (Suites 1–3); (vi) Flute Sonatas: in E min. & D; Halle Flute Sonatas 1–3; (vii) 6 Trio Sonatas, Op. 2; Trio Sonatas in F & G min.; (viii) 4 Coronation Anthems; (viii–ix) Dixit Dominus; (viii; x) Nisi Dominus; (viii; xi) Dettingen Anthem & Te Deum; (xii) Giulio Cesare in Egitto (complete); (xiii) Hercules (complete); (xiv) Israel in Egypt (complete); (xv) Judas Maccabaeus (complete); (xvi) Messiah (complete; 1739 version); (xvii) Ode for St Cecilia's Day; (viii; xviii) Salve Regina; (xix) Solomon (complete)

Ⓝ (BB) * Decca (ADD/DDD) 478 1190 (30). (i) ASMF, Marriner; (ii) L. Philomusica, Granville Jones; (iii) AAM, Hogwood; (iv) R. Lord; (v) Malcolm; (vi) Bennett, Kraemer, Vigay; (vii) Bennett, Latchem or Petri, with Sillito, Cuckson or Malcolm; (viii) Westminster Abbey Ch. & O, or E.

Concert, Preston; (ix) Augér, Dawson, Montague, Nixon, Birchall; (x) Montague, Mark Ainsley, Birchall; (xi) Tipping, H. Christophers, Varcoe, Pearce; (xii) Mijanovi , Kožená, Hellekant, Von Otter, Mehta, Ewing, Bertin, Ankaous, Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski; (xiii) Tomlinson, Walker, Rolfe Johnson, J. Smith, Denley, Savidge, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner; (xiv) Gritton, Crabtree, Chance, Ogden, Bostridge, Varcoe, Vivian, East, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Brandenburg Consort, Cleobury; (xv) R. Davies, Palmer, J. Baker, Shirley-Quirk, Keyte, Esswood, Wandsworth School Ch., ECO, Mackerras; (xvi) Ameling, Reynolds, Langridge, Howell, ASMF & Ch., Marriner; (xvii) Lott, Rolfe Johnson, E. Concert Ch. & O, Pinnock; (xviii) Augér; (xix) Scholl, Dam-Jensen, Gritton, Hagley, Bickley, Agnew, Harvey, Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

The Decca bargain 'Masterworks' 30-disc compilation consists primarily of vintage modern-instrument recordings of the highest quality which we have continued to praise over the years. The contribution of Marriner and the ASMF is considerable, and the chamber music, with many top musicians contributing, is also highly distinguished. As for the vocal section, there are countless starry names here, and the selection includes complete versions of six key operas and oratorios. Of course, such a compilation cannot begin to cover the amazing range of Handelian repertoire now on record, but there are many favourite works here, and virtually nothing to disappoint. This would certainly make a fine basis for a Handelian library and, while texts are not included, the documentation is otherwise excellent. Highly recommended.

Ariodante (suite): Overture; Sinfonia pastorale; Ballo. Il Pastor Fido (suite): Overture; March: Air pour les chasseurs I & II

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2440. ASMF, Marriner – GLUCK: Don Juan ***

These two highly attractive suites are played with grace and fine rhythmic point by Marriner and his splendid orchestral group. A fine bonus for the superb Gluck ballet, with vintage Argo (1971) sound.

Concerti grossi, Op. 3/1–6 (including 4b), HWV 312–17

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55075. Brandenburg Cons., Goodman

Roy Goodman's set achieves the best of both worlds by including the spurious (but very engaging) No. 4b and, like Hogwood, using an authentic version of No. 6, yet featuring the concertante organ at its close as a bonus. The playing is rhythmically spirited and enjoyably light and airy: this is period-instrument music-making at its most seductive, helped by some delightfully sensitive flute and oboe contributions from Rachel Brown and Katharina Arfken respectively. First-class recording, natural and transparent, with a pleasing ambience. A fine bargain.

Concerti grossi, Op. 3/1–6

🔑 * HM HMU 907 415. AAM, Egarr

(BB)  Naxos 8.553457. N. Sinfonia, Creswick

Richard Egarr's Gramophone Award-winning performance with the freshly minted Academy of Ancient Music now takes its place at the top of the list of recommendations for those wanting period instruments. Ignoring his predecessor Christopher Hogwood's suggestions about the finale being inauthentic, he returns to the usual two-movement Sixth Concerto with its concertante organ and even interpolates an 'improvised' middle section which he plays himself. The other attraction of the disc is the bonus encore, a lively 'concerto' for solo violin and strings which Pavlo Beznosiuk despatches with aplomb, especially the sparkling finale. Throughout, the Academy play with characteristic athleticism, but with no suggestion of acid in the strings, and there is also a total lack of sentimental feeling in the espressivo of slow movements. Excellent recording.

Barry Creswick and his excellent Northern Sinfonia provide a most enjoyable modern-instrument version of Op. 3. They do not include No. 4b, nor give us the revised version of No. 6, but neither do most of their competitors, and with excellent playing throughout, freshly paced and most truthfully recorded, this is excellent value.

Concerti grossi, Op. 3/1–6; Op. 6/1–12

Ⓜ  Avie AV 2065 (3). Handel & Haydn Soc., Boston, Hogwood

Ⓜ  Decca 475 8673 (3). ASMF, Marriner

Avie have taken over from Decca/Oiseau-Lyre Hogwood's recordings of Opp. 3 and 6, recorded in 1988 and 1991/2 respectively, and have reissued the whole series very economically on three discs. The performance of Op. 3 with his excellent Boston players has no lack of energy and life and a fairly high degree of polish. Hogwood's characteristically astringent rhythmic style is then heard at its most vital in Op. 6. The playing brings bracingly brisk tempi and here there is no question of any lack of refinement, with transparency of texture rather than sonority paramount. Two harpsichords and an arch-lute are used as continuo.

The integral Decca recording of the Handel Concerti grossi makes a permanent memorial of the partnership formed by the inspired scholarship of Thurston Dart and the interpretative skill and musicianship of Neville Marriner and his superb ensemble, at their peak in the late 1960s. Dart planned a double continuo of both organ and harpsichord, used judiciously to vary textural colour and weight. Alas, the first-class CD transfer for this reissue among Decca's Originals brings no cues for individual movements, only one band for each work.

Concerti grossi, Op. 6/1–12

🔑  Chan. 9004/6. I Musici de Montréal, Turovsky

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*)Decca O-L 478 0319 (3). Il Giardino Armonico, Antonini

(*) Telarc CD 80253 (Nos. 1–6); CD 80688 (Nos. 7–12). Boston Bar., Pearlman

I Musici de Montréal offer a refreshing and stimulating set of Handel's Opus 6. The group uses modern instruments and Yuli Turovsky's aim is to seek a compromise between modern and authentic practice by paring down vibrato in some of the expressive music. The concertino, Eleonora and Natalya Turovsky and Alain Aubut, play impressively, while the main group (6.3.1.1) produces full, well-balanced tone, and Handel's joyous fugues are particularly fresh and buoyant. Turovsky paces convincingly, not missing Handel's breadth of sonority and moments of expressive grandeur.

Antonini's new set of Opus 6 has been enthusiastically received in some quarters, but for us it has an aspect which prevents an unqualified recommendation. Antonini restores ('and expands') the oboe parts in Nos. 1, 2, 5, and 6 and the playing throughout is dramatic, full of vitality and certainly responsive to the music's expressive qualities. If one samples the famously melodic aria: Larghetto e piano in No.12, one finds it is gently paced to uncover its simple charm. But Il Giardino Armonico here consists of only eight players (including a continuo of archlute and tripleharp), and one listens in vain for the richness of sonority found in the competing set from Turovsky and earlier versions featuring the ASMF. Moreover, fortissimos and frequent sforzandos have a sharp cutting edge, which we found becomes tiring to listen to. The recording itself cannot be faulted.

Pearlman's set was recorded in two groups, Nos. 1–6 in 1992 and the remainder in 2007. But the recording quality is consistently fine, as we would expect from Telarc. The performances are consistently warm and elegant, polished, without loss of vitality, and undoubtedly enjoyable. Yet in spite of the use of period instruments there is an absence of exhilaration and bite in the playing, and the full grandeur of Handel's inspiration only partly emerges.

Concerto grosso in B flat, Op. 6/7

 Ara. Z 6723. San Francisco Ballet O, Lark Qt, Le Roux – SCHOENBERG: Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra after Handel's Op. 6/7; ELGAR: Introduction & Allegro for Strings; SPOHR: Concerto for String Quartet & Orchestra ***

What a pleasure to hear a Handel Concerto grosso played for once on a full body of modern strings, emphasizing its warmth of sonority. But this is included as part of an imaginative concert of string music so that the listener can compare the original with Schoenberg's bizarre but aurally fascinating recomposed pastiche.

(i) Harp Concerto, Op. 4/6; Variations for Harp

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 425 723-2. Marisa Robles, (i) ASMF, Iona Brown – BOIELDIEU; DITTERSDORF: Harp Concertos, etc. **** ✿

Handel's Op. 4/6 is well known in both organ and harp versions. Marisa Robles and Iona Brown make an unforgettable case for the latter by creating the most delightful textures, while never letting the work sound insubstantial. The ASMF accompaniment, so stylish and beautifully balanced, is a treat in itself, and the recording is well-nigh perfect.

Oboe Concertos 1, HWV 301; 2, HWV 302a; 3, HWV 287; Sonatas for Oboe & Continuo in B flat, HWV 357; in F, HWV 363a; in G min., Op. 1/6, HWV 364a; in C min., Op. 1/8, HWV 366; Sonata in G min. for Oboe, Violins & Continuo, HWV 404

🔑 (BB) * Regis RRC 1106. Francis, L. Harpsichord Ens.

Oboe Concertos 1–3; Air & Rondo (ed. Camden); (i) Suite in G min. (ed. Camden); Otho: Overture

(BB)  Naxos 8.553430. Camden, (i) Girdwood; City of L. Sinfonia, Ward

Sarah Francis is a superb baroque oboist, at the same time directing the members of the London Harpsichord Ensemble with spirit and finesse. These performances are not only delightful but a model of style. A collection that leads the field, not least for its excellent sound. At its new Regis price it is a remarkable bargain.

Anthony Camden, for years principal oboe of the LSO, here makes a very welcome solo appearance on disc, playing with typical point and style, using his attractively reedy tone. The regular oboe concertos are well supplemented by the Suite in G minor as edited by Camden, where he is joined by the prize-winning Julia Girdwood on the second oboe. The Otho Overture too features prominent roles for oboes in duet. Ward and the City of London Sinfonia are sympathetic accompanists using modern instruments. First-rate sound from All Saints, East Finchley.

Organ concertos

Organ Concertos, Op. 4/1–6; Op. 7/1–6

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 62760-2 (2). Koopman, Amsterdam Bar. O

Organ Concertos, Op. 4/1–6; Op. 7/1–6; in F (The Cuckoo and the Nightingale), HWV 295; in A, HWV 296; in D min., HWV 304

🔑 (BB)  DG Trio 469 358-2 (3). Preston; Holliger (harp in Op. 4/6), E. Concert, Pinnock

Ton Koopman's paired sets of Opp. 4 and 7 now reappear on the Apex super-bargain label, complete on two CDs. They take precedence over all the competition, both as performances and as recordings. The playing has wonderful life and warmth, tempi are always aptly judged and, although original instruments are used, this is authenticity with a kindly presence, for the warm acoustic ambience of St Bartholomew's Church, Beek-Ubbergen, Holland, gives the orchestra a glowingly vivid coloration and the string timbre is particularly attractive. So is the organ itself, which is just right for the music.

Simon Preston's set of the major organ concertos returns to the catalogue, economically priced on a DG Archiv Trio. Ursula Holliger's solo contribution on a baroque harp is memorable, for she creates some delicious sounds. For those wanting a complete coverage of these engaging works this should serve admirably.

Organ Concertos, Op. 4/1–6

(BB)  Naxos 8.553835. Lindley, N. Sinfonia, Creswick

A most enjoyable and inexpensive modern-instrument performance of Op. 4 on Naxos, rhythmically jaunty and warmly expressive by turns and the piping reeds of the organ at Holy Cross Church, Fenham, seem very apt for the music. Not a first choice overall but an undoubted bargain.

Organ Concertos, Op. 4/1–6 (Chamber versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Avie AV 2055. Halls, Sonnerie, Huggett

Ⓝ  Decca 478 1465. Dantoni, Accademia Bizantina

Ⓝ  HM HMU 807466. Egarr, AAM

Matthew Halls presents these works on a Dutch Fama/Klop instrument, with a specification to meet all of Handel's demands. Monica Huggett's period-instrument accompaniments are similarly on a chamber scale, using a small string group, plus a pair of oboes (as used by Handel) in Nos. 1 and 4. The result is delightful. Matthew Halls is a superb soloist, improvising and decorating genially and stylishly without ever overdoing it. Moreover, the recording is beautifully balanced, the sound throughout wholly beguiling. The documentation is first class.

Two competing new versions of the Opus 4 Concertos bring a further choice, as both soloists direct the music from the keyboard. Dantoni uses the organ in Bartholomäuskirche in Handel's home city of Halle. It is a positive organ with six stops, built in the style of a small Bohemian instrument in 2007. Its characteristic sound is piquant but relatively more robust than the instrument used on Harmonia Mundi and balanced by his accompanying group of 16 players (with recorders used in No. 6).

Using a four-stop chamber organ built by Robin Jennings, Richard Egarr offers a pleasing set of smaller-scale performances, with his organ producing an even more piquant and modest timbre. He includes a special arrangement of the final concerto to accommodate a lute, as was included for the first performance in 1736 (together with Alexander's Feast). Overall these performances are more lightweight, but certainly not less appealing.

Organ Concertos: in G, Op. 4/1; in B flat, Op. 4/2

Ⓝ () Australian Decca Eloquence mono 480 0833. Demessieux, SRO, Ansermet – VIVALDI: Bassoon Concertos ; MARCELLO: Oboe Concerto ()

The two organ concertos here in well-balanced mono sound, dating from 1952, are performed with distinction by the distinguished Jeanne Demessieux – these are baroque concerto performances in unashamedly modern-instrument style at their best, now enjoying a new – and well-deserved – return to the catalogue.

Music for the Royal Fireworks (original wind scoring)

🔑 * Telarc CD 80038. Cleveland Symphonic Winds, Fennell – HOLST: Military Band Suites **** ✿

Music for the Royal Fireworks (original wind version; complete); Water Music Suite (arr. Harty); Concerto a due cori in F; Concertos 1 in F; 3 in D

🔑 ✿  Testament SBT 1253. L. Wind Ens., Pro Arte O, LSO, Mackerras

For a recording well over forty years old, this historic Testament (originally Pye) account of Handel's Fireworks Music is astonishing. Charles Mackerras in 1959 followed up the adventurous idea of using a band of no fewer than 62 wind players plus nine percussionists, echoing Handel's original Hyde Park ensemble in 1749. The result hits you between the ears, especially the rasping horns in the overture, thanks to full and spacious sound with a wide stereo spread. But far from sounding jaded, these leading players were challenged to give an electrifying performance. As a supplement comes a mono recording of the Minuets I and II with fireworks and cannon effects as background, a fun item demonstrating how important stereo is. The other items, more traditional in style, find Mackerras also blowing away cobwebs. Even the Water Music Suite as arranged by Harty sounds brighter and fresher than usual.

In 1978, in Severance Hall, Cleveland, Ohio, Frederick Fennell gathered together the wind and brass from the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra and recorded a performance to demonstrate spectacularly what fine playing and digital sound could do for Handel's open-air score with the sharpness of focus matched by the presence and amplitude of the sound-image.

Music for the Royal Fireworks; Water Music (complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG Entrée 474 168-2. Orpheus CO

Ⓝ Ⓜ DG 477 7562. E. Concert, Pinnock

Ⓝ (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH55375. King's Consort, King

Ⓑ  Virgin 545266-2. LCP, Norrington

(BB)  Naxos 8.550109. Capella Istropolitana, Warchal

Although modern instruments are used, such is the Orpheus' sense of baroque style, so crisp and buoyant are the rhythms, that the effect has much in common with a period performance without any of the snags. How warmly and elegantly they play the colourful and more intimate dances in the central G major Suite of the Water Music, and they begin with a riveting account of the Royal Fireworks Music, catching its sense of spectacle. Strings are used as Handel wished, but the wind and brass dominate. Alas, this outstandingly recorded CD has just been withdrawn.

Pinnock's Fireworks Music has tremendous zest and the Water Music too is very enticing. Speeds are consistently well chosen. One test is the famous 'Air', which here remains an engagingly gentle piece. The recording is beautifully balanced and clear and this 'Originals' reissue is a first choice for those wanting period-instrument performances.

Robert King was the first in 1989 to record a period performance of the Royal Fireworks Music using the full complement of instruments Handel demanded. It was quite an achievement assembling no fewer than 24 baroque oboists ('foreman Paul Goodwin') and 12 baroque bassoonists, nine trumpeters, nine exponents of the hand horn and four timpanists. It all makes for a glorious noise, and King's Handel style has plenty of rhythmic bounce, and the recording gives ample scale. The Water Music dates from 1997 and this is above all a performance of contrasts – between the elegant lighter dance movements with the playing warmly refined, and the set-piece allegros where the baroque horns and trumpets burst forth exuberantly. They always play with joyful vigour, and with as much weight and with more brightness than modern instruments. The strings are never edgy and often quite mellow, as in the famous 'Air'. The result is both successful and pleasing.

Norrington uses a full orchestra but highlights the bright trumpets and braying horns to give both works a vividly robust open-air flavour. The dance movements have grace, but a lively grace, and it is the consistent vitality that makes these performances so stimulating.

Bohdan Warchal directs the Capella Istropolitana in bright and lively performances of the complete Water Music as well as the Fireworks Music, well paced and well scaled, with woodwind and brass aptly abrasive, and with such points as double-dotting faithfully observed.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Sinfonia in B flat (for 2 flutes & continuo) (HWV 338); Flute Sonatas, Halle 1–3 (HWV 374/376; 378), Op. 1/1a (HWV 379); Oboe Sonatas in B flat (HWV 357), Op. 1/5 & 8 (HWV 363a & 366); Recorder Sonatas, Op. 1/2, 4, 7, 8a & 11 (HWV 360, 362, 365, 367a & 369); in B flat (HWV 377); Violin Sonatas in D min. (HWV 359a); Op. 1/3, 6, 9, 10, 12–15 (HWV 361, 364a, 367a, 368, 370/373); Fantasia in A (for violin & continuo), HWV 406; Trio Sonatas (for flute, violin & continuo), Op. 2/1–2 (HWV 386b & 387); (for 2 violins & continuo), Op. 2/3 (HWV 388); (for recorder, violin & continuo), Op. 2/4; (for 2 violins & continuo), Op. 2/5 (HWV 390a); (for 2 flutes & continuo), Op. 2/6 (HWV 391); 3 Dresden Trio Sonatas (for 2 violins & continuo), (HWV 392/3); in E (HWV 394); Trio Sonatas in E min., (HWV 395); (for 2 oboes & continuo), Op. 5/1 (HWV 396); Op. 5/2 (for 2 violins & continuo); Op. 5/3 (for flute, violin & continuo); Op. 5/4–5 (for 2 violins & continuo) (HWV 396/400); Op. 5/6 (for 2 oboes and continuo); Op. 5/7 (for 2 violins & continuo) (HWV 401/402); in C (Saul) (HWV 403); in F (for 2 recorders & continuo) (HWV 405)

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD/DDD) 470 893-2 (9). Academy Chamber Ens.

This remarkable achievement of Philips in recording virtually all Handel's chamber music in London between 1982 and 1984 with a group of outstanding instrumentalists has lain dormant in the catalogue for two decades. Yet it is an enterprise that can be compared with the Beaux Arts' set of Haydn's Piano Trios in both its enterprise and its excellence in terms of performance and outstandingly natural recording quality. As can be seen below, many of the wind sonatas are available separately on a Duo set and are discussed there, but now the whole survey arrives in a bargain box, admirably documented. In short, this set is an endless source of stimulation and pleasure and can be very strongly recommended.

Flute Sonatas; Oboe Sonatas & Violin Sonatas; Recorder Sonatas; Trio Sonatas (complete)

(BB) (*) CRD (ADD) CRD 5002 (6). L'Ecole d'Orphée

The complete period-instrument recording by L'Ecole d'Orphée of Handel's chamber music involves outstanding artists like Stephen Preston (flute) and David Reichenberg (oboe), and the string players are led by John Holloway. The playing is distinguished, the recording excellent, and the new bargain box is handsomely packaged. The one great snag, carried over from the separate CD issues, is the absence of cues for individual movements, so these records are more difficult to delve into than the original LPs. They are very good value just the same, and the documentation cannot be faulted.

Flute Sonata in D, Op. 2/4, HWV 378; Oboe Sonata in C min., Op. 1/8, HWV 366; Recorder Sonata in A min., Op. 4, HWV 362; Trio Sonatas in F, Op. 2/4, HWV 389; in F, Op. 5/6, HWV, 401; Violin Sonata in D, Op. 1/13, HWV 371

Ⓝ (BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1294. L'Ecole d'Orphee

An attractively chosen selection from the CRD complete set of Handel's chamber music praised by us above, and with the cue points missing from the original discs now added.

Sonatas for Flute, Oboe, Recorder or Violin & Continuo, Op. 1/1, 1a, 1b, 2–8, 9a, 9b, HWV 359 a & b, 361/2; 363b, 364a, 365–6, 367a & b, 369, 371, 379; Halle Sonatas 1–3 (HWV 374–6); & HWV 357–8 & 377

 Hyp. CDA 66921/3. Beznosiuk, Beckett, Goodwin, Tunnicliffe, Wallfisch, Nicholson

The Hyperion set concentrates on Opus 1 although, illogically, four of the violin sonatas previously counted as being part of Handel's opus have been omitted as spurious (HWV 368 and 372–3). The fine Halle Sonatas have been included, plus some other miscellaneous works now considered to be authentic. The performances use period instruments and have the advantage of current practice, so both flute and oboe timbres have a strong baroque flavour, but the violins are less raw-timbred than the quality offered by L'Ecole d'Orphée; on the other hand, the playing itself is mellower and perhaps at times slightly less vital than on the more comprehensive CRD set.

Flute Sonatas: Op. 1/a; Halle Sonatas 1–3; Oboe Sonatas 1–2, HWV 357, 363a; Op. 1/5 & ; Recorder Sonatas, Op. 1/2, 4, 7 & 11 & HWV 367a & 377; Sinfonia in B flat for 2 Violins & Continuo, HWV 338; Trio Sonatas for 2 Flutes & Continuo & 2 Recorders & Continuo, HWV 395 & 405

🔑 (BB) * Ph. Duo (ADD) 446 563-2 (2). ASMF Chamber Ens.

This superb Philips Duo assembles virtually all the important Sonatas for wind instruments and continuo, plus a single (Sinfonia) Trio Sonata for two violins and continuo, on a pair of discs offered for the price of one. William Bennett uses a modern flute very persuasively in the Flute Sonatas and includes, besides the work from Opus 1 and the three Halle Sonatas, a more recent discovery from a Brussels manuscript.

Nicholas Kraemer and Denis Vigay provide admirable support, and the recording is most realistic and present. In the Recorder Sonatas Michala Petri plays with her customary virtuosity and flair, and Neil Black is marvellously accomplished in the Oboe Sonatas. Both artists share an excellent rapport with their continuo players, who include George Malcolm (harpsichord), Denis Vigay (cello) and Graham Sheen (bassoon), and again the sound is exemplary, natural and spacious. Only those seeking original instruments need look elsewhere.

Flute or Alto Recorder Sonatas: Op. 1/2, 4, 7, 9 & 11; in B flat

 HM HMU 907151. Verbruggen, Koopman, Linden

Marion Verbruggen uses modern copies of two alto recorders from the early 18th century and a similar voice flute in D; the sounds here are appealingly mellow, with the continuo featuring cello, harpsichord and chest organ. The effect is intimate, expressive and lively by turns, but with no attempt at self-conscious bravura. The recording is beautifully balanced.

(i; ii) Recorder Sonatas, Op. 1/2, 4, 7, 9 & 11; 7 in B flat; (ii) Harpsichord Suite 7 in G min.

 Guild GMCD 7301. (i) Davis; (ii) Ponsford

Alan Davis's piping recorder is robust in colour, his playing most engaging, and he does not over-ornament, so the melodic line is never fussy. He is very well accompanied by David Ponsford, who also gives a fine performance of the G minor Harpsichord Suite.

Recorder Sonatas, Op. 1/2, 4, 7, 11; HWV 367a, 377

 BIS CD 955. Laurin, Masaaki & Hidemi Suzuki

Dan Laurin is a virtuoso recorder player to match Michala Petri (although with less charm), and his decoration is ever impressive. He is readily matched by Hidemi Suzuki on his baroque cello (their performance of the Furioso movement in HWV 367a is hair-raising), and Masaaki Suzuki completes the partnership on the harpischord. The balance is excellent, within a pleasing acoustic. However the content is ungenerous for a full-priced CD.

Recorder Sonatas, Op. 1/2, 4, 7, 11; in D min. (Fitzwilliam), HWV 367a; Trio Sonata in F, HWV 405; Favourite Air (Lelio's Aria from 'Scipio'); Gavotte, HWV 604; Gigue, HWV 599; Minuet, HWV 603

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550700. Czidra, Harsányi, Pertis, Keleman

A particularly attractive and generous anthology. These Hungarian musicians are first-class players and their accounts of the sonatas from Op. 1 and the Trio Sonata (for two recorders and continuo) are second to none. The encores (for various combinations) are most engaging, especially the Gavotte and Gigue. The recording is excellent.

Trio Sonatas, Op. 2/1–6 (HWV 386–91) (complete)

 Avie AV 0033. Huggett, Benjamin, Crouch, Hazelzet, Halls

Handel's set of Trio Sonatas, Opus 2, was published by Walsh as being suitable for a pair of violins, oboes or flutes, but this was a publishing gambit to secure more sales, and they are best suited for a pair of violins. The First Sonata is available in an alternative version, often performed on oboes; however, here Wilbert Hazelzet plays the upper part on a flute, and this works admirably. Not surprisingly with this cast list, these period performances are of high quality, catching the Handelian sprightliness and nobilty of melodic line (especially when Matthew Halls chooses an organ for the continuo) and yet retaining the character of the Corellian Sonate da chiesa which was Handel's compositional pattern. First-class recording.

(i) Trio Sonatas, Opp. 2/5; 5/4 & 7 for 2 Violins & Continuo; Italian cantatas: (i; ii) Notte placida e cheta; (i; ii; iii) Tra la fiamme

🔑  Chan. 0620. (i) Purcell Qt (members); (ii) Bott; (iii) with Kershaw, Downer, Amherst, Manson

An entirely delightful recital. The Trio Sonatas are full of attractive invention, notably an impressive passacaglia in Op. 5/4, and they are used to frame and act as an interlude between the two Italian cantatas, ravishingly sung by Catherine Bott. The recording is ideally balanced.

Violin Sonatas, Op. 1/3, 6, 10, 12–13; in G, HWV 358; D min., HWV 359a; Allegro in C min., HWV 408; Andante in A min., HWV 412

🔑 * HM HMU 907259. Manze, Egarr (harpsichord)

Anyone looking for a complete set of Handel's Violin Sonatas on period instruments need look no further. The performances are buoyant and full of life. They have undoubted panache and easy virtuosity, and the eloquence of Andrew Manze's lyrical phrasing is immediately demonstrated by the opening Affetuoso of the D major, Op. 1/13, with which the programme begins. The period violin is vividly caught and the harpsichord is well placed in the attractively resonant sound-picture. Highly recommended.

KEYBOARD MUSIC

Keyboard Suites Sets 1 & 2: (i) 1 in A; (ii) 2 in F; 3 in D min.; (i) 4 in E min.; (ii) 5 in E; (i) 6 in F sharp min.; 7 in G min.; (ii) 8 in F min.

🔑 ❀ (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86540-2 (2). (i) Gavrilov; (ii) Richter

Keyboard Suites (i) 9 in G min.; (ii) 10 in D min.; 11 in D min.; (i) 12 in E min.; (ii) 13 in B flat; (i) 14 in G; (ii) 15 in D min.; (i) 16 in G min.

🔑 ❀ (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86543-2 (2). (i) Richter; (ii) Gavrilov – BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata 17 *** ❀

These superb recordings of the Handel Keyboard Suites were recorded by Sviatoslav Richter and Andrei Gavrilov at the Château de Marcilly-sur-Maulne during the 1979 Tours Festival. EMI have issued the set in first-class transfers, and in an economical format with Richter's famous 1961 account of Beethoven's D minor Sonata, Op. 31, No. 2, thrown in for good measure. The serenity and tranquillity of the slow movements and the radiance of the faster movements have never before been so fully realized.

Harpsichord Suites, Set 1: 1–8, HWV 426/433; 6 Fugues or Voluntariess for Organ or Harpsichord, HWV 605/10; Fugues: in F; E, HWV 611/12

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22045 (2). Nicholson (harpsichord)

Paul Nicholson's playing is admirable, full of life yet with a degree of intimacy that is very appealing. He has an ideal (unnamed) harpsichord, which is perfect for this repertoire and which is superbly recorded. Nicholson's crisp and stylish ornamentation is never fussy, and he is generous with repeats.

Harpsichord Suites, Set 1 (1720): 1–8; Set 2 (1733) 7–8; 9: Preludio (only)

 Chan. 0669 (Set 1, 1–5); Chan. 0688 (Set 1, 6–8; Set 2, 7–8; 9: Preludio). Yates (harpsichord)

Harpsichord Suites, Set 1 (1735): 1–6

 Chan. 0644 (3). Yates

Sophie Yates offers both sets of the Harpsichord Suites. She plays with flair and vivacity and has the exuberance and bravura – and, above all, the sense of style – that this music calls for.

Harpsichord Suites, Sets 1 & 2: 3; 8; 11; 13; 14; 15

Ⓜ  Lyrichord LEMS 8034 (2). Wolfe (harpsichord)

The Texan harpsichordist Paul Wolfe was a pupil and protégé of Wanda Landowska. He had a harpsichord specially built for him by Frank Rutkowski of Stoney Creek, Connecticut. It is a magnificent creature, dubbed by its maker 'the Queen Mary' because of its length – nine feet! It has two manuals with a range of just over five octaves, and seven pedals to alter and mute the timbre, and it includes a buff (or lute) stop which creates a dry, pizzicato sound. The range of colour is aurally fascinating and Wolfe makes the very most of the tonal and dynamic contrasts possible in Handel's music, especially in the variations. The playing itself is infectiously full of life; one's only comment is that Wolfe usually chooses to pace the Allemandes very slowly and grandly, even the Sarabande variée in the 11th Suite, which is based on La folia. The deep bass stop (also favoured by Landowska) can be heard to its fullest effect in the Prelude of the F minor Suite (No. 8), which provides a lively end to the second disc. The two-CD set, which has 85 minutes of music, is offered at a special price.

Keyboard Suite, Set 2, 1 in B flat (HWV 434)

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 61762-2. Schiff (piano) – BRAHMS: Variations & Fugue on a Theme of Handel; REGER: Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Bach ***

This is the Harpsichord Suite from which Brahms drew the theme of Handel's third-movement Aria con variationi for his own Variations and Fugue. András Schiff plays the Handel very stylishly, and then moves with hardly a pause straight on to the opening of the Brahms, presumably to avoid any interruption of applause, as these performances are taken from a live recital at the Concertgebouw in 1994. Excellent recording.

VOCAL MUSIC

Aci, Galatea e Polifemo (complete)

🔑  Virgin 2CD 5 45557-2 (2). Piau, Mingardo, Naouri, Le Concert d'Astrée, Haïm

A delightful new version of Aci, Galatea e Polifemo. Sandrine Piau gives the role a strong profile, and Sara Mingardo, a true Handelian, sings gloriously. What caps the newest version is Laurent Naouri's superbly resonant bass as the one-eyed giant, Polifemo. The Virgin recording is first class.

Acis and Galatea (complete)

 Erato 3984-25505-2 (2). Daneman, Petibon, Agnew, Cornwell, Ewing, Sinclair, Piolino, Le Monnier, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Acis and Galatea; Il pastor fido: Hunting Scene

Ⓑ  Double Decca 452 973-2 (2). Tear, Gomez, Langridge, Luxon, Ch. & ASMF, Marriner – Tear: 'Baroque Recital' ***

(i) Acis and Galatea; (ii) Cantata: Look Down, Harmonious Saint

 Hyp. CDA 66361/2. (i; ii) Mark Ainsley; (i) McFadden, Covey-Crump, George, Harre-Jones; King's Cons., King

Christie gives us a chamber performance with forces similar to those Handel used for the Canons performances. Tempi are inclined to be brisk and rhythms crisp but he has marshalled expert singers; Alan Ewing's Polyphemus is particularly good, well characterized and spirited. Indeed, the whole performance is full of life and personality, and William Christie holds everything together with finesse and grace. The sound, too, is well balanced and natural.

Robert King directs a bluff, beautifully sprung reading that brings out its domestic jollity. Using the original version for five solo singers and no chorus, this may be less delicate in its treatment but it is just as winning. The soloists are first rate, with John Mark Ainsley among the most stylish of the younger generation of Handel tenors, and the bass, Michael George, characterizing strongly. Claron McFadden's vibrant soprano is girlishly distinctive. This Hyperion issue provides a valuable makeweight in the florid solo cantata, thought to be originally conceived as part of Alexander's Feast, nimbly sung by Mark Ainsley.

The refinement and rhythmic lift of the Academy's playing under Neville Marriner make for a lively, engaging performance, marked by characterful solo singing from a strong team. The choruses are sung by a quartet drawn from a distinguished vocal sextet (Jennifer Smith, Margaret Cable, Paul Esswood, Wynford Evans, Neil Jenkins and Richard Jackson) and, with warmly atmospheric recording, the result is a sparkling entertainment. Robert Tear's tone is not always ideally mellifluous (for instance in Love in her eyes sits playing) but, like the others, he has a good feeling for Handelian style; the sweetness of Jill Gomez's contribution is a delight. The 1977 (originally Argo) recording is of vintage quality and this Double Decca reissue is made the more attractive by the inclusion of a further solo recital from Robert Tear of rare English baroque repertoire – music by Arne, Boyce and Hook, as well as Handel.

Agrippina condotta a morire; Figlio d'alte speranze; Notte placida e cheta; Un'alma innamorata (Italian Cantatas). Concerto a quattro

Ⓝ * BIS-SACD 1695. Kirkby, L. Baroque

Emma Kirkby's bright, pure voice is perfectly suited to these brilliant but generally lightweight inspirations of the young Handel's Italian period. The cantatas chosen are all for solo voice with modest instrumental forces. She is at her finest in Agrippina condotta a morire and brings real bravura to Figlio d'alte speranza. Light-hearted and sparkling performances to match. The Concerto a Quattro offered as a bonus is of doubtful authenticity.

Alexander's Feast; Concerto grosso in C (Alexander's Feast)

Ⓜ (*) Ph. 475 7774 (2). Watkinson, Robson, Brown, Stafford, Varcoe, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Gardiner's version of Alexander's Feast was recorded live at performances given at the Göttingen Festival. The sound is not distractingly dry, but it is still harder than usual on singers and players alike, taking away some of the bloom. What matters is the characteristic vigour and concentration of Gardiner's performance. Stephen Varcoe may lack some of the dark resonance of a traditional bass, but he projects his voice well. Nigel Robson's tenor suffers more than do the others from the dryness of the acoustic. The soprano Donna Brown sings with boyish freshness, and the alto numbers are divided very effectively between Carolyn Watkinson and the soft-grained counter-tenor Ashley Stafford. The Concerto grosso in C was given with the oratorio at its first performance.

L'allegro, il penseroso, il moderato

Ⓜ  Erato (ADD) 2292 45377-2 (2). Kwella, McLaughlin, Smith, Ginn, Davies, Hill, Varcoe, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Taking Milton as his starting point, Handel illustrated in music the contrasts of mood and character between the cheerful and the thoughtful. Then, prompted by his librettist, Charles Jennens, he added compromise in Il moderato, the moderate man. The sequence of brief numbers is a delight, particularly in a performance as exhilarating as Gardiner's, with excellent soloists, choir and orchestra. The recording is first rate.

Alla caccia Diana; Armida abbandonata; Notte placida e cheta; Tu fedel? tu costante; Un'alma innamorata (Italian Cantatas, Volume 2)

 Glossa GCD 921522. Galli, Invernizzi, La Risonanza, Bonizzoni (harpsichord)

Aminta e Fillide, Arresta il passo; Clori, mia bella Clori (Italian Cantatas, Volume 4)

Ⓝ  Glossa GCD 921 524. Rial, Schiavo, La Risonanza, Bonizzoni

Figlio d'alte speranze; Il delirio amaroso (Da quel giorno fatale); Pensieri notturno di Filli (Nel dolce dell'oblio); Tra le fiamme (Il consiglio) (Italian Cantatas, Volume 1)

 Glossa GCD 921521. Invernizzi, La Risonanza, Bonizzoni

Roberta Invernizzi has Volume 1 to herself, and she sings with a striking mixture of expressive feeling, even passion, and refinement. Her coloratura is as firm as her phrasing is stylish. In Volume 2 she is joined by Emanuela Galli who sings four of the five solo cantatas very dramatically and with finely nurtured intensity. Like her colleague, she has a natural, Italianate feeling for the words. Invernizzi joins her for Diana's lively hunting cantata (Alla caccia Diana) and again Bonizzoni directs the music with refreshing spontaneity. The pair of sopranos (Maria Grazia Schiavo and Nurial Rial) who take on Volume 4 of this rewarding series give an entirely delightful account of Aminta's wooing of Fillide, and Schiavo continues with an equally refined account of Clori, mia bella Clori. Both cantatas enjoy engagingly delicate support from the accompanying group, including some impressive contributions from the solo violins.The documentation too is excellent. This series sets a very high standard, and we look forward to further issues.

(i; ii) Amarilli vezzosa (Il duello amoroso); Clori, mia bella Clori; (i) O come chiare e belle (Italian Cantatas)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55136. Kwella, L. Handel O, Darlow; with (i) Fisher, (ii) Denley

The most ambitious work here is O come chiare e belle, a half-hour piece with allegorical overtones using three voices and written to compliment Pope Clement XI during the War of the Spanish Succession. As in most of the cantatas, some of the ideas are familiar from later versions, as in the aria, Tornami a vagheggiar, later used in Alcina, and here brilliantly sung by Gillian Fisher. The two shorter cantatas are equally charming, Clori, mia bella Clori for solo voice, the other a duet for soprano and contralto, well sung by Patrizia Kwella and Catherine Denley. Though Denys Darlow does not always lift rhythms enough, the freshness of the music is well caught.

(i) Amarilli vezzosa (Il duello amaroso); Mi palpita il cor; Nel dolce tempo; Vedendo Amor; Trio Sonata, Op. 2/1

 HM HMC 90 1957. (i) Scholl; Accademia Bizantina, Dantone; (i) with Guilmette

Andreas Scholl has chosen three pastoral cantatas composed by Handel while he was in Italy (where at the time opera was banned) and a fourth composed in London. He sings them very beautifully indeed with much subtlety of colour and dynamic. In Amarilli vezzosa he is joined in duet (between shepherd and shepherdess) with Hélène Guilmette, who sings with comparable refinement. The accompaniments are imaginatively supportive, and this will give pleasure to all admirers of this remarkable counter-tenor.

Aminta e Fillide (cantata)

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55077. Fisher, Kwella, L. Handel O, Darlow

In writing for two voices and strings, Handel presents a simple encounter in the pastoral tradition over a span of ten brief arias which, together with recitatives and final duet, last almost an hour. The music is as charming and undemanding for the listener as it is taxing for the soloists. This lively performance, beautifully recorded with two nicely contrasted singers, delightfully blows the cobwebs off a Handel work hitherto totally neglected. It is even more attractive on the bargain Helios label.

Apollo e Dafne (cantata); The Alchemist (incidental music)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555712. Pasichnyk, Pomakov, European Union Bar. O, Goodman

Roy Goodman, an alert, stylish interpreter of Handel, draws from his baroque orchestra, with its team of international players, a lively reading of this dramatic cantata on a classical theme, written by Handel at the beginning of his career during his stay in Italy. The Overture used here is the Allegro from the Concerto grosso Op. 3, No. 1, with the brisk sequence of brief arias and duets culminating in the longest aria, Cara pianta, with its expansive phrases well sustained by the young baritone, Robert Pomakov. As Dafne, Olga Pasichnyk sounds fresh and girlish. Voices are balanced, forward with the orchestra cleanly focused behind, despite distantly distracting reverberation. But with the attractive suite of incidental music from The Alchemist thrown in for good measure this is a good Naxos bargain.

Athalia (complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.554364/5. Scholl, Schlick, Holzhausen, Reinhold, Brutscher, MacLeod, Junge Kantorei, Frankfurt Bar. O, Martini

Very well cast and stylishly performed, using period instruments, the Naxos set makes an excellent bargain. Outstanding among the singers is Barbara Schlick as Josabeth, pure, sweet and expressive, and though Elisabeth Scholl in the title-role provides too little contrast with her rather boyish tone not really apt for this 'Jewish Clytemnestra', her attack is clean and fresh. The castrato role of Joad is taken by Annette Reinhold, who sounds uncannily like a low counter-tenor, firm and secure, with little vibrato. Good, undistracting recording.

Belshazzar (complete)

🔑 (B) * DG Trio 477 037-2 (3). Rolfe Johnson, Augér, Robbin, Bowman, Wilson-Johnson, E. Concert Ch. & O, Pinnock

(M) (*) Teldec 0630 10275-2 (3). Palmer, Lehane, Tear, Esswood, Van der Bilt, Stockholm Chamber Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

Handel modified Belshazzar over the years, and Pinnock has opted not for the earliest but for the most striking and fully developed text. The cast is starry, with Arleen Augér at her most ravishing as the Babylonian king's mother, Nitocris, Anthony Rolfe Johnson in the title-role, James Bowman as the prophet Daniel and Catherine Robbin as King Cyrus, all excellent. Full, well-balanced sound. This reissued Trio is a real bargain.

The drama is the more pointed when the soloists on Teldec, led by Felicity Palmer and Robert Tear, keep the story-line clearly in mind with their expressive enunciation of the words. The other soloists, too, are excellent, notably Paul Esswood with his fresh counter-tenor tone, and the bass, Peter van der Bilt. Most enjoyable of all is the singing of the fine Stockholm Choir, delectably light and pointed in some of the end-of-scene choruses.

Carmelite Vespers

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61579-2 (2). Feldman, Kirkby, Van Evera, Cable, Nichols, Cornwell, Thomas, Taverner Ch. & Players, Parrott

What Andrew Parrott has recorded here is a reconstruction by Graham Dixon of what might have been heard in July 1707 at the church of the Carmelite Order in Rome for the Festival of Our Lady of Mount Carmel. Dixon has put the motets and Psalm settings in an order appropriate for the service of Second Vespers, noting that it is not the only possible reconstruction. Of these, the only unfamiliar Handel piece is Te decus Virgineum – which makes this not quite the new experience promised but nevertheless an enjoyable way of hearing a magnificent collection of Handel's choral music. In a liturgical setting in 1707, women's voices would not have been used, but the sopranos and altos of the Taverner Choir produce an aptly fresh sound, as does the fine group of soloists, headed by an outstanding trio of sopranos: Emma Kirkby, Jill Feldman and Emily van Evera. The recording, made in St Augustine's, Kilburn, London, has a pleasant and apt ambience, which, however, does not obscure detail. At its modest price this reissue is well worth having.

Chandos Anthems 1–11, HWV 246–256 (complete)

🔑 (M)  Chan. 0554/7. Dawson, Kwella, Partridge, Bowman, George, Sixteen Ch. & O, Christophers

It is appropriate that a record label named Chandos should record a complete set of Handel's Chandos Anthems. This is now available on four CDs in a box (at mid-price) and marks one of the most successful and worthwhile achievements of The Sixteen on CD. From the first of these fine works, which Handel based on his Utrecht Te Deum, to the last with its exuberant closing Alleluja the music is consistently inspired; it has great variety of invention and resourceful vocal scoring. The recordings are well up to the house standard.

Chandos Anthems 7: My song shall be alway; 9: O praise the Lord with one consent; 11a: Let God arise

(N)  Hyp. CDA 67737. Kirkby, Iestyn Davies, Gilchrist, Neal Davies, Trinity College Ch., AAM, Layton

It looks as if Hyperion are beginning a new series of the Chandos Anthems with an excellent quartet of soloists (each of the four has a solo or duet spot in all three works, while the chorus is used to open and close each anthem). The modestly scaled performances are authentic in the best sense (the accompanying strings are sweet rather than edgy) and notable for their freshness: the present disc can be warmly recommended alongside the Chandos versions.

The Choice of Hercules (cantata)

 Hyp. CDA 67298. Gritton, Coote, Blaze, King's Consort Ch. & O, King – GREENE: Hearken unto Me ***

The Choice of Hercules is unique among Handel's works, a dramatic cantata to an English text in a single Act lasting 50 minutes, crisply telling the story of Hercules (taken by a counter-tenor, here the excellent Robin Blaze) making his choice between Virtue (the rich, firm mezzo, Anna Coote) and Pleasure (Susan Gritton, equally radiant). Robert King, in this work otherwise unavailable on disc, brings out the unquenchable freshness of invention that Handel retained even in his last years, with the choir and players of the King's Consort consistently responsive and resilient. The extended anthem by Handel's contemporary and rival, Maurice Greene, makes a valuable extra.

Coronation Anthems (complete). (i) Organ Concerto, Op. 4/4. Jephtha: Overture. Messiah: Worthy is the Lamb; Amen. Solomon: Arrival of the Queen of Sheba

Ⓝ 🔑 * Coro COR 16066. The Sixteen, Christophers; (i) with Ross

(i) Coronation Anthems (complete); (ii) Concerti a due cori 2–3, HWV 333/4

Ⓜ  DG 447 280-2. (i) Westminster Abbey Ch., Preston; (i–ii) E. Concert; (ii) Pinnock

(i) Coronation Anthems (complete); (ii) Ode for the Birthday of Queen Anne

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 466 676-2. (i) King's College, Cambridge, Ch., ECO, Willcocks; (ii) Kirkby, Nelson, Minty, Bowman, Hill, Thomas, Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Oxford, AAM, Preston

A splendid new set of the Coronation Anthems from Christophers and his fine chorus and orchestral group, with a nice set of encore lollipops to fill out the disc, including Alastair Ross's lively account of the most attractive of the Opus 4 Organ Concertos. Christophers opens the famous Zadok the Priest almost sotto voce and the choral entry is thus made the more cutting and resplendent.

Willcocks's famous 1961 recording of these four anthems sounds much better on CD than it ever did on LP, and is greatly enjoyable. They are coupled with a fine performance of the Ode for the Birthday of Queen Anne, recorded in the late 1970s, and sound very good indeed. An excellent CD from Australian Decca.

Those who like sparer, period textures will favour Preston in the Coronation Anthems where, although the result is less grand, the element of contrast is even more telling. To have the choir enter with such bite and impact underlines the freshness and immediacy, with characterful period playing. An exhilarating version. The new coupling of the two Concerti a due cori is welcome, with the performances full of rhythmic vitality.

Deborah (complete)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66841/2. Kenny, Gritton, Denley, Bowman, George, New College Ch., Oxford, Salisbury Cathedral Ch., King's Consort, King

Handel's 1733 oratorio, Deborah opens spectacularly with a fine trumpet overture which borrows fom the Fireworks Music. The cast is strong, with clear, bright singing from Yvonne Kenny in the name-role and Susan Gritton as Jael. James Bowman as Barak and especially Michael George as Abinoam make impressive contributions, and Catherine Denley is even more striking as Sisera. But what gives the set its distinction is the fine singing from the combined choristers of Salisbury Cathedral and the Choir of New College, Oxford, although the resonance does take some of the edge off the sound. Nevertheless, Robert King's direction is assured and stylish and this is most enjoyable.

Dettingen Te Deum; Dettingen Anthem

 DG 410 647-2. Westminster Abbey Ch., E. Concert, Preston

The Dettingen Te Deum is a splendid work, continually reminding one of Messiah, written the previous year. Preston's Archiv performance with the English Concert makes an ideal recommendation, with its splendid singing, crisp but strong, excellent recording and a generous, apt coupling. This setting of The King shall rejoice should not be confused with the Coronation Anthem of that name. It is less inspired, but has a magnificent double fugue for finale. The recording is first class.

Dixit Dominus; Coronation Anthem: Zadok the Priest

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 0927 48683-2. Palmer, Marshall, Brett, Messana, Morton, Thomson, Wilson-Johnson, Monteverdi Ch. & O, Gardiner

Dixit Dominus; Nisi Dominus; Salve Regina

Ⓜ  DG 477 6729. Westminster Abbey Ch. & O, Preston

Dixit Dominus; Nisi Dominus; Silete venti

 Chan. 0517. Dawson, Russell, Brett, Partridge, George, Sixteen Ch. & O, Christophers

Handel's Dixit Dominus is extremely florid and requires bravura from soloists and chorus alike. John Eliot Gardiner catches all its brilliance and directs an exhilarating performance, marked by strongly accented, sharply incisive singing from the choir and outstanding solo contributions. In high contrast with the dramatic choruses, the duet for two sopranos, De torrente, here beautifully sung by Felicity Palmer and Margaret Marshall, is languorously expressive, but stylishly so. Other soloists match that, and the analogue recording is first rate, making this reissue a real bargain.

Simon Preston draws ideally luminous and resilient singing from the Westminster Abbey Choir, with a fine team of soloists in which Arleen Augér and Diana Montague are outstanding. The playing of the orchestra of period instrumentalists, led by Roy Goodman, in every way matches the fine quality of the singing. However, this al fresco reissue omits any serious documentation.

Christophers's speeds tend to be more extreme, slow as well as fast, and the recorded sound, though full and well detailed, is less immediate. The Chandos issue gains from having a third item. Silete venti allows the silver-toned Lynne Dawson to shine even more than in the other items, ending with a brilliant Alleluia in galloping compound time.

Esther (1732 revised version; complete)

 Somm SOMMCD 238/9. Joshua, Outram, Osmond, Bickley, Bowman, Angus Smith, Kennedy, Watson, Purves, L. Handel Ch. & O, Cummings

Handel composed Esther for the Duke of Chandos-to-be – James Brydges. In 1732 he revised and expanded it to become a full-length oratorio, inserting the two best-known Coronation Anthems, including Zadok the Priest (with a new text), which are superbly performed here by the excellent London Handel Choir. Among the soloists are Susan Bickley and James Bowman (who has to cope with considerable complex coloratura), and the superb Christopher Purves. This is a live concert performance, and with Laurence Cummings directing such an impressive cast it cannot fail to be thoroughly rewarding.

(i) Gloria in B flat; (ii) Dixit Dominus

🔑 Ⓜ  BIS CD 301235. (i) Kirkby, Royal Ac. of Music Bar. O, Cummings; (ii) Martinpelto, Von Otter, Stockholm Bach Ch.; Drottningholm Bar. Ens., Ohrwall

The existence of the Gloria has been known for some time. But only in September 2000 was it positively identified as a work by Handel, and an inspired one too. It was appropriate that Emma Kirkby, the reigning queen of baroque, was given the privilege of making the first recording, accompanied by an excellent modern-instrument chamber group. She sings the florid opening exultantly and is even more impressive in the heady bravura of the closing Cum sancto spirito. Yet it is the beauty of her lyrical singing which stands out even more, and indeed her stylish control of ornamentation. The recording is vividly forward.

The performance of Dixit Dominus also has very fine soloists, although none quite to match Kirkby in easy flowing lines. But the chorus is equally important here and the singing of the Stockholm Choir has splendid vigour and bite.

(i) Gloria in B flat; Italian Cantatas: (ii) Mi palpita il cor; (iii) Pastorella vagha bella; (iv) Harpsichord Suite 3 in D min.

(*) Lyrichord LEMS 8055. (i; iii) Baird; (i) Queen's Chamber Band; (ii) Coid, Heller; (ii; iii) Seidenberg; (ii–iv) Comparone

The Lyrichord disc offers an attractively planned recital called 'Handel in Rome', combining vocal and instrumental music, and including the newly discovered Gloria, which is most stylishly accompanied by the Queen's Chamber Band. Julianne Baird has a warm, rich soprano voice, but it proves just a fraction unwieldy (especially heard alongside Dame Emma Kirkby) in the coloratura runs which end this work and also the charming Pastorella vagha bella. Both this and Mi palpita il cor have a neatly played continuo, and the latter includes a pleasing oboe obbligato from Marsha Heller. The counter-tenor Marshall Coid, who has a highly individual alto voice, also sings expressively, but again is a little insecure in his upper tessitura. However, this is still a rewarding programme, made the more so by the splendid account of the D minor Harpsichord Sonata by Elaine Comparone. (Its seven movements are split into three groups to make interludes between the vocal items.)

Israel in Egypt

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570966/7. Albino, Nils Brown, Modolo, Mahon, McLeod, Nedecky, Roach, Such, Watson, Aradia Ens., Mallon

(i) Israel in Egypt; Coronation Anthems: Zadok the Priest; The King shall Rejoice

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 4781374 (2). (i) Holton, Priday, Deam, Stafford, Chance, Collin, Kenny, Robertson, Salmon, Tindall, Tusa, Clarkson, Purves; Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

(i) Israel in Egypt: Lamentations of the Israelites for the Death of Joseph; (ii) The Ways of Zion do Mourn (funeral anthem)

🔑  Erato (ADD) 2292 45399-2 (2). (i) Knibbs, Troth, Greene, Priday, Royall, Stafford, Gordon, Clarkson, Elliott, Kendall, Varcoe, Stewart; (ii) Burrowes, Brett, Hill, Varcoe; Monteverdi Ch. & O, Gardiner

In his originally Philips version of Israel in Egypt Gardiner secures subtler playing from his period instruments, not just more stylish and generally more lightly sprung than in the earlier, Erato version, but conveying more clearly the emotional and dramatic thrust. So the start is more mysterious, and such illustrative numbers as the hopping of the frogs during the Plague choruses are even more delightfully pointed than before. As before, first-rate soloists have been chosen from the chorus, and the digital recording is full and well balanced. The Coronation Anthems are also winningly performed. At Duo price, this is even more of a first choice.

Using modern instruments, Gardiner made his Erato recording in 1978. The singing both of the chorus and of the 12 soloists chosen from its members is excellent, though, like all other modern recordings, this one slightly falls down in resonance on the most famous number, the duet for basses, The Lord is a Man of War. In almost every way Gardiner gains by presenting the Lamentations not as an introduction to the main oratorio, but as a supplement, with the same music given in its original form, with text unamended, as written for the funeral cantata for Queen Caroline. Excellent, full-bodied, analogue sound.

The Toronto performance by the excellent Aradia Ensemble, with its cast of experienced young soloists, is well sung and very well recorded, but the choral singing lacks the extra bite and vitality that bring this work, so dependent on choruses, vividly alive in the way that Gardiner's performances do.

Jephtha (CD versions)

Ⓜ  Decca 478 0398 (3). Robson, Dawson, Von Otter, Chance, Varcoe, Holton, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Ⓜ  Warner Teldec 2564 69258-7. Hollweg, Gale, Linos, Esswood, Thomaschke, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., Mozart-Sangerknaben, VCM, Harnoncourt

Gardiner's recording was made live at the Göttingen Festival in 1988, and though the sound does not have quite the bloom of his finest studio recordings of Handel, the exhilaration and intensity of the performance come over vividly, with superb singing from both chorus and an almost ideal line-up of soloists. Nigel Robson's tenor may be on the light side for the title-role, but the sensitivity of expression is very satisfying. Lynne Dawson, with her bell-like soprano, sings radiantly as Iphis, and the counter-tenor Michael Chance as her beloved, Hamor, is also outstanding. Anne Sofie von Otter is powerful as Storge, and Stephen Varcoe, with his clear baritone, again on the light side, is a stylish Zebul. As for the Monteverdi Choir, their clarity, incisiveness and beauty are a constant delight.

Harnoncourt's pursuit of extra authenticity, using original instruments, has its snags, and not just in the acid timbre of the strings. He takes a comparatively operatic view of the work, but he mars the impact of that by too frequently adopting a mannered style of phrasing. The soloists too are far less impressive than those on the Gardiner edition, and altogether this is hardly at all competitive.

Joshua (complete)

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66461/2. Kirkby, Bowman, Mark Ainsley, George, Oliver, New College, Oxford, Ch., King's Consort, King

Ⓝ (*) MDG 332 1532-2 (2). Myung-Hee Hyun, Gilchrist, Wolff, Potter, Poplutz, Cologne Chamber Ch., Collegium Cartusianum, Neumann

Emma Kirkby is here ideally sparkling and light in the role of Achsah, daughter of the patriarchal leader, Caleb (taken here by the bass, Michael George). Her love for Othniel, superbly sung by James Bowman, provides the romantic interest in what is otherwise a grandly military oratorio, based on the Book of Joshua. The singing is consistently strong and stylish, with the clear, precise tenor John Mark Ainsley in the title-role. Robert King and his Consort crown their achievement in other Hyperion issues, and the choir of New College, Oxford, sings with ideal freshness. Warm, full sound.

The star of Peter Neumann's Cologne set is undoubtedly the sweet-voiced Myung-Hee Hyun as Achsah, who virtually dominates the proceedings. James Gilchrist is effective in the title-role, but Konstantin Wolff is rather ill-focused as Caleb, and neither he nor Alex Potter as Othnieldo quite match their opposite numbers on Hyperion. The Cologne Chamber Choir sing clearly and confidently but could be more dramatic in the stirring choruses of the Israelites.

Judas Maccabaeus (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 692-2 (3). Palmer, Baker, Esswood, Davies, Shirley-Quirk, Keyte, Wandsworth School Ch., ECO, Mackerras

🔑 (BB)  Regis Alto (ADD) ALC 2002 (2). Harper, Watts, Young, Shirley-Quirk, Amor Artis Ch., Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., ECO, Somary

(*) Hyp. CDA 66641/2 (2). Kirkby, Denley, Bowman, MacDougall, George, Birchall, Ch. of New College, Oxford, King's Consort, King

Judas Maccabaeus may have a lopsided story, but the sequence of Handelian gems is irresistible, the more so in a performance as sparkling as DG's reissued 1976 recording under Sir Charles Mackerras. Though not everyone will approve of the use of boys' voices in the choir, it gives an extra bit of character. Hearing even so hackneyed a number as See, the conqu'ring hero in its true scale is a delightful surprise. Ryland Davies and John Shirley-Quirk are most stylish, while both Felicity Palmer and Janet Baker crown the whole set with glorious singing. The recording quality is outstanding in its CD format, fresh, vivid and clear.

Regis have had the excellent idea of licensing Somary's splendid (1971) Vanguard set, and at budget price this reissue is very recommendable indeed. With Alexander Young a ringing tenor (his Sound the Alarm is a highlight) and Helen Watts singing the opening aria in Act III exquisitely, this is all most enjoyable, a traditional account that is full of life. The choruses are especially good: no one will be disappointed with See the conqu'ring hero (nor the horn accompaniment). The recording is wholly natural and there is a sense of commitment throughout from all departments. Modern instruments are used, but the harpsichord continuo comes through well.

With some superb solo singing and refined instrumental textures, Robert King's performance can be recommended warmly, even though it is not as lively as some of his Purcell recordings. It is partly that the chorus is not as forward or as bright-toned as one wants in Handel; but there is much to enjoy, with Jamie MacDougall clean and bright if not always ideally firm in the title-role, and with the pure-toned Emma Kirkby well contrasted with the much warmer mezzo of Catherine Denley. Michael George gives splendid weight to the bass arias so central to Handel oratorio.

Sacred cantatas: Laudate pueri (Psalm 112); Coelestis dum spirat aura; O qualis de coelo sonus; Salve Regina; Trio Sonata in G min., HWV 27

🔑 ✿ * BIS CD 1065. Kirkby, L. Baroque, Medlam

Emma Kirkby is in glorious voice throughout this splendid recital, floating the opening line of Salve Regina most beautifully, and then dashing away to a sparkling accompaniment in Eja ergo. Her closing Alleluja! in O qualis de coelo sonus is wonderfully nimble, as is the flowing Felix dies ('Happy day') of Coelestis dum spirat aura. Finest of all is the setting of Psalm 112, where she soars up to the heavens on a characteristic repeated phrase and sings flowingly and ravishingly against a particularly attractive accompaniment – in which the continuo with organ is delightfully conceived – capped by the spirited runs of the Gloria Patri. This is one of Kirkby's very finest Handel records. Her voice is caught with a lovely bloom, and the balance with the accompaniment is just about perfect. Not to be missed.

Messiah (complete DVD version)

❀ 🔑 * Warner DVD 0630 17834-2. Nelson, Kirkby, Watkinson, Elliott, Thomas, Westminster Abbey Ch., AAM, Hogwood; Simon Preston (organ) (V/D: Roy Tipping)

Hogwood's DVD Messiah dates from 1982, the same period as his Oiseau-Lyre audio recording, and it has the appealing advantage of the warm acoustic of Wesminster Abbey. He uses a chorus of fewer than thirty, and his Academy of Ancient Music are in first-class form, with an an excellent unnamed trumpet soloist in And the trumpet shall sound. There are a pair of sopranos, Judith Nelson and a very young Emma Kirkby, both contributing superbly. Indeed, there is no flaw in the solo team, and David Thomas is particularly strong in the bass arias. Hogwood uses the 1754 Foundling Hospital score, and the result is an enjoyably fresh 'traditional-period' performance which is beautifully sung and a pleasure to watch but one can hear every word and the backcloth of Westminster Abbey is well used by the camera to provide a visual treat.

Messiah (complete CD versions)

🔑 * DG SACD Surround Sound 477 066-2 (2) / 453 464-2 (2) CD. Röschmann, Gritton, Fink, Daniels, Neal Davies, Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 477 5904 (2). Augér, Von Otter, Chance, Crook, Tomlinson, E. Concert Ch., E. Concert, Pinnock

🔑  BIS CD 891/892 (2). Midori Suzuki, Mera, Elwes, Thomas, Bach Collegium Japan, Masaaki Suzuki

Ⓜ  LSO Live SACD 0607 (2). Gritton, Padmore, Mingardo, Miles, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

Ⓜ  COLCD 132 (2). Lunn, Marshall, Gilchrist, Purves, Cambridge Singers, RPO, Rutter

Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22019 (2). Dawson, Denley, James, Davies, George, Sixteen Ch. & O, Christophers

 DHM/BMG SACD Surround Sound 82876 64070-2 (2). Schäfer, Larsson, Schade, Finley, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

 HM HMC 901498.99 (2). Schlick, Piau, Scholl, Padmore, Berg, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

 Ph. 434 297-2 (2). Marshall, Robbin, Rolfe Johnson, Brett, Hale, Shirley-Quirk, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

 Decca 414 396-2 (2). Te Kanawa, Gjevang, Lewis, Howell, Chicago Ch. & SO, Solti

Ⓜ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 464 703-2 (2). Harper, Watts, Wakefield, Shirley-Quirk, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, C. Davis

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Coro 16062 (3). Sampson, Wyn-Rogers, Padmore, Purves, The Sixteen, Christophers

(*) HM HMC 90 1928/9. Avemo, Bardon, Zazzo (counter-tenor), Neal Davies, Clare College, Cambridge, Ch., Freiburg Bar. O, Jacobs

Using the Foundling Hospital version of the score, McCreesh, in re-creating the sort of performance Handel supervised there in 1754, seeks to present a 'thoroughly modern performance – A Messiah for the Millennium' as he puts it. It is a bright and individual reading, bringing out the drama of the music with extreme speeds in both directions. The chorus copes well with all his bracing tempi, and the result is both expressive and vital. He is lucky to have an excellent team of young soloists, with both sopranos singing with appealing freshness and the splendid contralto, Bernarda Fink, touchingly simple in He was despised. The golden-voiced tenor opens the performances with a warmly lyrical account of Comfort ye my people, and the resonant bass, Neal Davies, shakes with the best of them in Thus said the Lord of Hosts. It is altogether a most stimulating performance, and for collectors with surround sound facility will probably be a first choice, even before Pinnock and Suzuki.

Trevor Pinnock presents a performance using authentically scaled forces which, without inflation, rise to grandeur and magnificence, qualities Handel himself would have relished, and Pinnock (more than his main rivals) balances his period instruments to give a satisfying body to the sound. There is weight too in the singing of the bass soloist, John Tomlinson, firm, dark and powerful, yet marvellously agile in divisions. Arleen Augér's range of tone and dynamic is daringly wide, with radiant purity in I know that my Redeemer liveth. Anne Sofie von Otter sustains He was despised superbly with her firm, steady voice. Some alto arias are taken just as beautifully by the outstanding counter-tenor, Michael Chance. The tenor, Howard Crook, is less distinctive but still sings freshly and attractively.

With his excellent Japanese singers and players, Masaaki Suzuki here excels himself. His crisp, sharp manner goes with transparent textures and sprung rhythms, and though modest forces are used the result has natural dramatic weight. The consistent alertness of the chorus is a delight but the fast speeds he tends to prefer never sound breathless, and he is never afraid to choose a spacious tempo, if the mood of the music demands it – as in the aria, He was despised, sung with seamless beauty by the male alto, Yoshikazu Mera. The soprano Midori Suzuki sings with radiant purity, notably in I know that my Redeemer liveth, and the two British soloists are excellent too, with John Elwes bright and eager and David Thomas caught at his warmest.

It was Colin Davis, early in his career, who made a breakthrough in recording the Messiah using a small professional chorus and adopting speeds far faster than was then the custom. His new LSO Live version, recorded at the Barbican, has a comparably distinguished team of soloists and they make an excellent team, with clean, clear voices, well focused. Mark Padmore is outstanding as the tenor soloist, and Sara Mingardo is a fine, firm mezzo, not at all fruity, singing He was despised movingly at a steady tempo. She contrasts well with the soprano, Susan Gritton, in He shall feed his flock. The Hallelujah Chorus is bright and forward, with timpani prominent, and in the da capo arias, like the beautifully sung I know that my Redeemer liveth, ornaments are added in the repeats.

Not surprisingly, John Rutter's is essentially a traditional performance, but with lively tempi and no lack of expressive feeling; and it is very well recorded indeed. The tenor James Gilchrist sings his opening Comfort ye . . . Every valley beautifully, with a rich-timbred legato; and the alto Melanie Marshall is extremely articulate, although in her runs some might feel she points consonants too sharply. Joanne Lunn has a full, rich timbre, creating a clarion call in There were shepherds abiding and she manages Rejoice greatly impressively at Rutter's swift pacing. Christopher Purves is a real bass as The people that walked in darkness readily shows. Altogether a fine set which will give much pleasure.

Harry Christophers on Hyperion consistently adopts speeds more relaxed than those we have grown used to in modern performances, and the effect is fresh, clear and resilient. Alto lines in the chorus are taken by male singers; a counter-tenor, David James, is also used for the Refiner's fire, but He was despised is rightly given to the contralto, Catherine Denley, warm and grave at a very measured tempo. The team of five soloists is as fine as that on any rival set, with the soprano, Lynne Dawson, singing with silvery purity. The band of 13 strings sounds as clean and fresh as the choir. The sound has all the bloom one associates with St John's recordings. Now offered as a two-for-one Dyad, this is a real bargain.

Harnoncourt's Messiah is full of eccentricities, yet he is never, never dull, and his performance is endearingly enjoyable and beautifully sung, and gloriously recorded in totally believable, spectacular surround sound, with the Arnold Schoenberg Choir matching their similarly fine singing in Harnoncourt's memorable account of Haydn's Creation. The soprano Christine Schäfer is radiant throughout, and especially so in I know that my Redeemer liveth. Harnoncourt's accompaniments are always alive and often dramatic; yet All we like sheep has an engagingly light touch. Hallelujah brings another surprise, opening quite gently and generating a full head of steam only as it proceeds and the brass enter. It's different, but it works well, and Worthy is the Lamb is suitably majestic, the fugal entries all splendidly incisive, with a dramatic brass entry, and capped with a satisfying, culminating Amen.

William Christie's preference for fast, resilient speeds and light textures, not least in choruses, never prevents him from giving due emotional weight to such key numbers as He was despised. That is superbly sung, with touching simplicity, firm tone and flawless intonation, by the countertenor, Andreas Scholl. The other singers too sound fresh and young. Excellent sound, though the chorus is placed a little backwardly.

John Eliot Gardiner chooses bright-toned sopranos instead of boys for the chorus and he uses, very affectingly, a solo treble to sing There were shepherds abiding. Speeds are fast and light, and the rhythmic buoyancy in the choruses is very striking, though idiosyncratically Gardiner begins Hallelujah! on a pianissimo. Why do the nations and The trumpet shall sound (both sung with great authority) come over dramatically, and the soloists are all first class, with the soprano Margaret Marshall finest of all, especially in I know that my Redeemer liveth. Other highlights include Marshall's angelic version of Rejoice greatly, skipping along in compound time.

Sir Georg Solti inspires a vital, exciting reading. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra and Chorus respond to some challengingly fast but never breathless speeds, showing what lessons can be learnt from authentic performance in clarity and crispness. Yet the joyful power of Hallelujah and the Amen chorus is overwhelming. Dame Kiri Te Kanawa matches anyone on record in beauty of tone and detailed expressiveness, while the other soloists are first rate too, though Anne Gjevang has rather too fruity a timbre. Brilliant, full sound.

It has to be said that, although it is very enjoyable in a traditional way, Harry Christophers' third (2008) recording is a little disappointing, by comparison with his earlier Hyperion Dyad version. Again he favours spacious tempi and there is some alteration in the allocation of solos, but this time without using a counter-tenor. Certainly the solo singing is impressive, especially Christopher Purves, Carolyn Sampson and Catherine Wyn-Rogers, although He was despised is not as memorable as with Catherine Denley. The choral response, using a fairly big group, is impressive, with Unto us a child is born (for instance) nicely paced, but overall the earlier set is the more memorable for its fresh resilience. The new one comes with a sampler bonus disc including nine items as diverse as the Arrival of the Queen of Sheba and Lynne Dawson's Let the bright seraphim.

René Jacobs has the advantage of the excellent choir Rutter trained at Clare College, one of the best in the country. They sing superbly, and the Freiburg Baroque Orchestra also make an impressive contribution. Jacobs's solo team are excellent but his dramatic and often eccentric approach is often undiomatic and will not appeal to all listeners, and sometimes his tempi are pressed too hard. He uses a harp for the angel's recitative, which seems to carry angelic symbolism too far, and there are other alterations too which are difficult to accept. All in all, a disappointment.

Robert Shaw's Messiah dates from 1966. It is another fairly traditional performance, using a relatively small, professionally trained chorus, and four top American soloists. We know how good Judith Raskin and Richard Lewis are from their other records, but Florence Kopleff, 'a Shaw regular', is a genuine contralto with another fine voice, and the bass, Thomas Paul, is excellent too: the key solos here do not disappoint. Altogther this is very enjoyable, and although not a first choice, will be of special interest to American listeners, for whom Shaw has been a key figure in choral performance and recording in the USA – admired by Toscanini, as well as many others. (RCA 82876 62317-2)

Messiah (1751 version)

🔑 (BB)* Naxos 8.570131/2. Jenkinson, Jones, Brooks, I. Davies, Spence, Dougan, Ch. Of New College, Oxford, AAM, Higginbottom

In his 1751 reconstruction Higginbottom used boy trebles not only for the choruses but for the soprano arias as well. Rejoice greatly is, however, allotted to the solo tenor, Toby Spence, who sings very pleasingly throughout. Higginbottom also uses the period-instrument Academy of Ancient Music, now producing orchestral sound of great transparency and refinement, and also the sweetest of string sounds. Tempi are lively and the whole performance goes with a swing, with warmth and vitality the keynotes. For unto us a child is born sparkles, but Hallelujah has all the weight one could want. The solo trebles cover themselves with glory. Otta Jones is most engaging in How beautiful are the feet and Henry Jenkinson, who is allotted I know that my Redeemer liveth, sings with the utmost simplicity and purity. It is the male alto Iestyn Davies, however, who is very touching in He was despised, decorating the da capo reprise very gently. Throughout the performance, which is superbly recorded, the feeling is one of freshness, and this recording has the strongest recommendation, quite irrespective of price.

Messiah (reorchestrated by Sir Eugene Goossens)

❁ Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 61266-2 (3). Vyvyan, Sinclair, Vickers, Tozzi, RPO Ch. & O, Beecham

This is a performance flamboyantly reorchestrated, both dramatic and moving, which at every point radiates the natural flair of the conductor. Many of Beecham's tempi are slower than we expect today, but not the Hallelujah Chorus, which is fast and resilient. The third disc with its 17-minute appendix of eight items – normally cut at the time this recording was made – comes as a bonus, as the set is priced as for two mid-range CDs.

Messiah (slightly abridged)

❁ (BB) () Dutton Lab. mono 2CDEA 5010 (2). Baillie, Ripley, Johnson, Walker, Huddersfield Ch. Soc., Liverpool PO, Sargent

Sargent's first recording of Handel's Messiah is not complete. Following his usual performance practice, three numbers are cut from Part II and four from Part III. The recording venue was Huddersfield Town Hall in 1946, when that great Choral Society was still at its peak, and Handel's masterpiece is here brought vividly to life in a brilliant Dutton transfer from the 78s. What is so involving is the way this remarkably realistic and present recording (in many ways more vivid than the later, stereo set), made in a series of four-minute takes, comes over with the tension of a live performance. The star of the performance is Isobel Baillie. Her first entry in There were shepherds is a moment of the utmost magic, and what follows is utterly ravishing, while her gloriously beautiful I know that my Redeemer liveth has never been surpassed on record. Gladys Ripley sings He was despised with moving simplicity and restraint, and she warmly introduces He shall feed His flock, sharing it with Baillie, who re-enters exquisitely.

Der Messias (arr. & orch. Mozart, K.572: DVD version in German)

(*) Arthaus DVD 101 175. Donna Brown, Kallisch, Sacca, Miles, Stuttart Gäschinger Kanorei, Rilling (V/D: Helmut Rost)

It is curious that the first DVD of Messiah should be Mozart's German version, and the additional scoring for woodwind, horns and brass certainly gives the orchestra an 18th-century sound, while the three trombones add to the weight of the choruses. Ironically, in the truncated Sie schallt die Posaun the trumpet sounds only very modestly and much of the instrumental obbligato is given to the horn, for there were no solo performers readily available on high baroque trumpets in Mozart's time. Quite reasonably, the conductor here, Helmuth Rilling, has opted for a traditional rather than a period-style performance, and he deliberately opts for spacious, though not leaden, tempi. The result remains enjoyable and quite fresh. Rilling has a splendid team of soloists, and an excellent chorus, and the backcloth of the Stadtkirche Ellwangen in Stuttgart is visually pleasing.

Messiah (Mozart's version in English)

🔑 Ⓜ  Signum SIGCD 074 (2). Lott, Palmer, Langridge, Lloyd, Huddersfield Ch. Soc., RPO, Mackerras

Sir Charles Mackerras is obviously happy to return to Mozart's additional orchestration, and it is notable that Handel's original trumpet solo has here been restored to And the trumpet shall sound. Mackerras offers a more-or-less traditional approach, with a first-class team of soloists, and no male alto. The Huddersfield Choral Society returns to the stage, singing as richly as ever, but now more athletically and with crisper enunciation. Tempi are brisker than in Sargent's day, but not so brisk that any of the work's grandeur and nobility is lost, and there is weight without unwieldiness. Above all, Mackerras has gathered a solo team that can make the arias – taken at spacious tempi – into the radiant creations Handel envisaged. Felicity Palmer's moving He was despised is matched by Felicity Lott's serenely lovely I know that my Redeemer liveth. The choruses have plenty of bite and in Worthy is the Lamb and the final Amen there is a noble majesty. The RPO accompaniments are rewarding in their own right, and altogether this is very satisfying indeed, especially when it is so splendidly recorded.

Ode for the Birthday of Queen Anne (Eternal source of light divine); Sing unto God (Wedding Anthem); Te Deum in D (for Queen Caroline)

 Hyp. CDA 66315. Fisher, Bowman, Mark Ainsley, George, New College, Oxford, Ch., King's Consort, King

Handel's Birthday Ode for Queen Anne combines Purcellian influences with Italianate writing to make a rich mixture. Robert King's performance is richly enjoyable, with warm, well-tuned playing from the King's Consort and with James Bowman in radiant form in the opening movement. The other two items are far rarer. Warmly atmospheric recording, not ideally clear on detail.

Ode for St Cecilia's Day

🔑  ASV CDDCA 512. Gomez, Tear, King's College, Cambridge, Ch., ECO, Ledger

🔑 Ⓜ  DG Blue 474 549-2. Lott, Rolfe Johnson, Ch. & E. Concert, Pinnock

Ode for St Cecilia's Day; Cecilia volgi un sguardo

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67463. Sampson, Gilchrist, Ch. & King's Consort, King

Robert King's outstanding version of the St Cecilia's Day Ode gains even over the finest rivals by also including as a generous fill-up a half-hour cantata, far less well known but a fine piece, equally dedicated to St Cecilia. Helped by the recording, King's reading is crisp and clear, with textures transparent. Carolyn Sampson sings with radiant purity, not least in the lovely aria, The soft complaining flute, while James Gilchrist confirms his status as among the very finest British tenors of his generation, his clear, firm voice beautifully projected. The chorus of the King's Consort sings with comparable freshness. The same two soloists feature in the cantata, Cecilia volgi un sguardo, written in 1736 to be interpolated in a performance of the oratorio, Alexander's Feast. The two tenor arias are followed by one for the soprano in three sections. The piece ends triumphantly with a fine duet.

Those seeking a version with modern instruments will find Philip Ledger's ASV version a splendid one. With superb soloists – Jill Gomez radiantly beautiful and Robert Tear dramatically riveting in his call to arms – this delightful music emerges with an admirable combination of freshness and weight. Ledger uses an all-male chorus; the style of the performance is totally convincing without being self-consciously authentic. The recording is first rate: rich, vivid and clear.

Trevor Pinnock's account of Handel's magnificent setting of Dryden's Ode comes near the ideal for a performance using period instruments. Not only is it crisp and lively, it has deep tenderness too, as in the lovely soprano aria The complaining flute, with Lisa Beznosiuk playing the flute obbligato most delicately in support of Felicity Lott's clear singing. Anthony Rolfe Johnson gives a robust yet stylish account of The trumpet's loud clangour, and the choir is excellent, very crisp of ensemble. Full, clear recording with voices vivid and immediate.

Parnasso in Festa (Serenata)

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67701/2. Moore, Sampson, Crowe, Outram, Clegg, Moore, Harvey, King's Consort & Ch., Halls

Parnasso in Festa was an extended celebratory serenata (essentially an opera devised for concert performance) designed to celebrate Princess Anne's marriage to William of Orange, and the court attended its première on 13 March 1734, the day before the wedding. Handel greatly admired the Princess, who had been his favourite pupil, and he was inspired to create a superb mélange of arias and choruses of his finest quality. Parnasso in Festa is set on Mount Parnassus, associated in Greek mythology with Apollo, the God of the Arts, and home of the nine sacred muses. In the serenata, Handel ingeniously draws a parallel with the real-life event. Three of the Muses, Apollo, Orpheus and Mars, and the huntress Clori join the celebrations of the nuptials of the mortal king, Peleus and the sea-nymph, Thetis. For the score Handel drew partly on the music for Athelia, but he also composed much that is new; and there are many fine choruses. The orchestra was expanded to include flutes, recorders, and both horns and trumpets, plus timpani. The result is splendidly sung by a virtually all-female cast of soloists: Diana Moore (Apollo), Carolyn Sampson (Clio), Lucy Crowe (Orfeo), Rebecca Outram (Calliope) and Ruth Clegg (Clori), all especially fine. With an exuberant chorus and orchestra under Mathew Halls, this makes an irresistible entertainment, very well recorded. The documentation, too, is excellent, including a full libretto. Not to be missed.

La Resurrezione

 DG 447 767-2 (2). Massis, Smith, Maguire, Mark Ainsley, Naouri, Les Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

Marc Minkowski brings out the dramatic bite of this early Handel oratorio, often opting for extreme speeds, particularly fast ones, challenging his excellent soprano Annick Massis to the limit in the Angel's brilliant first aria. He may rarely relax in the way that Ton Koopman did on his earlier Erato version (currently withdrawn), but in this episodic piece there is much to be said for such a taut approach, with fine, clean-textured playing from Les Musiciens du Louvre.

Samson (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Teldec 2564 69260-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, Alexander, Kowalski, Miles, Prégardien, Venuti, Blasi, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt here conducts a Handel performance in which Handelian grandeur shines out from the opening overture with its braying horns and genially strutting dotted rhythms. He is altogether warmer than before, and a fine team of singers, led by Anthony Rolfe Johnson in the title-role, is allowed full expressiveness, with speeds in slow numbers broader than one might expect. So the blind Samson's first aria, Total eclipse, is very measured, with Rolfe Johnson using the widest tonal and dynamic range. Though the recording catches some flutter in Roberta Alexander's voice as Dalila, she gives a characterful performance, well contrasted with Angela Maria Blasi, her attendant, who sings the lovely aria, With plaintive note, most beautifully. Maria Venuti in the climactic Let the bright seraphim at the end is not ideally pure-toned, but she sings strongly and flexibly. Other fine singers include Alastair Miles, magnificent in the bass role of the giant, Harapha, not least in Honour and arms, as well as the rich-toned counter-tenor, Jochen Kowalski as Micah and Christoph Prégardien in the tenor role of the Philistine. With the Schoenberg Choir singing incisively, Harnoncourt presents the work not only with period instruments but on an authentic scale.

Saul (complete)

Ⓜ * Ph. 475 8256. (3) Miles, Dawson, Brown, Ragin, Ainsky, Mackie, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar Soloists, Gardiner

(*) DG 474 510-2 (3). Neal Davies, Scholl, Padmore, Gritton, Argenta, Agnew, Lemalu, Gabrieli Consort and Players, McCreesh

Central to the success of Paul McCreesh's version of Saul is the warmly characterful singing of the counter-tenor

Andreas Scholl, in the role of David, in effect the central character in this dramatic oratorio even more than the king himself. That said, none of the other soloists quite matches their counterparts on the Gardiner version on Philips, a recording made live in Gottingen in 1989 and still sounding well, with an acoustic less reverberant than that of All Saints, Tooting, where this DG Archiv recording was made. So Neal Davies as Saul is less cleanly focused than Alastair Miles on Philips, and Neil Mackie is fresher and firmer as the High Priest than Paul Agnew here, while even Nancy Argenta as Saul's daughter, Michal, sounds less sweet than usual, hardly a match for Lynne Dawson on Philips. The tautness of McCreesh's direction and the precision of the choral singing, all the crisper in a studio performance, make it a strong alternative, but the Gardiner version remains first choice, an outstanding version in every way.

Joachim Carlos Martini on Naxos offers a clear, fresh, lively reading using period instruments, very well recorded, making an excellent bargain version. Outstanding among the soloists is the creamy-toned Barbara Schlick, who sings the role of Michal, Saul's daughter and David's wife. The Frankfurt chorus sing well, but are not ideally focused. Otherwise the sound is fresh and clear. (Naxos 8.554361/3)

Solomon (complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Ph. 475 7561 (2). Watkinson, Argenta, Hendricks, Rolfe Johnson, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

* HM HMC 90 1949/50. Sampson, Gritton, Connolly, Padmore, Wilson-Johnson, Berlin RIAS Chamber Ch., Akademie für Alte Musik, Reuss

(i) Solomon (ed. & arr. Beecham). Love in Bath (ballet music, arr. Beecham)

Ⓜ (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86516-2 (2). (i) Cameron, Young, Morison, Lois Marshall, Beecham Choral Soc.; RPO, Beecham

Gardiner's Solomon is among the very finest of all Handel oratorio recordings. With panache, he shows how authentic-sized forces can convey Handelian grandeur even with clean-focused textures and fast speeds. The choruses and even more magnificent double choruses stand as cornerstones of a structure which may have less of a story-line than some other Handel oratorios – the Judgement apart – but which Gardiner shows has consistent human warmth. The Act III scenes between Solomon and the Queen of Sheba are given extra warmth by having in the latter role a singer who is sensuous in tone, Barbara Hendricks. Carolyn Watkinson's pure mezzo is very apt for Solomon himself, while Nancy Argenta is clear and sweet as his Queen; but the overriding glory of the set is the radiant singing of Gardiner's Monteverdi Choir. Its clean, crisp articulation matches the brilliant playing of the English Baroque Soloists, regularly challenged by Gardiner's fast speeds, as in The Arrival of the Queen of Sheba; and the sound is superb, coping thrillingly with the problems of the double choruses.

Daniel Reuss uses a chorus of 40 and the Akademie für Alte Musik play with great expressive vitality, with the brass braying when called for. But above all he has a superb team of soloists: Carolyn Sampson is at her lyrical finest, Sarah Connolly seems ideally cast in the mezzo name-role, and Susan Gritton is hardly less impressive as the Queen. Mark Padmore and David Wilson-Johnson give appropriate male support and Padmore manages his coloratura with aplomb. All in all an impressive achievement.

In his revision and re-orchestration of Solomon, Sir Thomas Beecham boldly left out sections which hold up the central plot involving the Queen of Sheba, omitting the Judgement Scene but using the double chorus From the censer curling rise after the entertainment for the Queen. With Beecham magicking the music – however inauthentically – the performance can be warmly recommended to devotees of the conductor – and to Handelians too, as long as they are tolerant.

The EMI Gemini set finds room for Love in Bath, the title of which conceals the identity of Beecham's ballet, first performed just before the end of the war, called The Great Elopement. Needless to say, the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra play like angels – if occasionally not perfectly disciplined angels. However, the transfer of Solomon produces rather fierce violin-sound in the Overture, and the spikiness is again noticeable in the Arrival of the Queen of Sheba; and there is a thinness too on the violins in the ballet suite.

Theodora (complete; DVD version)

 Warner DVD 0630-15481-2. Upshaw, Daniels, Olsen, Croft, Hunt-Lieberson, OAE, Christie (V/D: Peter Sellars)

The Glyndebourne staging of Handel's oratorio, Theodora, was recorded in June 1996. Peter Sellars himself has directed the video as well as acting as stage director, heightening the impact of this updated production. Though the original is set in AD 304, Sellars updates the story to the present day, with the Roman Governor, Valens, becoming an American-style President. At the end, when Theodora and Didymus are martyred, Sellars has them strapped down and lethally injected, a chilling dénouement. The staging involves a stylized set so as to cope with the changes of scene normal in a Handel oratorio. What makes the result so compelling is not just the inspired direction of William Christie with the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, but above all a cast that it would be hard to match. Dawn Upshaw in the title-role is tenderly appealing, and her sweet, pure singing is matched by that of Lorraine Hunt Lieberson as her friend, Irene, conveying a depth of feeling if anything even greater in wonderful arias. In the castrato role of Didymus, the counter-tenor David Daniels gives a masterly performance, brilliant technically and moving too, and the tenor, Richard Croft, is equally stylish as Septimius, with Frode Olsen powerful as the unyielding Valens. Generous measure, with three and a half hours of music on a single disc – though the documentation is sketchy, with no booklet and only a brief synopsis of the plot.

Theodora (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 469 061-2 (3). Gritton, Bickley, Blaze, Agnew, N. Davies, Gabrieli Cons. & Players, McCreesh

Ⓜ  MDG 332 1019-2 (3). Somer, Buwalda, Rasker, Schoch, Sol, Schweiser, Cologne Chamber Ch., Coll. Cartusianum, Neumann

Paul McCreesh's version sweeps the board. Beautifully recorded in a sympathetic acoustic it offers an outstandingly sensitive, well-paced reading, ideally cast, using a text which gives alternative versions of numbers that Handel revised. Using a relatively large string section (26 players), McCreesh brings out the dramatic contrasts vividly. In the title-role Susan Gritton sings radiantly, unaffectedly compassing the widest range of expression, a moving central focus to the drama, with the even-toned counter-tenor, Robin Blaze, equally impressive as Didymus, the Roman officer who becomes her fellow martyr. The mezzo, Susan Bickley, sings with simple dedication as Irene, with Paul Agnew elegant in the role of Septimius and Neal Davies an authoritative Valens, President of Antioch.

Peter Neumann's version on MDG, well played and sympathetically paced, would be very welcome but for the formidable competition from McCreesh on DG Archiv. The German cast is first rate, admirably coping with an English text, led by the warm-toned Johanette Somer as Theodora and the excellent counter-tenor, Sytse Buwalda, as Didymus. The three discs come for the price of two.

The Triumph of Time and Truth

Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22050 (2). Fisher, Kirkby, Brett, Partridge, Varcoe, L. Handel Ch. and O, Darlow

Darlow's performance of Handel's very last oratorio is broad and strong and very enjoyable. The soloists have all been chosen for the clarity of their pitching – Emma Kirkby, Gillian Fisher, Charles Brett and Stephen Varcoe, with the honey-toned Ian Partridge singing even more beautifully than the others, but with a timbre too pure quite to characterize 'Pleasure'. Good atmospheric recording.

Il tronfo del tempo e del Disinganno

Ⓝ (*) Hyp. CDA 67681/2. Invernizzi, Aldrich, Oro, Dürmüller, Academia Montis Regalis, De Marchi

Roberta Invernizzi's clear, pleasing soprano dominates the full-price Hyperion version, with plenty of bravura coloratura to catch the ear. Kate Aldrich is the mezzo Piacere representing 'Pleasure', while the counter-tenor Martin Oro is perhaps not entirely enlightened. Jörg Dürmüller has less to contribute (especially in Part II) as the tenor representative of Tempo ('Time'), but he sings ardently and strongly throughout. On the whole they are a good team, and the Academia provide an acceptable period-instrument backing.

'Great Oratorio Duets' from Alexander Balus; Alexander's Feast; Belshazzar; Deborah; Esther; Jephtha; Joshua; Saul; Solomon; Susanna; Theodora

🔑  BIS SACD 1236 (Surround Sound). Sampson, Blaze, OAE, Kraemer

We usually get plenty of compilations of opera arias and duets on disc, but almost never a comparable oratorio selection. But BIS have had the inspired idea of putting together two of the finest baroque soloists of our time, and they prove a truly distinctive partnership. The voices of Robin Blaze and Carolyn Sampson were surely made for each other, and they blend quite perfectly, particularly when they trill together or answer each other in a conversational style. Not surprisingly, Nicholas Kraemer's accompaniments are most stylish, and if you have facilities for SACD surround sound, the realism of a most vivid recording is greatly enhanced.

OPERA

Acis and Galatea (complete; CD version)

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. (ADD) Chan 3147. Sutherland, Pears, Galliver, Brannigan, St Anthony Singers L. Philomusica, Boult

In 1959, originally from Decca (Oiseau-Lyre), Boult provided the début stereo recording of Handel's masque. Joan Sutherland in fresh, youthful voice makes a splendid Galatea, sparkling in the florid passages, warmly sympathetic in the lyrical music. Peter Pears, too, is at his finest, and although David Galliver is less striking, his contribution is still a good one; while Owen Brannigan was surely born to play Polyphemus, and he comes over as a very genial one-eyed giant, the villainy muted. His lusty account of O ruddier than the cherry (heard in the version with treble recorder), where he makes a positive virtue of intrusive aspirates, is alone worth the cost of the disc. Anyone hearing it who can resist a smile must be stony-hearted indeed. Although tempi are more relaxed than we would expect today, Boult's sympathetic direction ensures that the music-making has a lift throughout. The documentation includes a full text.

Admeto, re di Tessaglia (complete)

Ⓜ  Virgin (ADD) 5 61369-2 (3). Jacobs, Yakar, Gomez, Bowman, Cold, Dams, Van Egmont, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Admeto is among the very greatest of Handel's operas, and this recording, made in 1977 in Holland, was one of the first complete recordings of a Handel opera to attempt an authentic approach, and the most successful up to that time. Though recitatives are on the slow side, it stands the test of time, a fine performance, very well cast, played with refinement on period instruments and excellently recorded. Here the counter-tenor René Jacobs gives an understanding and characterful performance in the title-role, but it is Jill Gomez as Antigona who steals first honours, with magnificent singing, sweet, pure and strong of tone, with ornamentation beautifully crisp. Rachel Yakar is not so sweetly caught by the microphones, but hers is a stylish performance too, and the rest of the cast has no weak link, with James Bowman outstanding as Admeto's brother, Trasimede.

Agrippina (complete; DVD version)

(*) EuroArts DVD 2054538. Daniels, Hall, Von Kannen, Kuebler, Nicolai, Hielscher, Katz, Lesbo, L. Bar. Players, Östman (Dir: Michael Hampe)

Michael Hampe's production involves handsome baroque sets by Mauro Pagano and traditional costumes. Agrippina is an opera set in the early years of Imperial Rome, with Agrippina the centre of intrigues, opposed by another great manipulator, Poppea. Barbara Daniels is agile, strong and bright in the title-role, with Janice Hall first rate as Poppea. The snag of the performance is that two of the principal castrato roles, those of Nero and Narciso, are here taken by baritones instead of counter-tenors, reflecting the date of the production (before period performance was fully accepted).

(i) Alceste: Overture & Incidental Music; (ii) Anthem for the Foundling Hospital; Ode for the Birthday of Queen Anne; (iii) Utrecht Te Deum & Jubilate in D

Ⓑ  Double Decca 458 072-2 (2). (i; ii; iii) Kirkby, Nelson, D. Thomas, AAM; (i) Cable, Elliott, Ch., Hogwood; (ii) Minty, Bowman, Hill; (ii; iii) Christ Church Cathedral Ch., Preston; (iii) with Brett, Covey-Crump, Elliott

Handel left us much to enjoy in the impressively dramatic Alceste Overture in D minor and the Grand entrée for Admetus, Alceste and their wedding guests, which get the proceedings off to a fine start. There follows a series not just of solo items but also some simple tuneful choruses in which a small secondary vocal group participates. There is nearly an hour of freshly enjoyable music and Hogwood draws lively, sympathetic performances from his team. The Ode has its Italianate attractions and opens with a splendid counter-tenor aria from James Bowman, with an elaborate trumpet obbligato, superbly played here. But it is the much later Foundling Hospital Anthem that is the more memorable, not just because it concludes with an alternative version of the Hallelujah Chorus, but also because the other borrowed numbers are also superb. The Utrecht pieces were written just before Handel came to London and were intended as a sample of his work. Preston directs performances which are characteristically alert and vigorous, particularly impressive in the superb closing Glory be to the Father with its massive eight-part chords. Throughout the team of soloists regularly associated with the Academy give of their best, and the recordings, made in 1977 and 1979 are splendidly transferred, clean and clear yet not losing their analogue atmosphere.

Alcina (CD versions)

🔑  Erato 8573 80233-2 (3). Fleming, Graham, Dessay, Kuhlmann, Lascarro, Robinson, Naouri, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 3 58681-2 (3). Augér, D. Jones, Kuhlmann, Harrhy, Kwella, M. Davies, Tomlinson, Opera Stage Ch., City of L. Bar. Sinf., Hickox

Ⓝ  DG 477 7374 (3). DiDonato, Gauvin, Beaumont, Prina, Van Rensburg, Preiante, Cherici, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Alcina is among the finest of Handel's operas. The fine Erato set was recorded live at the Paris Opéra. Only in recitatives do stage noises ever intrude, and the tensions of a live recording help to minimize the drawback of an opera containing only one ensemble number (the Act III terzetto) in addition to the traditional brief choral finale. Christie too is masterly at avoiding any monotony in the long sequence of da capo arias, with recitative superbly timed and reprises beautifully decorated. Renée Fleming is in glorious voice as Alcina, with Susan Graham characterizing well in the trouser-role of Ruggiero. Natalie Dessay as Alcina's sister, Morgana, relishes the challenge of the brilliant Tornami a vagheggiar (appropriated by Joan Sutherland in the inauthentic Decca set), helped by Christie's relatively relaxed tempo. He also sets relaxed speeds in some of the great slow arias such as Verdi prati, encouraging an expressive approach which yet remains within the bounds of period style. Highlights are available on 857385356-2.

It would be hard to devise a septet of soloists more stylish than those on the reissued EMI set, with Arleen Augér brilliant and warm-toned, singing warmly in the great expansive arias. Della Jones stands out in the breeches role of Ruggiero and Eiddwen Harrhy as Morgana is no less brilliant, while Kathleen Kuhlmann, Patrizia Kwella and John Tomlinson all sing with a clarity and beauty to make the music sparkle. Hickox underlines the contrasts of mood and speed, conveying the full range of emotion. The reissue provides a cued synopsis with a list of tracks. A fine alternative to Christie's version.

Alan Curtis's account is on a more intimate scale than its two major competitors, and his period-instrument accompanying group is considerably less robust. This means great transparency of detail but less sonority. His vocal team is led by the excellent Joyce DiDonato, dramatically very impressive, while Maite Beaumont is a strong Ruggiero and Karina Gauvin a seductive Morgana. Sonia Prina as Bradamente and Laura Cherici's Oberto make up a strong team, if not one that overall is preferable to the starry casts enjoyed by Christie and Hickox. This is essentially for authenticists.

Almira (complete)

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 275-2 (3). Monoyios, Rozario, Gerrard, D. Thomas, Nasrawi, MacDougall, Elsner, Fiori Musicale, Lawrence-King

Almira was Handel's first opera, written in Hamburg in 1704. Even so, one regularly detects a genuine Handelian flavour in the themes, and he himself borrowed a fair measure of the material here in later works. This recording, with three discs offered for the price of two, was made after a staging presented in both Halle and Bremen in 1994. Andrew Lawrence-King secures a fresh and well-paced – if rather plain – performance, with deft playing from the German period orchestra. Ann Monoyios is a light, bright Almira, with Patricia Rozario, taxed a little by the high tessitura, equally stylish as Edilia. The two principal tenor roles are very well taken by Jamie MacDougall and Douglas Nasrawi, with the third tenor, Christian Elsner, taking the comic servant role. David Thomas sings with clean attack in the bass role of the Prince of Segovia. Good, undistracting and well scaled in an intimate acoustic.

Amadigi di Gaula (complete)

 Erato 2292 45490-2 (2). Stutzmann, J. Smith, Harrhy, Fink, Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

Minkowski's electrifying performance is one of his sharpest, dominated vocally by the magnificent young French contralto (no mere mezzo) of Nathalie Stutzmann in the title-role. She sings Amadigi's gentle arias most affectingly, notably the lovely Sussurrate, onde vezzose, and the two women characters, Amadigi's lover Melissa and Princess Oriana, are well taken by Eiddwen Harrhy and Jennifer Smith, with the brilliant arias for Prince Dardano of Thrace superbly sung by Bernarda Fink. It is a performance on an intimate scale, and the more involving for that.

Ariodante (complete; DVD version)

(*) Dynamic DVD 33559 (2). Hallenberg, Cherici, Iorio, Nesi, Lepore, Stains, Prato, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis (Dir: John Pascoe, V/D: Matteo Ricchetti)

This is a very impressively sung DVD set of Ariodante, led by Ann Hallenberg in the castrato title-role, who manages her complex divisions with aplomb. Laura Cherici, Ariodante's beloved Ginevra, also has a lovely voice when singing expressively, while Marta Vandoni Iorio sings and characterizes Dalinda, the heroine's lady-in-waiting admirably. She is eventually to love Captain Luciano (the pleasant-voiced tenor, Zachary Stains) but through the machinations of the villain Polinesso (Mary-Ellen Nesi), she compromises her mistress. All ends well, however, and the King of Scotland gives his blessing to the match of his daughter and Ariodante (who hails from Fife!) and pardons Dalinda. The music is ever rewarding, but to watch the performance is complicated when two of the male characters are played by women, and the costumes are wholly inappropriate, approximating to fairly modern English dress (around the middle of the 20th century), with not a suspicion that the opera is set in Scotland. One needs the (excellent) booklet to follow what is going on. But the singing and playing of Il Complesso Barocco under Alan Curtis is of a high standard.

Ariodante (complete; CD versions)

🔑  DG 457 271-2 (3). Von Otter, Dawson, Podles, Croft, Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. Trio (ADD) 473 955-2 (3). J. Baker, Mathis, Burrowes, Bowman, Rendall, Ramey, L. Voices, ECO, Leppard

On DG Archiv, with an outstanding, starry team of soloists, Marc Minkowski conducts a high-powered reading, urgently dramatic and a compelling set in every way. Though Anne Sofie von Otter in the title-role is not quite at her freshest, and Dame Janet Baker on the rival set gives an even more moving performance, her characterization is as strong as ever. Among the others Lynne Dawson and Ewa Podles are outstandingly fine.

In the colourful, urgent performance under Raymond Leppard, the castrato role of Ariodante is a challenge for Dame Janet Baker, who responds with singing of enormous expressive range, from the dark, agonized moments of the C minor aria early in Act III to the brilliance of the most spectacular of the three display arias later in the Act. Baker's duets with Edith Mathis as Princess Ginevra, destined to marry Prince Ariodante, are enchanting too, and there is not a single weak member of the cast, though James Bowman as Duke Polinesso is not as precise as usual, with words often unclear. However, this now returns as a mid-priced Trio, which means that it is without a translated text, and a cued synopsis is offered as a poor alternative. In all other respects it is an outstanding set.

Arminio (complete)

 Virgin 5 45461-2 (2). Genaux, McGreevy, Labelle, Custer, Petroni, Buwalda, Ristori, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Standing out in the cast is Geraldine McGreevy, who takes the key role of the heroine, Tusnelda, daughter of the German prince, Segeste. Tusnelda has far more arias than anyone else, many of them vigorous, but including such deeply reflective numbers as the ravishing Rendimi il dolce sposo, which ends Act II. In Act III she has (in addition to another reflective aria) two charming duets with voices in chains of thirds. Vivica Genaux as Arminio is not caught quite so well by the microphone, but the whole cast, including Dominique Labelle, an excellent second soprano as Sigismondo, are commendably agile in the florid writing, with the fresh-toned period band, Il Complesso Barocco, ever-responsive. Clear, well-balanced sound.

Ezio (complete)

Ⓝ  DG 477 5073. Hallenberg, Prina, Gauvin, Giustiniani, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Handel's Ezio has been described as 'a depressing tale of envy, betrayal and egoism', yet it contains much glorious music, starting off with an overture very much in Water Music mode with trumpets and drums prominent. Historically, the opera is based on the exploits of the Roman General Aetius (Ezio translated) who, in the last days of the Empire, defeated Attila the Hun on the Catalaunian Plain, with the military and personal muddles effectively sorted out to give a happy ending. In fact Aetius was murdered in 454 by the Emperor Valentinian III, who feared him as a rival. The performance under Alan Curtis, recorded in the Teatro Comunale of Lonigo, relies on fresh, mainly young voices, cleanly focused, notably on Ann Hallenberg in the title-role and Sonia Prina as Valentiniano. Curtis with his period-performance forces is also fresh and lively, with the acoustic of a theatre nicely caught. A valuable set of an enjoyable rarity.

Faramondo (complete)

Ⓝ  Virgin 5 099 2 216611-2 (3). Cencic, Jaroussky, Karthauser, de Liso, Sin, R. Svizzera Ch., I Barocchisti, Fasolis

Faramondo is another of Handel's rarest operas, written in 1738, performed here by a cast of fresh young singers giving stylish performances, with no suspicion of aspirated coloratura. The period-performance players of I Barocchisti are strongly directed by Diego Fasolis. The title-role of Faramondo, King of the Franks, is very well taken by Max Emanuel Cencic, coping well with the exceptionally low-lying register, reflecting the qualities of the singer who originally took the part. Faramondo is at war with Gustavo, King of the Cimbrians, a role given to a bass, who sings the first of the many arias. The plot from then on is typically complex, involving Clotilde, Faramondo's sister, who has been taken captive, and Adolfo, Gustavo's son, who is in love with Clotilde. Rosimonda, Gustavo's daughter, then arrives, and in the end she is offered to Faramondo as a sign of peace, the happy ending typical of opera seria. The oddity of the plot did not prevent Handel from writing inspired music, and yet again, we have it confirmed in a recording that shows it was largely accidental whether these Handel operas became successful or not. But this is another valuable set, very well recorded.

Fernando (complete)

🔑  Virgin 3 65483-2 (2). Zazzo, Cangemi, Pizzolato, Abete, Cencie, Adami, Bannerjee, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Alan Curtis offers the first recording of the opera which Handel developed into Sosarme, changing the characters from historical figures to classical ones from ancient history. The result is arguably fresher and more immediate than in Sosarme. Curtis draws lively playing from his period band, with a first-rate line-up of soloists. In the title-role Lawrence Zazzo is a masterly counter-tenor, coping superbly with the elaborate divisions, while Veronica Cangemi, as Elvida, Dionisio's daughter, with whom Fernando is in love, has a gorgeously creamy soprano which is not only beautiful in her lyrical numbers but also flexible in the brilliant ones. She is well contrasted with Marianna Pizzolato as Isabella, wife of Dionisio. The two tenors in the cast, Filippo Adami as Dionisio, and Neal Bannerjee as Alfonso, his son, have less distinctive voices which are yet admirably agile, as is the bass. First-rate recording, made in St Gallen, Switzerland.

Flavio (complete)

Ⓑ  HM HMX 2901312.3 (2). Gall, Ragin, Lootens, Fink, Högman, Fagotto, Messthaler, Ens. 415, Jacobs

Handel's score was brilliantly written for some of the most celebrated singers of the time, including the castrato, Senesino. His four arias are among the high spots of the opera, all sung superbly here by the warm-toned and characterful counter-tenor, Derek Lee Ragin; almost every other aria is open and vigorous, with the whole sequence rounded off in a rousing ensemble. René Jacobs's team of eight soloists is a strong one, with only the strenuous tenor of Gianpaolo Fagotto occasionally falling short of the general stylishness. Full, clear sound, and text and translations included.

Floridante

🔑  DG 477 6566 (3). Mijankovic, DiDonato, Priante, Zamir, Invernizzi, Novaro, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

As is well known, Handel regularly adapted his operas to suit the needs of the individual singers available for each revival. Here, the role of the heroine, Elmira, was switched even before the first performance, but here Curtis has restored what Handel originally wanted, a role for soprano. Conversely, he keeps the role of Rossana, natural daughter of Otone, King of Persia, as a soprano, fresh and bright in her relatively short, tuneful arias. The great glory of the set is the singing of Joyce DiDonato as Elmira, not just fresh-toned, with flawless legato in her lyrical arias, but dazzlingly brilliant in the florid ones. Marijana Mijankovic in the castrato role of Floridante, Prince of Thrace, sings warmly but with a slightly unsteady tone. The role of Oronte is sung with clean attack by the baritone Vito Priante; Roberta Invernizzi is firm and flexible as the Prince of Tyre, and the counter-tenor Riccardo Novaro is excellent as the satrap, Timante. First-rate sound, recorded in a church in Viterbo.

Giulio Cesare in Egitto (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA 0950 D (3). Connolly, Bardon, Kirchschlager, De Niese, Dumaux, Maltman, Glyndebourne Ch., OAE, Christie (Dir: David McVicar, V/D: Robin Lough)

(*) EuroArts DVD 2053599 (2). Pushee, Alexander, Gunn, Campbell, Kenny, Dalton, Bennett, Gilchrist, Australian Op. & Ballet O, Hickox (V/D: Peter Butler)

William Christie conducts the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment and an outstanding cast in an account at once scholarly, lively and refreshing, a live recording of the 2005 production at Glyndebourne. Sarah Connolly sings superbly in the title-role, looking very boyish, opposite Danielle de Niese as Cleopatra, a soprano brighter-toned than usual for this role, a provocative figure. Patricia Bardon is an excellent Cornelia and Christophe Dumaux a characterful Tolomeo. Like most other versions, the action is updated, with the Roman army presented in the uniforms of the Britsh army in India in the 19th century. Action is effectively presented against a permanent set, involving a sequence of classical arches seen in perspective.

Francisco Negrin's production of Giulio Cesare for the Sydney Opera House with walls of hieroglyphics often superimposed, is updated from Roman times to a kind of Ruritanian state, with colourful uniforms involving cuirasses. By contrast, the Egyptian characters, not just Cleopatra but the others too, wear timeless robes, sharply distinguishing them. The counter-tenor Graham Pushee sings powerfully in the title-role with his cleanly focused voice, offering immaculate articulation and phenomenal agility in the many formidable divisions. Opposite him is the superb Cleopatra of Yvonne Kenny, glamorous of person and voice. Happily, Hickox allows her big arias full expansiveness, bringing out their beauty. Rosemary Gunn is a fine Cornelia, statuesque in her bearing and rich of voice, with Andrew Dalton a characterful Tolomeo and the dark-toned Stephen Bennett a formidable Achilla. The Sesto of Elizabeth Campbell is bright and clear if shrill at times.

Giulio Cesare (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓑ * HM HMX 2901 385.7 (3). Larmore, Schlick, Fink, Rorholm, Ragin, Zanasi, Visse, Concerto Köln, Jacobs

 Astree E 8558 (3). Bowman, Dawson, Laurens, James, Visse, La Grande Ecurie et la Chambre du Roy, Malgoire

(*) DG 474 210-2 (3). Mijanovic, Kožená, Von Otter, Hellekant, Bejun Mehta, Ewing, Bettini, Ankaoua, Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

The casting of the pure, golden-toned Barbara Schlick as Cleopatra on Harmonia Mundi proves outstandingly successful. Jennifer Larmore too, a fine, firm mezzo with a touch of masculine toughness in the tone, makes a splendid Caesar. Together they crown the whole performance with the most seductive account of their final duet. Derek Lee Ragin is excellent in the sinister role of Tolomeo (Ptolemy); so are Bernarda Fink as Cornelia and Marianne Rorholm as Sesto, with the bass, Furio Zanasi, as Achille. René Jacobs's expansive speeds mean that the whole opera will not fit on three CDs, but the fourth disc, at 18 minutes merely supplementary, comes free as part of the package, and includes an extra aria for the servant, Nireno, delightfully sung by the French counter-tenor, Dominique Visse. Firm, well-balanced sound. This now comes at bargain price with texts and translations included.

The counter-tenor James Bowman in the Malgoire set is strongly contrasted against the firm and purposeful mezzo, Jennifer Larmore. The contrast between Lynne Dawson as Cleopatra and Barbara Schlick is a key one too, for Dawson, following Malgoire's general approach, concentrates on beauty and classical poise, whereas Schlick brings out greater depth of expression. The contrast is similar over Giullemette Laurens as Cornelia as against Bernarda Fink, the one poised, the other more deeply expressive, often at broader speeds. By contrast, the counter-tenor, Dominique Visse, is the more actively characterful as the villainous Tolomeo, where Derek Lee Ragin for Jacobs combines sharp characterization with cleaner vocalization. Malgoire's text is not quite as complete as Jacobs's, with cuts in recitative.

As he establishes in the Overture, Minkowski prefers speeds on the fast side, sometimes very fast, with playing clear and clipped from the Musiciens du Louvre. That regularly sets a challenge to his singers as well as the players, very well taken. So Cleopatra's first aria in Act I sounds rushed despite the brilliant, characterful singing of Magdalena Kožená, and sadly her second Act I aria is cut. Otherwise, hers is a commanding performance, deeply moving in her big lyrical numbers, V'adoro pupille and Piangero, for which Minkowski allows full warmth and tenderness at aptly spacious speeds. Marijana Mijanovic sings powerfully in the title-role, with Anne Sofie von Otter a poised Sesto and Charlotte Hellekant a firm, clear Cornelia.

Julius Caesar (Giulio Cesare; complete, in English)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 308. Details as below (Dir: John Copley, V/D: John Michael Phillips.)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3019 (3). J. Baker, Masterson, Walker, D. Jones, Bowman, Tomlinson, ENO Ch. & O, Mackerras

Taken from Channel 4's TV presentation of the English National Opera production, the Arthaus DVD offers a studio performance with the original staging unodified. Janet Baker sings and acts commandingly in the title-role, with Valerie Masterson a sympathetic if hardly sensuous Cleopatra, and Sarah Walker as Pompey's widow, Cornelia, matching even Baker in the intensity of her singing and acting. Della Jones as Sextus, James Bowman as the scheming Ptolemy and John Tomlinson as Achillas are all ideal in their roles, with Michael Stennett's sumptuous costumes adding to the success of the production. Sir Charles Mackerras paces the music masterfully, but sadly the orchestral sound on DVD is thinner than in the audio recording, with an edge to it. So the CDs remain first choice. On CD the ravishing accompaniments to the two big Cleopatra arias amply justify the use by the excellent ENO Orchestra of modern rather than period instruments. The full, vivid studio sound makes this one of the very finest of the invaluable series of ENO opera recordings in English sponsored by the Peter Moores Foundation (excerpts are available on Chan 3072).

Giustino (complete)

 HM HMU 907130/32. Chance, Röschmann, Kotoski, Gondek, Lane, Padmore, Minter, Cantamus Halle Chamber Ch., Freiburg Bar. O, McGegan

First heard in 1737 and never revived until 1967, the opera Giustino has been consistently underestimated. Nicholas McGegan, with his fast, crisp manner and fondness for extra decoration in da capo repeats, brings out the element of sparkle and irony implied in the improbable story, treated refreshingly in dozens of brief arias. Michael Chance is outstanding in the title-role originally written for a castrato, and Dorothea Röschmann sings most movingly in the key role of Arianna. Drew Minter, stylish and intelligent as he is, fails to give enough bite to the villainous role of Amanzio; but there are few other disappointments, and the tenor, Mark Padmore, sings with virtuoso flair in the military role of Vitaliano. The German string-players are more abrasive than one expects nowadays, but this is a set to delight all Handelians, filling in an important gap.

Hercules (complete)

 DG 469 532-2 (3). Saks, Von Otter, Croft, Dawson, Daniels, Pujol, Ch. & Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

Ⓜ  DG 447 689-2 (2). Tomlinson, Walker, Rolfe Johnson, J. Smith, Denley, Savidge, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Mark Minkowski conducts an urgently dramatic account of Handel's music-drama in English on a classical theme. Anne Sofie von Otter gives a vividly characterful performance which, with fine gradation of tone and expression, brings out the full range of emotion implied. She is specially moving at the end when she realizes that her jealousy has brought the death of her husband. As Hercules, Gidon Saks sings with fine, clear focus, not as weighty as many a traditional Handel bass, but firm and dark. Excellent contributions too from Lynne Dawson as a bright, charming Iole, from the counter-tenor, David Daniels, peerless as the herald, Lichas, and from Richard Croft, elegant in the music of Hyllus, Hercules's son. The French chorus is not quite as idiomatic as the Monteverdi Choir in the rival Gardiner version.

Gardiner's brisk performance of Hercules using authentic forces may at times lack Handelian grandeur in the big choruses, but it conveys superbly the vigour of the writing, its natural drama; and the fire of this performance is typified by the outstanding singing of Sarah Walker as Dejanira. John Tomlinson makes an excellent, dark-toned Hercules. Fresh voices consistently help in the clarity of the attack – Jennifer

Smith as Iole, Catherine Denley as Lichas, Anthony Rolfe Johnson as Hyllus and Peter Savidge as the Priest of Jupiter. Refined playing and outstanding recording quality make this most welcome at mid-price.

Imeneo (complete)

Ⓑ  CPO 999 915-2 (2). Hallenberg, Stojkovic, Thornhill, Stiefermann, Chung, Cologne Vocal Ens., Capella Augustina, Spering

This late opera by Handel, one of the last two Italian operas he ever wrote, has been inexplicably neglected on disc, and this lively version, recorded in Cologne in collaboration with West German Radio, admirably fills the gap, well sung and well played, even if Andreas Spering's direction brings some plodding continuo. The story inspires Handel to a sequence of fine numbers, notably for Rosmene and Tirinto. Johanna Stojkovic sings strongly, bright and clear in the most taxing divisions, while Anna Hallenberg as Tirinto is equally commanding with her warm, firm mezzo, rising superbly to the challenge of her big showpiece aria, Sorge nell'alma, which anticipates Why do the nations in Messiah. Finer still is her tragic minor-key aria in Act III, Pieno il core, by far the most extended number. Also impessive is the trio for Rosmene and the rival suitors, while Rosmene's final aria is the most original of all, with curious stops and starts, and bald octave writing in the accompaniment. The original version of the text is used, with the role of Imeneo taken by a baritone – impressively sung by Kay Stiefermann – where Handel's revision for Dublin uses a tenor instead. Clear, well-balanced sound.

Orlando (DVD version)

Ⓝ () Arthaus DVD 101 309 (also Blu-ray version 101310). Mijanovič, Janková, Peetz, Clark, Wolff, Zürich Op. La Scintilla O, Christie

The magician Zoroastro oversees the action of this remarkable opera, concerned that its hero, Orlando (tempted by the allure of Angelica, Queen of Catlai), is possibly becoming dedicated to love rather than to the glory of battle. But she in turn loves Medoro, an African prince; and Medoro is also involved with the shepherdess Dorinda. So Act I ends with a glorious 'romantic triangle' trio as fine as anything Handel ever wrote. Orlando is famously unstable and is consumed with jealousy, which leads to a striking Mad scene at the end of Act II. However, all ends well with Orlando a hero again, and Dorinda reconciled to Medoro's unfaithfulness.

In Handel's conception, Orlando takes place partly in a wood, with the magical appearance of a fountain transforming the scene to a garden, but returning to the woodland in Act II, when Medoro carves his name and that of his beloved Angelica on a tree. Act III shifts to Dorinda's cottage, then moves to a 'horrid' cavern, and back to Dorinda's cottage for the final reconciliation.

However Jens-Daniel Herzog's staging for the Zürich opera perversely places the action in a World War II sanatorium, with Zoroastro in a white cloak manipulating the action within a set of moving screens and walls. Orlando is costumed as a wounded army officer, and Medoro appears to be a womanizing spiv. Angelica looks attractive in modern costume, as does the delightful Dorinda, who sings with great charm, and they (all but Orlando) make love quite sexily. But, most importantly, the singing of all five principals is quite beautiful. Whether with ravishing lyrical lines or spectacular vocal fireworks (a speciality of Orlando), every inspired number is a pleasure to listen to, to the extent that one watches the ridiculous action without distraction, including one scene when the sanatorium staff are seen hanging out their patients' trousers on a series of washing lines, which Dorinda can fondle as she sings about Medoro! The three stars are only for the singing and, of course, Christie's excellent orchestral backing.

Orlando (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * O-L 430 845-2 (3). Bowman, Augér, Robbin, Kirkby, D. Thomas, AAM, Hogwood

 Erato 0630 14636-2 (3). Bardon, Mannion, Summers, Joshua, Van der Kamp, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Handel's Orlando was radically modified to provide suitable material for individual singers, notably in the magnificent Mad scene which ends Act II on the aria, Vaghe pupille. That number, superbly done on Oiseau-Lyre by James Bowman, with appropriate sound effects, is only one of the virtuoso vehicles for the counter-tenor. For the jewelled sequences of arias and duets, Hogwood has assembled a near-ideal cast, with Arleen Augér at her most radiant as the queen, Angelica, and Emma Kirkby characteristically bright and fresh in the lighter, semi-comic role of the shepherdess, Dorinda. Catherine Robbin assumes the role of Prince Medoro strongly and David Thomas sings stylishly as Zoroastro. This is one of Hogwood's finest achievements on record, taut, dramatic and rhythmically resilient. Vivid, open sound.

William Christie's Erato recording of Orlando makes a valuable alternative. The most obvious difference is that, where Hogwood has a male alto singing the title-role, Christie here opts for a fine mezzo, Patricia Bardon. Her approach is more overtly dramatic than James Bowman's for Hogwood, with moods and passions more positively characterized. The celebrated Mad scene ending Act II illustrates the point perfectly, with Christie and Bardon more violent, using bigger contrasts, ending in a scurrying accelerando. His other soloists are all excellent, readily matching their rivals, not least the contralto, Hilary Summers, as Prince Medoro.

Ottone, re di Germania (complete)

 Hyp. CDA 66751/3. Bowman, McFadden, Smith, Denley, Visse, George, King's Cons., King

Robert King and his King's Consort offer a version on Hyperion with James Bowman as Ottone. The women principals do not have sufficiently pure, firm voices, but when it comes to the key castrato roles taken by counter-tenors, it is quite different. Bowman, with his rich tone, continues to sing with enormous panache and virtuoso agility. Dominique Visse as the duplicitous Adalberto tends to overcharacterize, but the singing is full of colour. Added to that is the richness and bloom on the instrumental sound.

Partenope (complete)

🔑  Chan. 0719 (3). Joshua, Summers, Wallace, Zazzo, Streit, Foster-Williams, Early Op. Co., Curnyn

Partenope is a fine piece that moves swiftly in a story ranging wide from despair to witty innuendo, ending happily on a double wedding. Central to the success of Christian Curnyn's well-paced performance is the glorious singing of Rosemary Joshua in the title-role of Partenope. Set against her in the role of the mischievous Rosmira, Princess of Cyprus (for most of the time disguised as a man), is the ripe-toned contralto, Hilary Summers. Other principals in the excellent Early Opera Company cast include two outstanding counter-tenors, Stephen Wallace as Armindo and Lawrence Zazzo as Arsace, suitors to the Queen, with the warlike Emilio, the third suitor, strongly taken by the tenor, Kurt Streit. Handsomely packaged, with each of the three Acts complete on a single disc, it is among the most attractive of rarities among Handel operas.

Radamisto (complete; CD version)

 Virgin 5 45673-2 (2). DiDonato, Ciofi, Beaumont, Labelle, Cherici, Stains, Lepore, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Cast from strength, Alan Curtis's stylish reading of Radamisto with Il Complesso Barocco is based on a stage production at the Viterbo Festival, given in 2003. The three principal sopranos are all outstanding – Joyce DiDonato in the title-role powerful and agile, Patrizia Ciofi lighter and brighter and well contrasted as Polissena, and Dominique Labelle as Fraarte warm and fruity. Where at one point in haste Handel gave Polissena an inappropriate aria from the opera Rodrigo, Curtis then opts for the alternative from the second version of the opera, Barbaro, partiro, effectively so.

Rinaldo (complete; CD versions)

🔑 * Decca 467 087-2 (3). Daniels, Bartoli, Fink, Finley, Orgonasova, Taylor, AAM, Hogwood

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.660165/7 (3). Barber, Whalen, Hannigan, Watson, Opera in Concert, Aradia Ens., Mallon

The inspired and characterful counter-tenor, David Daniels, makes an ideal choice for the castrato role of Rinaldo, strong and imaginative in martial music, tenderly expressive in such a poignant aria as Cara sposa. Cecilia Bartoli rightly preferred the gentler role of Rinaldo's wife, Almirena, and makes Lascia ch'io pianga one of the high points of the performance. Luba Orgonasova is wonderfully contrasted in the fire-eating role of the sorceress, Armida, with Bernarda Fink bringing character to the recessive role of Goffredo, the Christian captain-general, and Gerald Finley firm and positive as Argante, King of Jerusalem. Above all, Christopher Hogwood brings out not only the colour but the vigour of Handel's inspiration, with speeds on the fast side but never rushed, always sounding fresh.

Mallon opts for the first version of the score, even though Handel later added alternative numbers. Following that decision, he has women instead of counter-tenors for the castrato roles of Rinaldo and Eustazio, giving the small castrato role of the magician, Mago, to a bass. The cast is made up of fresh, youthful-sounding singers, none of them strikingly characterful but all stylish, with clean, fresh voices and immaculate techniques. Despite the dictates of period performance Mallon takes the most famous number, the aria Lascia ch'io pianga, exceptionally slowly, allowing the excellent soprano Laura Whalen to ornament the reprise with great delicacy. Vivid, open sound. An excellent bargain, despite the lack of a full libretto.

Rodelinda, Regina de Langobardi (complete; CD versions)

🔑  DG 477 5391 (3). Kermes, Mijanovi , Davislim, Prina, Lemieux, Priante, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

For the excellent DG Archiv version of Rodelinda the conductor, Alan Curtis, has prepared a version of the score primarily based on the original production in 1725 but with important additions from later versions, including the superb aria for the main castrato role of Bertarido, Vivi Tiranno. In the title-role of Rodelinda, Simone Kermes copes splendidly with the enormous range demanded and the feats of coloratura, if with a slight edge at the top of the voice. For the castrato roles of Bertarido and Unulfo, Curtis has opted to have mezzos, with Marijana Mijanovi and Marie-Nicole Lemieux both excellent, and with Mijanovi singing nobly in the most celebrated number, Dove sei. Outstanding even in this cast is the Australian tenor, Steve Davislim, as Grimoaldo, betrothed to Eduige, sister of Bertarido, well taken by Sonia Prina. First-rate sound.

(i) Rodelinda; (ii) Theodora (DVD versions; complete)

Ⓝ *() Warner DVD 50-1865-3273-2-5. (i) Antonacci, Scholl, Streit, Chiummo, Winter, Stefanowicz, Siese, OAE, Christie (Director: Jean-Marie Villégier); (ii) Upshaw, Daniels, Olsen, Croft, Hunt, OAE, Christie (Dir: Peter Sellars)

Both these Glyndebourne productions are very well sung by excellent casts, and Christie's direction cannot be faulted. But, as with so many Handel opera recordings, the staging is perverse, so that the words of the arias, although relating to the interplay between the characters, have no connection with the costumes and sets. Jean-Marie Villégier's production of Rodelinda is set in the silent movie era and, although the costumes are totally out of period, they are plain and pleasing and the simple sets work well enough, with Anna Caterina Antonacci in the title-role, Andreas Scholl (making his stage début) as Bertarido (apparently dead at the beginning of the opera) and Kurt Streit as Grimoaldo, who wants Rodelina for himself.

Peter Sellars's staging of Theodora transfers the action to modern-day America and the opening scene, with the chorus in red T-shirts, is ridiculously at odds with Valens's (Frode Olsen) proclamation about worshipping the Roman Gods. Once again the casting is impressive, with Dawn Upshaw a fine Theodora and David Daniels an equally impressive Didimus, Richard Croft as Septimus and Lorraine Hunt as Irene. But visually this all leaves much to be desired. The set provides a third disc, 'A Night with Handel', linking a series of arias sung by half a dozen different singers with locations in present-day London.

Semele (complete)

 Chan. 0745 (3). Joshua, Summers, Sherratt, Croft, Wallace, Early Opera Company Ch. & O, Curnyn

 DG 435 782-2 (3). Battle, Horne, Ramey, Aler, McNair, Chance, Mackie, Amb. Op. Ch., ECO, Nelson

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570431/3. Scholl, Schmidt, Markert, Schoch, Schwarz, Popken, Junge Kantorei, Frankfurt Bar. O, Martini

If Semele is known as a rule only by its most celebrated aria, Where'er you walk, it contains many other superb numbers. In this fine new Chandos version Rosemary Joshua, with her crystal-bright soprano, sings brilliantly in her famous big aria, Myself I shall adore, crisply pointed with neat triplets. Richard Croft as Jupiter sings with a pleasant light tenor and similarly gives a virtuoso performance of the brilliant passage work of the aria, No, no I'll take no less, and each of them has added ornaments for da capo repeats. Christian Curnyn directs the whole opera stylishly and his cast is uniformly strong. With excellent recording this can certainly be recommended.

The DG recording turns away from current fashion in using modern rather than period instruments, but the balance of advantage is in its favour. Nelson's performance is briskly paced, with rhythms sprung infectiously, and he has a strong cast, all of whom distinguish themselves.

There are also many pleasures to be had in the bargain Naxos account, given a generally enjoyable performance, stylishly accompanied by the excellent Frankfurt Baroque Orchestra, directed with spirit by Joachim Carlos Martini. The chorus also sings vigorously but seems to be in a different, more resonant acoustic. Elisabeth Scholl's dashing coloratura in the name role certainly carries the part, and she is delightful in her portrayal of the morning lark, gently touching in O sleep why dost thou leave me, and she shows her virtuosity in Myself I shall adore. She gets appealing support from the other female participants, notably Julia Schmidt's charming joint assumption of the roles of Iris and Cupid. Annette Markert's clear alto makes for a strong portrayal of Juno, and the bass Klaus Mertens' portrayal of Somnus at the opening of Act III is another striking scene. Knut Schoch has a fine, resonant tenor voice as Jupiter, and his Where'er you walk is a highlight in an opera overflowing with memorable numbers.

Serse (Xerxes; complete; CD version)

🔑  Conifer 75605 51312-2 (3). Malafronte, J. Smith, Milne, Bickley, Asawa, D. Thomas, Ely, Ch. & Hanover Band, McGegan

(*) Virgin 5 45711-2 (3). Von Otter, Norberg-Schulz, Zazzo, Piau, Tro Santafé, Abete, Furlanetto, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

McGegan, with light textures and generally brisk speeds, gives necessary momentum while allowing his principals full expressiveness in such deeper numbers as the hero's Act II aria, Il core spera e teme, warmly sung by Judith Malafronte, as is Ombra mai fù. The counter-tenor Brian Asawa, in the role of Xerxes' brother, Arsamene, is equally expressive with rich, even tone and fine agility, and Jennifer Smith as the heroine, Romilda, is particularly effective in her dramatic arias. Lisa Milne as her sister, Atalanta, nicely catches an ironic tone, with Susan Bickley fresh and agile as Amastre. Characterful baritone contributions from David Thomas (as a comic servant) and Dean Ely, with the chorus's brief interjections adding brightness and sparkle. Full, open sound.

Surprisingly, Anne Sofie von Otter, although she characterizes strongly in the title-role, is less sweet of tone than usual, and Elizabeth Norberg-Schulz too is not at her best as Romilda. Fortunately the counter-tenor Lawrence Zazzo is in superb voice as Arsamene; Sandrine Piau too is in excellent voice as Atalanta. Christie directs the proceedings spiritedly and you won't be disapppointed with his warmly expressive tempo for the famous Ombra mai fù.

Silla (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Somm SOMMCD 227-8 (2). Bowman, Lunn, Marsh, Baker, Nicholls, Cragg, Dixon, London Handel O, Darlow

Handel's early opera, Silla, is a curiosity, but it has one delightful number after another, all relatively brief with no longueurs anywhere. Silla's slumber aria, Dolce nume, is ravishing, as is the touching aria for Silla's estranged wife, Metella, Io noin chiedo più, while Silla's aria, La vendetta, and that of his enemy, Claudio, Con tromba guerriera, with trumpets blazing, are fine examples of the martial Handel.

Denys Darlow conducts a fresh, stylish performance with his London Handel Festival forces, recorded live at the Royal College of Music. Textures are clean and rhythms light and resilient, with James Bowman in the title-role leading a consistently reliable team. Rachel Nicholls as Metella is not as steady as the rest, but everyone copes very well with florid vocal writing, and with a live occasion, well caught, adding to the magnetism.

Tamerlano (complete; DVD version)

🔑 * Arthaus DVD 100 702 (2). Bacelli, Randle, Norberg-Schulz, Pushee, Bonitatibus, Abete, E. Concert, Pinnock (V/D: Jonathan Miller)

This is an instance where the DVD, recorded live in the small and ideal Goethe theatre in Bad Lauchstädt, is greatly preferable to the CDs, with solo voices naturally caught and strongly projected against the beautifully recorded and balanced orchestra. It is a strong team of soloists, with Monica Bacelli in the title-role controlling her full, firm contralto well, the counter-tenor, Graham Pushee, light and free as Andronico and Anna Bonitatibus a charming Princess Irene. Thomas Randle gives a vigorously resonant account of the role of Bazajet, and Elizabeth Norberg-Schulz is most resonant as Bazajet's daughter, Asteria. The production is simple and very effective, and Judy Levine's vivid costumes create a colourful contrast. The DVD set is splendidly documented, and includes a 'read the score' facility, with the action taking place behind the music – of course one can alternatively have the subtitles. The additional features include a retrospective review of 50 years of the Handel Festivals, from which this comes, and rehearsal sequences of the present performance.

Tamerlano (complete; CD versions)

(*) Avie AV 0001. (Cast as above), E. Concert, Pinnock

Ⓜ  Erato 2292 454908-2 (2). Ragin, Robson, Argenta, Chance, Findlay, Schirrer, E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

On CD John Eliot Gardiner's live concert performance of Tamerlano presents a strikingly dramatic and immediate experience. Leading the cast are two outstanding counter-tenors whose encounters provide some of the most exciting moments: Michael Chance as Andronicus, firm and clear, Derek Lee Ragin in the name-part equally agile and more distinctive of timbre, with a rich, warm tone that avoids womanliness. Nigel Robson in the tenor role of Bajazet conveys the necessary gravity, not least in the difficult, highly original G minor aria before the character's suicide; and Nancy Argenta sings with starry purity as Asteria. The only snag is the dryness of the sound, which makes voices and instruments sound somewhat aggressive.

Teseo (complete; DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 100 708. Laszczkowski, Rostorf-Zamir, Riccarda Wessling, Berlin Lautten Compagney, Katschner (Dir: Axel Kohler, V/D: Ute Feudel)

Teseo was an adaptation of Racine's play on the confrontation of Theseus and Medea. In five Acts, the two protagonists do not appear until Act II, and for much of the opera Theseus hardly emerges as the central character. This Berlin production of 2004 by Axel Kohler offers a stylish reading on period instruments, with an excellent line-up of principals. As Agilea, Sharon Rostorf-Zamir with her rich mezzo establishes the quality in the first three arias, and the three counter-tenors in the cast – taking the roles of Theseus, Egeo and Arcane – are all first rate, a plus point for this version. Kohler's production involves broadly traditional costumes and the simplest of sets.

Teseo (complete; CD version)

 Erato 2292 45806-2 (2). James, D. Jones, Gooding, Ragin, Napoli, Gall, Les Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski

Marc Minkowski, among the liveliest of period-performance specialists, brings out the inventiveness, helped by an excellent cast, dominated by British and American singers. These include Della Jones as Medea, Eirian James in the castrato role of Teseo, Julia Gooding as Agilea and characterful counter-tenors Derek Lee Ragin and Jeffrey Gall as Egeo and Arcane.

Tolomeo (complete; CD version)

 DG 477 7106 (3). Hallenberg, Spagnoli, Il Complesso Barocco, Curtis

Tolomeo, a dramma per musica, written in 1728, may not be well known but it has many fine numbers. Ann Hallenberg is warm and firm in the title-role and Pietro Spagnoli as Araspe, King of Cyprus, gives a strong and vigorous characterization, with bright and clean sopranos taking smaller roles, each coping well with the florid divisions. Alan Curtis, who has already given us a fine DVD performance of Ariodante (also with Ann Hallenberg in the lead), is equally impressive here, and Il Complesso Barocco serves the singers well. Fine DG recording.

VOCAL COLLECTIONS

(i) 9 German Arias; (ii) Oboe Sonatas, HWV 357; 363a; 366

 Hyp. CDA 67627. (i) Sampson; (ii) Bellamy; King's Consort

(i) 9 German Arias; Trio Sonatas, Op. 2/1 & 4

Ⓝ  Chan. 0743. (i) Baird; Tempesta di Mare Chamber Players

The Nine German Arias (written between 1724 and 1726) are the nearest Handel came to writing an intimate song-cycle. All the lyrics derive from Heinrich Brockes' set of poems ('Earthly delight in God') designed to be set as cantatas (with recitatives, which Handel chose not to use). Many of the poems are poetic paraphrases of Bible texts, and these have been identified in the CD's notes, with their translations. The accompaniments include obbligati for solo flute and violin, and every one of these arias has a winning Handelian flavour. Julianne Baird sings them very appealingly, and by grouping them in three sets of three, interspersed by a pair of Trio Sonatas, elegantly played by Tempesta di Mare, the listener's enjoyments is enhanced.

Carolyn Sampson's performances are as fresh as they are tonally beautiful and musically phrased, and using ornamentation judiciously. But to be on the safe side and to avoid monotony, Hyperion have interspersed the arias with three Oboe Sonatas, stylishly played by Alexandra Bellamy, with Robert King as part of the continuo.

'Handel Gold': Arias: Alcina: (i) Tornami a vagheggiar; (ii) Verdi prati. Ariodante: (iii) Dopo notte, altra e funesta. Atalanta: (iv) Care selve. (v) Coronation Anthem: Zadok the Priest. Floridante: (vi) Ma che vuoi piú da me. (vii) Giulio Cesare; Piangerò la sorte mia; (viii) V'adoro pupile. (ix) Hercules: Where shall I fly! Jephtha: (x) Waft her, angels. Joshua: (xi) Oh! Had I Jubal's lyre. (xii) Judas Maccabaeus: See the Conqu'ring Hero comes; (xiii) Father of Heav'n. Messiah: (xiv) He was despised; (xv) I know that my Redeemer liveth; (xvi) The People who walked in the darkness; (xvii) Behold I tell you a mystery – The Trumpet shall Sound; (xviii) Hallelujah Chorus. Muzio Scevola: (xix) Ah, dolce nome. Samson: (xx) Let the bright seraphim. Semele: (xxi) Hence, Iris, hence away; (xxii) Myself I shall adore; (xxiii) Where'er you walk. Serse: (xxiv) Frondi tenere; Ombra mai fu. Solomon: (xxv) Almighty pow'r! Tamerleno: (xxvi) Ciel e terra armi di sdegno. Theodora: (xxvii) Angels, ever bright and fair. Il Trionfo del Tempo e del Disinganno: (xxviii) Lascia la spina

Ⓝ ✿ Ⓑ * Decca 478 1460 (2). (i) Sutherland; (ii) Wunderlich; (iii) Von Otter; (iv) Pavarotti; (v) Westminster Abbey Ch.., E. Concert, Pinnock; (vi) DiDonato; (vii) Berganza; (viii) Fleming; (ix) J. Baker; (x) Robson; (xi)

Kožená; (xii) ASMF Ch. & O, Marriner; (xiii) Bumbry; (xiv) Ferrier; (xv) McNair; (xvi) Tomlinson; (xvii) Quasthoff; (xviii) E. Concert Ch. & O, Pinnock; (xix) Oberlin; (xx) Te Kanawa; (xxi) Horne; (xxii) Danielle de Niese; (xxiii) Terfel; (xxiv) Domingo; (xxv) Scholl; (xxvi) Villazón; (xxvii) Gritton; (xxviii) Bartoli

Vividly recorded and with the items presented in an expertly chosen sequence, this 'Decca Gold' collection is fully worthy of its name. Not only does it show Handel, in 28 varied arias, as a great tunesmith worthy to be placed alongside Schubert and Tchaikovsky but, with this remarkably starry cast, the performances are all fully worthy of this great music. Whether in the brilliant coloratura of Bartoli, Sutherland, Janet Baker, Marilyn Horne, or Danielle de Niese (whose engaging Myself I shall adore is a surprise highlight), the sparkle of Kiri Te Kanawa, the vitality and drama from Rolando Villazón, these are all memorable performances. One is also ravished by the lyrical beauty of line from Pavarotti, Renée Fleming and especially Bryn Terfel and Russel Oberlin, while of the items from Messiah one relishes John Tomlinson's sombre People who walked in darkness, Sylvia McNair's delightfully fresh I know that my Redeemer liveth and, above all, Kathleen Ferrier's unforgettable He was despised.

Arias & excerpts from: Alceste; (i) L'allegro, il penseroso ed il moderato; Esther; Jephtha; Rodelinda; Samson; Il trionfo del tempo e del disinganno; Semele; (i; ii) Tamerlano

 HM HMU 90 7422. Padmore, E. Concert, Manze; with (i) Crowe; (ii) Blaze

All today's singers seem to want to aspire to a collection of Handel arias, and there are plenty to choose from. These include such favourites as Waft her, angels, Total eclipse and Where'er you walk and much that is unfamiliar besides, including a duet from L'allegro, il penseroso ed il moderato with Lucy Crowe, and a scena from Tamerlano in trio with Crowe and Robin Blaze. But the solos are all full of magical sensitivity and intimacy, while da capos are tellingly recoloured. Altogether a superb collection, with the English Concert under Andrew Manze providing equally intimate accompaniments.

Arias & Overtures (1704–1726): Almira; Amadigi di Gaula; Giulio Cesare in Egitto; Rinaldo; Rodelinda; Rodrigo; Scipione (with March); Silla; Tamerlano. Arias & Duets (1726–1728) from: (i) Alessandro; Admeto; Riccardo primo; Serse; Tolomeo. Arias & Overtures (1729–41) from: Alcina; Ariana in Creta; Atalanta; Berenice, regina d'Eggito; Deidamia; Ezio; Lotario; Partenope; Sosarme, re di Media

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44271/3. Kirkby, (i) with Bott; Brandenburg Cons., Goodman

This three-disc survey covers the astonishingly wide operatic range of Handel's career from 1704 to 1726, nearly two dozen operas in all. In between these two collections comes a third, dealing with the middle-period operas which Hyperion describe as 'the era of the Rival Queens', as the lead roles were originally sung by the two sopranos, Francesca Cuzzoni and Faustina Bordoni. They were given this title as they first appeared together playing the rival lovers of Alessandro (the Great). So for this programme the baroque queen Emma Kirkby is joined by the rich-voiced and equally regal Catherine Bott in a programme which appropriately includes a particularly generous selection from the opera with which the sobriquet is associated. With full documentation, texts and translations, this is an unmissable set for lovers of Handel's Italian operas.

Airs, 'scènes célèbres', sinfonias and instrumental music from: Admeto; Alcina; Giulio Cesare; Radamisto; Rodelinda; Serse; Concerto grosso (Alexander's Feast)

🔑 ✿ * HM HMC 901685. Scholl, Berlin Akademie für Alte Musik

Handel's most celebrated aria, Ombra mai fù, is radiantly sung here, with firm, golden tone, alongside the equally lovely Chiudetevi, miei lumi from Admeto, and the glorious Dove sei from Rodelinda, with the programme capped by an unforgettably beautiful Verdi prati from Alcina. There are lively moments too, notably the genial Va tacito, which has a jolly horn obbligato. The splendid period-instrument Berlin Akademie für Alte Musik end the programme with a superb account of the Alexander's Feast Concerto grosso, light and airy. But it is Andreas Scholl's wonderfully stylish and moving singing that makes this record indispensable. The recording is full and immediate.

Arias from: Ariodante; Theodora

Ⓜ  Wigmore Hall WH Live 0013. Hunt Lieberson, Vignoles – MAHLER: 5 Ruckert Lieder; LIEBERSON: O ihr Zatlichen, etc. ***

The untimely death from cancer of Lorraine Hunt Lieberson makes one value the relatively few recordings she made, including this live recording, taken at a Wigmore Hall recital in 1998. Having Handel arias accompanied on the piano may not be ideal, but the brilliance and agility of this singing is magnetic.

Operatic Duets from: Admeto; Atalanta; Faramondo; Flavio; Muzio Scevola; Orlando; Poro, Re dell'Indie; Rinaldo; Serse; Silla; Sosarme; Teseo

Ⓜ  Virgin 5 18179-2. Ciofi, DiDonato, Il Compresso Barocco, Curtis

We have already had a stimulating and highly successful collection of duets from Handel's oratorios (see above, on BIS), and here is a comparable operatic selection, in which situations are usually more theatrical and produce dramatic or intensely expressive interchanges between the characters. So it is here, and there are plenty of novelties, not least the rewarding selection from Poro, Re dell'Indie, or, on a lighter note, the delightful excerpts from Atalanta and Faramondo and deeply touching ones from Teseo and Silla. All these duets and more are engagingly and beautifully sung by Patrizia Ciofi and Joyce DiDonato, soprano and mezzo respectively, with ornamentation nicely managed. Il Compresso Barocco, directed by Alan Curtis, provide most sensitive accompaniments, and the recording is warm and vivid.

Arias from: Agrippina; Orlando; Partenope; Rinaldo; Serse

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 60519-2. Horne, Sol. Ven., Scimone

Here is a dazzling demonstration of Marilyn Horne singing a varied compilation of Handel arias. The flexibility of her voice in scales and trills and ornaments of every kind remains formidable, and the power is extraordinary down to the tangy chest-register. The voice is spotlit against a reverberant acoustic. Purists may question some of the ornamentation, but voice-fanciers will not worry.

Arias from: Agrippina; Alexander Balus; Giulio Cesare; Lotario; Orlando; Rinaldo; Rodelinda; Samson; Scipione; Semele; Serse

 Decca SACD 475 6186 / CD 475 547-2. Fleming, OAE, Bicket

Accompanied by the fine period players of the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment under Harry Bicket, Renée Fleming has taken scholarly advice over such matters as ornamenting da capo repeats, not making them too intrusive. The 16 items range wide, with favourites like Ombra mai fù, Let the bright seraphim and Cleopatra's arias in Giulio Cesare, set against rarities like Adelaide's Act II aria in Lotario and, best of all, Cleopatra's touching aria, Calm thou my soul, from the oratorio, Alexander Balus.

Arias from: Alessandro; Amadigi; Arianna in Creta; Deidamia; Faramondo; Giulio Cesare; Orlando; Partenope; Rodelinda; Scipione; Tamerlano

🔑  Naïve E 8894. Piau, Les Talens Lyriques, Rousset

The French soprano, Sandrine Piau, has few rivals today in the phenomenal agility she brings to these 12 arias, each from a different opera seria, starting with a breathtaking display in Berenice's aria from Scipione. Her control of coloratura is complete, with never a hint of any intrusive aitches, and that goes with a voice that is bold, fresh and clear, beautiful in such darkly intense slow arias such as those from Amadigi and Deidamia. The arias are each linked to a series of six great prima donnas of the 18th century, and Piau amply demonstrates that in every way she is a modern match for any of them.

Arias: Alexander's Feast: The Prince, unable to conceal his pain; Softly sweet in Lydian measures; Atalanta: Care selve; Giulio Cesare: Piangerò; Messiah: Rejoice greatly; He shall feed his flock; Rinaldo: Lascia ch'io pianga; Samson: Let the bright Seraphim

 Delos D/CD 3026. Augér, Mostly Mozart O, Schwarz – BACH: Arias **(*)

Arleen Augér's bright, clean, flexible soprano is even more naturally suited to these Handel arias than to the Bach items with which they are coupled. The delicacy with which she tackles the most elaborate divisions and points the words is a delight.

Overtures and Arias (1704–1726) from: Almira; Amadigi di Gaula; Giulio Cesare in Egitto; Rinaldo; Rodelinda; Rodrigo; Scipione (with March); Silla; Tamerlano

 Hyp. CDA 66860. Kirkby, Brandenburg Cons., Goodman

Overtures and Arias (1729–1741) from: Alcina; Arianna in Creta; Atalanta; Berenice, regina d'Egitto; Deidamia; Ezio; Lotario; Partenope; Sosarme, re di Media

 Hyp. CDA 67128. Kirkby, Brandenburg Cons., Goodman

It might be thought that a collection interspersing Handel arias and overtures would not be particularly stimulating, but Emma Kirkby (in glorious voice) and Roy Goodman directing invigorating playing by the Brandenburg Consort prove just how enjoyable such a concert, or pair of concerts, can be. The first disc covers the first half of Handel's operatic career. Volume 2 deals with Handel's later operas and opens with the virtually unknown overture to Lotario (1729). Queen Adelaide's feisty aria which follows shows Emma Kirkby at her nimblest, although she is hardly less dazzling in Dite pace from Sosarme. Perhaps the most delightful item here is Chi t'intende? from Berenice, where Kirkby clearly enjoys her continuing duet with the solo oboe.

Arias from: Amadigi; Ariodante; Deidamia; Giulio Cesare; Lotario; Radamisto; Rinaldo; Rodelinda; Scipione

 Linn CKD252. Bell, SCO, Egarr

Emma Bell's superb collection of soprano arias covers the full span of the Italian operas that Handel wrote for London, from Rinaldo in 1711 to Deidamia 30 years later in 1741. Here is a voice of glowing quality, at once bright yet creamy in texture, weighty yet pure, which is matched by fine musical imagination and a masterly control of technique. The collection begins with one of the most brilliant arias, Destero dall empia dite from Amadigi, with two trumpets obbligato setting the pattern in the instrumental introduction, dazzlingly played by members of the Scottish Chamber Orchestra. Though modern instruments are used, Richard Egarr effectively adopts an apt degree of period style for Handel.

Arias from: Ariodante; Rodelinda; La Resurrezione; Serse; Tamerlano

(N) * DG 477 8056. Villazón, Gabrieli Players, McCreesh

Rolando Villazón shows himself here just as much a master of Handel as he is of Donizetti. He opens commandingly with Tamerlano, the spirited Ciel e terra di sdegno, and returns to this opera later with a dramatic scene, including the touching arioso, Figlia mia, non pianger. The recitative, Fatto inferno è il mio petto from Rodelinda, then contrasts with the lovely Pastorello d'un povero Armento from the same opera. Whether in spectacular bravura runs (as in Crude furie degl'orridi abissi from Serse and Dopo notte atra e funesta from Ariodante) or in tender lyricism (as in the very beautiful Scherza infida from the same opera), his lovely voice and gently stylish vocal line give great pleasure. Not surprisingly, he also magics the famous Ombra mai fu from Serse. He is sympathetically accompanied by McCreesh and his Gabrieli Players, and is vividly recorded.

Arias from: Belshazzar; Jephtha; Messiah; Saul; Semele; Theodora

🔑 * Virgin 5 45497-2. Daniels, Ens. O de Paris, Nelson

Even David Daniels has rarely matched the brilliance, beauty and expressive intensity of this superb collection of arias from Handel oratorios, starting with two arias from Belshazzar, the one exuberant in vigour, a display aria for Cyrus with trumpets and timpani, the other noble and deeply felt for Daniel, O Sacred Oracles of Truth. Similarly a light and brilliant aria from Semele is set against one in a poignant minor key, while the four arias from Theodora, all for the character Didymus, similarly cover a wide range. Those from Saul have David singing his lament for Jonathan set against a noble prayer, while Hamor's arias from Jephtha lead to the noblest performance of all, He was despised from Messiah. John Nelson draws electric playing from his period orchestra, starting brilliantly on the first Belshazzar aria.

Arias from: Flavio: (i) Amor, nel mio penar; Giulio Cesare in Eggitto: Va tacito e nascosto; Hercules: (ii) Turn thee, youth to joy and love (with Chorus); (iii) This manly youth's exalted mind; Mount, mount the steep ascent (with Chorus). Messiah: (iv; v) He shall feed his flock; (v) Rejoice greatly; (vi) Why do the nations?... Let us break (with Chorus); Orlando: (i) Fammi combattere; Rinaldo: (vii) Or la tromba in suon festante; Rodelinda: Vivi tirrano; Xerxes: Frondi tenere... Ombra mai fù; (viii) 9 German Arias: Süsse Sille, sanfte Quelle; (ix) Silete venti (Motet, with Flute & Continuo)

🔑 ✿ * Capriccio Surround Sound SACD 71 024. (i) Axel Köhler; (ii) Hruba-Freiberger; (iii) Arleen Augér; (iv) Charles Humphries; (v) Max Emanuel Cencic; (vi) Robert Torday, V. Boys' Ch.; (vii) Jochen Kowalski; (viii) Ann Monoyios & Berlin Bar. Co.; (ix) Emma Kirkby; (with various orchestras & conductors)

This is simply the most thrilling collection of miscellaneous Handel arias in the catalogue, and the Rosette must be shared equally by the perceptive unnamed compiler, the artists for their inspired contributions, and to Capriccio's Surround Sound for providing such an extraordinary communication of the artists' presence and of the feeling of actually sitting in the concert hall. It is not possible to do justice to the many fine performances here. Opening with resplendent trumpets, as only Handel knows how to write for them, the programme begins with the clarion call from Rinaldo, Or le tromba in suon festante, dramatically sung by Jochen Kowalski, who is later to be equally commanding in the bravura aria from Rodelinda, and then melts the listener with a glorious Ombra mai fù.

After Axel Köhler has sung the virtuoso aria from Orlando with alomb, she is joined in duet in the Julius Caesar excerpt by a remarkably characterful unnamed period-horn soloist. Our own Emma Kirkby is as ravishing as ever in the celestial motet, Silete venti, and Ann Monoyios shares her lovely German aria, Süsse Stille, with the flute d'amour. And it is the delicate opening and closing writing for flutes that helps to make Arleen Augér's first aria from Hercules so haunting. There are, alas, no texts and translations – but, for once, one is lost for words anyway.

Arias from: Giulio Cesare; Rinaldo; Rodelinda; Serse; Tamerlano

 Virgin 5 45326-2. Daniels, OAE, Norrington

Here again, David Daniels stands out for the evenness and beauty of his voice, with an exceptionally rich lower register. Though the orchestra is not always as alert as it might be, his singing in this challenging group of arias, starting with Ombra mai fù from Serse, is warmly expressive in slow numbers and brilliantly dramatic in fast ones like Al lampo dell'armi from Giulio Cesare. Well-balanced sound.

Arias from: Israel in Egypt; Messiah; Radamisto; Rodelinda; Muzio Scavelo

✿  DG 477 6541. Oberlin, Fuller, Bar. Ch. O, Dunn

This disc is quite sensational. When it appeared in 1960, first on American Decca and subsequently on DG, it was hailed as 'a tour de force, one of the most amazing demonstrations of vocal homogeneity on record'. Russell Oberlin had a relatively short career: Londoners may remember that he appeared briefly at Covent Garden as Oberon in Britten's Midsummer Night's Dream. He produces a thrilling sonority and lets us hear arias that Handel would have written for alto castratos or fema le mezzo sopranos very much as they might have sounded in Handel's lifetime. In terms of both virtuosity and artistry this singing really is amazing. No less amazing is the fact that this is its first (belated) appearance on CD.

Arias: Judas Maccabaeus: Father of heaven; Messiah: O Thou that tellest; He was despised; Samson: Return O God of Hosts

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ () Decca mono 475 6411. Ferrier, LPO, Boult – BACH: Arias ()

Kathleen Ferrier had a unique feeling for Handel; these performances are unforgettable for their communicative intensity and nobility of timbre and line. She receives highly sympathetic accompaniments from Boult, another natural Handelian.

Arias: Partenope: Sento amor; Ch'io parta?; Furibondo spira il vento; Tolomeo: Stille amare

 Virgin 5 45365-2. Daniels, OAE, Bicket – GLUCK, MOZART: Arias ***

One of the Partenope arias provides the title for this third exceptional disc of counter-tenor arias, ranging widely in its expressiveness, with David Daniels using his extraordinarily beautiful voice, clear and pure with none of the usual counter-tenor hoot, with the keenest artistry. Whether in deeply expressive lyrical numbers or in brilliant florid passages, his technique is immaculate, with the voice perfectly placed.

Duets: A miravi io son intento; Conservate, raddoppiate; Fronda leggiera e mobile; Langue, geme, sospira e si lagna; Nò, di voi non vo' fidarmi; Se tu non lasci amore; Sono liete, fortunate; Tanti strali al sen mi scocchi; Troppo cruda, troppo fiera

Ⓑ (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55262. Fisher, Bowman, King's Consort

About half of Handel's Italian duets are included here. All are engagingly intimate works, flowing readily between the two voices, here the admirably matched soprano of Gillian Fisher and the alto of James Bowman. Fisher sings so musically and sweetly and with an appealing simplicity. Bowman is his inimitable self, and the accompaniments use a varied continuo of cello, archlute, harpsichord and chamber organ. Texts and translations are provided.

HANSON, Howard (1896–1981)

Symphony 1; Merry Mount (suite); Pan and the Priest, Op. 26; Rhythmic Variations on Two Ancient Hymns

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.559072. Nashville SO, Schermerhorn

Schermerhorn gives a relaxed account of the First Symphony, notably slower than the composer's own deleted thrusting Mercury account, but this warmer approach offers its own rewards, especially in some of the more lyrical passages. The two tone-poems are rarities: Pan and the Priest, written during 1925–6, begins quite mournfully on a solo cor anglais, and is passionate and reflective in turn, with the orchestra (including a piano) used colourfully. The Rhythmic Variations are melancholic and contemplative in nature, but appealing also, and the colourful Merry Mount suite (one of Hanson's best works) is splendidly done. The Nashville SO play well for Schermerhorn, and the sound is warm and reasonably vivid. Good value.

Symphony 2 (Romantic)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 06612-2. St Louis SO, Slatkin – VIRGIL THOMSON: Autumn; Plow that broke the Plains, etc. ***

Symphony 2 (Romantic), Op. 30; Bold Island Suite; Merry Mount Suite; Fanfare for the Signal Corps

🔑  Telarc CD 80649. Cincinnati Pops O, Kunzel

With the Mercury anthologies currently unobtainable (temporarily, we hope) this Telarc issue must now be regarded as the key Howard Hanson CD. It is magnificently played and glorously recorded in ideally full and spacious Telarc sound. Apart from the richly persusive performance of the composer's most memorable symphony, so hauntingly melodic, the Merry Mount Suite is also played outstandingly, especially the engaging Children's Dance and the expansive Love duet. This, like the central Summer Seascape of the fine Bold Island Suite (a recording première), has the full patina of rich scoring so characteristic of this endearing composer. A splendid disc in every way.

Slatkin's performance is also a very satisfying one, responding to the expressive nostalgia of the slow movement and bringing an exhilarating attack to the finale. The full, atmospheric recording, beautifully balanced and rich in washes of string-tone, is a pleasure in itself, and the Virgil Thomson couplings are well worth having.

Symphony 3

() Biddulph mono WHL 044. Boston SO, Koussevitzky – MUSSORGSKY: Khovanshchina: Prelude; LIADOV: The Enchanted Lake; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh: Entr'acte; Dubinushka; FAURÉ: Pelléas et Mélisande: Prélude; La Fileuse; Mort de Mélisande **(*)

With passionate playing from the Boston Orchestra, Koussevitzky's reading is powerfully committed, immediately establishing the northern atmosphere of Hanson's sound-world and building the finale steadily to its final climax with gripping concentration. The Biddulph transfer is very good, with sonic inadequacies easily forgotten. The other pieces, which come before the symphony, are all played superbly, but the sound is more variable. Highlights include the Mussorgsky Khovanshchina Prelude, sombrely paced, and the Liadov Enchanted Lake, both highly evocative and the latter remarkably full and atmospheric. The excerpts from Fauré's Pelléas et Mélisande are delicately done, although here climaxes are less refined.

HARRIS, Roy (1898–1979)

Symphonies 2 and 3

(*) Albany SACD TROY 515. Albany SO, Miller

Here is something of special interest and value. It fills in the gap between Harris's First Symphony of 1933, and the celebrated Third. Although Koussevitzky had commissioned it, the first performance was conducted by his concert-master, Richard Burgin, and Harris never attended it. He subsequently seems to have disowned the piece, except for the middle movement, which is undoubtedly the finest. It is fascinating to hear the harmonic language of the Third taking shape and the sinewy counterpoint and Gregorian-like melodies unfold so naturally. One is occasionally reminded of Vaughan Williams. The first movement is less convincing, although Harris already shows his firmness of grip and purpose; the finale makes a strong ending. The orchestral playing is committed, though the string tone is lacking in weight. The SACD recording is perfectly acceptable, if not outstanding; but the sheer interest of the work carries the day.

Symphonies 3; (i) 4 (Folk Song Symphony)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559227. (i) Colorado Symphony Ch.; Colorado SO, Alsop

Good news. This issue heralds the appearance of a complete cycle of the 13 symphonies of Harris, which Naxos are undertaking. The Third gets a rousing performance. The Fourth, Folk Song Symphony, offers colourful settings for chorus and orchestra of five traditional songs, with two purely instrumental numbers, livelier than the rest, as interludes. An attractive novelty, but not the equal of either of its immediate neighbours.

Symphonies 7; 9; Epilogue to Profiles in Courage – J.F.K.

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.559050. Nat. SO of Ukraine, Kuchar

Kuchar and the Ukraine Orchestra offer powerfully idiomatic accounts of these two symphonies, and they are recorded vividly, though the upper strings are lacking real body and weight. The writing, open and strong, with antiphonal effects between massed strings and brass is recognizably from the same pen as the Third, well worth investigating. No. 7, like that celebrated work, is in a single 20-minute movement of contrasted sections.

Commissioned for Philadelphia, No. 9 takes its inspiration from the American Constitution and is in three substantial movements, each with a quotation from the Constitution as a superscription. Surprisingly, the opening, 'We, the people', brings a jolly waltz motif with whooping brass, and it is only in the second and third movements, much more extended, that the composer takes on a solemn mood, with the pavane-like second movement leading to a strong finale with martial overtones. The Epilogue in memory of President Kennedy is elegiac, dignified without quite becoming a funeral march, gritty at times, leading to a meditative close.

Symphonies (i) 8 (San Francisco Symphony) for Orchestra with Piano; 9; Memories of a Child's Sunday

 Albany TROY 350. Albany SO, Miller, (i) with Feinberg

The Eighth Symphony is a one-movement piece in five sections, Harris provides a virtuoso piano part, and tubular bells. Dan Stehman speaks of the chorale-like slow movement of the Ninth Symphony, along with the slow movement of the Fifth, as being Harris's finest. Its sound-world is fresh and there is a Gallic transparency of texture. Memories of a Child's Sunday is a slight piece written much earlier, in 1945, for Rodzinski and the New York Philharmonic. The Albany Orchestra plays very well for David Alan Miller and in the Ninth they are to be preferred to their Ukrainian colleagues. Very fine recorded sound.

HARRISON, Julius (1885–1963)

(i) Bredon Hill; Prelude-Music; Romance (A Song of Adoration); Troubadour Suite; Widdicombe Fair; Worcestershire Suite

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7174. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth, (i) with Trusler – CLIFFORD: Serenade for Strings ***

Julius Harrison was a well-regarded conductor. In the 1940s, his increasing deafness forced him to stop conducting and concentrate on composing. His two most famous works are included in this splendid new CD: the Worcestershire Suite and Bredon Hill. The former comprises four descriptive movements, full of good tunes, scene-painting and a pleasing outdoor atmosphere. Bredon Hill, with its soaring solo violin lines, rather like The Lark Ascending, is beautifully evocative and pastoral in feeling. The Troubadour Suite has a nicely flavoured medieval spirit, piquantly orchestrated, very much in the tradition of Holst's St Paul's Suite and Warlock's Capriol Suite. Prelude-Music is a very pleasing piece of romantic 'light music', as are both the Romance and Widdicombe Fair. Barry Wordsworth and his orchestra have brought it back to life. Highly recommended in every way, including the excellent sound.

HARRISON, Lou (born 1917)

Symphony 2 (Elegiac)

Ⓝ Ⓜ Nim. NI 2512. American Composers O, Russell Davies – HOVHANESS: Symphony 2; Lousadzak ***

Lou Harrison's remarkable Second Symphony is an ideal coupling for the Hovhaness Second. Although for the most part scored frugally, it uses a large orchestra, including a piano and two harps. It creates the same feeling of space, only more intangibly, and its textures are comparably haunting. The five movements are all named and the first, 'Tears of the angel, Israfel', is delicately scored and deeply evocative. After a bold, uncomfortable Scherzo, the feeling of serenity returns, to be interrupted by the calamitously dissonant 'Praises for Michael the Archangel'. With the closing 'Sweetness of Epicurus' the elegiac feeling returns, creating a gently glowing sense of ecstasy. The work is superbly played, and stays in the memory long after the last two-note figure has become silence.

HARTMANN, Karl Amadeus (1905–63)

(i) Concerto funèbre (for Violin & Strings). Sonatas 1–2; Suites 1–2 (for Solo Violin)

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67547. Ibragimova; (i) Britten Sinfonia, Shave

The Concerto funèbre – for violin and strings – very much reflects in its dark moods, often passionately disconsolate, the troubled period 1939, when it was written. Alina Ibragimova's very responsive performance is movingly intense and committed, and she plays the Adagio and closing Chorale with poignant feeling. This is a troubling but very rewarding work to which one is drawn to return. The solo violin Sonatas and Suites are quite remarkable. Obviously they pay a debt of inheritance to Bach, but they also have a distinct personal profile. They date from 1927 and represent the first of the composer's works to survive. Each Sonata and Suite offers four or five contrasted movements of great character, and it is difficult to find many other modern works for unaccompanied violin that offer such a depth of feeling (often plangent) or such attractive and original opportunities for virtuosity, which the soloist here clearly relishes. The recording is excellent and this disc is very much worth exploring.

HARTY, Hamilton (1879–1941)

A Comedy Overture; (i) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto; (iii) In Ireland (Fantasy); An Irish

Symphony; (ii) Variations on a Dublin Air; With the Wild Geese; (iv) The Children of Lir; Ode to a Nightingale. Arrangement: The Londonderry Air

Ⓜ  Chan. 10194X (3). (i) Binns; (ii) Holmes; (iii) Fleming, Kelly; (iv) Harper; Ulster O, Thomson

Bryden Thomson's reissued box gathers togther Harty's orchestral and concertante works with great success. The Piano Concerto has strong Rachmaninovian influences, and if the Violin Concerto is less individual it is often touched with poetry. Ralph Holmes gives a thoroughly committed account of the solo part and is well supported by an augmented Ulster Orchestra under Bryden Thomson. The Irish Symphony, built on traditional themes, is best known for its Scherzo, entitled A Fair Day, but it is brilliantly scored and enjoyable throughout. It is extremely well played by the Ulster Orchestra, while the In Ireland Fantasy is full of delightful Irish melodic whimsy. Melodrama enters the scene in the symphonic poem, With the Wild Geese, but its Irishry asserts itself immediately in the opening theme. All these performances are highly sympathetic and there is a high standard of digital sound throughout. The three discs are no longer available separately.

(i) Piano Concerto; Comedy Overture; Fantasy Scenes

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.557731. Ulster O, Yuasa, (i) with Donohoe

Peter Donohoe offers a faster, fresher version of Harty's very appealing Piano Concerto than the Chandos rival with Malcolm Binns, though the latter remains enjoyable in its richer sound. Similarly, the Comedy Overture is much faster than on Chandos's version, and it sparkles in its wit and easygoing energy. The Fantasy Scenes is attractive, light, 'postcard' music with a vaguely exotic feel, and prettily scored. This CD is recommended in every way and the sound, though without the sumptuous quality which Chandos obtained with the same orchestra, is very good.

An Irish Symphony; In Ireland; With the Wild Geese

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.554732. Nat. SO of Ireland, O Duinn

The Irish Symphony has won great acclaim for its brilliant scoring and craftsmanship. The brief, dancing Scherzo entitled The Fair Day is the more exciting for being taken at breathtaking speed. The players of the National Symphony Orchestra of Ireland take up the challenge brilliantly, and bring all the necessary warmth to the other evocative movements, which, like the two tone-poems, a generous fill-up, are atmospheric programme-pieces inspired by Irish legends and places. Full, clear sound.

Music for cello and piano: Butterflies; Romance & Scherzo, Op. 8; Wood-stillness

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7102. Fuller, Dussek – HURLSTONE: Cello Sonata; PARRY: Cello Sonata ***

Slight but quite pleasing pieces that are fill-ups for the two cello sonatas by Hurlstone and Parry. Effective and accomplished playing from Andrew Fuller and Michael Dussek – and very well recorded too.

3 Pieces for Oboe & Piano

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55008. Francis, Rasumovsky Qt – BOUGHTON: Pastorale; HOWELLS: Sonata; RUBBRA: Sonata ***

Harty's three oboe Pieces, played here with piano, were written for Henry Wood's 1911 Proms with an orchestral accompaniment. They are utterly charming in this more intimate version, and both artists respond to their disarming melodiousness, especially in the very Irish tune of the closing A la campagne. The balance is too forward but the playing has delicacy of feeling and, if you turn the volume down, the effect is very pleasing.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) The Children of Lir; Ode to a Nightingale; (ii) Variations on a Dublin Air. Arrangement: Londonderry Air

Ⓜ  Chan. 7033. Ulster O, Thomson, with (i) Harper; (ii) Holmes

Harty's setting of Keats's Ode to a Nightingale is richly convincing, a piece written for his future wife, the soprano, Agnes Nicholls. The other work, directly Irish in its inspiration, evocative in an almost Sibelian way, uses the soprano in wordless melisma, here beautifully sung by Heather Harper. The performances are excellent, warmly committed and superbly recorded. The Variations on a Dublin Air, for violin and orchestra, and Harty's arrangement of the Londonderry Air have been added for the reissue.

HAYDN, Joseph (1732–1809)

Complete Concertos

Concertos (i) for Cello, in C, Hob VIIb:1; in D, Hob VIIb 2 & 4; (ii) for Horn in D, Hob VIId:3; (iii) for Keyboard (Organ): in C, Hob XVIII:1, 8 & 10; (iv) for Harpsichord in D, C & F, Hob XVIII: 2, 5 &7; (v) for Piano: in F, Hob XVIII:3; in G, Hob XVIII:4 & 9; in D, Hob XVIII:11; (vi) for 2 Lyre Organizzate, Hob VIIh:1 in C (arr. 2 recorders); Hob VIIh:2 in G (arr. flute & oboe); HobVIIh:3 in G (arr. for 2 flutes); HobVIIh:4 in F (arr. for flute & oboe); HobVIIIh:5 in F (arr. for 2 recorders); (vii) for Trumpet in E flat, Hob VIIe:1; (viii) for Violin in C, A & G, Hob VIIa:1, 3 & 4. (ix) Double Concerto for Violin & Fortepiano, Hob XVIII:6

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Naxos 8.506019 (6). (i) Kliegel; (ii) Babanov; (iii) Hoeren; (iv) Haugsand; (v) Knauer; (vi) Rothert & Spätling (recorders), Fromanger & Nelken (flutes), Hommel; (vii) Schuster; (viii) Hadelich; (ix) Daskalakis & Hoeren (fortepiano); Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

This Naxos tercentenary box, containing just Haydn's authenticated concertos, is particularly inviting. All are fine recordings, underpinned by stylish and lively accompaniments by the excellent Cologne Chamber Orchestra, sensitively directed by Helmut Müller-Brühl, and the separate

CDs are discussed below. If the Trumpet Concerto (still the finest ever written for this instrument, and brilliantly played here) stands out, the fine D major Cello Concerto, Hob XVIIb:2, is also superbly presented by Naxos's star cellist, Maria Kliegel, who then goes on to give a most persuasive account of the Adagio of the early C major concerto (only discovered in 1961).

Of the Piano Concertos, only the justly popular D major, with its striking opening theme, could readily be placed alongside those of Mozart, especially in this winning performance by Sebastian Knauer, but he plays its companions very stylishly. The Organ (with no pedals required) and Harpsichord Concertos are virtually interchangeable, with sparkling allegros, the baroque scoring brightened by horns or trumpets, framing appealingly expressive slow movements, with the performances so alive. The Horn Concerto is florid and demands and receives ready virtuosity, especially in the slow movement, which soars up romantically high.

The three Violin Concertos are not distinctive, although Augustin Hadelich plays them spontaneously and with much finesse. However, the delicate little Double Concerto for Violin and Harpsichord is a surprise. Perfectly balanced, the interplay between the two instruments catches the ear engagingly, especially in the slow movement.

Finally, and also unexpectedly, the transcribed works for a pair of lire organizzate are most inventively sprightly. They were commissioned by the King of Naples to be played in duet with his teacher on a curious hybrid combination of hurdy-gurdy and organ. It's obsolete now, but the alternative transcriptions for varying woodwind instruments in pairs are most effective (as Haydn intended), and the music is by no means trivial. Altogether this is a most rewarding compilation, with performances and recording of high quality and a handsome accompanying booklet offered within a most presentable box.

Cello Concerto 1 in C

() BBC Legends (mono) BBCL 4198-2. Rostropovich, LSO – ELGAR: Cello Concerto; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ()

Directing the LSO from his cello, Rostropovich gives a dashing interpretation of the Concerto in C. It was one of the items in his mammoth sequence of over 30 concertos that he performed in London in 1965. At that time this work was only just becoming familiar, having been buried for centuries, and this came as a revelation. Rostropovich plays the Britten cadenza, as he did on other occasions. The main interest of the disc is the Elgar, which he never recorded otherwise.

Cello Concertos 1–2; Violin Concertos: in D, Hob VIIb: Adagio (only); in G, Hob VIIa: 4 (transcribed for cello) (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * DG DVD 073 4351. Maisky, with VSO – SCHUMANN: Cello Concerto ****

What a joy, as Maisky's performance of Haydn's C major Cello Concerto opens in the beautiful concert room of the Schloss Hetzendorf in Vienna, to hear the rich-timbred soloist and the lovely sounds of the Vienna strings playing on modern instruments, which Maisky himself directs with a combination of bow and body movements. He is a pleasure to watch, and these are simply glorious performances, beautifully photographed, and if Maisky sounds a little indulgent in the Adagio he has transcribed from the C major Violin Concerto, this and the complete G major work add to the pleasures of this superb DVD, one of the finest in the catalogue.

Cello Concertos 1 in C; 2 in D, Hob VIIb/1–2

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66896-2. Du Pré, ECO, Barenboim; or LSO, Barbirolli – BOCCHERINI: Cello Concerto in B flat (arr. GRUTZMACHER) ***

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca 478 0025. Coin, AAM, Hogwood

(BB)  Naxos 8.550059. Kanta, Capella Istropolitana, Breiner – BOCCHERINI: Cello Concerto ***

(i) Cello Concertos 1–2; Symphony 104 (arr. Salomon)

🔑  Channel Classics CCS 7395. (i) Wispelwey; Florilegium

Pieter Wispelwey is an inspired soloist in the period performance with Florilegium, at times abrasive but always transparent in texture, with the soloist's clean articulation allowing fast speeds in outer movements with no feeling of rush. The central Adagios by contrast are surprisingly slow, not as elegant as some, but deeply felt. Salomon's arrangement of Haydn's last symphony for flute, string quartet and piano makes an unusual if lightweight coupling.

Jacqueline du Pré's recording of the C major Concerto in April 1967 was the first she made with her husband, Daniel Barenboim, and she gives a performance of characteristic warmth and intensity. Equally, with Barbirolli scaling his accompaniment to match the inspirational approach of his young soloist, the performance of the better-known D major Concerto is just as warm and expressive, and the romantic feeling is matched by an attractively full, well-balanced sound-picture.

Christophe Coin, too, is a superb soloist and, provided the listener has no reservations about the use of original instruments, Hogwood's accompaniments are equally impressive. Excellent sound.

Ludovít Kanta is a fine artist. The excellent Naxos recording is made in a bright, resonant acoustic in which every detail is clearly registered, though the players are perhaps forwardly placed. The accompaniments are alert and fresh. Kanta plays contemporary cadenzas. An excellent bargain.

(i) Cello Concertos 1–2 Hob VIIb/1–2; (ii) Piano Concerto in D, Hob XVIII/11 (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * EuroArts DVD 2072068. ASMF, (i) with Rostropovich; directed Iona Brown; (ii) Francesch, cond. Marriner

Here is as perfect a coupling as you will ever find on record: Haydn's three finest concertos, given outstanding performances, with the ASMF in sparkling form, the Cello concertos led by Iona Brown and the D major Piano Concerto with Marriner conducting. Rostropovich is unsurpassed in the works for cello, playing with great warmth and with many subtle touches, using the widest range of dynamic. Homero Francesch articulates with buoyant crispness of style and no less sophistication of detail. In short, this is wonderfully enjoyable, both to watch and to be involved in, for Rostropovich in particular is always fascinating visually, as he is so completely involved in the music. The Cello Concertos were recorded in 1975 (in the London Henry Wood Hall) and the Piano Concerto in 1982 against the rich backcloth of the Bayreuth Opernhaus, and the sound is splendidly clear and vivid. This is among the most recommendable of all concerto DVDs.

(i) Cello Concertos 1–2; (ii; iii) Piano Concerto in D, Hob XVIII/11; (iv) Trumpet Concerto in E flat; Violin Concertos Nos. (v) 1 in C; (vi; iii) 4 in G, Hob XVIIa/1 & 4; (vii) Flute Trios (London), Hob IV/1–3

🔑 Ⓑ  Sony 517 485-2. (i) Ma; (ii) Ax; (iv) Marsalis; (v) Lin, Minnesota O, Marriner

An excellent compilation, well worth collecting if you want all these works. In the Cello Concertos Ma's refinement of approach brings its own rewards, though some may prefer a bolder approach to music that belongs firmly to the classical 18th century. The well-transferred analogue recording is clean and full. Ax plays the finest of Haydn's piano concertos on a modern piano and does so with great style; he is splendidly accompanied and recorded. Marsalis's invigorating account of the Trumpet Concerto is second to none, and, aided by Leppard and the ECO, the result is both brilliant and stylish. Cho Liang Lin's account of the C major Violin Concerto also has plenty of classical strength and drive; the slow movement is perhaps a little lacking in charm but is nevertheless enjoyable: the playing is by no means insensitive. The recording is again excellent.

(i) Cello Concertos 1–2; (ii) Violin Concertos 1, 3 & 4; (ii; iii) Double Concerto for Violin & Harpsichord in F, Hob XVIII/6

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo (ADD) 438 797-2 (2). ECO, with (i) Walevska, De Waart; (ii) Accardo; (iii) Canino

Christine Walevska presents the two cello concertos freshly, well partnered by Edo de Waart and the ECO. She is balanced almost within the orchestra, to give an agreeable chamber-like quality to the music-making. The three Violin Concertos are all early; the C major, written for Tomasini, is probably the best. The other two have come into the limelight fairly recently. Accardo plays with great elegance and charm. It would be idle to pretend that either they or the Double Concerto for Violin and Harpsichord are great music, in that the soloists are rather forward, but the 1980 recording has been well transferred.

(i) Flute Concerto in D (attrib., but probably by Leopold Hoffmann); Scherzandi 1–6

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 4 76863-2. (i) Pahud; Berlin Haydn Ens., Schellenberger – M. HAYDN: Flute Concerto ***

This is an enchantingly light-hearted record, displaying the supreme musicianship of Emmanuel Pahud as one of EMI's 'Great Artists of the Century' and the Berlin Haydn Ensemble in Haydn's six Scherzandi, unexpected treasures, dating from Haydn's early Esterházy years.

(i) Harpsichord Concerto in D, Hob XVIII:2; (ii) Horn Concerto 1 in D, Hob VIId:3; (iii; i) Double Concerto in F for Violin & Fortepiano, Hob XVIII:6; (iv) Trumpet Concerto in E flat, Hob VIIe:1

Ⓝ ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.570482. (i) Hoeren; (ii) Babanov; (iii) Daskalakis; (iv) Schuster; Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

The Harpsichord Concerto (well balanced here) is a pleasing miniature work of comparatively little consequence; the Horn Concerto is much more difficult to play than any of the four Mozart concertos and is most notable for its eloquent, wide-ranging Adagio. The Double Concerto is an unexpected pleasure, especially the slow movement; but the only masterpiece here is the Concerto for Trumpet. Dmitri Babanov plays it with a fine open tone and engagingly crisp articulation in the famous rondo finale. Again excellent accompaniments throughout and first-class recording.

Horn Concerto 3 in D, Hob VII/d3

 Ara. Z 6750. Rose, St Luke's Chamber Ens. – FORSTER; LEOPOLD MOZART; TELEMANN: Horn Concertos ***

ⒷⒷ  Teldec (ADD) 0630 12324-2. Baumann, Concerto Amsterdam, Schröder – DANZI; ROSETTI: Concertos ***

Stewart Rose plays the outer movements ebulliently and, like Dennis Brain, phrases the eloquent slow movement richly, yet sonorously relishing the passages where the melodic line dips down into the horn's lower register. He has the big, broad tone typical of a modern wide-bore instrument. The St Luke's Chamber Orchestra provide a lively, supportive accompaniment and the recording is excellent, as are the couplings. A first-rate disc in every way.

Baumann's 1969 account has firm classical lines. The Adagio is rather sombre here but brings some splendidly resonating low notes from the soloist, and the finale is attractively spirited. The recording has been attractively remastered and has more bloom than on its last appearance.

Horn Concertos 3 in D, Hob VII/d3; 4 in D, Hob VII/d4

🔑 ⒷⒷ  Warner Apex 0927 40825-2. Clevenger, Franz Liszt CO, Rólla – M. HAYDN: Concertino ***

Dale Clevenger gives superb accounts of the two surviving Horn Concertos attributed to Haydn (the fourth is of doubtful lineage). He is especially good in slow movements, like Baumann a little solemn in No. 3, but eloquently so, with the Adagio of No. 4 given a gentle melancholy. The accompaniments are supportive, polished and elegant. These performances have fine spirit and spontaneity and the recording, made in a nicely judged and warm acoustic, approaches the demonstration class.

Oboe Concerto in C, Hob VIIg/C1

Ⓜ  Dutton Lab./Barbirolli Soc. (ADD) CDSJB 1016. Rothwell, Hallé O, Barbirolli – CORELLI; MARCELLO: Oboe Concertos  (with Instrumental Recital: C. P. E. BACH; LOEILLET; TELEMANN: Sonatas, etc. **)

Haydn's Oboe Concerto is of doubtful authenticity, but in this account played by Evelyn Rothwell, deftly accompanied by her husband, Haydn would surely have welcomed the attribution. The orchestra is given a very positive classicism by Barbirolli's firmness, and in the opening movement his wife's delicacy makes a delightful foil for the masculine orchestral presentation. The slow movement is well brought off and the delicacy of articulation returns in the finale. The 1958 recording is resonant and the skilful Dutton transfer almost entirely disguises its age.

Piano Concertos in F; G; G; D, Hob XVIII/3, 4, 9 & 11

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570485. Knauer (piano), Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

Piano Concertos: in F; in G; in D, Hob XVIII/3, 4 & 11

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 2 28527-2. Andsnes, Norwegian CO

 HM HMC 90 1854. Staier (fortepiano), Freiberg Bar. O, Von der Golz

(BB)  Arte Nova 74321 51635-2. Smirnova, Sinfonia Varsovia, Schmidt-Gertenbach

Leif Ove Andsnes gives inspired performances of the three Haydn piano concertos that are fully authenticated. Andsnes justifies his generally brisk speeds for outer movements in subtle pointing of rhythm and phrase, articulating crisply – always individual without being self-conscious. His preference is for speeds on the slow side in middle movements, but rapt and naturally expressive; in his hands and those of the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra, which he directs from the keyboard, these concertos blossom.

However if you enjoy 18th-century music on a fortepiano, Staier is your man. He adds decoration and ornamentation very skilfully, especially in slow movements, and he plays his own cadenzas. So this is very much his disc. The Freiburg Baroque Orchestra is the best in the authentic business, and Gottfried von der Golz's accompaniments are a joy in themselves. So this Harmonia Mundi disc has a special place in the Haydn discography and is very enjoyable indeed.

These works are also played with freshness and point by Lisa Smirnova and admirably accompanied with a sure sense of style and a nice feeling for light and shade by Volker Schmidt-Gertenbach and the excellent Sinfonia Varsovia. The recording is beautifully balanced.

Sebastian Knauer adds an extra concerto, so he has an advantage over both Andsnes and Pletnev. But listen to his response in the opening movement of the F major and the delicacy of his account of the following Largo cantabile, which is then followed by the memorable Adagios of both the G major and D major works. Moreover, he plays with great freshness and sparkle in finales, offering cadenzas of his own. The Cologne Chamber Orchestra give attentive support without adding anything especially individual to their accompaniments. However, with naturally balanced recording this is very good value.

Piano Concertos in G; F; D, Hob XVIII/4, 7 & 11

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61881-2 (2). Pletnev, Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie – Piano Sonatas 33, 60 & 62, etc. ***

(i) Piano Concertos in G, F & D, Hob XVIII/4, 7 & 11; Piano Sonatas 33, Hob XVI/20; 60 (English), Hob XVI/50; 62, Hob XVI/52; Andante & Variations in F min., Hob XVII/6

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 4-CD 5 62259-2 (4). Pletnev; (i) Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie – MOZART: Piano Concertos 9, 20, 23 & 24 ***

Mikhail Pletnev offers playing of great character and personality. He obviously enjoys a splendid rapport with the Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie, and the colour and feeling Pletnev discovers in these pieces is a source of wonder, both distinctive and distinguished. This now comes inexpensively coupled on a Virgin Double with Pletnev's accounts of three key piano sonatas – a superb bargain.

The sonatas too are full of personality and character. The C major, the so-called English Sonata, is given with great elegance and wit, and the great E flat Sonata, Hob XVI/52, is magisterial. The playing has a masterly authority and Pletnev is well recorded throughout.

Trumpet Concerto in E flat

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  Sony 516 233 (2). Marsalis, Nat. PO, Leppard – MICHAEL HAYDN: Concerto in D; VIVALDI: Double Concerto, RV 537; BACH: Brandenburg Concerto 2

Ⓑ  CfP 3 82227-2. Balmain, RLPO, Kovacevich – MOZART: Horn Concertos 1–4 ***

The Hardenberger and Wynton Marsalis performance has been reissued within a well-chosen collection, worthy of its Rosette. The Marsalis 2-disc set includes also concertos by Michael Haydn, Vivaldi and Bach's Second Brandenburg. Marsalis is splendid, his bravura spectacular, with the finale a tour de force, yet never aggressive in its brilliance. His way with Haydn is eminently stylish, as is Leppard's lively and polished accompaniment.

Ian Balmain, at the time principal trumpeter of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra, favours extreme speeds for Haydn's delectable Concerto, playing brilliantly. It makes an apt coupling for Claire Briggs's fine recordings of the Mozart Horn Concertos which also favour brisk tempi.

Violin Concertos: in C; A; & G, Hob VIIa:1, 3 & 4

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570483. Hadelich, Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

Violin Concertos (i) 1 in C; (ii) 4 in G, Hob VIIa/1 & 4

 Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD) 442 8294. Grumiaux, with (i) ECO; (ii) New Philh. O; Leppard – M. HAYDN: Violin Concerto in A; MOZART: Adagio in E; Rondo in C ***

Violin Concertos 1 in C; 4 in G, Hob VIIa/1 & 4; (i) Double Concerto for Violin & Piano, Hob VIII/6

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55007. Adelina Oprean, European CO: (i) with Justin Oprean

Violin Concertos 1 in C; 4 in G, Hob VIIa/1 & 4; (i) Sinfonia concertante in B flat for Violin, Cello, Oboe, Bassoon & Orchestra, Hob I/105

🔑 Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 5 61800-2 (2). Wallfisch, OAE; (i) with Watkin, Robson, Warnock – Symphonies 26; 52; 53 ***

Elizabeth Wallfisch leads the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment from her bow and proves a highly sensitive soloist. In the Sinfonia concertante the smiling interplay of the various wind and string soloists has never been bettered on record and the use of period instruments brings a pleasing intimacy and plenty of spirit. The recording is truthfully balanced and vivid. These performances now come on a Virgin Double, coupled with three symphonies admirably played by Kuijken's Petite Bande.

Grumiaux shows a real feeling for this repertoire. Although played on modern instruments, there is an admirable feeling of lightness, helped by Leppard's stylish accompaniments. In the slow movements, Grumiaux's style suits it especially well, and the broad, rich tone he finds is highly pleasing. Excellent mid-1960s sound.

On Naxos, excellent performances of three pleasing but not distinctive works, played very musically and appealingly. Augustin Hadelich phrases the Adagio of the C major exquisitely so that this work stands out among its companions. It is a delightful serenade-like movement, which he obviously relishes and he plays exquisitely. Müller-Brühl's accompaniments are stylish and the recording is first class.

The Helios disc makes a good modern-instrument alternative for those interested in the well-crafted (and very well played) Double Concerto for Violin and Piano, which has a particularly striking dialogue between the two soloists in the central Largo. In the two solo concertos, Adelina Oprean proves a persuasive soloist with a dulcet but not over-opulent timbre. The central cantilena of the G major Concerto, with its pizzicato accompaniment, is delightful, and she directs the orchestra in outer movements with vigour and point. The sound is good too.

24 Minuets

 Decca Australian Eloquence (ADD) 476 7693. Philh. Hungarica, Dorati

This collection of 24 Minuets, amazingly varied and imaginative, was written late in Haydn's career and, though few of them have the symphonic overtones of the minuets in the late symphonies, they represent the composer at his most inspired. Haydn's own definition of a good composer was 'one who can write a brand new minuet'. Dorati's classic performances are characteristically genial, and the excellent (1975) sound emerges freshly on this reissued CD, with plenty of weight in the orchestral sound.

The Seven Last Words of Our Saviour on the Cross (Orchestral version; DVD version)

 EMI DVD 5 99400-9. La Scala, Milan, PO, Muti (V/D: Pierre Cavassilas)

The performance of the orchestral version of the Seven Last Words by Riccardo Muti and the Filharmonica della Scala is recorded in the Chiesa di San Francesco, Arezzo, and sets Haydn's masterpiece against the backcloth of the frescoes of Piero della Francesca. A very well-shaped performance which Muti controls sensitively. The menu enables you to access descriptions of the various frescoes and also a commentary on the music. The full score can also be accessed, but it masks the performers and the other visual delights completely. A marvellous set.

SYMPHONIES

Austro-Hungarian Haydn Orchestra Series, cond. Adám Fischer

Symphonies: Nos. 1 in D; 2 in C; 3 in G; 4 in D; 5 in A; 6 in D (Le Matin); 7 in C (Le Midi); 8 in G (Le Soir); 9 in C; 10 in D; 11 in E flat; 12 in E; 13 in D; 14 in A; 15 in D; 16 in B flat; 17 in F; 18 in G; 19 in D; 20 in C; 21 in A; 22 in E flat (Philosopher); 23 in G; 24 in D; 25 in C; 26 in D min. (Lamentatione); 27 in G; 28 in A; 29 in E; 30 in C (Alleluja); 31 in D (Horn Signal); 32 in A; 33 in C; 34 in D min.; 35 in B flat; 36 in E flat; 37 in C; 38 in C (Echo); 39 in G min.; 40 in F; 41 in C; 42 in D; 43 in F (Mercury); 44 in E min. (Trauer-symphonie); 45 in F sharp min. (Farewell); 46 in B; 47 in G; 48 in C (Maria Theresa); 49 in F min. (La Passione); 50 in C; 51 in B flat; 52 in C min.; 53 in D; 54 in G; 55 in E flat (School-Master); 56 in C; 57 in D; 58 in F; 59 in A (Fire); 60 in C (Il distratto); 61 in D; 62 in D; 63 in C (La Roxelane); 64 in A; 65 in A; 66 in B flat; 67 in F; 68 in B flat; 69 in C (Laudon); 70 in D; 71 in B flat; 72 in D; 73 in D (La Chasse); 74 in E flat; 75 in D; 76 in E flat; 77 in B flat; 78 in C min.; 79 in F; 80 in D min.; 81 in G; (82–87 'Paris Symphonies') 82 in C (The Bear); 83 in G min. (La Poule); 84 in E flat; 85 in B flat (La Reine); 86 in D; 87 in A; 88 in G; 89 in F; 90 in C; 91 in E flat; 92 in G (Oxford); (93–104 'London Symphonies') 93 in D; 94 in G (Surprise); 95 in C min.; 96 in D (Miracle); 97 in C; 98 in B flat; 99 in E flat; 100 in G (Military); 101 in D (Clock); 102 in B flat; 103 in E flat; 104 in D (London) (complete)

(BB)  Nimbus NI1722. (8) MP3 Files

(BB)  Brilliant 99925 (53)

Adam Fischer's series was recorded for Nimbus over 14 years in the Esterházy Palace, where Haydn himself worked. The final box of 20 symphonies was the finest of all, a superb culmination to a great project, covering the Symphonies Nos. 21–39 plus A and B. But throughout the series the virtuosity of individual players in this orchestra of carefully selected Austrian and Hungarian musicians fully matches Haydn at his most demanding, with soloists challenged to the limit by fast speeds.

In the symphonies recorded at the beginning of the project (from 1987 to 1990) comparisons with Dorati's earlier Decca series generally have the merits of each balanced fairly evenly, but the advantage tips in favour of Fischer as the project develops. In those early recordings too the slow movements tend to be taken at the sort of broad speeds of tradition, with warmly expressive phrasing.

Over the years it took to complete the project Fischer, following period practice, increasingly opts for faster speeds for both slow movements and Minuets (which begin to acquire a Scherzo-like flavour), giving him a clear advantage over Dorati. Also the string playing comes closer to period practice, with lighter phrasing and less marked use of vibrato. That development is noticeable as early as the recordings made in 1994 and 1995, when most of the Sturm und Drang Symphonies were covered – broadly those in the late 40s and early 50s in the regular Breitkopf numbering. Finales in particular, taken fast, have all the bite and wildness one could want, with pinpoint attack.

This set is now available on the Brilliant label on 53 CDs costing about £55 or in a special Nimbus re-issue – a boxed set of 8 CDs as MP3 files with excellent documentation. A pair of Violin Concertos and two Overtures are offered as a bonus with the Nimbus set.

Philharmonia Hungarica Series, cond. Dorati

Symphonies 1–104; Symphonies A; B. Alternative versions: Symphony 22 (Philosopher), 2nd version. Symphony 63 (La Roxelane), 1st version. Symphony 53 (L'Impériale): 3 alternative Finales: (i) A (Capriccio); (ii) C (Paris version, attrib. Haydn); D: Overture in D (Milanese version); Symphony 103: Finale (alternative ending); (i) Sinfonia Concertante in B flat for Oboe, Bassoon, Violin & Cello

✿ (BB)  Decca (ADD) 478 1221 (33). (i) with Engl, Baranyai, Ozim, Rácz

Dorati was ahead of his time as a Haydn interpreter when, in the early 1970s, he made this pioneering integral recording of the symphonies. Superbly transferred to CD in full, bright and immediate sound, the performances are a consistent delight, with brisk allegros and fast-flowing Andantes, with textures remarkably clean. The slow, rustic-sounding accounts of Minuets are more controversial, but the rhythmic bounce makes them attractive too. The set includes not only the Symphonies A and B (Hoboken Nos. 106 and 108) but also the Sinfonia concertante in B flat, a splendidly imaginative piece with wonderful unexpected touches. Dorati's account – not surprisingly – presents the work as a symphony with unusual scoring, rather than as a concerto. As H. C. Robbins Landon tells us in the accompanying notes, the Symphonies A and B were omitted from the list of 104 authentic symphonies by error, as the first was considered to be a quartet (wind parts were discovered later) and the second a divertimento. Dorati also includes as an appendix completely different versions of Symphony No. 22 (The Philosopher), where Haydn altered the orchestration (a pair of flutes substituted for the cor anglais), entirely removed the first movement and introduced a new Andante grazioso; plus an earlier version of No. 63, to some extent conjectural in its orchestration, for the original score is lost. Of the three alternative finales for L'Impériale (No. 53), the first (A) contains a melody which, Robbins Landon suggests, 'sounds extraordinarily like Schubert'; the second (C) seems unlikely to be authentic; but the third (D) uses an overture which was first published in Vienna. 'In some respects,' Robbins Landon suggests, 'this is the most successful of the three concluding movements.' He feels the same about the more extended finale of the Drum Roll Symphony, which originally included 'a modulation to C flat, preceded by two whole bars of rests'. But Haydn thought that this made the movement too long and crossed out the whole section. Robbins Landon continues: 'Perhaps Haydn was for once in his life too ruthless here.' Dorati's set is being re-issued for the bi-centenary on 33 CDs at about £45.

Symphonies A in B flat; B in B flat; Nos. 1-104; Overtures: Lo speziale; La vera costanza; Sinfonia concertante in B flat

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8 503400 (34). Capella Istropolitana, Wordsworth; Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl; Northern CO, Ward; Nicolas Esterházy Sinf. & Swedish CO, Drahos; Sinfonia Finlandia Jyväskylä, Patrick Gallois; Toronto CO, Mallon

Naxos have used a number of orchestras in building up their survey of the Haydn symphonies, the latest being the excellent Sinfonia Finlandia Jyväskylä and Toronto Chamber Orchestra (see below). The standard has been high and anyone wanting an inexpensive complete set with good documentation should find this a very satisfactory investment. The standard of playing and recording is high.

Hanover Band Series, cond. Goodman

Symphonies 1–5 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55111)

Symphonies 6 (Le Matin); 7 (Le Midi); 8 (Le Soir) (Hyp. Helios CDH 55112)

Symphonies 9–12 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55113)

Symphonies 13–16 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55114)

Symphonies 17–21 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55115)

Symphonies 22 (Philosopher); 23–25 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55116)

Symphonies 42; 43 (Mercury); 44 (Trauer) (Hyp. Helios CDH 55117)

Symphonies 45 (Farewell); 46; 47 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55118)

Symphonies 48 (Maria Theresa); 49 (Passione); 50 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55119)

Symphonies 70–72 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55120)

Symphonies 73 (La Chasse); 74–75 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55121)

Symphonies 76–78 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55122)

Symphonies 82 (The Bear); 83 (The Hen); 84 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55123)

Symphonies 85 (La Reine); 86; 87 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55124)

Symphonies 90; 91; 92 (Oxford) (Hyp. Helios CDH 55125)

Symphonies 93; 94 (Surprise); 95 (Hyp. Helios CDH 55126)

Symphonies 101 (Clock); 102 in B flat; Overture: Windsor Castle (Hyp. Helios CDH 55127)

🔑 (BB) ***

From the very outset of his Hyperion project, Roy Goodman, who began at the beginning with the low-numbered symphonies, established a winning manner in early Haydn and, as the series progressed, he showed that his dramatic approach was being fruitful in the middle-period and later works. The recording is resonant, giving bloom to the strings, yet oboes and horns (and other wind and brass, when used) come through vividly. Goodman's distinguished series was never completed. There is no longer space to detail all the individual performances but we have commented about performances of special interest, although every disc is worth having.

The performances of the linked Esterházy works (Nos. 6–8) are characteristically lively and fresh, bringing out the colour of all three works.

No. 20 includes trumpets and drums, dating it to Haydn's pre-Esterházy years (for those forces were not available to the composer in his early Esterházy period); the wind are silent in the slow movement. Goodman's account of the Philosopher, with its pair of cor anglais, is predictably bold and rhythmic, with an exhilarating finale (superb horn triplets!) to cap what has gone before. No. 43 has a three-note linking figure, which unites the first three movements, and it is the finale that develops Mercurial vigour. The Trauersinfonie opens tersely; but it is the contemplative Adagio that gives the symphony its sobriquet, followed by the powerfully cogent finale, which is full of nervous rhythmic energy. The famous Farewell Symphony, with its rare key of F sharp minor, follows on naturally after the Sturm und Drang of the finale of No. 44. The famous finale here opens vivaciously, then makes its abrupt change of mood and tempi so that the players can depart one-by-one, with Goodman himself relinquishing his place at the harpsichord at bar 205 to play the solo violin part in duet with his leader, Pavlo Beznosiuk. The horns immediately play a strong role in No. 47, but this time crooked in G, opening and dominating the first movement with an arresting fanfare, answered engagingly by dancing strings and woodwind. There follows a slow movement with a cantabile theme and four variations, where the melody and bass line are later inverted. Even more ingenious is the 'reversible Minuet', in which each section is followed by its exact mirror image; the horns again feature in the Trio. No. 72 is now known to have been written during the composer's earliest years at Eisenstadt, and the work becomes something of a display piece for the horn quartet, for which the Horn Signal (No. 31) was also written. From the very opening, the horns are spectacularly featured and return in the Minuet and are afforded antiphonal echo effects, and then they take a back seat for the agreeable theme and variations finale, until their flourishes in the coda. The toughness of Goodman's approach to Haydn comes out strikingly in the Paris Symphonies. Indeed a little more charm would have been welcome, even though the playing is always polished and neatly articulated. La Reine and Nos. 86 and 87 are large-scale performances, often weighty, but slow movements are most elegantly played, especially the delightful Capriccio Largo of No. 86, while the Vivace finale of No. 87 is superbly spirited. Symphonies 90–92 are engagingly lightweight performances, though full of character and vitality. But the first three London Symphonies are immediately weightier. In No. 94 the Surprise is beautifully prepared with a pianissimo repeat of the main theme before the fortissimo chord. The Minuet (more a Scherzo) is then a real Allegro molto. The Hyperion recordings maintain the highest standard throughout. At the opening of the Clock Symphony one's ears pick up the harpsichord continuo from which Roy Goodman directs his vivacious performances of Nos. 101 and 102. Highlights include the Andante of the Clock, which is delightfully pointed, and full of charm. But No. 102 is even finer, with a slow movement full of refined detail and a crisply buoyant Minuet and finale.

Other Recordings

Symphonies A; B, Hob 1:107/8; Symphony 62 in D; Overtures: Lo speciale; La vera costanza

(N) 🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.572130. Toronto CO, Mallon

The so-called Symphonies A and B are early works, written in the late 1750s, before the young composer moved to Esterházy. Both are scored for oboes, horns and strings, with harpsichord continuo, and it is the second of the two works which looks forward most readily, with a bassoon solo for the Trio of the Minuet and the light-hearted closing Presto. The two Overtures are virtually sinfonias, Lo speziale with three movements, the centrepiece a charming Minuet; but La vera costanza is more like a divertimento with five, all very brief. The Symphony No. 62 dates from 1780 and deserves to be much better known. Scored for flute, as well as oboes, bassoons, horns and strings, it has a jaunty first movement with a really catchy secondary theme; the second movement (featuring the flute), is an unconventional Allegretto, the Minuet has a bassoon solo at its centre, and the very rhythmic, dashing finale completes a work which shows the composer at his most searching, never willing to work to a formula. It is splendidly played by this excellent Canadian group under their young conductor, Kevin Mallon, as is the rest of the programme. This is a key disc in the Haydn repertoire.

Symphonies 6 (Le Matin); 7 (Le Midi); 8 (Le Soir)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550722. N. CO, Ward

These were almost certainly the first works that Haydn composed on taking up his appointment as Kapellmeister to the Esterházys. The Northern Chamber Orchestra under Nicholas Ward has wind players who relish their solos, the strings create a chamber-music atmosphere, and it is the intimate scale of these performances that is so attractive. Modern instruments are used, but textures are fresh and the ambience of the Concert Hall of Broadcasting House, Manchester, adds the right degree of warmth.

Symphonies 9–12

(BB)  Naxos 8.557771. Sinfonia Finlandia, Gallois

These are lively, spontaneous performances from Gallois on modern instruments, only slightly marred by the recording which, though full and warm, could be slightly sharper in detail. The fast string passages are especially vivacious and enjoyable, and this CD is well-worth the asking price.

Symphonies 22 (Philosopher); 29; 60 (Il Distratto)

(BB)  Naxos 8.550722. N. Co., Ward

Symphonies 23; 24; 61

(BB)  Naxos 8.550723. N. CO, Ward

The fresh, stylish approach of the Northern Chamber Orchestra is entirely suited to these symphonies, and here Nicholas Ward makes a persuasive case for the use of modern instruments. No. 24 includes a leading semi-concertante flute part (nicely managed) and the G major has a wistful Andante for strings alone, and a vital Presto finale, well sprinkled with strongly accented quadruplets. The opening movement of No. 61 is obviously more mature and is presented with both character and charm. Excellent recording.

Symphonies 25 in C; 42 in D; 65 in A

(N) (BB)  Naxos 8.570761. Sinfonia Finlandia Jyväskylä, Gallois

We have already met Patrick Gallois and his excellent Sinfonia Finlandia Jyväskylä near the very beginning of the Haydn series, and here they give perceptive and highly responsive performances of three more rare and fascinating works, including the early Symphony No. 25, in which Haydn replaces the slow movement with a gracious slow minuet featuring sonorous horns. No. 42 comes from 1771 and has a particularly eloquent Adagio, with one of Haydn's most gracious themes, introduced first on strings alone, with the wind joining in later. Gaiety returns in the lively Minuet and the spirited Scherzando e Presto finale. No. 65, from a similar period, lifts off immediately Vivace e con spirito, and the simple string tune of the following Andante is frequently interrupted for no apparent reason. After a Minuet framing a Trio in which the principal violin is marked acciaccatura, the hunting finale has the horns leading the way boisterously.

Sturm und Drang Symphonies 26; 35; 38; 39; 41; 42; 43 (Mercury); 44 (Trauer); 45 (Farewell); 46; 47; 48 (Maria Theresia); 49 (La Passione); 50; 51; 52; 58; 59 (Fire), 65

(B) (*) DG 463 731-2 (6). E. Concert, Pinnock

Pinnock's forces are modest (with 6.5.2.2.1 strings), but the panache of the playing conveys any necessary grandeur. It is a new experience to have Haydn symphonies of this period recorded in relatively dry and close sound, with inner detail crystal clear (harpsichord never obscured) and made the more dramatic by the intimate sense of presence, yet with a fine bloom on the instruments. Some may find a certain lack of charm at times, and others may quarrel with the very brisk one-in-a-bar Minuets and even find finales a little rushed.

Symphonies 26 (Lamentatione); 35; 49 (La Passione)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550721. N. CO, Ward

Although enjoyable, this disc from Nicholas Ward and his Northern Chamber Orchestra is not quite as fresh-sounding as his first. The playing remains elegant and the horns (in B flat alto) are splendid in the Minuet of No. 35. But the opening Allegro assai con spirito of the Lamentatione could do with a shade more bite, and in the Adagio the warm resonance makes the finely played oboe solo almost a cor anglais and the melodic line like a Handel aria. The resonance of the BBC's Studio 7 in Manchester brings a pleasingly mellow sound-picture, but the string detail is not sharply defined.

Symphonies 26 (Lamentatione); 52; 53 (L'Impériale)

🔑 (B)  Virgin 2x1 5 61800-2 (2). La Petite Bande, Kuijken – Violin Concertos 1 & 4; Sinfonia Concertante ***

These are fresh, vital, cleanly articulated performances which wear their authenticity lightly and even indulge in speeds for slow movements that are more expansive and affectionate than many purists would allow. These three symphonies now appear on a Virgin Double, coupled with two key violin concertos and the Sinfonia concertante in B flat.

Symphonies 30 in C (Alleluja); 53 in D (L'Imperiale); 69 in C (Laudon)

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 60520-2. VCM, Harnoncourt

The first movement of No. 30 is based on an Alleluja that formed part of the Mass for Easter week. The work features unusually prominent writing for the trumpets in the outer movements. No. 53 has a vigorous first movement with dancing strings, and the Andante features characteristically inventive variations on one of the composer's most engaging themes.

The sobriquet of No. 69, Laudon, was appended by Haydn himself and celebrates a highly successful field marshal of that name. The vigorous rhythms of the opening movement certainly have a military flavour. But it is the unpredictable finale with its fiercely contrasting dynamics (and a violin solo to introduce the return of the main theme) that gives the work its individuality. All three performances here are quite splendid, with outstandingly brilliant music-making that makes an unanswerable case for playing Haydn on period instruments. The recording is first class.

Symphonies 30 (Alleluja); 55 (Schoolmaster); 63 (La Roxelane)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550757. N. CO, Ward

An entirely winning triptych of named Haydn symphonies, spanning a highly creative period from the three-movement Alleluja (1765), with its delightful woodwind contribution in the Andante, to La Roxelane (1780), where the Allegretto paints an engaging portrait of a flirtatious character in a play and the finale fizzes with energy. In between comes The Schoolmaster, whose Adagio brings a theme and variations of disarming simplicity. Alert and vivacious playing from all concerned; admirable pacing and first-class sound.

Symphonies 31 (Horn Signal); 59 (Fire); 73 (La Chasse)

🔑 (M) * Warner Elatus 2564 60033-2. VCM, Harnoncourt

This is one of Harnoncourt's very best records. All three symphonies are notable for their spectacular horn parts. The playing here – using natural horns – is superb, with throatily exuberant braying at the opening of the Horn Signal, an equally striking contribution throughout the Fire Symphony (where the horns are crooked in A), and more cheerful hunting-calls in the spirited finale of La Chasse. The playing is not only extremely vital and polished but even has an element of charm (not something one can always count on from this source). The orchestra communicate their involvement throughout.

Symphonies 32 in A; 33 in C; 34 in D min

(BB)  Naxos 8.554154. Cologne CO, Mühler-Brühl

Symphonies 37 in C; 38 in C (Echo); 39 in G min; 40 in F

(BB)  Naxos 8.557093. Cologne CO, Mühler-Brühl

Helmut Mühler-Brühl and the Cologne Chamber Orchestra take over on this pair of discs with generally excellent results.

Symphonies 41 in C; 58 in F; 59 in A (Fire)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557002. Cologne CO, Mühler-Brühl

Symphonies 43 (Mercury); 46–47

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554767. Cologne CO, Mühler-Brühl

Haydn's Symphonies Nos. 41, 58 and 59 are beautifully played here, but one feels that a work with the sobriquet 'Fire' might have been a bit fierier in the opening Presto. However, the splendid horn playing in the finale more than compensates, and this is certainly an enjoyable disc.

The nickname 'Mercury' for No. 43 probably relates to a stage work, with a fine A flat slow movement opening on muted strings. No. 47 brings striking military horn-calls at the start, beautifully caught in this recording; but the most memorable of the three is No. 46, with its lilting B minor slow movement. Its extraordinary finale is then punctuated by sudden silences, with sharp modulations and an unexpected quotation from the preceding Minuet. Mühler-Brühl's choice of speeds cannot be faulted, with allegros crisp and alert and slow movements kept flowing.

Symphonies 44–49

🔑 (B)  Artemis/Van. (ADD) ATM-CD 1495 (3). Zagreb RSO, Janigro

Janigro's 1963 Vanguard collection of the six Sturm und Drang Symphonies stands as one of the early treasures of the bargain shelf, serving in the early stereo era to confirm what sharp, vital work Haydn was producing long before the famous symphonies written for London. Throughout, the modern-instrument performances with a modest-sized ensemble are exemplary; the first-rate analogue recording sounds excellent in this new CD transfer, and there are fine notes by Christa Landon, wife of H. Robbins Landon.

Symphonies 44 (Trauer); 88; 104 (London); Symphonies 45 (Farewell); 48 (Maria Theresi); 102; Symphonies 82 (The Bear); 96 (Miracle); 100 (Military); Symphonies 83 (The Hen); 94 (Surprise); 101 (The Clock); Symphonies 85 (La Reine); 92 (Oxford); 103 (Drum Roll)

(BB)  Naxos 8.505006 (5). Capella Istropolitana, Wordsworth

Like Barry Wordsworth's recordings of Mozart symphonies, with the Capella Istropolitana on the Naxos label, this Haydn collection provides a series of outstanding bargains at the lowest budget price. The sound is not quite as clean and immediate as in the Mozart series, a little boomy at times in fact, and Wordsworth's preference for relatively relaxed speeds is a little more marked here than in Mozart, but the varied choice of works on each disc is most attractive. At their modest cost, these are well worth collecting.

Symphonies 54; 56; 57

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554108. Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

In vivid, full-ranging recordings made by German Radio, Müller-Brühl conducts lively performances with his excellent chamber orchestra of three symphonies from around 1774. Müller-Brühl, using modern instruments, yet reflects period practice in asking for very limited vibrato and light articulation from the strings.

Symphonies 64 in A; 84 in E flat; 87 in A

(BB)  Naxos 8.550770. Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Drahos

Symphonies 66 in B flat; 67 in F; 68 in B flat

(BB)  Naxos 8.554406 Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Drahos

The Budapest Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia under Béla Drahos now takes over in the Naxos series with generally excellent results although they are rather reasonably recorded.

Symphonies 69 (Laudon); 89; 91

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550769. Budapest Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Drahos

The resonance of the Reformed Church, Budapest, prevents the sharpest definition here. The orchestra is set back and the internal balance is natural: the strings have bloom without edginess. This is alert, thoroughly musical playing with apt tempi. The Andante con moto of No. 89 is elegantly done, and the variations of the Andante of No. 91 are neatly handled (with an elegant bassoon solo). All in all this gives pleasure, but more brightness on top would have been welcome.

Symphonies 72; 93; 95

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550797. Nicolaus Esterházy Sinfonia, Drahos

These performances are polished, warm and spirited and, if the Naxos recording is on the reverberant side, it does not cloud textures. Four horns are featured prominently in No. 72 and provide many bravura flourishes and virtuoso scales in the opening movement; the playing here is first class. The orchestral response is equally impressive in the fine slow movements of these later works, and throughout Béla Drahos's pacing is matched by the overall sense of spontaneity and style.

Symphonies 74–76

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554109. Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

The three symphonies dating from the early 1780s make an attractive group, characteristically lively in outer movements but each with slow movements involving the use of mysterious muted strings. Müller-Brühl, as in his other Haydn recordings, favours broad adagios and Minuets that retain the idea of a stately dance. Yet the freshness and rhythmic resilience never fail to bring the performances to life. Like its companions, an excellent recommendation.

Symphony 76 in E flat (DVD version)

 TDK DVD DV-COWAND2. NDR SO, Wand (V/D: Andreas Missler-Morell) – BRUCKNER: Symphony 6 **(*)

A very straight and straightforward account of this Haydn symphony both from Wand and the orchestra and from the camera team. A pleasure to watch and hear.

Symphonies 77–79

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553363. N. CO, Ward

For these three little-known but most engaging symphonies, written in 1782–3, Nicholas Ward could hardly be more persuasive. The colourful charm of Haydn's scoring in the B flat Symphony is most sensitively caught, the Vivace opening of No. 78 in C minor is highly dramatic, while both slow movements are eminently graceful. The Minuets, though not rushed, are suitably spirited and finales are deft and lively, especially the winning monothematic Presto of the C minor work, which includes some of the composer's genial pauses.

Symphonies 80; 81; 99

(BB)  Naxos 8.554110. Cologne CO, Müller-Brühl

Müller-Brühl here couples two symphonies of 1783–4 with the first of the masterpieces which Haydn wrote for Salomon for the second of his two visits to London. No. 80 is remarkable for the dark intensity of the minor-key opening with its dramatic use of tremolo. Chromatic touches break in later too. In these later symphonies, unlike the earlier ones, Müller-Brühl does allow Minuets to acquire a hint of the Scherzo at brisker speeds. No. 99 is remarkable for Haydn's inclusion for the first time in a symphony of a pair of clarinets.

Symphonies 80; 83 (Hen); 84; 87–89

🔑 (BB)  ASV Resonance CD RSB 203 (2). LMP, Glover

Jane Glover's very winning Haydn recordings with the London Mozart Players have been consistently underrated since they first appeared in the late 1980s. They are consistently strong and energetic and fully characterized. Throughout outer movements these modern-instrument performances are as lively as you could wish, and the recording with its warm ambience is excellent. A genuine bargain.

Symphonies 82 (The Bear); 83 (The Hen); 84; 85 (La Reine); 86; 87 (Paris)

🔑 🏵 (BB) * Virgin 2x1 5 61659 (2). OAE, Kuijken

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 473 801-2 (2). Philh. Hungarica, Dorati

(*) DHM/BMG 82876 60602-2 (3). VCM, Harnoncourt

Kuijken and his players wear their authenticity lightly and the slow movements are allowed to relax beautifully, while the one-in-a-bar treatment of the Minuets produces a delightful Ländler-like swing. With dynamic contrasts underlined, the grandeur of Haydn's inspiration is fully brought out, along with the rigour. Above all, he and his players convey the full joy of Haydn's inspiration in every movement, and the reissue at bargain price is surely irresistible.

Dorati's set of Paris Symphonies are well up to the high standard of his integral Haydn series, freshly stylish performances with plenty of vigour. The only point of controversy here is Dorati's consistently slow tempi for the Minuets, nicely pointed as they are.

Harnoncourt is nothing if not unpredictable, and this set of the Haydn Paris Symphonies bears this out in the most exciting fashion. First, he takes every repeat in sight (even the second parts of main movements), including of course every section of the Minuets and Trios, and even the measured introduction to La Reine. These performances show this always vigorous and alive conductor at his most characterful and stimulating and, above all, both dramatic and warmly expressive in Haydn's always memorable slow movements. Tempi take unexpected turns, especially in Minuets and Trios, but the individuality of this music-making and its vitality are difficult to resist, though seriously lacking in charm.

Symphonies 82–87 (Paris); 93–104 (London)

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) DG 477 7917 (7). BPO, Karajan

There is much in Karajan's combined Paris and London Symphonies that commands attention. Like the Davis London set on Philips, this is big-band Haydn – but what a band! But of course the Orchestra of the Concert de la Loge Olympique, for which Haydn wrote the Paris Symphonies, was large, consisting of 40 violins and no fewer than 10 double-basses! It goes without saying that the quality of the orchestral playing here is superb, and Karajan is meticulous in his attention to detail. However, the Paris group are rather heavy-handed accounts – the slow movements are kept moving but the Minuets are very slow indeed, full of pomp and majesty, and at times too grand and lacking charm and grace. But Karajan seems more responsive to the London Symphonies, and there is evidence of tenderness in some slow movements, witness the close of No. 98 in B flat. Again the Minuets are wanting in sparkle, but there is no lack of breadth and dignity, and the sound of the Berlin Philharmonic itself is a joy.

Symphony 83 in G min. (La Poule)

🔑 * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4038. Hallé O, Barbirolli – LEHAR: Gold and Silver; JOHANN STRAUSS JR: Emperor Waltz, etc.; R. STRAUSS: Der Rosenkavalier Suite ***

This is one of Barbirolli's most cherishable records. The account of Symphony No. 83 is delightful, with the 'Hen' clucking to the manner born. There is grace and simplicity in the Andante and exuberance in the finale, and the couplings are unmissable.

Symphonies 83 (La Poule); 88; 96 (Miracle)

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9750. Hallé O, Barbirolli

Barbirolli's mono recording of No. 83 (The Hen), made in 1949, was the very first in the catalogue. Characteristically, he gives it an energetic reading full of fun and high dramatic contrasts. So the clucking of the second subject has rarely been pointed with more wit. No. 96, with which The Hen was originally coupled on LP, has freer, more open sound. The playing is a degree more polished and elegant, with no diminution of energy or wit, and again the flute and oboe emerge as stars in the Hallé team. Barbirolli sustains the great, sensuously tuneful melody of the Largo of No. 88 at a slow speed, with elegance as well as warmth, and the fun of the finale is delightfully caught. Michael Dutton's transfers are a model of their kind, full-bodied and warm.

Symphonies 85 in B flat (La Reine); 86 in D

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 2564 60451-2. St Paul CO, Wolff

The excellent St Paul Chamber Orchestra give polished, animated accounts of two of the finest Paris Symphonies. No. 85 (La Reine) includes the slow-movement variations on La petite gentille et jeune Lisette, so admired by Queen Marie-Antoinette, here played most elegantly. The Capriccio slow movement of No. 86 is perhaps a little staid, but the finale is infectiously spirited. Excellent, natural recording with the concert-hall acoustic on the resonant side, adding to the weight of the first movement of the D major work.

Symphony 88

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ (*) DG mono 474 988-2. BPO, Furtwängler – SCHUMANN: Symphony 4 *** ✿

Even those who usually find Furtwängler's interpretations too idiosyncratic will be drawn to this glowing performance. The beauty of his shaping of the main theme of the slow movement is totally disarming, and the detail of the finale, lightly sprung and vivacious, is a constant pleasure. The Berlin Philharmonic plays marvellously well for him, and the 1951 recording in its remastered form sounds admirably fresh, yet has plenty of body. DG have now reissued the original coupling, a uniquely inspired performance of Schumann's Fourth Symphony, which also has a Rosette, so collectors should seek this wonderful disc out without delay.

Symphonies 88–92

 EMI 3 94237-2 (2). BPO, Rattle

It is good to see and hear that Sir Simon Rattle is keeping big-band Haydn symphonies going, with modern instruments, but using narrow-bore valve horns and antiphonally separating first and second violins, and featuring embellished repeats. These live performances are full of character and individuality, and reveal Haydn as a symphonist on the fullest scale. The Berlin Philharmonic too plays superbly and is very impressively recorded.

Symphonies 88 in G; 92 in G (Oxford); 95 in C min.; 98 in B flat; 100 in G (Military); 101 in D (Clock); 102 in B flat; 104 in D (London)

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2 15300-2 (3). Philh. or New Philh. O, Klemperer

Klemperer, not the likeliest conductor in Haydn, in his broad, measured view yet shows his mastery in structuring and rhythmic pointing. With good analogue sound, an interesting historical document.

Symphonies (i) 88 in G; (ii) 95 in C min.; 101 (Clock)

🔑  Testament SBT 1411. (i) Chicago SO; (ii) Fritz Reiner SO; Reiner

The G major Symphony (No. 88) comes from Chicago, but its companions with the orchestra Reiner drew from players in the Met. and New York freelancers, together with some of the Chicago Symphony, was recorded in Manhattan in 1963. These are performances of style, eloquent and beautifully finished, a model of Haydn playing. Originally issued on RCA, they sound wonderfully fresh in Paul Baily's restorations. Whatever other Haydn readers may have collected in recent years, this is not to be passed over.

Symphonies 88; 104 (London)

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3370. Bournemouth Sinf., Thomas

With an orchestra on a chamber scale, the playing has great freshness and vitality; indeed it is the urgency of musical feeling that Ronald Thomas conveys, which makes up for the last ounce of finesse.

Symphonies 91 in E flat; 92 (Oxford); (i) Scena di Berenice

🔑 * HM HMC 901849. (i) Fink; Freiburg Bar. O, Jacobs

As in their exuberant account of Haydn's Seasons, René Jacobs and the Freiburg Baroque Orchestra (currently the finest of all period-instrument groups of this size) find a sense of joy, of carefree intensity in the playing of the two Symphonies. As in the oratorio, Jacobs is well aware of Haydn's sense of humour, pointing rhythms to bring it out in such a movement as the Andante in No. 91. The other distinctive point about this issue is the inclusion of Haydn's Scena di Berenice as a coupling, the most powerful bonus. Here Bernarda Fink is searingly dramatic, freely varying the pace and tone-colours of the recitatives to bring out the meaning of the words (included, along with translations, in the booklet) and rising superbly to the challenge of the two arias, slow and fast.

Symphonies 92 (Oxford); 94 (Surprise); La fedelta premiata: Sinfonia

🔑 * MDG SACD Surround Sound 1325-6. Austro-Hungarian Haydn O, A. Fischer

This coupling of two of the best known of the later nicknamed symphonies is not a spin-off from this orchestra's complete set of the Haydn symphonies for Nimbus but a live recording, made in Graz in 2004. The playing is outstandingly lively and alert, bringing out the drama of both works in high dynamic contrasts. The impact of the celebrated surprise, fortissimo on the timpani, in the fast-flowing Andante of No. 94 has rarely been as great. The galloping rhythms of the overture to La fedelta premiata are as exhilarating as anything in the symphonies, with valveless horns braying away. As a separate showcase for the conductor and orchestra, the disc readily wins its place, vividly recorded in Multichannel SACD.

Symphonies 92 (Oxford); 104 (London)

(BB)  Regis RRC 1084. E. Sinfonia, Groves – MOZART: Symphony 31 (Paris) ***

Sir Charles Groves's performances are robust yet elegant; both slow movements are beautifully shaped, with Haydn's characteristic contrasts unfolding spontaneously. In the last movement of the Oxford the dancing violins are a special delight in what is one of the composer's most infectious finales. Excellent recording, and this budget Regis reissue has an equally recommendable Mozart bonus.

Symphony 92 (Oxford); (i) Arianna a Naxos (Cantata); Scena di Berenice (DVD version)

(*) BBC Opus Arte DVD OA 0821 D. (i) Bartoli; VCM, Harnoncourt at the 2001 Syriarte Festival, Graz, Austria (includes discussion of the music of Haydn between Bartoli and Harnoncourt, and a brief depiction of the Festival) (TV Dir: Brian Large)

We already have a Decca recording of Arianna a Naxos by Cecilia Bartoli with András Schiff, but this splendidly sung version with string accompaniment is even more telling, even though the orchestral transcription was not Haydn's own. Moreover, the performance is especially vivid in the singer's visual presence, while Harnoncourt accompanies with great sensitivity.

The equally inspired Scena di Berenice is set to a text taken from Metastasio's Antigono. It has a direct affinity with Arianna. Bartoli's performance is again very moving, and is most expressively accompanied. The two vocal items are preceded by a vibrant performance of Haydn's Oxford Symphony which, like Arianna, was very well received during Haydn's visits to London in the 1790s. This is a characteristic Harnoncourt performance with a rather gruff, even abrasive, first movement that not all will take to. He is more persuasive in the central movements, and the sparkling finale is a joy. Certainly the performance gains from watching the conductor, whose facial expressions are so mobile.

Symphonies 93–104 (London Symphonies)

Ⓑ (*) Decca 475 551-2 (4). LPO, Solti

Symphonies 93; 94 (Surprise); 97; 99; 100 (Military); 101 (Clock) (London Symphonies)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD/DDD) 442 614-2 (2). Concg. O, Davis

Symphonies 95; 96 (Miracle); 98; 102; 103 (Drum Roll); 104 (London) (London Symphonies)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD/DDD) 442 611-2 (2). Concg. O, Davis

Symphonies 93–98 (London Symphonies)

🔑 (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85770-2 (2). RPO, Beecham

Symphonies 99–104 (London Symphonies)

🔑 (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85513-2 (2). RPO, Beecham

(i) Symphonies 93–104 (London Symphonies); with extra performances of Nos. (ii) 88 in G; (iii) 91 in E flat; (ii) 98 in B flat

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * DG (ADD) 474 364-2 (5). (i) LPO; (ii) BPO; (iii) Bav. RSO, Jochum

Sir Colin Davis's Haydn series (recorded between 1975 and 1981) is one of the most distinguished sets he has given us over his long recording career, and its blend of brilliance and sensitivity, wit and humanity gives these two-for-the-price-of-one Duo reissues a special claim on the collector. There is no trace of routine in this music-making and no failure of imagination. The excellence of the playing is matched by Philips's best recording quality, whether analogue or digital. The Concertgebouw sound is resonant and at times weighty, but has good definition.

Jochum's exhilarating set of Haydn's London Symphonies (1972/3) is consistently stylish, and the challengingly fast tempi in the outer movements bring an athletic exuberance which is highly infectious. The conductor moulds the slow movements with a tenderness that never spills over to unstylish mannerisms and handles the sets of themes and variations to bring great diversity of atmosphere and mood, all of which combine to make these wonderfully satisfying readings. The recordings have never sounded better than in these new transfers, with sound that is both full and vivid. To make this set even more appealing, DG have added an extra disc containing an earlier recording. No. 98 is a performance of equal distinction, perhaps a degree more mellow. In No. 88 the Berlin Orchestra is even more polished than the LPO, and Jochum brings his characteristic warmth and humanity to both these scores. No. 91, with the Bavarian Orchestra, was recorded in 1958 and sounds only fractionally less full-bodied than its 1960s companions.

The paired EMI collections of Beecham's recordings sound admirably full-bodied and have been transferred amazingly successfully. The performances are sensitive and invigorating. The art of phrasing is one of the prime secrets of great music-making, and no detail in Beecham's performances of the London Symphonies goes unattended. They have also great warmth, drama too, and perhaps a unique geniality. The sound throughout is full and fresh (it's the 1992 remastering), with plenty of body, sweet violin-timbre and no edge. These performances possess an inner life and vitality that put them in a class of their own and are wonderful value in this bargain Gemini-double format.

While it might be felt that Solti's way with some of the symphonies is sometimes a bit too uptight for Haydn, others unexpectedly glow in his hands, with the coupling of Nos. 93 and 99 (recorded in 1987) proving the pick of the bunch. The lovely slow movement of No. 93 has both delicacy and gravitas, and that of No. 99 is serenely spacious. The Miracle and the Clock, although brilliantly played by the LPO, were rather too taut to convey all Haydn's charm; in Nos. 102 and 103 the tensions speak of the 20th century rather than the 18th. In the Surprise and Military Symphonies, the conductor stresses the brilliance and fire of the outer movements, which are again a bit hard-driven, but there is no lack of joie de vivre. In Nos. 95 and 104 Solti found the perfect balance between energy and repose. The final symphonies, Nos. 97 & 98, were released in 1992, and they maintained the balance between Solti's boundless energy and Haydn's warmth and humour. These symphonies, now released in a bargain box (on four instead of five CDs) make a very stimulating set.

Symphonies 93; 96 (Miracle); 98 in B flat

(BB)  EMI Encore 3 41428-2. ECO, Tate

Symphonies 94 (Surprise); 95; 97; 99; 101 (Clock)

Ⓝ Ⓑ * CfP 5 21855-2 (2). ECO, Tate

Symphonies 100 (Military); 102 in B flat; 103 (Drum Roll); 104 (London)

Ⓝ Ⓑ * CFP 2 28369-2 (2). ECO, Tate

Consistently Tate chooses speeds that allow the sparkle and wit of Haydn's writing to come out naturally throughout all these performances. There are many such examples, as in the first movements of Nos. 96 and 98 and in the finales too. Tate's pacing brings out Haydn's humour far more than anything faster and fiercer would do, as in the second subject of the Military or in the joyful lilt of the 6/8 rhythms of the first-movement allegro in the Drum Roll. Slow movements too are admirably paced and imaginative in detail, and each of these works has a fine tone, beautifully played.Warm, well-balanced sound means that these inexpensive reissues are among the supreme bargains among the late Haydn symphonies.

Symphonies 93; 96 (Miracle); 98; 100 (Military); 101 (Clock); 102; 103 (Drum Roll); Sinfonia concertante; Overture: Il mondo della luna

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) DG 477 8117 (2). COE, Abbado

Recorded between 1986 and 1995 in Vienna, Berlin (the Jesus-Christus-Kirche), and Ferrara, Abbado's performances with the Chamber Orchestra of Europe with their polish and natural elegance could not be more removed from period-instrument style. The orchestra provides expansive tuttis, although detail in wind and strings is always refined and polished. The 'ticking' Andante of the 'Clock' (for instance) is gently played with a bold contrast in the first tutti, and the Scherzo is a vigorously buoyant three-in-a-bar. But mostly the result is traditional and the performances, although not inflated, are not chamber-scale. At times one feels even more bite and vitality would have been an advantage, but this music-making is easy to enjoy when the recording is so warm and naturally balanced.

Symphonies 94 in G (Surprise); 96 in D (Miracle)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca O/L 475 9111. AAM, Hogwood

Hogwood's 1984 coupling is welcome back to the catalogue in its original L'Oiseau-Lyre presentation. Moreover, the playing itself is superb: polished, feeling, and full of imaginative detail. The acid bottle has been abandoned by the strings, who play expressively, without squeezing the timbre unmercifully. The account of No. 94 is particularly dramatic, and in the Andante there is not just one 'surprise' (and that pretty impressive, with the contrast afforded by the gentle strings at the opening) but two more forte chords to follow at the beginning of each subsequent phrase – a most telling device. With superb recording, full yet transparent, this can be strongly recommended. An issue to make converts to the creed of authenticity.

Symphonies 94 (Surprise); 96 (Miracle); 97

✿ Ⓑ (*) Decca Australian Eloquence (mono) 476 8483. Concg. O, Van Beinum

A treasurable reissue from the early 1950s. Van Beinum conducts exceptionally poised and vivacious performances in the very best Concertgebouw tradition of Haydn playing. The personality of the orchestra comes through in every bar, in both the woodwind solos and the pointed string bowing. In the Surprise Symphony particularly, the acoustic adds a nobility of sound to the already well-balanced ensemble, and the tempi throughout are, almost without exception, perfectly chosen and safely maintained. The recording as produced by John Culshaw and engineered by Kenneth Wilkinson is a marvellous example of Decca ffrr (mono) excellence. Snap this up before it disappears!

Symphonies 100 (Military); 101 (Clock)

 BBC Legends BBCL 4176-2. LPO, Jochum – HINDEMITH: Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber ***

These Haydn performances of the Military and Clock Symphonies were given at the Royal Festival Hall in coordination with a series of recording sessions that DG was holding, in which Jochum recorded all 12 of the London Symphonies. It is fascinating to compare the results of the studio recordings and these live versions. As one might expect, the studio recordings are a degree more polished, a fraction more precise in ensemble; yet in compensation the joy of Haydn's inspiration, above all the rhythmic lift that Jochum was able to draw from the players, is even more striking in the live accounts.

Symphony 104 in D (London)

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 256-2. VPO, Karajan – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 7 **(*)

A really noble account, powerful and forward-looking, of the London Symphony from Karajan and the Vienna Philharmonic on their finest form. As in Karajan's later, DG account, the first-movement repeat is observed and detail is etched with loving care, the delicate passages perfectly balanced with the bold tuttis. The slow movement, without any self-conscious mannerisms, is shaped warmly and graciously, and the Minuet sparkles, taken at a brisk pace, while the outer movements have splendid life and impetus. The 1959 recording, produced by John Culshaw, is extremely fine for its period (indeed any period) and has been transferred to CD without loss of the ambient bloom of the Sofiensaal.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Baryton (Divertimenti) Octets, Hob X/1–6, 10 &12; Concerti a due Lire for the King of Naples, Hob VIIh/1–6; 8 Notturni for the King of Naples, Hob II/25–32; 6 Scherzandi, Hob II/33–8

Ⓝ  BIS CD 1796/8. V. Haydn Sinf., Huss

Prince Esterházy was particularly fond of the baryton, whose delicate sonorities appealed to him. The instrument belongs to the gamba family. It is strung with six silver-covered gut strings, which are played with a bow, and it is equipped with nine drone metal strings which serve as a sympathetic counterpart, but can also be plucked with the thumb of the left hand. The constant resonance of these strings produces the baryton's singing tone and its reverberance. Haydn himself practised to master the instrument, but it took him six months to achieve competence. Yet the instrument never really became established, and Haydn's Baryton Octets are among the few works featuring the instrument to have survived. But they make a fascinating inclusion here, as the character of the instrument dominates the texture, although Haydn often provides bravura horn writing to give the music a lift.

The Concerti for lire and charming Notturni were commissioned by King Ferdinand of Naples, who himself played the lira organizzata, a hybrid of the hurdy-gurdy with small organ pipes. Haydn's works were written for two such instruments, and (as revised by the composer) their music is now assigned to a sextet of wind and string instruments, engagingly scored. They are elegantly played here and this is a most valuable collection.

There is also a separate collection of the Notturni on CPO in which Dieter Klöcker and the Consortium Classicum get round the textural problem by using a pair of chamber organs besides the basic instrumental ensemble, but this is a less satisfactory solution and produces a degree of monotony (CPO 999 741-2).

Baryton Trios 71 in A; 96 in B min.; 113 in D; 126 in C

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 109. Hsu, Miller, Arico

Baryton Trios 87 in A min.; 97 in D (Fatti per la felicissima nasetta de S:ai:S); 101 in C; 111 in G

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 104. Hsu, Miller, Arico

These are most beguiling performances, which have subtlety and finesse, and the music itself is consistently inventive and attractive. Natural and well-balanced recorded sound, too. The second collection is no less desirable than the first. Well worth exploring.

Cassations in E flat & D, Hob II/21–22 (arr. for String Quartet, as Op. 2/3 & 5)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555703. Kodály Qt – HOFFSTETTER: String Quartets ***

The original versions of these five-movement Cassations were scored for two horns and strings, and the arranger of the string quartet versions is unknown, but they transcribe very effectively. The E flat Quartet is notable for its charming serenade-like slow movement, pizzicato second Minuet and cheerful finale; the D major has a winningly energetic opening movement, another graceful slow movement and a racy finale. They are admirably played here and splendidly recorded.

8 Divertimenti (Feldparthie) (for Wind Sextet)

(*) Testament (ADD) SBT 1346. L. Wind Soloists, Brymer

By comparison with Mozart, Haydn's writing is much more earthy, suggesting (like the original title of these works, 'Feldparthie') that they were written for a private wind band. Moreover the bravura of the horn writing suggests the availability of local virtuosi of a high calibre, and this applies equally to the superb playing here. The music has elegance too, as the very first of the series immediately displays; but it makes its effects more from the spirited brilliance of the playing (particularly in the vigorous 'hunting' finales of Nos. 1 to 3) than for subtlety of colour. Excellent (originally Decca) recording from 1968, immaculately transferred to CD.

(i) Flute Trios for 2 Flutes & Cello 1–4 (London), Hob IV/1–4; (ii) Flute Quartets, Op. 5, 1 in D, Hob II/D9; 2 in G, Hob II/G4; 3 in D, Hob II/D10; 4 in G, Hob II/1; 5 in D, Hob II/D11; 6 in C, Hob II/11

Ⓑ  Accent ACC 30083 (2). (i) Bernard Kuijken, Mark Hantaï, Wieland Kuijken; (ii) Bernard, Siegfried & Wieland Kuijken, François Fernandez

The London Trios date from 1794 during Haydn's visit to England and the first two include variations on the song, Trust not too much. They are delightful works and receive felicitous performances from this authentic group on Accent who make the most winning sounds. The Flute Quartets, Op. 5, in the view of H. C. Robbins Landon may not all be by Haydn. It seems fairly certain, however, that the first two, also known as Divertimenti, are authentic, very early works from the 1750s. All the music is engaging when played with such finesse and warmth, although this is a set to be dipped into rather than taken in large doses. The recording is admirably fresh and realistic.

Flute Trios: in D, F & G, Hob XV/15–17

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 0927 40602-2. Helasvuo, Hakkila, Kartunnen

These three Flute Trios were written together in the summer of 1790. They are slight but have a simple charm which is well caught by these unpretentious performances by this Finnish team, Mikael Helasvuo (flute), Tuija Hakkila (fortepiano), and Anni Kartunnen (cello). The recording is clear and truthful.

Piano Trios 1–46, Hob XV:1–41; Hob XIV:C1 in C; Hob XV:C1 in C; Hob XIV6/XVI6 in G; Hob XV:fl in F min.; Hob deest in D (complete)

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Ph. 454 098-2 (9). Beaux Arts Trio

It is not often possible to hail one set of records as a 'classic' in quite the way that Schnabel's Beethoven sonatas can be so described. Yet this set can be described in those terms, for the playing of the Beaux Arts Trio is of the very highest musical distinction. The contribution of the pianist, Menahem Pressler, is inspired, and the recorded sound on CD is astonishingly lifelike. The CD transfer has enhanced detail without losing the warmth of ambience or sense of intimacy. Offered in a bargain box of nine CDs, this is a set no Haydn lover should miss: it is desert island music.

Piano Trios: Hob XV, 5; 18; 19; 20

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 468-2. Trio 1790

Piano Trios, Hob XV, 6–10

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 466-2. Trio 1790

Piano Trios, Hob XV, 11–14

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 467-2. Trio 1790

Piano Trios, Hob XV, 21–23

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 731-2. Trio 1790

Piano Trios, Hob XV, 24–26; 31–32

Ⓜ (*) CPO 999 828-2. Trio 1790

Piano Trios: Hob XV: 34–35; 38; 40; f1

Ⓜ (*) CPO 777 243-2. Trio 1790

The Beaux Arts Trio have long reigned supreme in this repertoire but those who are attracted by the idea of original instruments might well consider this expert group, Trio 1790, which is based in Cologne and was recorded there in the WDR studios. They are intelligent players, and their discs are priced economically. The performances sparkle; there is plenty of wit and character, and the Cologne Radio recordings are first class. All the same this will remain an adjunct rather than a replacement for the Beaux Arts and the sublime Menahem Pressler.

Piano Trio in A, Hob XV 18

 Daphne DAPHNE 1026. Trio Poseidon – BRAHMS: Piano Trio No.1; IRELAND: Phantasie Trio ***

Formed in 2002, the Trio Poseidon brings together three talented Swedish musicians who had already established high reputations. In Haydn the sound of the piano seems rather light, almost like a fortepiano, but is very acceptable. The work is marked by a central Andante on the slow side, which allows ample time for the decorations to be articulated cleanly, leading to a jaunty account of the finale.

Piano Trios, Hob XV, 18, 19; (i) Andante with Variations in F min., Hob XVII; (ii) Cantata: The Battle of the Nile, Hob XXV1b4; 2 Italian Duets, Hob XXVa1–2; The Spirit's Song, Hob XXV1a41

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 219. Four Nations Ens., with (i) Appel; (ii) Monoyios, Nils Brown

The Battle of the Nile, from which the CD takes its title, was occasioned by Nelson and Lady Hamilton's visit to Esterháza. The Princess Esterházy arranged for Haydn and some musicians to entertain the guests and Haydn was persuaded to compose this cantata to words by Cornelia Knight, who accompanied them on the visit, celebrating Nelson's victory. This expert group play the two 1794 Trios with exemplary taste and vitality and Andrew Appel gives us a sensitive account of the Andante with Variations in F minor on a fine copy of an instrument by Anton Walter. The Battle of the Nile is a rarity and is currently available in only one alternative. An enjoyable, well-played and beautifully recorded disc.

Piano Trios, Hob XV, 24, 25 (Gypsy), 26, 27

Ⓝ 🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67719. Florestan Trio

With Susan Tomes in the lead, these Florestan performances are wonderfully fresh and appealing, alive, full of subtle detail and indeed of joy in the music. This is the first of a series. They are vividly recorded.

Piano Trio, Hob XV, 25 in G (Gypsy)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110188. Thibaud, Casals, Cortot – BEETHOVEN: Kakadu Variations (); SCHUBERT: Piano Trio 1 ()

Few Haydn trios – apart from this one in G major, the so-called Gypsy – were played in the 1920s and 1930s. This famous recording, made in 1927, has been lovingly restored by Ward Marston even if it undoubtedly shows its age.

String quartets

String Quartets 1–83 (including Op. 2/1–6: Cassations; Op. 3/1–6, attrib. Hoffstetter); The Seven Last Words of Jesus Christ, Op. 51

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.502400 (25). Kodály Qt

String Quartets 1–10; 19–83 (complete)

Ⓑ  Ph. 464 650-2 (21). Angeles Qt

This complete survey by the Angeles Quartet comes on 21 CDs and was made over a period of five years (1994–9). Both the playing and the sound quality are of a consistently high standard: generally speaking, the set is beautifully balanced without excessive reverberation and with great clarity; the players have warmth, intelligence and a refined tonal blend and their readings are full of character and wit. They leave you in no doubt that they have thought deeply about this music, but at the same time they never leave the impression that they are too studied or wanting in spontaneity. The internal balance is very good indeed, even if one might occasionally welcome greater projection from the cellist. Tempos are finely judged, and there is a keen awareness of Haydn's developing stature throughout. One never gets the feeling that one is hearing the earlier quartets through the eyes and ears of the later quartets. The group's sense of characterization is pretty unerring, and it leaves you marvelling anew at the quality of Haydn's musical invention.

It is difficult to generalize about so vast an output or so ambitious a recording enterprise, but the Angeles Quartet brings greater transparency of texture than the Kodály Quartet, on Naxos and arguably greater finish. The Kodály does not lack warmth or a sense of style, and the consistently friendly warmth of these players' approach to Haydn's music is always endearing. The result almost always sounds spontaneous and usually carries the feeling of 'live' music-making. The Kodály's playing was flattered by the warm acoustics of the Budapest Unitarian Church, which suited its mellow, civilized approach, although at times the engineers slightly miscalculated the microphone balance and captured a little too much resonance, bringing a degree of textural inflation. But the sound is always natural, the performances do not miss Haydn's subtleties or his jokes, and the group always communicates readily.

The reissued Kodály set is absolutely complete, including the early Cassations, the engaging works by Hoffstetter, for long wrongly attributed to Haydn, and the Seven Last Words in its string quartet transcription. The set comes in a handsome box with a first-class booklet of documentation covering the String Quartets, Symphonies, Concertos and Piano Sonatas (designed, no doubt, to tempt the collector into exploring further). It is undoubtedly a splendid bargain.

String Quartets: Op. 1/0; 43, Op. 42; 83, Op. 103

(*) Mer. (ADD) ECD 88117. English Qt

These fine players rise to all the challenges posed by this music, and the recorded sound is eminently truthful. There would have been room for another Quartet on this disc, which offers rather short measure at 43 minutes.

String Quartets 1–4, Op. 1/1–4

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550398. Kodály Qt

String Quartets 5–6, Op. 1/5–6; 7–8, Op. 2/1–2

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550399. Kodály Qt

The Opp. 1 and 2 Quartets are in essence five-movement divertimenti scored for four string players. These earliest works have not quite the unquenchable flow of original ideas that the early symphonies have but, in such fresh performances as these, they make easy and enjoyable listening even if, with the performances generous in observing repeats, some movements outstay their welcome. The resonant ambience of the Unitarian Church in Budapest seems not unsuitable for works which lie midway between divertimenti and quartets, and the focus seems brighter and sharper on the second CD, recorded in June 1991, two months after the first.

String Quartets 9–10, Op. 2/4 & 6 (Le Matin); 35, Op. 42

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550732. Kodály Qt

The Unitarian Church, Budapest, continues to provide a warm, flattering tonal blend but a texture that is a little too ample for early Haydn, while the fairly close microphones reduce the dynamic range. However, the Kodály's friendly style and elegant finish suit early Haydn. These performers find exactly the right degree of expressiveness for the Adagio of Op. 2/4 and are equally at home in the engaging Andante ed innocentemente which opens the first movement of Op. 42, a splendid work, written a quarter of a century later.

String Quartets 15 in G, Op. 3/3; 16 in B flat, Op. 3/4; 17 in F (Serenade), Op. 3/5; 18 in A, Op. 3/6 – see HOFFSTETTER

String Quartets 19; 21–22, Op. 9/1, 3 & 4

(BB)  Naxos 8.550786. Kodály Qt

String Quartets 20; 23; 24, Op. 9/2, 5 & 6

(BB)  Naxos 8.550787. Kodály Qt

The Kodály Quartet are in excellent form throughout Opus 9. Their simple eloquence in all three slow movements on the first disc serves Haydn well: the Largo of Op. 9/3 is ideally paced and beautifully poised. The players then go on to give a captivating account of the finale. Indeed, all the finales here are superb, showing Haydn at full stretch. The last of the set in A major opens with a very attractive Presto in 6/8, which is delightfully buoyant here. Fortunately, the Naxos recording team (in December 1992 and January 1993) have mastered the acoustics of the Unitarian Church in Budapest. The microphones are in the right place and the sound is not inflated.

String Quartets 25–26; 28, Op. 17/1, 2 & 4

(BB)  Naxos 8.550853. Kodály Qt

The Kodály Quartet seem very much at home in this music, which they approach with affection, yet with an appealing directness which leads to playing which is perfectly integrated, yet fresh. The recording could hardly be bettered: the balance is most natural.

String Quartets 27; 29; 30, Op. 17/3, 5 & 6

(BB)  Naxos 8.550854-2. Kodály Qt

While the other works here are also played with pleasing warmth and finesse, the highlight of the second Naxos disc of Op. 17 is the D major Quartet, which has a searching, aria-like slow movement, dominated by the principal violin, which is played most eloquently here. This is the last of the set, and appropriately the last to be recorded in this highly distinguished Naxos series. The recording balance is quite admirable.

String Quartets 31–36 (Sun Quartets), Op. 20/1–6

(N) 🔑 * CPO SACD 777 173-3 (2). Pellegrini Qt

🔑 * Astrée E 8802 (2). Mosaïques Qt

The so-called 'Sun' Quartets mark a real step forward in Haydn's development of the medium. The most famous is Opus 20, No. 4 with its Minuet alla Zigarese and brilliant finale; but all six have something individual to say. They are played here with much vitality and pleasing intimacy between the Pellegrini players, and the surround sound is very realistic. But the slightly resonant acoustic means that one must be careful to set the volume level not too high on both pairs of speakers in order to give a completely realistic perspective.

Using period instruments, the four players of the Mosaïques Quartet create individual timbres which are pleasing to the ear and which have body and transparency, are perfectly matched and never edgy. There is no squeezed phrasing, and the use of vibrato is as subtle as the control of colour and dynamic. Intonation and ensemble are remarkably exact. Such is the calibre of this music-making and the strength of insight of these players that the character of these fine, relatively early works is communicated with seemingly total spontaneity. This is playing of rare distinction which is immensely revealing and rewarding, helped by state-of-the-art recording of complete realism and presence within an acoustic that provides the necessary intimacy of ambience.

String Quartets 31; 33; 34 (Sun), Op. 20/1, 3, & 4

(*) ASV CDDCA 1027. Lindsay Qt

The Lindsays are at their finest in No. 34 in D major and make much of its theme and variations slow movement, brief Gypsy Minuet and scherzando finale. These recordings were apparently made under studio conditions and the playing in the slow movements of the other two Quartets has slightly less concentration than one has come to expect from their 'live' recordings. The sound is first class, and the extra finish of the ensemble brings its own rewards.

String Quartets 32; 34; 35, Op. 20/2, 5 & 6

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 1057. Lindsay Qt

These are three of Haydn's very greatest mid-period quartets, and the Lindsays have their full measure, with the feeling of 'live' music-making persisting throughout. The rich-textured opening of No. 32 in C major is immediately inviting, and the Capriccio second movement is most sensitively done, as is the lovely, rocking siciliano Adagio of No. 34 in F minor. The Allegro di molto e scherzando character of the first movement of the A major is perfectly caught. All three finales are fugal, and the lightness and keenness of articulation here is a joy. Excellent, truthful recording. Very highly recommended.

String Quartets 32, 34 (Sun), 35, Op. 20/2, 4 & 5; 40, Op. 33/4; 43, Op. 42; 44, 47, Op. 50/1 & 4; 67 (Lark), Op. 64/5; 70, Op. 71/2; 76 (Fifths), 77 (Emperor), 79, Op. 76/2, 3 & 5

Ⓑ  ASV CDRSB 407 (4). Lindsay Qt

This rather arbitrary Lindsay collection consists of four separate live recitals, recorded at public performances at the 'Genius of Haydn' Festival at the Wigmore Hall in 1987.

String Quartets 32, Op. 20/2; 35, Op. 20/5; 39 (Bird), Op. 33/3; 43, Op. 42; 57–8, Op. 54/1 & 2; 79, Op. 76/5 (DVD version)

(*) Opus Arte DVD OA 0920D. Lindsay Qt

The Lindsays were recorded and filmed at the 2004 Kuhmo Festival in Finland, with two of the seven Quartets (Nos. 35 and 43) caught at live performances. As always, the visual element increases the intensity of communication between performers and listeners, although here the camera moves from shot to shot rather arbitrarily and not always perceptively and is sometimes too close. Members of the quartet introduce each work, but the credits follow each performance, which is less than ideal for continued watching. A documentary film follows: '4 Better or 4 Worse – The Anatomy of a String Quartet' by Reiner Moritz, in which these players discuss the problems of quartet playing, with excerpts from rehearsals, including those of other comparable ensembles. In this instance we are probably best to stick to some of the Lindsays' audio recordings.

String Quartets 34 (Sun), Op. 20/4; 38 (Joke), Op. 33/2; 39 (Bird), Op. 33/3; 61 (Razor), Op. 55/2; 67 (Lark), Op. 64/5; 77 (Emperor), Op. 76/3

🔑 Ⓜ  ASV CDDCS 236 (2). Lindsay Qt

All these performances show the Lindsays on top form; indeed the Sun Quartet is the finest performance on the full-priced CD from which it comes. Anyone wanting a grouping of these named quartets (all masterpieces) cannot go wrong here as the recordings are all vividly real: the Emperor, for instance, which was recorded live, is very present indeed. The only snag is that a compilation like this cuts across other collections which group together works of a single Opus number.

String Quartets 34, Op. 20/4; 47, Op. 50/4; 77 (Emperor), Op. 76/3

 ASV CDDCA 731. Lindsay Qt

The Lindsays' performances were again recorded at public performances, on this occasion in London's Wigmore Hall. The advantages this brings are twofold: higher spontaneity and a greater propensity to take risks. In all three performances the gains outweigh any loss, though the balance tends to cause some coarse-sounding tone in fortissimo passages.

String Quartets 37; 38 (Joke); 40, Op. 33/1–2 & 4

(*) ASV CDDCA 937. Lindsay Qt

String Quartets 37–42, Op. 33/1–6

* Astrée E 8801 (2). Mosaïques Qt

String Quartets 37–38 & 41, Op. 33/1–2 & 5

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550788. Kodály Qt

String Quartets 39–40 & 42, Op. 33/3–4 & 6

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550789. Kodály Qt

String Quartets 39 (Bird); 41 in G; 42, Op. 33/3, 5 & 6

🔑  ASV CDDCA 938. Lindsay Qt

String Quartets 40; 41; 42 (How do you do?), Op. 33/4–6

 Kingdom KCLCD 2015. Bingham Qt

The Lindsays are vividly alert and their playing is full of tension, emphasized by the recording, where the microphones are close, giving striking presence and stressing the bite on the timbre of the leader, Peter Cropper. Fortunately, the superb ensemble stands up to such scrutiny. No one could say that the Lindsays miss the wit inherent in the finale of the Joke; yet, in spite of the gentle ending, the smile is weakened by the vibrant purposefulness. The performances here use the Henle Urtext edition, which differs quite substantially in phrasing and, in places, even in notes from the more familiar Peters Edition, especially at the opening of Op. 33/1. The second disc includes a Rosette-worthy account of Op. 33/3 with Haydn's birdsong exquisitely simulated.

Those wanting Op. 33 on period instruments can be recommended without reservation to the Mosaïques Quartet, whose performances are more penetrating than any of their competitors. Indeed the intensity of the playing is remarkable, with concentration held throughout the widest range of dynamic, and constantly uncovering hidden depths in these works, even in the Joke Quartet. There are touches of darkness, as well as serenity, in adagios; and finales dance with fairy lightness, while the crisply pointed Allegretto which ends Op. 33/6 has a Beechamesque rhythmic panache. Marvellous playing throughout, with every detail revealed in sound which is both transparent, yet never in the least texturally meagre. The superb recording is perfectly balanced.

The tonal matching and ensemble of the Bingham Quartet are most impressive, with the leader, Stephen Bingham, a remarkably stylish player who really understands how to shape a Haydn phrase. Above all the Binghams convey their pleasure in the music, and every performance here sounds fresh. The recording was made at the Conway Hall, London, in 1990. The balance is a shade close, but the instruments are naturally focused, individually and as a group. Even if the range of dynamic is a little affected, the playing itself is full of light and shade so that if the volume level is carefully set one soon forgets this reservation in the sheer pleasure this music affords.

The Kodály Quartet play Op. 33 with an easy, relaxed warmth. Their style is low-key so that the 'Joke' finale of Op. 33/2 is rather gentle and muted; on the other hand, the reason for the sobriquet of the Bird Quartet is affectionately conveyed and the finale is delightfully light-hearted. Slow movements are serene and quietly musical. Minuets are generally full of character, with the Trios nicely realized, and this applies especially to the charming middle section of the Scherzo in the Joke Quartet. In short these are performances which convey the players' affection for this wonderful music, with no possible desire to put their own personalities between composer and listener. The Naxos recording is wholly natural, with the acoustics of the Budapest Unitarian Church beautifully caught without any textural inflation.

String Quartet 39 in C (Bird), Op. 33/3

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Dutton mono CDBP 9702. Griller Qt – MOZART: String Quartets 14–15 (Haydn Quartets) **** ✿

This simply is one of the finest Haydn quartet recordings ever put on disc, and the Dutton transfer from the 1946 Decca ffrr 78s miraculously provides a sound-quality superior to many modern digital stereo recordings. The Griller were in their absolute prime at the time. You need only sample the grace and finesse of the first movement, with its engaging chirping, the serene blending of timbre in the Adagio and the elegance of the closing Rondo to realize that this playing is very special indeed, as is the recording.

String Quartets 43 in D min., Op. 42; 81; 82, Op. 77/1–2; 83, Op. 103

🔑 ✿ * ASV Gold GLD 4010. Lindsays Qt

Haydn's last three Quartets are exceptionally well served on CD, with outstanding versions by the Kocian Quartet (Praga PR 250157) and by the Mosaïques on period instruments (Astrée E 8800). But these 'swan song' versions by the Lindsays are outstanding in every way and, with an engaging account of Op. 42 thrown in for good measure, this is not only generous but also one of their most cherishable records.

But it is in the Op. 77 Quartets that the Lindsays' response is most fully stretched. The bouncing lift of the opening Allegro moderato of the G major is irresistible, and the Adagio has wonderful expressive delicacy and dynamic subtlety, with the buoyant Minuet producing a surge of dancing energy in the remarkable Trio, and the rustic finale brimming with imaginative contrasts. Altogether this is a splendid collection that, with Opus 42 placed third in the programme, makes a very satisfying concert. The recording is very real and immediate.

String Quartets 44–49, Op. 50/1–6

(BB)  Naxos 8.553983 (Nos. 44–46); 8.553984 (Nos. 47–49) (available separately). Kodály Qt

 ASV Gold GLD 4007 (1–3); GLD 4008 (4–6). Lindsays Qt

The Kodály Quartet are back to their finest form in Op. 50 and they are most naturally recorded. These are mellow performances, warm and polished, with perfect blending of timbre, yet refined detail. Slow movements are beautifully shaped, with the leader, Attila Falvay, frequently distinguishing himself with the graceful finish of his phrasing. Allegros are spirited but unforced, Minuets have an affectionate modicum of wit, and finales are never rushed.

The Lindsays' set of Op. 50 are superbly played and recorded. Their approach is less mellow, less affectionate than that of the Kodály Quartet, who are not surpassed, but the playing is very stimulating indeed.

String Quartets 50–56 (The Seven Last Words of Our Saviour on the Cross), Op. 51

🔑 ✿ * ASV CDDCA 853. Lindsay Qt

* Astrée E 8803. Mosaïques Qt

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550346. Kodály Qt

The recording by the Lindsay Quartet, while offering all the devotional gravity that Haydn demands, brings not just an illuminating variety but also a sense of drama, and the performance makes no compromise for, unlike some others, the Lindsays observe the first-half repeats in each movement, extending the work to a full 70 minutes, instead of under an hour. After the long sequence of slow movements, the Lindsays' account of the final, brief Presto, Il terremoto, then conveys the full, elemental force of the earthquake. It is thrilling with so elusive a work to have so complete an answer in a single recording, with sound both well defined and glowingly beautiful, set against an apt church acoustic.

The slightly austere style of the Mosaïques Quartet is perfectly suited to the sometimes withdrawn, expressive intensity of Haydn's collection of seven Adagios. The Introduction is immediately commanding, and throughout the playing combines strength with subtlety, with the fifth and sixth movements gaining from the lean timbre, delicacy of feeling and great concentration, and the seventh (which Haydn marks 'Pater in tuas manus commendo spiritum meum') finding a natural resolution. The final 'earthquake' could hardly be more forcefully telling. Excellent, vivid recording within a well-judged ambience.

The Kodály Quartet, too, give a memorable performance, strongly characterized and beautifully played, with subtle contrasts of expressive tension between the seven inner slow movements. They also offer an appropriate bonus in Haydn's last, unfinished, two-movement Quartet. The recording is first rate, vividly present yet naturally balanced.

String Quartets 57–59, Op. 54/1–3

🔑  HM Aeon AECD 0313. Ysaÿe Qt

 ASV CDDCA 582. Lindsay Qt

BB  Naxos 8.550395. Kodály Qt

 Hyp. CDA 66971. Salomon Qt

These Ysaÿe performances can rank with the very best. Playing and ensemble are first class and there is plenty of warmth: the Adagio of the C major, Op. 54/2, is particularly fine, and the finale is most impressively handled. The slow movement of the E major, too, is beautifully judged, and the finale is both graceful and spirited. Excellent, well-balanced recording and a friendly atmosphere to make this a most enjoyable disc.

The playing of the Lindsay Quartet is splendidly poised and vital, and the recording is very fine indeed.

The Kodály players enter animatedly into the spirit of the music; the leader, Attila Falvay, shows himself fully equal to Haydn's bravura embellishments in the demanding first violin writing. The Naxos sound is fresh and truthful.

The Salomon Quartet, led by Simon Standage, play on period instruments, but there is nothing anaemic or edgy about the body of tone they command, and the pervading feeling here is of freshness, with finales spirited without being rushed off their feet. This is one of the very best records from these excellent players, and the recording is first class.

String Quartets 57–59, Op. 54/1–3; 72; 73; 74, Op. 74/1–3

BB  Virgin 2x1 5 61436-2 (2). Endellion Qt

The Endellion Quartet were recorded in The Maltings, Snape (in 1988 and 1990 respectively), which provides an ideal acoustic environment. The playing is bright-eyed, fresh and vital, and in both sets they prove a sound guide to this repertoire. The sound is strikingly immediate but is beautifully integrated, and there are many moments of musical insight. With the two discs offered for the cost of a single mid-priced CD, this set is very competitive.

String Quartet 58 in C, Op. 54/2

🔑  Avie AV 2092. Szymanowski Qt – – BACEWICZ: Quartet 4 ; DVOŘÁK: Quartet 14 **(*)

A wonderfully polished account of the C major Quartet from the Szymanowski Quartet; indeed, their playing in the first movement can only be described as exquisite. The Adagio too is gently intense, but some listeners might find here that the players' warmth of response is almost too sensuously expressive for Haydn. But they are beautifully recorded, and this is difficult to resist.

String Quartets 60; 61 (Razor); 62, Op. 55/1–3 (Tost Quartets)

 ASV CDDCA 906. Lindsay Qt

BB (*) Naxos 8.550397. Kodály Qt

Here the Lindsays are heard under studio conditions, but in Holy Trinity Church, Wentworth, and the results, on the second set of Tost Quartets, are marginally less chimerical than in their live recordings, but not less dedicated or less vital. There is of course greater polish, as the fizzing finale of Op. 55/3 readily demonstrates. The recording is lifelike and vivid without excessive resonance.

Opus 55 brings playing from the Kodály Quartet which is undoubtedly spirited and generally polished, but the music-making at times seems plainer than usual in the Naxos series. The recording is bright and clear, with a realistic presence.

String Quartets 63–65, Op. 64/1–3

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1083. Lindsay Qt

 Hyp. CDA 67011. Salomon Qt

BB  Naxos 8.550673. Kodály Qt

String Quartets 66; 67 (Lark); 68, Op. 64/4–6

 Hyp. CDA 67012. Salomon Qt

BB  Naxos 8.550674. Kodály Qt

Op. 64 are splendidly played by the Lindsays. The slow movements of the B minor and B flat major are particularly searching. First-class recording.

The Salomon performances are well up to the standard of their versions of the earlier works. Their timbre is leaner than that of the estimable Kodály Quartet on Naxos but they blend beautifully and have their own insights to offer: their precise ensemble in no way inhibits commitment and feeling. The second of the two discs is particularly rewarding, with the famous opening movement of the Lark readily taking flight and the Adagio poised and intense. The Hyperion recording is admirably truthful.

These Kodály performances are all enjoyable, but the set seems to get better and better as it progresses. Op. 64/1–3 were recorded on 25–29 April 1992; the last to be done, the B flat major, is remarkably successful, with a vigorous opening Vivace assai and a rapt Adagio. The other three works were taped on 1–3 May, and clearly the group had found its top form. The Adagio cantabile e sostenuto of No. 4 finds them at their most concentrated: the Lark has never soared aloft more spontaneously and the Minuet and finale of No. 6 close the set in a winningly spirited fashion. The warm acoustics of the Budapest Unitarian Church provide a mellow and expansive sound-image, but not an orchestral one, and detail remains clear. A most enjoyable set.

String Quartets 63, 65 & 68, Op. 64/1, 3 & 6

 Astrée E 8886. Mosaïques Qt

Immaculate period-instrument performances from the Mosaïques, with absolutely no rough edges. They are beautifully played in every respect, but are a little cool by the side of the Lindsays. However, admirers of 'authentic' Haydn will find this well up to standard, and the recording is very lifelike.

String Quartets 67 in D (Lark), Op. 64/5; 76 in D min. (Fifths), Op. 76/2; 81 in G, Op. 77/1

* HM HMC 901823. Jerusalem Qt

The Jerusalem Quartet is a first-class group and they give outstanding performances of these three masterpieces. In the D major, the 'Lark' soars aloft sweetly and disarmingly, and after a beautifully played Adagio the finale has the lightest possible touch. The first movement of the Fifths is faster than usual, but convincingly so, and the following Andante is delightfully elegant. Similarly, the opening movement of the G major dances along with engaging rhythmic pointing, and the Adagio that follows is comparably searching. The recording is beautifully balanced and sounds very real in a most suitable acoustic. Highly recommended (alongside the Lindsays on ASV).

String Quartets 69–71 (Apponyi Quartets), Op. 71/1–3; 72–74 (Rider), Op. 74/1–3

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550394 (69–71); 8.550396 (72–74). Kodály Qt

Ⓜ  Arcana A 918 (2). Festetics Qt

The Naxos recordings by the Kodály Quartet are outstanding in every way and would be highly recommendable even without their considerable price advantage. The digital recording has vivid presence and just the right amount of ambience: the effect is entirely natural.

The Festetics Quartet continue their period-instrument Haydn series with beautifully judged performances of Opp. 71 and 74. The playing has the customary animation and finish, with detail perceptively observed, and well-blended yet beautifully transparent textures. As before, there is nothing vinegary here, and phrasing and line are impeccably musical. Minuets are pleasing, without heaviness (sample the Trio of Op. 71/3 for delectable articulation) and finales sparkle. These are three-star performances without a doubt, and the recording could hardly be better judged. One's only reservation concerns slow movements, sometimes a little solemn.

String Quartets 72–74, Op. 74/1–3

🔑  Sup. Praga SACD Surround Sound PRD/DSD 250 212. Kocian Qt

 ASV Gold GLD 4013. Lindsays Qt

As usual, the Lindsays are on top form with their vital, imaginative and highly spontaneous performances, which are among the best on record, and excellently balanced.

But the Kocians are pretty marvellous too. Their blending is a joy, without any loss of individuality among the players, and they are vital too, with finales sparkling irresistibly, especially the famous Rider rhythm of the G major. But what caps these performances are the beautifully played slow movements, especially of Nos. 73 and 74. Moreover, the realism of the Praga recording, with the back speakers carefully balanced to add just ambient effect, is astonishingly realistic.

String Quartets 75; 76 (Fifths); 77 (Emperor); 78 (Sunrise); 79; 80, Op. 76/1–6 (Erdödy Quartets)

🔑 ✿ * ASV CDDCA 1076 (75–77); CDDCA 1077 (78–80). Lindsay Qt

 Astrée E 8665 (2). Mosaïques Qt

(BB) * Naxos 8.550314 (75–77); 8.550315; (78–80). Kodály Qt

String Quartets 76 (Fifths); 77 (Emperor); 78 (Sunrise), Op. 76/2–4

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550129. Kodály Qt

Ⓜ  EMI 5 56166-2. Alban Berg Qt

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40824-2. Eder Qt

The Lindsays crown their series of Haydn recordings with this superb set of the supreme masterpieces from Op. 76, marvellously played and truthfully recorded. In their hands these Quartets are made to sound among the greatest ever written, which of course they are. The Lindsays have covered three of these works before, in live recordings, but this time not only is the sound more refined, the performances are too, while keeping the strength and warmth which characterize all the Lindsays' playing. The later quartets are equally fine. Very highly recommended.

The Kodály Quartet too are fully worthy of the composer's inexhaustible invention and make a splendid bargain recommendation. Their playing brings a joyful pleasure in Haydn's inspiration and there is not the slightest suspicion of over-rehearsal or of routine: every bar of the music springs to life spontaneously, and these musicians' insights bring an ideal combination of authority and warmth, emotional balance and structural awareness.

The leonine style and comparatively spare textures that are the essential feature of the playing of the Mosaïques Quartet are immediately apparent at the opening of the first of the Erdödy set and undoubtedly cast a new and different light on Haydn's supreme masterpieces in this genre. Every detail of the polyphonic emerges clearly, but with no sense of didacticism. The recording could hardly be bettered, transparent and beautifully focused within a pleasing ambience. If you already have a modern-instrument recording of these marvellous works, this is surely an essential supplement.

The Alban Berg Quartet's recordings of Op. 76 offers peerless playing, with poised slow movements, simply and beautifully played, yet with every note perfectly in place. At times one might venture a suspicion that everything is too perfectly calculated, but such a judgement would be unfair, for Haydn's spirit hovers over this music-making. Perhaps they could smile a little more here. Nevertheless this is playing of distinction, bringing impeccable blending and ensemble. Although the recording is brightly lit and the effect a shade too up-front, it is realistic and admirably balanced.

The Eder is a Hungarian Quartet which came to the fore in the early to mid-1980s, when these recordings were made. The players command a refined and beautiful tone, with generally excellent ensemble and polish. These are elegant performances that are unlikely to disappoint even the most demanding listener, save perhaps in the finale of the Emperor, which they take a little too quickly. They are unfailingly thoughtful players whose internal balance and tonal blend are practically flawless. The recording is altogether excellent and this reissue is a bargain.

String Quartets 75–80, Op. 76/1–6; 81–2, Op. 77/1–2; 83, Op. 103

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) Trio 471 762-2 (3). Amadeus Qt

Haydn's late quartets have much the same expansiveness and depth as the symphonies, and here the Amadeus succeed in conveying both their intimacy and their sense of scale. The recordings are bright and truthful. Those who invest in this Trio will find much to reward them, though in Op. 76 the Kodály Quartet are even finer. However, the Amadeus accounts of the two Op. 77 Quartets are outstanding, as is the unfinished D minor, Op. 103. They are on their finest form here. There is a sense of spontaneity as well as a genuine breadth to these readings. The recordings have a warm acoustic and plenty of presence.

String Quartet 76, Op. 76/2

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1085. Hollywood Qt – HUMMEL: Quartet in G (); MOZART: Quartet 17 **(*)

The Hollywood Quartet were recorded at a memorable concert in London's Royal Festival Hall in September 1957. These recordings have never been available before. The playing can only be described as impeccable, not surprisingly so, given the tonal beauty and musical sophistication these artists commanded; and the sound is astonishingly good for the period. There are a couple of minutes of balance test and a brief exchange among the players.

String Quartet 79 in D, Op. 76/5

 Telarc CD 80415. Cleveland Qt – CORIGLIANO: Quartet ***

This is a superb performance, the noble simplicity of the slow movement gravely and movingly caught, and the racy finale as spick and span as it is exhilarating. Outstandingly fine recording, too, and if the coupling is unexpected it is certainly rewarding.

String Quartets 81; 82, Op. 77/1–2; 83, Op. 103

🔑 * Astrée E 8800. Mosaïques Qt

🔑  HM PRD 250 157. Kocian Qt

 Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2575. Takács Qt

 Hyp. CDA 66348. Salomon Qt

String Quartets 81; 82, Op. 77/1–2

(BB)  Naxos 8.553146. Kodály Qt

Using period instruments to totally convincing effect, the Mosaïques Quartet give outstanding performances of Haydn's last three Quartets. They play with much subtlety of colour and dynamic and bring total concentration to every bar of the music. The D minor Quartet, Haydn's last, is beautifully judged. The recording is absolutely real: the sound is transparent as well as immediate. This is among the finest of all Haydn quartet records.

Those preferring modern-instrument performances could hardly do better than invest in the Kocian Quartet. Allegros sparkle, ensemble is clean and true, and slow movements are beautifully played, notably the eloquent variations of Op. 77/2, but also the Andante grazioso of Haydn's last Quartet, where the hint of melancholy is nicely understated. The recording is very real, the players not too close in an attractive acoustic.

The Takács Quartet play with warmth, expressive refinement and vitality, and the Decca recording has clean, well-focused sound, with just about the right degree of resonance. Though this is not perhaps a first choice, their admirers need not hesitate.

The Salomon, recorded in a less ample acoustic, produce an altogether leaner sound but one that is thoroughly responsive to every shift in Haydn's thought. They seem to have great inner vitality and feeling.

The Kodály Quartet give comparatively robust performances of both works, made to seem even more robust by the close balance which reduces the dynamic range – not that the playing is notable for pianissimo contrast. This is warm, friendly music-making and in that respect (and in that respect only) preferable to the Mosaïques; but the latter's playing has considerably more subtlety, and they offer an extra work.

PIANO MUSIC

(i) Divertimento (The Master and his Pupil) for piano duet, Hob XVII/2; Arietta with 12 Variations, Hob XVII/3; Capriccio in G, Hob XVII/1; Theme & Variations in C, Hob XVII/5; 20 Variations in G, Hob XVII/2; Variations on the Austrian Anthem (after Hob XIII/77)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553972. Jandó (piano), (i) with Kollár

A fascinatingly diverting disc in all respects. The engaging if over-long piano duet, Il Maestro lo Scolare (with the two-part dialogue nicely separated on a single piano in the recording) was transcribed from a baryton trio in 1766/8. It opens with an echo of Handel's Harmonious Blacksmith and (obviously a teacher–pupil exercise) gets progresssively more difficult. The closing section is a Minuet. The Arietta is also based on a Minuet – from Haydn's String Quartet No. 20, Op. 9/2, while the Capriccio takes a folk song as its basis with the unlikely title of Acht Sauschnider müssen sein ('It takes eight to castrate a boar') and the variations on the famous Emperor theme are a transcription of the slow movement of the string quartet with that nickname, Op. 76/1. Jenö Jandó plays everything in his freshly direct, classical manner and he is expertly joined by Zsuzsa Kollár in the four-handed work. The recording is clear and clean.

PIANO SONATAS

Piano Sonatas 1–16; 17–19 (Hob Deest) 20; 28, Hob XIV/5; 29–62, Hob XVI/1–52 & G1; Hob XVII/D1; The Seven Last Words on the Cross; Adagio in F; Capriccio in G on the song 'Acht Sauschneider müssen sein'; Fantasia in C; 7 Minuets from 'Kleine Tänz für die Jugend'; Variations in F min.; 5 Variations in D; 6 Variations in C; 12 Variations in E flat; 20 Variations in A

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD) 443 785-2 (12). McCabe (piano)

Two things shine through John McCabe's performances: their complete musicianship and their fine imagination. In presenting them as he does on a modern piano, McCabe makes the most of the colour and subtlety of the music, and in that respect his style is more expressive, less overtly classical than Jandó's (see below) while the recording is made to sound somewhat softer-grained by the acoustic of All Saints' Church, Petersham. Given phrasing so clearly articulated and alertly phrased, and such varied, intelligently thought-out and wholly responsive presentation, this set can be recommended very enthusiastically. The recordings are of the very highest quality, truthful in timbre and firmly refined in detail. The set is most reasonably priced and the pianist provides his own extensive and illuminating notes. To sample the calibre of this enterprise, begin with The Seven Last Words – playing of unexaggerated expressive feeling that almost makes one believe this was a work conceived in pianistic terms.

Piano Sonatas 1–62 (complete); Seven Last Words of our Saviour on the Cross; Miscellaneous Solo Works, including Fantasia in C; German Dances & Minuets. Variations

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB)  BIS CD 1731/3 (15). Brautigam (fortepiano)

Ronald Brautigam's survey has great vitality and spontaneity and he is most realistically recorded. If you want a complete set of the Haydn piano sonatas, this would probably be a first choice. The documentation is excellent and the 15 discs come for the price of three.

Piano Sonatas 1-61 (complete); Adagios in F & G; 2 Allegrettos in G; Arietta with 12 Variations in A; Fantasia in C; Variations (Sonata un piccolo divertimento) in F min.

Ⓝ 🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.51042 (10). Jandó

Jenö Jandó, too, seems to be in his element throughout his Haydn survey. His freshness of approach and stylistic confidence are consistently striking. The recording also is excellent, and overall this Naxos series can be recommended with equal confidence to its competitor on BIS. It comes with the comprehensive booklet detailing the Piano Sonatas, String Quartets, Concertos and Symphonies.

Keyboard (Divertimento) Sonatas 1–20, Hob XVI/1–16 & G1; D1; 17–18, Hob Es2 & 3; 19, Hob XVI/47; 20, Hob XVI/18

Ⓜ  BIS CD 1293/4 (3). Brautigam (fortepiano)

Ronald Brautigam here turns to the early 'Divertimeno' sonatas that were written in the 1750s and 1760s for the clavichord or harpsichord. Brautigam uses a fortepiano, a copy by Paul McNulty of a mid-1790s instrument by Walter. Many of the earlier sonatas are of little consequence and Haydn did not include them in his list of complete keyboard works that he made for Breitkopf. The more individual sonatas, such as the E minor, No. 19, Hob XVI/47, and the B flat, No. 20, Hob XVI/18, come from the 1760s and are played with imagination and delicacy. Good playing and exemplary recording, but ultimately the set is for completists.

Piano Sonatas 1, Hob. XVI/8; 2, Hob XVI/7; 3, Hob XVI/9; 4, Hob XVI/G1; 5, Hob XVI/11; 6, Hob XVI/10; 7, Hob XVII/D1; 8, Hob XVI/5; 9, Hob XVI/4; 10, Hob XVI/1

(BB)  Naxos 8.553824. Jandó

There are no autograph manuscripts of Haydn's earliest sonatas, which were all written before 1766. The authenticity of No. 1 (Hob XVI/8) is certain, and many of the others of these three-movement works bear the same musical fingerprint and a characteristic simplicity of style. Doubts have been expressed about No. 8 (Hob XVI/5), but it is presented attractively enough here.

Piano Sonatas 11, Hob XVI/2; 12, Hob XVI/12; 13, Hob XVI/6; 14, Hob XVI/3; 15, Hob XVI/13; 16, Hob XVI/14; 18, Hob XVI deest

(BB)  Naxos 8.553825. Jandó

These early sonatas are all played freshly in Jandó's pleasingly direct style. All but one are simple, three-movement works; the exception is No. 13 in G, which has an appealing additional Adagio which Jandó treats simply but appealingly. The recording is truthful and this issue, Volume 8 in the series, cannot be faulted.

Piano Sonatas 20, Hob XVI/18; 30, Hob XVI/19; 31, Hob XVI/46; 32, Hob XVI/44

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553364. Jandó

The first movement of the G minor Sonata is particularly appealing, with its neat articulation and tight little runs, and the same might be said of the opening movement of the A flat major (No. 31), while its finale is similarly bright and sparkling. But first prize goes to the closing movement of the D major, which skips along delightfully and brings quite dazzling dexterity. The thoughtful Adagio of the B flat major, however, is just a little too studied; but this is not enough of a disadvantage to prevent a recommendation. The piano recording is very realistic.

Piano Sonatas 22 in D; 38 in F; 42 in G ; 48 in C, Hob XVI/37; 23; 27; 35; Divertimento in A flat, Hob XVI/46; Parthia in E flat, Hob XVI/Es3

Ⓝ  Nim. NI 5847. Lester (historic fortepianos)

The interest of this collection is to compare the sound of the different instruments on which Richard Lester plays these six works so brightly and freshly. The Sonatas in D, F, G and C are performed on a Schantz instrument now in the Holbourne Museum in Bath, very like the one Haydn purchased himself in 1788. Of the four the C major seems especially suited to the drier timbre. The other two pieces are played on an unidentified instrument from northern Italy dating from around 1790 and restored by Michael Cole. This has a sonority more closely comparable with a modern piano and suits the music very well indeed.

Piano Sonatas 23 in F; 24 in D; 32 in B min.; 37 in D; 40 in G; 41 in B flat; 43 in A flat; 46 in A flat; 50 in C; 52 in E flat

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67554 (2). Hamelin

Hamelin till now has excelled in his recordings in the high romantic virtuoso repertory; but here he reveals himself as a fine classicist, fresh and stylish and always conveying the feeling of live communication. His speeds for Allegros are phenomenally fast, yet the clarity of articulation and the springing of rhythms prevent them from sounding breathless, and in slower movements he allows himself full breadth over tempo without ever resorting to unstylish phrasing. From beginning to end in these ten sonatas (and three of the very finest among them) Hamelin has one spellbound over the boundless inventiveness of Haydn as keyboard composer. A superb pair of discs, standing out in this repertoire.

Piano Sonatas 24, Hob XVI/26; 30, Hob XVI/19; 32, Hob XVI/44; 33, Hob XVI/20; 44, Hob XVI/29

🔑 ✿ * EMI 5 56756-2. Andsnes

Playing of great elegance and consummate artistry, the finest Haydn sonata recording to have appeared for a long time. Very different in approach from Pletnev's 1989 recital (see below) – the repertoire does not overlap – but no less individual or persuasive. The young Norwegian pianist plays with rare imagination and keyboard colour, and the EMI sound is first class. The recordings are all made in Abbey Road, save for the E flat (No. 44), which was recorded in Oslo.

Piano Sonatas 28 in D, Hob XVI/5a; 29 in E flat, Hob XVI/45; 30 in D, Hob XVI/19

 BIS CD 1174. Brautigam

Piano Sonatas 35 in A flat, Hob XVI/43; 36 in C, Hob XVI/21; 37 in F, Hob XVI/22; 38 in F, Hob XVI/23

 BIS CD 1095. Brautigam

Ronald Brautigam continues his much and rightly admired Haydn odyssey. We can only re-echo our continued enthusiasm for this set. Brautigam has tremendous life and combines apparent spontaneity of expression and scholarship. The recordings are altogether exemplary.

Piano Sonatas 29; 31; 34; 35; 49, Hob XVI/45, 46, 33, 43 & 36

🔑 * Sony SK 89363. Ax

These elegant accounts by Emanuel Ax are fluent and unmannered, sensitive and vital, and they are very well recorded. An excellent sampler for some of the composer's most attractive keyboard works.

Piano Sonatas 29, Hob XVI/45; 33, Hob XVI/20; 34, Hob XVI/33; 35, Hob XVI/43

(BB)  Naxos 8.553800. Jandó

Jandó is on very good form here. His style is a little plain and classical but never insensitive, and he is well recorded. A useful addition to a fine series.

Piano Sonatas 31, Hob XVI/46; 45–47, Hob XVI/30–32

 BIS CD 1094. Brautigam

Piano Sonatas 32, Hob XVI/44; 34, Hob XVI/33; 42–4, Hob XVI/27–29

 BIS CD 1093. Brautigam

These two recordings in Ronald Brautigam's ongoing Haydn cycle are devoted to the sonatas of 1776, and they are as refreshing and alive as earlier issues in this eminently collectable series. He uses a copy made in 1992 by Paul McNulty of a fortepiano by Anton Gabriel Walter from about 1795. Wonderful recorded sound.

Piano Sonatas 32 in G min., Hob XVI/44; 33 in C min., Hob XVI/20; 53 in E min., Hob XVI/34; 54 in G, Hob XVI/40; 58 in C, Hob. XVI/48

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60677-2. Schiff

Piano Sonatas 59–62, Hob XVI/49–52; Fantasia in C, Hob XVII/4

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60807-2. Schiff

András Schiff's Haydn recordings were recorded in the Berlin Teldec studios by Christopher Raeburn, one of Decca's most distinguished producers, this is a collection issue of high quality.

Piano Sonatas 32 in G min.; 49 in C sharp min.; 59 in E flat; 62 in E flat

 Signum SIGCH 0097. Lill

It is good to see John Lill returning to the recording studio in very good form and in a well-chosen selection of Haydn sonatas. His style is plain, but none the worse for that, for the Adagio slow movements of both the two E flat Sonatas are particularly fine, and in all these works his poise and clear articulation give much pleasure. He is excellently recorded too.

Piano Sonatas 33, Hob XVI/20; 39, Hob XVI/39; 40, Hob XVI/25; 41, Hob XVI/26

 BIS CD 1163. Brautigam (fortepiano)

Piano Sonatas 35, Hob XVI/43; 36, Hob XVI/21; 37, Hob XVI/22; 38, Hob XVI/23

 BIS CD 1095. Brautigam (fortepiano)

With the present pair of CDs Brautigam reaches the Esterházy Sonatas (Nos. 36–41), dating from 1773. The additional sonatas, No. 33 in C minor (Hob XVI/20) and No. 35 in A flat (Hob XVI/43) come from 1771 and the period 1771–3 respectively.

Piano Sonatas 33, Hob XVI/20; 47, Hob XVI/32; 53, Hob XVI/34; 50, Hob XVI/37; 54, Hob XVI/40; 56, Hob XVI/42; 58–62, Hob XVI/48–52; Adagio in F, Hob XVII/9; Andante with Variations in F min., Hob XVII/6; Fantasia in C, Hob XVII/4

🔑 * Ph. (ADD/DDD) 478 1369 (4). Brendel

This collection offers some of the best Haydn playing on record – and some of the best Brendel, too. The eleven sonatas, together with the F minor Variations and the C major Fantasia are splendidly characterized and superbly recorded. The first is analogue, the remainder digital.

Piano Sonatas 33, Hob XVI/20; 60, Hob XVI/50; 62, Hob XVI/52; Andante & Variations in F min., Hob XVII/6

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 2x1 5 61881-2 (2). Pletnev – Piano Concertos, Hob XVIII/4, 7 & 11 ****

Pletnev's reading of the Sonatas is full of personality and character. The C major is given with great elegance and wit, and the great E flat Sonata is magisterial. This playing has a masterly authority, and Pletnev is very well recorded. Now coupled with his equally memorable accounts of Haydn's three finest piano concertos, this reissue is a splendid bargain and one not to be missed.

Piano Sonatas 36, Hob XVI/21; 37, Hob XVI/22; 38, Hob XVI/23; 39, Hob XVI/24; 40, Hob XVI/25; 41, Hob XVI/26

(BB)  Naxos 8.553127. Jandó

The sonatas in Volume 5 of the Naxos series form a set of six, written in 1773 and dedicated to Prince Nikolaus Esterházy. They are all attractive works and they inspire Jandó to consistently fine performances. This is one of the most rewarding issues in this admirable series. Excellent piano sound.

Piano Sonatas 42, Hob XVI/27; 43, Hob XVI/28; 44, Hob XVI/29; 45, Hob XVI/30; 46, Hob XVI/31; 47, Hob XVI/32

(BB)  Naxos 8.550844. Jandó (piano)

The last work here, in B minor, opens with perhaps the most striking idea of all and, after the gracious central Minuet, ends in a flurry of precocious virtuosity, with Jandó clearly in his element. He shows himself a complete master of this repertoire, and the recording, crisp and clean but not too dry, is first class.

Piano Sonatas 48, Hob XVI/35; 49, Hob XVI/36; 50, Hob XVI/37; 51, Hob XVI/38; 52 in G, Hob XVI/39

(BB)  Naxos 8.553128. Jandó

The opening movement of No. 49 and the memorable Largo e sostenuto of No. 50 (and its infectious finale) show Jandó in top form; in the other works his bright, stylish playing is always responsive to Haydn's direct, lively manner. The recording is well up to the high standard of this series.

Piano Sonatas 48, Hob XVI/35; 49, Hob XVI/36; 50, Hob XVI/37; 51, Hob XVI/38; 52, Hob XVI/39

 BIS CD 992. Brautigam (fortepiano)

Piano Sonatas 53, Hob XVI/34; 54, Hob XVI/40; 55, Hob XVI/41; 56, Hob XVI/42; 57, Hob XVI/47; 58, Hob XVI/48

(M)  BIS CD 300993. Brautigam (fortepiano)

Piano Sonatas 59, Hob XVI/49; 60, Hob XVI/50; 61, Hob XVI/51; 62, Hob XVI/52

 BIS CD 994. Brautigam (fortepiano)

Ronald Brautigam's first disc here is given over to five of the so-called Auenbrugger Sonatas. Brautigam is hardly less vital and imaginative here than in Mozart. Apart from his technical virtuosity, his playing has tremendous flair and sparkle. The second disc (CD 300993) includes the Bossler Sonatas (Nos. 54–6). Brautigam gives them with tremendous flair and, in fact the whole disc is a delight from beginning to end. The third (CD 994) brings the Genzinger Sonata (No. 59), so named because Marianne von Genzinger was its dedicatee, and three London Sonatas, composed in 1794–5, when Haydn was in his early sixties. Exhilarating playing which augurs well for the rest of the series.

Piano Sonatas 53, Hob XVI/34; 54, Hob XVI/40; 55, Hob XVI/41; 56, Hob XVI/42; 58, Hob XVI/48; Variations in F min. (Sonata, un piccolo divertimento), Hob XVII/6

(BB)  Naxos 8.550845. Jandó (piano)

These are appealing performances of the three Sonatas, Hob XVI/40–42, dedicated to Princess Marie Esterházy. Jandó also gives a splendid account of the more ambitious three-movement Sonata in E minor, Hob XVI/34. He is a true Haydn player, and this is in every way recommendable, particularly as the recording is so vivid and clean: just right for the repertoire.

Piano Sonatas 58–62, Hob XVI/48–52

(M) *() Sony SMK 87857. Gould

Glenn Gould recorded Haydn's last five Piano Sonatas in 1981/2 and his clean, classical style is often refreshing, but after a while his squeaky-clean articulation, although quite remarkably crisp, becomes a little wearing and the ear craves less staccato and a less percussive approach to allegros and the irritating vocalise is always there to disturb the otherwise silent background. The digital recording is clear and truthful.

Piano Sonatas 59–62, Hob XVI/49–52

(BB)  Naxos 8.550657. Jandó

Jandó here shows himself a thoughtfully imaginative player as well as a bold one, and the finale of the great E flat Sonata has splendid, unforced bravura.

Piano Sonata 62 in E flat

() BBC Legends (mono) BBCL 4201-2. Hess – BACH: English Suite 2 ((*)); SCHUMANN: Carnaval ()

Recorded for the BBC in 1962 when Dame Myra Hess was recovering from a stroke, this account of Haydn's Sonata No. 62 was the very last performance she ever gave. Though the result is not quite as fluent as it would have been earlier, the intensity of her playing makes this historic recording most valuable, well coupled with Bach and Schumann.

VOCAL MUSIC

Arianna a Naxos; Scena di Berenice (DVD version) – see under Symphony 92 (Oxford)

 Opus Arte DVD OA 821D. Bartoli, VCM, Harnoncourt

Cecilia Bartoli's fine DVD performances are discussed under their coupling.

Arianna a Naxos (orchestral version); Scena di Berenice; Miseri noi, miserata patria!; Son pietosa, son bonina; Solo e pensoso

🔑  Avie AV 2066. Augér, Handel & Haydn Society O, Hogwood

Augér holds the contrasted sections of the two big cantatas, the Scena di Berenice and Arianna a Naxos, firmly together. The third cantata, Miseri noi, like the Scena di Berenice, is another jewel not published until well on in the 20th century. Those and the two arias – Solo e pensoso is a setting of a Petrarch sonnet – inspire Augér to heartfelt singing, helped by immaculate recording, engineered by a Decca team. Full texts are provided.

Birthday Cantatas: Destatevi o miei fidi; Qual dubbio ormai. Celebration cantata: Da qual gioia improvvisa; Symphony 12 in E flat

 HM HMC 90 1768. Stojkovic, Sunhae Im, Ciolek, Cologne Vocal Ens., Capella Coloniensis, Spering or Kraemer

Haydn was only deputy Kapellmeister at Esterházy when he wrote the two birthday cantatas to celebrate the name–day of his princely employer – in 1763 and 1764 respectively – with the texts offering the usual unalloyed praise. The third cantata celebrates the Prince's safe return from a distant journey and even includes a welcome chorus. With good solo singing, this is enjoyable enough; and if, like the Symphony from the same period, it is not great music, it shows how resourceful the budding young composer was.

The Creation (complete; in English; DVD version)

Ⓝ 🔑 * Decca O/L DVD 071 1269. Kirkby, Rolfe Johnson, George, New College, Oxford, Ch., AAM Ch. & O, Hogwood (Producer & Director: Chris Hunt)

Hogwood uses the English text which Haydn himself recognized as having equal validity with the German. Moreover Hogwood defies what has become the custom in period performances and opts for large forces such as Haydn – who during his trips to London was most impressed by large-scale performances of Handel oratorios – would have welcomed. The result, recorded in Gloucester Cathedral (which offers much visual pleasure), for all its weight retains an attractive freshness. The Choir of New College, Oxford, with its trebles, adds to the brightness of the choral sound and the trio of soloists is admirably consistent. A young Emma Kirkby (this was filmed for TV in 1990) is brightly distinctive, and Anthony Rolfe Johnson is comparably sweet-toned. Michael George is wonderfully intense in the hushed opening recitative before the blazing outburst on the creation of light, even if later the voice emerges less beautifully. Hogwood may lack some of the flair and imagination of Rattle (on CD), but as a period DVD performance this makes a perfect counterpart to Gustav Kuhn's alternative version in German. During the opening 'Representation of Chaos' we are shown dramatic film of the universe in its earliest formation, followed by the creation of life, with plants growing as the viewer watches (drawn from the BBC Natural History Unit). Then the producer, Chris Hunt, concentrates on the performers and the beauty of the cathedral itself, plus classic paintings by Blake and Turner.

The Creation (complete; in English; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 477 7361 (2). Piau, Padmore, N. Davies, Harvey, Persson, Chetham's Chamber Ch., Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

 EMI 7 54159-2 (2). Augér, Langridge, Thomas, CBSO & Ch., Rattle

(*) Telarc CD 80298 (2). Upshaw, Humphrey, Cheek, Murphy, McGuire, Chamber Ch. & SO, Shaw

Paul McCreesh takes a refreshingly vibrant and joyous new look at Haydn's masterpiece, revising large parts of the English–language text, also rewriting the recitatives 'as Haydn might have done had he been more familiar with the English language'. However, McCreesh assures us that his revision happily does not omit favourite phrases like 'the flexible tiger' and 'With verdure clad'. McCreesh uses five soloists (with Sandrine Piau and Mark Padmore standing out in Parts I and 2), almost 100 singers in the chorus, and the Gabrieli Consort expanded to over 100 players as used by Haydn for the 1799 première of the German version. The performance is not short on drama, as the thundering timpani anticipate at the very opening, and the closing choruses of Part 1, The Heavens are Telling, and Part 2, Achieved is the glorious work, are thrilling. But the lyrical side of the music comes over too, with excellent solo singing. In Part 3, Peter Harvey and Miah Persson are a radiant Adam and Eve, and McCreesh ensures that the closing chorus, Praise the Lord uplift your voices, brings a moving apotheosis. The set is offered (with full texts provided) at a special price as Part 3 on the second CD only runs for about half an hour.

Rattle brings out the illustrative colour with exceptional vividness: birdsong, lion-roars and the like. He has plainly learnt from period performance, not only concerning speeds – often surprisingly brisk, as in the great soprano aria, With verdure clad – but as regards style too. The male soloists sound none too sweet as recorded, but they characterize positively; and there is no finer account of the soprano's music than that of Arleen Augér. The weight of the Birmingham Chorus is impressive, achieved without loss of clarity or detail in a full, well-balanced recording.

Robert Shaw with his keenly disciplined chamber choir conducts a strong, clean-cut performance, using an English translation modified from the traditional one. Though Shaw's generally broad speeds show little influence from period performance, his concern for clarity of texture is very different from old-style performances, and the Telarc engineers help with full, immediate sound, bringing out sharp dynamic contrasts. Dawn Upshaw adopts too romantically expressive a manner, but the solo singing is good, with Heidi Grant Murphy and James Michael McGuire brought in for the Adam and Eve numbers of Part 3.

The Creation (Die Schöpfung; complete; in German; DVD versions)

🔑 ❀ * TDK DVD DVWW-COCREA. Augér, Sima, Schreier, Berry, Hermann, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., Coll. Aur., Kuhn (introduced by a documentary on the work and the occasion, by the Video Director, Franz Kabelka)

 Capriccio DVD Surround Sound 93 507. Cencic, Schmidt, Bauer, Jankowitsch, V. Boys' Ch., Ch. Viennensis, V. Volksoper SO, Marschik (V/D: Axel Stummer)

It is difficult to imagine a finer filmed and recorded account of Haydn's Creation than this TDK DVD version, made doubly moving by the date of the performance: 31 March 1982, the 250th anniversary of the day of Haydn's birth. Moreover, the event took place in the Great Hall of the Old Vienna University where, on 27 March 1808, Haydn had attended a gala performance of his already celebrated masterpiece, under the direction of Antonio Salieri. All this and more is related in a splendid documentary about the history and composition of the work.

As for the performance, it is quite electrifying, but in the right way, for Gustav Kuhn, with his lively temperament, conducts with an ideal combination of zest and depth of feeling. He opens with a true pianissimo and at the word 'light' produces an overwhelming fortissimo. The soloists are unsurpassed on record. Arleen Augér (Gabriel) is at her glorious best, Peter Schreier (Uriel) sings with honeyed ardour, and Walter Berry is a powerfully resonant Rafael, with some wonderfully telling low notes. In Part Three Gabriele Sima and Roland Hermann (looking at his partner with a benevolent twinkle) are perfectly cast as Adam and Eve. Throughout, the singing of the Arnold Schoenberg Choir is superb, the playing of the Collegium Aureum, using original instruments, gives consistent aural pleasure, and the work ends in a spirit of radiant joy, which is just what Haydn intended. The unfussy video direction by Franz Kabelka concentrates on the performers, so it is very like sharing the occasion with them.

The 1994 Capriccio DVD of Haydn's Creation can also be most cordially recommended. It may not have soloists of quite the individuality of the top CD versions, notably Karajan's, but they are a fine team, with the rich-voiced bass, Ernst Jankowitsch, dominating, first as a resonant Rafael, and in Part 3 as a fine, mature Adam, where he is an excellent match for Gertraud Schmidt. She is not a young Eve, but she has a lovely voice and sings impressively. Christian Bauer is a fresh-voiced Uriel who discards his glasses not long before the interval, and the male soprano, Max Emanuel Cencic, deals with Gabriel's coloratura with ease, even if he has a curious lip-vibrato. The choral singing is first class and the conductor has the performance firmly in his grip: at the opening, the 'Representation of Chaos' is powerfully evoked. The visual backcloth and the atmospheric acoustics of the Grosser Saal of the Musikverein add to one's pleasure, for the Surround Sound is full and vivid, well balanced, with an impressive dynamic range and good clarity.

The Creation (Die Schöpfung; in German; CD versions)

🔑 * DHM/BMG 82876 58340-2 (2). Röschmann, Schade, Gerhaher, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini 3 50842-2 (2). Bonney, Blochwitz, Rootering, Wiens, Bär, Stuttgart RSO & Ch., Marriner

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 761-2 (2). Janowitz, Ludwig, Wunderlich, Krenn, Fischer-Dieskau, Berry, V. Singverein, BPO, Karajan

🔑  DG 477 6327-2 (2). McNair, Brown, Schade, Finley, Gilfry, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 478 1377. Popp, Hollweg, Moll, Döse, Luxon, Brighton Festival Ch., RPO, Dorati

Ⓝ (*) Virgin 3 95235-2 (2). Karthäuser, Kühmeier, Spence, Werba, Henschel, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Celebrating their fiftieth anniversary at the Musikvereinsaal in Vienna, Nikolaus Harnoncourt and the Concentus Musicus give an incandescent account of Haydn's Creation, recorded live. Harnoncourt inspires a natural warmth that infects all the performers, the outstanding Arnold Schoenberg Choir as well as the three splendid soloists, the soprano Dorothea Röschmann at once full and clear, the tenor Michael Schade heady and unstrained and the finely focused bass Christian Gerhaber plainly benefiting from his experience as a Lieder singer. The live atmosphere adds to the dramatic bite of the performance from the start. The recording, well forward with weighty brass, adds to the drama, not least with the great entry of the chorus on the word, Licht ('Light'), thrillingly powerful. A triumphant celebration of 50 years' achievement.

What distinguishes Sir Neville Marriner's 1989 Stuttgart recording is the truly outstanding contribution of the soloists. Each in turn enters singing most beautifully, Hans Peter Blochwitz as Uriel, Jan Henrik Rootering as Raphael, and Barbara Bonney a radiant-voiced Gabriel. And how delightfully they combine in their Trios in Part II. In Part III Edith Wiens is a hardly less delightful Eve, and her duets with the warm-voiced Adam of Olaf Bär are similarly memorable. The chorus is comparatively lightweight in Die Himmel erzählen, but they sing with vigour and conviction and the finale of Part III, Singt dem Herrn, combined with the soloists, is exhilarating. Throughout, the orchestral playing is first rate, and the recording excellent. A splendid bargain version that can be ranked alongside the best.

Among regular versions of The Creation sung in German, Karajan's 1969 set remains unsurpassed, despite two small cuts (in Nos. 30 and 32). The combination of the Berlin Philharmonic at its most intense and the great Viennese Choir makes for a performance that is not only polished but warm and dramatically strong too. The soloists are an extraordinarily fine team, more consistent in quality than those on almost any rival version.

It is good to have Dorati's 1976 set back in the catalogue as one of Decca's 'Originals'. It is a characteristically lively and well-sprung account. The very opening is magnetic, and its imaginative touches and joyfulness of spirit more than compensate for any minor lapses in crispness of ensemble. The soloists are a splendid team. The chorus is as gutsy as you like in Die Himmel erzälen, with the soloists nicely balanced. While among the earlier recordings Karajan is not superseded, Dorati's enjoyably spontaneous music-making is very attractive.

Characteristically, Gardiner takes a dramatic view, overtly expressive, vividly pointing the highlights of the Creation story, but the exhilaration and power of Haydn's inspiration, as well as its lyrical beauty, have never been conveyed more tellingly in a period performance on disc. The soloists are outstanding too, though the silvery soprano, Sylvia McNair, does not always sing full out.

Christie's fresh and often exuberant account of The Creation, readily showing his fine ear for detail, has none of the drawbacks of period performance and most of the advantages, notably the delicacy of colouring provided by his period orchestra. The choir sings freshly and vividly, and certainly produces a suitably spectacular response to the appearance of light. The star among the soloists is Sophie Karthäuser's ravishing portrait of Eve, and Markus Werba makes a sympathetic partner. Genia Kühmeier (Gabriel), Dietrich Henschel (Raphael), and Toby Spence complete a good team. But this is not a primary recommendation.

(i) The Creation; (ii) The Seasons; (iii) Il Ritorno di Tobia (complete; in German)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.507008 (6). (i) Im, Kobow, Müller-Brachmann, Wehler, Cologne Vocal Ens., Capella Augustina, Spering; (ii) Karasiak, MacLeod, Rubens, Gewandhaus Chamber Ch., Leipzig CO, Schuldt-Jensen; (iii) Borchev; Dahlin; Hallenberg; Invernizzi; Karthäuser, Cologne Vocal Ens., Capella Augustina, Spering

Available separately (The Creation on 8.557380/81; The Seasons on 8.557600/01; and Il Ritorno di Tobia on 8.570300/02) or as a compilation, this inexpensive Naxos set offers strong, reliable and thoroughly enjoyable versions not just of The Creation and The Seasons, but of the little-known, much earlier oratorio of 1775 with the subject taken from the Apocrypha, Il Ritorno di Tobia. It may not have the full mastery of the last works, but it is well worth hearing in a performance as fine as this with Leipzig forces. The soprano singing the archangel Raffaele, Roberta Invernizzi, is outstanding in her agility, and Anders Dahlin is a pleasant, clear tenor; but all the singing is never less than very good and often outstanding, particularly from the choirs, both from Leipzig and Cologne. First-rate sound too.

The Creation is another first-rate period performance. After the extreme hush of the opening, the choral cry of Licht! (Light!) is then shattering in its impact. Generally Spering's speeds are on the fast side, yet with no feeling of rush. The three soloists too are all excellent and youthful sounding, and the Cologne Vocal Ensemble is an incisive ensemble with ample power for the dramatic moments.

The Seasons has the splendid Gewandhaus Chamber Choir and the Leipzig Chamber Orchestra, directed with plenty of vitality by Morten Schuldt-Jensen. The Autumn Hunting Chorus, with roistering horns, shows them at their most vivid. Again, all three soloists are excellent, with the rich-voiced soprano Sibylla Rubens and pleasing tenor Andreas Karasiak matched by the resonant bass, Stephan MacLeod. Again first-class recording.

Masses

Hickox Chandos Recordings

Masses 1–14 (complete). Alfred, König der Angelsachsen (incidental music: excerpts); Ave Regina; Salve Regina; Te Deum

Ⓑ  Chan. 0734 (8). Soloists, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

One of Richard Hickox's major achievements on record is his glorious complete coverage of the Haydn late Masses. If you have not already collected some of these CDs, this box is self-recommending in every respect.

Masses 1 in F (Missa brevis), Hob XXII/1; 11 in D min. (Nelson), Hob XXII/11; Ave Regina in A, Hob XXIIIb/3

🔑  Chan. 0640. Gritton, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

Masses 1a in G (Rorate coeli desuper), Hob XXII/3; (i) 13 in B flat (Schöpfungsmesse), Hob XXII/13 (with Haydn's alternative Gloria)

🔑  Chan. 0599. (i) Gritton, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe; Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

It is a great merit of this series that early Masses and shorter choral works are included as couplings for the late, great Masses written for the name-days of the Princess Esterházy. Those extra items include some masterly works, and it is fascinating to hear Haydn's very first Mass – the coupling for the Nelson Mass, most popular of all – which he wrote in his teens, a wonderfully fresh, bright inspiration. It is good too as one of the couplings for the Schöpfungsmesse to have the alternative setting of the Gloria, with the quotation from Haydn's oratorio, The Creation ('Schöpfung'), removed in deference to an objection from the Austrian Empress.

Masses 2a: Sunt bona mixta malis; 3 in C: Missa Cellensis in honorem Beatissimae Virginis Mariae

 Chan. 0667. Gritton, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

Masses 4 in E flat: Missa in honorem Beatissimae Virginis Mariae (Great Organ Mass); 8 in C (Mariazellermesse)

 Chan. 0674. Gritton, Winter, Padmore, Varcoe, Watson, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

The Great Organ Mass, dating from 1768–9, is unique among Haydn's earlier Masses, with a pair of cor anglais instead of oboes bringing a darkness to the textures, and with the organ adding delicate baroque tracery, beautifully played with light registration by Ian Watson. A devout Catholic, Haydn's joy in the liturgy bubbles out, as in the wildly syncopated Amen at the end of the Sanctus.

The Mariazeller Mass, written in 1782, was the last Mass setting that Haydn composed before the final six masterpieces. Adventurous modulations of key relate to Haydn's symphonic writing, leading to an exuberant setting of the final Dona nobis pacem, so syncopated it is almost jazzy. There and throughout, Hickox, with bouncing rhythms, inspires performances that convey the pure joy of Haydn.

Masses 6 in G (Missa Sanctae Nicolai), Hob XXII/6; 9 in B flat (Missa Sancti Bernardi de Offida (Heiligmesse))

 Chan. 0645. Anderson, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

The so-called Heiligmesse, dating from 1796, was the first of the great sequence of six Masses, written annually for the name-day of Princess Esterházy, that crowned Haydn's composing career. Hickox and his fine team of soloists, choir and period orchestra bring out the exuberance of inspiration that marks this and the other works in the series. Equally, the St Nicolai Mass, written in 1772, points forward to his later achievements, though the conclusion on Dona nobis pacem more conventionally brings a radiantly lyrical close, all beautifully achieved here by Hickox and his team, vividly recorded.

Masses 7 in B flat: Missa brevis Sancti Joannis de Deo (Little Organ Mass); 12 in B flat (Theresienmesse)

🔑  Chan. 0592. Watson, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

What distinguishes Richard Hickox's version of the Theresienmesse is the way he brings out the joyful exuberance of inspiration. At each turn Haydn surprises his listeners with new approaches, from the symphonic setting of the Kyrie with contrapuntal entries and side-slipping harmonies to the trumpets and drums of the final Dona nobis pacem. The excellent coupling is the Little Organ Mass – so-called because of the elaborate organ accompaniment for the soprano solo in the Benedictus, with Janice Watson a radiant soloist.

Mass 10 in C: Missa in tempore belli (Paukenmesse), Hob XXII/9; Alfred, König de Angelsachsen (incidental music): Aria of the Guardian Spirit; Chorus of the Danes; 2 Te Deums in C, Hob XXIIIc/1–2

🔑 * Chan. 0633. Argenta, Denley, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

The impact of war is reflected not just in the title, Missa in tempore belli, of the second of Haydn's final choral masterpieces, but in the writing, with the hushed Kyrie dramatically interrupted by trumpets and timpani. Hickox's outstanding performance offers fascinating couplings, not only the two brilliant settings of the Te Deum, with celebratory trumpets and timpani, but the two completed items that Haydn wrote for the production of a German play about Alfred the Great, written in the same year as the Mass and with similarities of style. Exuberant performances under Hickox and brilliant recording.

Mass 14 in B flat (Harmoniemesse); Salve regina in E

🔑  Chan. 0612. Argenta, Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox

Hickox's superb disc aptly couples the Harmoniemesse, the last major work that Haydn ever wrote, with his first important work, the Salve Regina, written in his twenties, when he was still an assistant to the composer Porpora and echoing his style. Nonetheless, there are plenty of distinctive points in the young composer's vigorous writing, simple as it is compared with his mature work. The Harmoniemesse is a favourite with Hickox, with Haydn's final fling as a composer bringing more elaborate orchestral writing. That was thanks to Prince Esterházy hiring a full Harmonie (wind section), while in unflagging inspiration Haydn delivers characteristic surprises in the setting with Hickox fully relishing the composer's humour.

Other recordings

Masses 9 in B flat (Missa Sancti Bernadi von Offida) (Heiligmesse); 10 in C (Missa in tempore belli) (Paukenmesse); Insanae et vanae curae

 Ph. 470 819-2. Lunn, Mingardo, Lehtipuu, Sherratt, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

This Philips coupling follows after Gardiner's outstanding pairing of the Nelson and Theresienne Masses (470 286-2 – see below), similarly dramatic and incisive, and his fine team of soloists and the Monteverdi Choir are again on top form. For his bonus this time, he gives us the motet, Insanae et vanae curae, which originally belonged with the oratorio Il ritorno di Tobia and now, sung in Latin instead of German, is given a spirited, biting performance to match the two main works. The Philips recording is admirably clear and clean, bringing splendid detail.

Mass 11 (Nelson); Te Deum in C, Hob XXIIIc/2

🔑  DG 423 097-2. Lott, Watkinson, Davies, Wilson-Johnson, Ch. & E. Concert, Pinnock

The Nelson Mass (Missa in angustiis: 'Mass in times of fear') brings a superb choral offering from Trevor Pinnock and the English Concert. With incandescent singing from the chorus and fine matching from excellent soloists, Pinnock brings home the high drama of Haydn's autumnal inspiration. Similarly, the Te Deum leaps forward from the 18th century all the more excitingly in an authentic performance such as this. Excellent, full-blooded sound, with good definition.

Mass 13: Schöpfungsmesse (Creation Mass)

 Teldec 3984 26094-2. Oelze, Von Magnus, Lippert, Finley, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., VCM, Harnoncourt – SCHUBERT: Magnificat, D.486; Offertorium in B flat, D.963 (Intende voci) ***

Marked by lightness, resilience and transparency, speeds are moderate in both directions, easily flowing with rhythms well sprung. That is, until the final Dona nobis pacem, where Harnoncourt opts for a very fast speed, rounding off this celebration of the Mass in exhilaration – as Haydn himself used to put it, Laus Deo, 'Praise to God'. The four soloists are excellent, as is the chorus. The recording is warmly atmospheric, though the backward balance of the choir prevents it from having quite the impact its incisive singing deserves. An unexpected coupling, but an illuminating one.

Masses 13 in B flat: Schöpfungsmesse (Creation Mass) 14 in B flat (Harmoniemesse)

 Ph. 470 297-2 (2). Ziesak, Lunn, Gruffydd Jones, Fink, Spicer, Mingardo, Prégardien, Butterfield, Busher, Lehtipuu, Widmer, Sherratt, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

This was the first of Gardiner's three Philips couplings of Haydn's last six great Masses and it set the seal on the excellence of the series, with its starry group of soloists and brightly dramatic choral singing. Comparison with Hickox on Chandos shows the latter the more infectious interpreter, Gardiner the more sharply dramatic, often with faster pacing to match. Yet both are very rewarding in their own chosen way. The recording is excellent.

The Seasons (complete; in English)

Ⓑ  Somm Beecham (ADD) 16-2 (2) (arr. and orch. Beecham). Morison, Young, Langdon, Beecham Choral Soc., RPO, Beecham

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86118-2 (2) (as above). Morison, Young, Langdon, Beecham Choral Soc., RPO, Beecham

Beecham's approach to Haydn's score was somewhat cavalier. He used orchestrations of the keyboard accompaniments for the recitatives, and (as with his RCA recording of Handel's Messiah) added percussion effects, including cymbals. A bell was added to the horns striking eight o'clock in Summer, and extra shots to the bass's hunting aria in Autumn. Yet he obviously revelled in Haydn's expressive tone-painting and he chose a fine solo team, led by Elsie Morison, who sings with tender flexibility and charm. The fresh-voiced tenor, Alexander Young, and the vibrant bass, Michael Langdon, are equally strong, and the three singers match their voices very musically in the various trios. The choral singing is not as polished as we would expect today from an entirely professional chorus, but the hearty vigour and commitment carry the day, while the RPO, and especially the strings, play with both warmth and stylish delicacy of feeling. In short, this is as spirited and individual as one would expect from Beecham, and the early Abbey Road stereo is full and clear. The remastering on Somm cannot be faulted, and a full text is provided of Dennis Arundell's new translation, which was especially commissioned for this recording.

On the EMI budget Gemini set the recording has again been remastered quite splendidly, but there is no libretto.

The Seasons (Die Jahreszeiten; complete; in German)

🔑 ✿ * HMC 801829.30 (2). Petersen, Gura, Henschel, RIAS Chamber Ch., Freiburg Bar. O, Jacobs

 DG 431 818-2 (2). Bonney, Rolfe Johnson, Schmidt, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Ⓑ  Ph. 438 715-2 (2). Mathis, Jerusalem, Fischer-Dieskau, Ch. & ASMF, Marriner

More than any other version, the period performance under René Jacobs brings out the joy of this piece, based on James Thomson's poem, as he nudges the music persuasively when Haydn has fun in imitating the lowing of cattle, the cry of the quail and the chirping of the cricket. With recording of ideal clarity and immediacy Jacobs also brings out the boldness of the writing for brass and timpani in the finales of each section, notably the drinking chorus which rounds off Autumn. Marlis Petersen is the fresh, agile soprano, Werner Gura the light, heady tenor and Dietrich Henschel the fine baritone, singing with a Lieder-singer's concern for detail. Excellent contributions too from the RIAS Chamber Choir and the splendid Freiburg Baroque Orchestra.

Gardiner here almost always gets the best of both worlds in intensity of communication, whatever the purists may say. Even more than usual, this studio performance conveys the electricity of a live event. The silver-toned Barbara Bonney and Anthony Rolfe Johnson at his most sensitive are outstanding soloists, and though the baritone, Andreas Schmidt, is less sweet on the ear, he winningly captures the bluff jollity of the role of Simon.

Marriner directs a superbly joyful performance of Haydn's last oratorio, effervescent with the optimism of old age. Edith Mathis and Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau are as stylish and characterful as one would expect, pointing the words as narrative. The tenor too is magnificent: Siegfried Jerusalem is both heroic of timbre and yet delicate enough for Haydn's most elegant and genial passages. The chorus and orchestra, of authentic size, add to the freshness. The recording, made in St John's, Smith Square, is warmly reverberant without losing detail.

The Seven Last Words of Our Saviour on the Cross

 Naïve V 5045. Piau, Sandhoff, Getchell, Van der Kamp, Accentus, Akademie für alte Musik, Berlin, Equilbey

Returning from England after his second visit to London, Haydn stayed in the Bavarian city of Passau, and there he heard a performance of his own Seven Last Words, which he had written in orchestral form, in an arrangement by the local Kapellmeister, Joseph Friebert, for voices and orchestra. Impressed, Haydn asked for a copy of the transcription and, returning to Vienna, he set about making his own version for soloists, chorus and orchestra, adding parts for clarinets and trombones, but using Friebert's devotional texts. He also added a second instrumental Introduzione between the fourth and fifth 'Words', scored for wind instruments alone. Later, he asked Baron Gottfried van Sweeten, director of the Imperial Library, to revise the texts for a first performance in Vienna in 1796. The result is the work on the present CD, far more eloquent and expressively powerful than the orchestral original. It is superbly sung and played here, and beautifully recorded, to make an important addition to the Haydn discography.

Stabat mater

 Griffin GCCD 4029. Bern, Ager, Carwood, Underwood, Christ Church Cathedral Ch., L. Musici, Darlington, Goode (organ)

Haydn's Stabat mater was the first of his vocal works to establish his reputation internationally, an ambitious cantata written in 1767, soon after Haydn took over responsibility for Prince Esterházy's church music. Even against strong competition, the Griffin issue finds a distinctive place. It uses an orchestra of modern instruments; but Stephen Darlington takes note of period practice, lightening string textures and finding extra detail. He also tends to adopt fast speeds, at times challengingly so, as in the big tenor aria, Vidit sum, stylishly sung by Andrew Carwood. The other striking quality of this set, besides the use of a church choir with boy trebles, is the warmly atmospheric cathedral acoustic, which yet allows ample detail.

OPERA

L'anima del filosofo (Orfeo ed Euridice; complete)

 O-L 452 668-2 (2). Bartoli, Heilmann, D'Arcangelo, Silvestrelli, AAM, Hogwood

Cecilia Bartoli is in her element, passionately expressive, creating a larger-than-life character, in Euridice's death scene, Orfeo's agony of lament (agitated, and very different from Gluck's Orfeo aria, Che farò), and a brilliant coloratura aria for the Sybil. Though Orfeo's death comes as an anticlimax, the final chorus for the Bacchantes is most memorable, in a minor key, dark and agitated, then fading away to the close. Uwe Heilmann is a most sympathetic Orfeo, musically stylish, even if the microphone catches the hint of a flutter, as it does too with the well-contrasted voices of Ildebrando d'Arcangelo as King Creonte, Euridice's father, and Andrea Silvestrelli as Pluto. The chorus, so important in this work, is fresh and well disciplined.

(i) Armida; (ii) La fedeltà premiata; (iii) Orlando paladino; (iv) La vera costanza (all complete)

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) 473 476-2 (10). (i) Burrowes, Ramey, Leggate; (i; iii; iv) Ahnsjö; (i; iv) Norman, Rolfe Johnson; (ii) Terrani, Landy, Von Stade, Titus, Cotrubas, Alva, Mazzieri, SRO Ch.; (ii; iv) Lövaas; (iii) Augér, Ameling, Killebrew, Shirley, Luxon; (iii; iv) Trimarchi; (iv) Donath, Ganzarolli; Lausanne CO, Dorati

(i) L'incontro improvviso; (ii) L'infedeltà delusa; (iii) L'isola disabitata; (iv) Il mondo della luna (all complete). (v) Cantata: Miseri noi! misera patria; Petrarch's Sonnet from 'Il Canzionieri': Solo e pensoso. (vi) Terzetto and (vii) Aria from PASTICCIO: La Circe, ossia L'isola incantata. Arias for: (viii) Acide e Galatea. (ix) SARTI: I finti erede. (x) TRAETTA: Ifigenia in Tauride. (xi) BIANCHI: Alessandro nell'Indie. CIMAROSA: I due supposti conti. GAZZANIGA: L'isola di Alcina. GUGLIELMI: La Quakera spiritosa. PAISIELLO: La Frascatana

Ⓑ  Ph. (ADD) 473 851-2 (10). (i) Luxon, M. Marshall, D. Jones, Prescott; (i; ii; vi; x) Ahnsjö; (i; iii) Zoghby; (i, iv) Trimarchi; (ii) Hendricks; (ii; iv; v; vii; xi) Mathis; (ii; vi; vii; ix) Baldin; (ii; vi; viii) Devlin; (iii) Lerer; (ii; iv) Alva, Bruson; (iv) Von Stade, Augér, Valentini Terrani, Rolfe Johnson; Lausanne CO, Dorati

Haydn is not celebrated as an operatic composer, yet in many ways his contribution to this genre is underrated, and for those drawn to Dorati's vintage series, these two boxes, each of ten CDs, in the Philips bargain Collector's Edition, provide an economical way to explore this repertoire. Each opera is also available separately. With fine soloists there will be much here to delight the ear, and Dorati conducts brightly and resiliently; although he tends to flag in the recitatives, these performances still offer much to relish. The presentation offers good documentation, but keyed synopses in place of full libretti. Also included is an additional programme of miscellaneous arias by Haydn and substitution arias by other composers, the latter (for the most part) sung by Edith Mathis. The analogue recording from the late 1970s is excellent and the CD transfers first class. Try the first box and you will surely want the second.

(i) L'isola disabitata (complete); (ii) Cantata: Arianna a Naxos

 Ara. Z 6717-2 (2). Mentzer, with (i) Huang, Aler, Schaldenbrand, Padova CO, Golub; (ii) Golub (piano)

L'isola disabitata is a lightweight, relatively brief work, involving only four characters, performing seven arias and a final quartet, with copious recitative in between. The set numbers are typically fresh in their inspiration, and the final quartet is a delight in offering solo roles not just to the three singers but to a quartet of obbligato instruments echoing each character: violin and flute for the women, cello and bassoon for the men, with horns and timpani adding to the brilliance of the orchestra.

David Golub and his orchestra from Padua give a warm, relaxed reading, with speeds consistently slower than on the rival Dorati version. The soloists are all first rate, with Susanne Mentzer warm and firm as Costanza, Ying Huang fresh and girlish as Silvia and John Aler clear-toned as Gernando. Christopher Schaldenbrand jibs at singing trills but is stylish otherwise. Well-balanced sound. Arianna a Naxos has Mentzer accompanied by Golub at the piano (unidentified in the booklet) to make a very welcome fill-up, to give a substantial advantage over the Dorati set.

'Haydn & Mozart Discoveries': Arias from: Acide e Galatea; Il desertore; La scuola de' gelosi; La vera costanza

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 475 7169. Fischer-Dieskau, V. Haydn O, Peters – MOZART: Arias **(*)

'Haydn and Mozart Discoveries', the disc claims – and very delightful they are too, even if Haydn gets much less attention, with comparatively lightweight and simple pieces.

HAYDN, Michael (1737–1806)

Flute Concerto in D

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 4 76863-2. Pahud, Berlin Haydn Ens. – J. HAYDN: Flute Concerto; Scherzandi ***

Emmanuel Pahud's superbly played account of Michael Haydn's enchanting little work is now reissued to represent Pahud as one of EMI's 'Great Artists of the Century'.

Horn Concertino in D

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40825-2. Clevenger, Franz Liszt CO, Rolla – J. HAYDN: Horn Concertos 3 & 4 ***

Michael Haydn's Concertino is attractive; the second-movement Allegro is played in fine style by Dale Clevenger, whose articulation is a joy in itself. An outstanding bargain coupling.

Violin Concerto in A

Ⓜ  Australian Ph. Eloquence (ADD) 442 8294. Grumiaux, New Philh. O, Leppard – J. HAYDN: Violin Concertos 1 & 4; MOZART: Adagio; Rondo ***

The outer movements of this concerto have perky, attractive melodies which are very enjoyable, especially when so stylishly played, both by soloist and conductor. The 1970 recording emerges superbly in this new transfer.

Symphonies 1 in C, P.35; 2 in C, P.2; 3 (Divertimento) in G; 4 in B flat, P.51; 5 in A, P.3; 6 in C, P.4; 7 in E, P.5; 8 in D, P.38; 9 in D, P.36; 10 in F, P.45; 11 in B flat, P.9; 12 in G, P.7; 15 in D, P.41; 16 in A, P.6; 18 in C, P.10; 25 in G, P.16; 26 in E flat, P.17; 27 in B flat, P.18; 28 in C, P.19. Sinfonia (Divertimento) in G, P.8

(BB) (*) CPO 999 591-2 (6). Slovak CO, Warchal

Michael Haydn's 41 symphonies were composed over three decades from 1760 until 1789. The early three-movement works are comparatively straightforward and seldom adventurous, usually simply scored for oboes, horns and strings; sometimes flutes were added. The invention, too, though often quite endearing, is not particularly individual. Even so, almost all the symphonies written in the 1760s have at least one memorable movement and sometimes two. The Slovak Chamber Orchestra is an excellent modern-instrument ensemble and performances throughout are lively in the traditional sense, warm and committed. Warchal phrases most musically, but generally observes repeats, which makes some slow movements seem rather long.

Symphonies 11, P.9; 16, P.6; 25, P.16; 34, P.26; 40, P.32

 Chan. 9352. LMP, Bamert

Bamert's programme is very well chosen and makes a fine sampler for this repertoire. None of this is great music, but all of it is enjoyable and the composer's penultimate F major work (1789) brings a strong, impressively constructed opening movement and a tender Adagio with muted strings. The well-detailed recording is pleasingly full and resonant.

Missa in honorem Sanctae Ursulae; Requiem pro defuncto Archiepiscopo Sigismondo

Ⓑ  Hyp. CDA 67510 (2). Sampson, Summers, Gilchrist, Harvey, King's Consort & Ch., King

The Requiem, written on the death of Archbishop Siegmund of Salzburg in 1771, reflects not only the sadness Michael Haydn felt for a much-loved cleric, but his deep grief over the death of his daughter earlier in the year. The Mass, dating from much later, 1783, was written for a Benedictine Abbey near Salzburg, a fine example of Michael Haydn's late style, with thematic links between the movements. In complete contrast with the Requiem, the opening Kyrie is an elegant piece expressing happiness, while the Sanctus, very brief, is gentle and reflective, expanding into joy for Pleni sunt coeli. The Benedictus is the longest movement, a soprano solo, beautifully sung by Carolyn Sampson, punctuated by the chorus. Robert King conducts a fresh, lively performance, with Hilary Summers and James Gilchrist also outstanding among the soloists, as they are again in the Requiem, though here the ensemble is not always as crisp as in the Mass. First-rate sound.

HEATH, Dave (born 1956)

The Frontier

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63308-2. LCO, Warren-Green – ADAMS: Shaker Loops  ❀ ; GLASS: Company, etc.  ; REICH: 8 Lines ***

In The Frontier Heath's incisive rhythmic astringency is tempered by an attractive, winding lyrical theme which finally asserts itself just before the spiky close. The work was written for members of the LCO, and their performance, full of vitality and feeling, is admirably recorded.

HENSELT, Adolf von (1814–89)

Piano Concerto in F min., Op. 16; Variations de Concert on 'Quand je quittai la Normandie' from Meyerbeer's 'Robert le Diable', Op. 11

 Hyp. CDA 66717. Hamelin, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – ALKAN: Concerti da camera ***

Henselt's F minor Concerto is fiendishly difficult (Egon Petri thought it one of the hardest pieces he had ever played) but it seems to present few problems for Marc-André Hamelin, who is more than equal to its challenges. The idiom, as one might expect, is greatly indebted to Mendelssohn and Chopin, but there is much to give delight, quite apart from the virtuosity of the playing. Stunning playing throughout from this remarkable Canadian pianist, and very good recorded sound.

HENZE, Hans Werner (born 1926)

'Henze: Portrait of an Outsider'; Requiem

🔑 ✿  Arthaus DVD 100 360. Wiget, Hardenberger, Bostridge, Kaune, Drake, Frankfurt RSO, Stenz; CBSO, Rattle; Ens. Modern, Metzmacher (Prod: Dennis Marks, Dir: Barrie Gavin)

The portrait must be one of the best documentary productions of its kind committed to video. There are contributions from Simon Rattle, Oliver Knussen and (albeit briefly) William Walton, and excerpts from the Third and Eighth Symphonies, the haunting La selva incantata, the Nachtstücke und Arien, Undine (with Fonteyn in the first production) and the Arabian Songs he composed for Ian Bostridge. The programme is strongly atmospheric and never indulges in excessive explanation or talking down (it is indeed far more ambitious than anything we are likely to find on BBC TV nowadays). It is a reflective and moving programme, which brings us close to this remarkable composer. The Requiem, which is dedicated to the memory of his friend Michael Vyner of the London Sinfonietta, occupied him during 1990–92 and receives as definitive a performance as any can be. Henze himself spoke of the work as a search for 'a new key to these dark rooms we have to go to find our way and to find ourselves', and the work is among his most deeply felt and personal utterances.

(i) Barcarola; Symphonies 7; (ii) 9; (iii) 3 Auden Songs

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2-CD 2 37601-2 (2). (i) CBSO, Rattle; (ii) Berlin R. Ch., BPO, Metzmacher; (iii) Bostridge, Drake

This two-CD set is invaluable while the DG box of the first six symphonies conducted by the composer is deleted. The Seventh Symphony, written for Simon Rattle and the CBSO in 1983/4, is not only the longest Henze has written, it is also the weightiest and most traditionally symphonic, Beethoven-like, in four substantial movements. Rather belying its title, the Barcarola presents a similarly weighty and massive structure, an elegiac piece of over 20 minutes, written in memory of Paul Dessau, and inspired by the myth of the ferryman, Charon, crossing the Styx. Henze refers to his Ninth Symphony as a summa summorum of his musical output. It is choral throughout, a setting of seven poems by Hans-Ulrich Treichel based on Anna Segher's The Seventh Cross, and there is no doubting the intensity and depth of feeling that lie behind the symphony. The recording derives from the première at the Philharmonie in 1997, and the singing of the Berlin Radio Choir is superb in every way. Powerful and impressive. When Henze heard Ian Bostridge singing his Three Auden Songs he was so impressed that he wrote further settings for him. Listening to these compelling performances, one can understand why the composer was attracted to Bostridge's unique vocal qualities and timbre. The one serious drawback to this reissue is that its presentation is remiss in omitting the texts.

Violin Concertos 1; (i) 2; 3

🔑  MDG 601 1242-2 (2). Janicke, Madgeburg PO, Ehwald; (i) with Mädler

The First Concerto was written when Henze had worked out his combination of 12-tone serialism and neoclassicism. Though the orchestral textures have a Stravinskian clarity, the harmonic idiom echoes that of Berg over its four clearly defined movements. The Second Concerto of 1971 comes from the period when Henze was profoundly influenced by left-wing politics and, in a far wilder idiom over its six movements, with surreal diatonic passages, brings a linking of concerto form and music-theatre. It involves not just the solo violin and 33 instruments, but also recorded tape and a baritone soloist, the whole work powerfully presented in Torsten Janicke's fine performance. The Third Concerto of 1997, here given in the composer's 2002, more elaborate revision, offers in its three movements portraits of characters in Thomas Mann's Dr Faustus, a novel about musical creation centring on the composer Adrian Leverkuhn. First-rate performances, vividly recorded.

3 Symphonische Etüden; (i) Nachtstücke und Arien; Quattro Poemi; La selva incantata

 Wergo WER 6637-2. NDR SO, Ruzicka, with (i) Kaune

Nachtstücke und Arien of 1957 is one of Henze's most seminal works. Three of the four pieces come from the 1950s, and the inspired Nachtstücke und Arien are beautifully given by Michaele Kaune and the NDR Orchestra under Peter Ruzicka. What a powerful spell the much later La selva incantata casts! It must be among Henze's most atmospheric and imaginative scores.

INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC

Royal Winter Music: Guitar Sonatas 1 & 2

 MDG MDGL 3110. Evers

Music for 2 guitars: Memorias se El Cimarrón; Minette (Canti e rimpianti ariosi); 3 Märchenbilder from the Opera 'Pollicino'

 MDG 304 0881-2. Ruck, Càsoli

The Royal Winter Music Sonatas are based on Shakespearean characters from Romeo and Juliet and A Midsummer Night's Dream, together with personifying Ariel, Ophelia, Richard III and Lady Macbeth, portraits which Reinbert Evers creates with great virtuosity and brilliance. On the second disc, Memorias se El Cimarrón, is the most immediately striking item, exploiting an extraordinarily wide range of sonorities and expressive devices, which Jürgen Ruck and Eleana Cásoli of the Ensemble Musica bring vividly to life. For the Märchenbilder from Pollicino Henze returns to a delightful children's opera he composed for Montepulciano. All this music is played with effortless mastery and imagination.

VOCAL MUSIC

Die Bassariden (opera; complete)

🔑 Ⓜ ((*)) Orfeo mono C605032I (2). Driscoll, Paskalis, Lagger, Melchert, Dooley, Meyer, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Dohnányi

The Bassarids represents a synthesis of Henze's symphonic and operatic writing, its single 2½-hour Act being divided into four movements: a first-movement sonata form, a Scherzo, an Adagio and a passacaglia finale. The plot (after Euripides's The Bacchae) concerns the conflict between Pentheus, the new king of Thebes, and the god Dionysus, and the king's subsequent murder at the hands of Dionysus's drunken followers, among them Pentheus's own mother. It contains some of Henze's most imaginative and compelling invention. This Orfeo performance is of the première on 6 August 1966 and is an impressive one. Loren Driscoll's Dionysus is very good indeed, and the remainder of the cast could hardly be bettered. Christoph von Dohnányi gets first-class results from the Vienna Philharmonic. The recording is pretty monochrome but generally well balanced, and it makes an important contribution to the Henze discography.

Boulevard Solitude (opera; complete; DVD version)

 EuroArts DVD 2056 358. Aikin, Lindskog, Fox, Canturri, Delamboye, Putnins, Cor Vivaldi, Cambra del Palau de la Música Catalana Ch., Gran Teatre dei Liceu, Barcelona, O, Peskó (Dir: Nicholas Lehnhoff)

Henze's Boulevard Solitude, a re-working of the Manon of Abbé Prevost, was his first opera, produced in 1952 in Hanover, when the audience included Nicholas Lehnhoff, the director of the present staging, a co-production with the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden. In London it was hailed as an outstanding production; as theatre it worked perfectly and was a gripping operatic experience. The cast here differs from London with the sole exception of Pär Lindskog's Armand, but the Manon of Laura Aikin is no less convincing and the opera has masterly musical direction, too, from Zoltán Peskó. Very good sound and video direction.

Der junge Lord (opera: complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  Medici DVD 2072398. McDaniel, Driscoll, Little, Röhrl, Sardi, Krubowsk, Krebs, Johnson, Otto, Mathis, Schönberg Boys' Ch.; Ch. and O of Deutsche Oper, Berlin, Dohnányi

Der junge Lord is an ape, disguised as an English aristocrat and introduced into a smug early-nineteenth-century German community to teach it some lessons about acceptable and unacceptable social behaviour. The ape ultimately reverts from 'artificial human eloquence to crude animal violence'. Henze has a wonderful sense of theatre and an unfailing fund of musical invention, even if much of it in Der junge Lord is pastiche. This DVD derives from the original telecast and is directed with great aplomb and flair. Henze is impressively served here by Christoph von Dohnányi, who keeps the climaxes in view without starving instrumental detail of musical point. A most welcome issue.

Voices

 Berlin Classics (ADD) 2180-2 BC (2). Trexler, Vogt, Leipzig RSO Chamber Ens., Neumann

Ⓜ  Explore (ADD) EXP 007/8. Walker, Sperry, L. Sinf., composer

This massive and wide-ranging song-cycle of 22 numbers, lasting over 90 minutes, is among Henze's most inspired and characterful works, even including ironic songs echoing Kurt Weill, several of them setting poems by Bertolt Brecht. The wonder is that, so far from seeming too disparate a sequence, Voices gathers in richness as it progresses, with instruments including ocarina, accordion, mouth organ and electric guitar, as well as a large percussion section. Some of the episodes are violent, but the work is rounded off with the most beautiful and most extended piece, a duet, Blumenfest ('Carnival of flowers'), which seems to suggest a final ray of hope, with bitterness gone. Neumann's analogue recording, made in Germany in 1980, presents a sharply focused performance, strong and dramatic, with two excellent, clean-cut soloists.

On the appropriately named Explore label, the virtuosity of the writing is matched by the brilliance of the performance, designed as a whole evening of entertainment, here crisply caught, with the London Sinfonietta most inspired under the composer's baton adding to the impact. Sarah Walker and Paul Sperry are excellent soloists. First-rate Decca sound. Texts and translations are included and this makes a fine alternative to the Berlin Classics version and is probably a first choice.

HERBERT, Muriel (1897–1984)

36 Songs

Ⓝ  Linn CKD 335. Tynan, Gilchrist, Owen Norris

Claire Tomalin movingly describes how her mother, Muriel Herbert, struggled against the problems of her life as a single mother to write these songs. She was trained at the Royal Academy of Music, and she skilfully backs up the distinctive lyricism of each song with inventive accompaniments, which David Owen Norris praises for their individuality. In her Hardy setting, Faint Heart in a Railway Train, she reflects the rhythm of the train, just as Britten does in Winter Words, only a generation or two earlier. There are point numbers like Jenny Kissed Me and some movingly simple songs, such as David's Lament for Jonathan in Peter Abelard's words as translated by Helen Waddell, and also in a charming Swinburne Cradle Song. Her setting of Carmina Burana is also taken from a translation of the 13th-century original by Helen Waddell. Her choice of poets ranges wide, not just among recognized classics but to Joyce and her favourite, Yeats. A charming group of tiny children's songs have words by Ada Harrison. Those are sung with clear fresh tone by Aylish Tynan, as is the Cradle Song, but most of the songs are sung by James Gilchrist at his most sensitive.

HERBERT, Victor (1859–1924)

Cello Concerto 2 in E min., Op 109

Ⓝ 🔑  Virgin 5 0999 510 035-2. Gautier Capuçon, Frankfurt RSO, Paavo Jäarvi – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto ***

Victor Herbert was a multi-talented musician, one of the world's leading cello virtuosos of his time and the composer of two cello concertos, which greatly influenced Dvořák in the United States to write his supreme masterpiece. That makes this coupling of the Dvořák Cello Concerto with the second and finer of Herbert's specially apt, and Gautier Capuçon gives distinctive, characterful and intense performances of both works, well supported by Paavo Järvi and the Frankfurt Orchestra, specially strong in its brass section. It is Capuçon's gift to play with warm intensity while keeping a relatively steady pulse. That makes the central slow movement of the Herbert deeply elegiac.

HÉROLD, Ferdinand (1791–1833)

La Fille mal gardée (ballet; complete; DVD version; choreography: Frederick Ashton)

🔑  Warner NVC Arts DVD 0630 19395-2. Collier, Coleman, Shaw, L. Edwards, Grant, Royal Ballet, ROHCG O, Lanchbery (Design: Osbert Lancaster, V/D: John Vernon)

La Fille mal gardée (ballet; new version adapted by Peter Hertel; DVD version; (choreography: Heinz Spoerli, after Jean Dauberval)

 DG DVD 073 4158. Kozlova, Jensen, Ris, Schläpfer, Spoerli, Basle Ballet, VSO, Lanchbery (Dir: José Montes-Baquer)

The ballet La Fille mal gardée has had a fascinatingly long and varied history, and its origins as a subject for dance pantomime go back over two centuries. The first version was created by the French choreographer, Jean Dauberval, with the familiar plot and farmyard setting, but initially with a different title; and it was taken to London in 1791. The music included popular French folk material and operatic airs of the time. But when it reached Paris in 1828 a new score was written for it by Hérold. Much of the music was his own, but he also borrowed from Rossini and later Donizetti. In 1864 yet another new score was commissioned from Peter Ludwig Hertel, which still included a good deal of Hérold's music. For the Spoerli Basle production, yet another score was confected by Michel Damase, based on both Hérold and Hertel; it includes some of the original French folk and 'military' music. While the story remains broadly the same, the new music allows for varied and pretty added dances with something of a pastoral French folk style, and the soldiers too make their entry. Indeed, this Spoerli version is visually most attractive, allowing the principal dancers opportunities to mime the narrative pleasingly, and it provides plenty of leeway for charming and spectacular solos and pas de deux. The famous drag part of the heroine's continually thwarted mother, angrier than ever, remains, as does her famous Clog Dance. But the part of the rich farmer's son, Alain, is expanded and he is made more appealing, an innocent rather than a simpleton. The dancing of the principals is splendid throughout, the farm scene makes a convincing and beautiful backcloth, and altogether this is a most enjoyable entertainment, with quite a few differences from the Frederick Ashton version. John Lanchbery conducts with flair, the orchestra plays very elegantly and is very well recorded. With excellent video direction, this is altogether recommendable.

However, the Royal Ballet La Fille mal gardée, with costumes and scenery by Osbert Lancaster, is a visual delight from beginning to end. Frederick Ashton's ever-inventive choreography is both witty and charming, and Lesley Collier and Michael Coleman are a most engaging pair of lovers and dance with nimble grace. Brian Shaw's Widow Simone is the perfect foil, with the famous Clog Dance a captivating highlight, and Garry Grant is by no means outshone as the goofy Alain: he remains in our affections when his inept wooing comes to naught. The orchestra is again conducted by John Lanchbery, who has arranged this complex score so that it naturally follows every move of the dancers, while his constant drawing on familiar passages by Rossini adds to the listener's pleasure. The recording too is excellent, and the slight touch of thinness on the violin timbre is not a problem when the overall sound is so rich and resonantly full.

La Fille mal gardeé (ballet, arr Lanchbery): complete

🔑  Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9048 (2). ROHCG O, Lanchbery – LECOCQ: Mam'zelle Angot ***

Lanchbery himself concocted the score for this fizzingly comic and totally delightful ballet. Here, with sound of spectacular Decca fidelity, Lanchbery conducts a highly seductive account of the complete ballet with an orchestra long familiar with playing it in the theatre. It is coupled with Gordon Jacob's equally delicious confection, based on the music of Lecocq.

La Fille mal gardée (arr. Lanchbery): extended excerpts (CD versions)

Ⓑ  CfP 2-CD 586 1782 (2). RLPO, Wordsworth – MESSAGER: Deux Pigeons; Isoline ***

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 430 196-2. ROHCG O, Lanchbery

Barry Wordsworth's scintillating CD account of a generous extended compilation from the ballet includes all the important sequences and the EMI digital recording is still in the demonstration bracket. With playing from the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic that combines refinement and delicacy with wit and humour, this is very recommendable indeed, especially in its inexpensive CfP reissue, coupled with Messager's delectable Two Pigeons Ballet.

The earlier extended selection on Decca has a vintage Kingsway Hall recording. One cannot believe that it dates from 1962, for the combination of ambient bloom and the most realistic detail still places it in the demonstration bracket. The performance is also wonderfully persuasive and brilliantly played, displaying both affection and sparkle in ample quantity.

Overture: Zampa

* Chan. 9765. RLPO Ch., BBC PO, Tortelier (with Concert: French Bonbons ****)

Hérold's famous bandstand overture is played here with fine panache and given first-class recording. The rest of the programme of 'French Bonbons' is equally diverting, part of a concert of French orchestral lollipops.

HERRMANN, Bernard
(1911–75)

Film Scores: Five Fingers; The Snows of Kilimanjaro

(BB)  Naxos 8.570186. Moscow SO, Stromberg

Two quite different films: the one, Five Fingers, dramatic – even melodramatic – the other, The Snows of Kilimanjaro, romantic, atmospheric and something of an epic; between them they show just how consistently and lyrically inventive Herrmann could be, whatever the challenge. Excellent performances in Moscow (of all places!) and good recording.

Film Score: The Egyptian

(BB)  Naxos 8.557705. Moscow Symphony Ch. & O, Stromberg

John Morgan has done a characteristically superb job in reconstructing the music from the forgotten 1955 epic, The Egyptian, presenting the best of the 100-minute score for a 71-minute CD. The music is, of course, well worth saving. Excellent performances and sound.

HIGDON, Jennifer (born 1962)

Concerto for Orchestra; Cityscape

🔑 ✿  Telarc CD 80620. Atlanta SO, Spano

Jennifer Higdon's Concerto is an astonishingly alive and fertile work in five movements, summoned by bells, and opening with a whirlwind on the strings, soon joined by woodwind, and introducing glowing brass sonorities. The second movement is a sprightly Scherzo, the animation undiminished. The third movement, which is most imaginatively scored, introduces each section of the orchestra in turn, with the string chords giving a distinct whiff of Copland (which is to return in the finale). The fourth belongs to the percussion. With sounds both exotic and ear-tweaking, it gathers momentum, helped by the drummers, to lead to the exhilarating finale with its stabbing rhythmic ostinato on the violins, which becomes more and more jubilant.

Cityscape, commissioned by the orchestra, is a portrait of Atlanta, first its vibrant Skyline, the centrepiece a haunting pastoral evocation as the 'river sings a song to the trees', and finally a kaleidoscopic evocation of the city's main thoroughfare. The performances here are outstanding, the Concerto resplendent with orchestral virtuosity, the Cityscape conveying an unmistakable American panorama. The Telarc engineers rise to the occasion, yet they have the advantage of the superb acoustics of Atlanta's Symphony Hall.

HILDEGARD of Bingen
(1098–1179)

(i) Ordo Virtutum; (ii) In Portrait (DVD version)

✿  BBC DVD Opus Arte OA 0874 D (2). (i) Boothroyd, Hancorn, Mayfield, Chamber Op. Ch., Vox Animae, Fields, Adams, Devine (Dirs: Michael Fields & Evelyn Tubb)

Confidante of popes, Hildegard was a genius in almost every field – composer, playwright, author, poet, artist, theologian, philosopher, visionary and prophet; and she taught that the world should be enjoyed by man and woman together – 'Only thus is the earth fruitful'. Her views were so remarkable in their time that it is a wonder they could be expressed and she survive. Because her mystic visions (in which she believed that God was communicating directly to her) were accepted by the Church as genuine, her power was remarkable and far-reaching. Moreover, she could speak plainly to those in authority above her and her criticisms would be accepted.

Her extraordinarily sung and spoken mystery play, Ordo Virtutum ('The Play of the Virtues') celebrates her philosophy, based on the love of God and the enjoyment of life, alongside resistance to sin. Even with the music alone (which has been imaginatively recorded by Sequentia) this is a remarkable achievement, but to see it played out in glowing colours, imaginatively performed and beautifully sung, partly outside and partly inside, in splendidly chosen natural settings, adds an extra dimension to the drama, particularly in the dramatic passages in Scenes I and IV, where the Devil enters. The music, simple but soaring monody but with sparingly used harp, recorder and percussion accompaniments, is very beautiful in itself; its flowing lines haunt the memory and it is radiantly sung, while the drama of the piece comes over splendidly.

The accompanying second DVD includes a compulsive BBC 'Omnibus' dramatization of Hildegard's early life, before she set up her own order; and no better choice for the role of Hildegard could have been found than Patricia Routledge, who conveys the warmth and spiritual essence of her character. The additional items include 'A Real Mystic' (an interview and lecture with Professor Matthew Fox, author of Illuminations, supplemented with an illustrative art gallery tour), while Mary Grabowsky considers Hildegard's spiritual significance for the 21st century.

Canticles of Ecstasy

🔑 ✿  DHM/BMG 05472 77320-2. Sequentia, Thornton

This first instalment makes a splendid introduction, a collection of Marian antiphons, sequences, and responsories, plus eulogies to the Holy Spirit where the poetic imagery is often drawn from nature. At speeds more spacious than those of the Gothic Voices, with women's voices alone, the elaborate monodic lines soar heavenwards even more sensuously, matching the imagery of Hildegard's poetry.

Chants

 Lyrichord LEMS 8027. Gentile, Drone Ch.

The famous medieval legend of Saint Ursula, daughter of a British king, tells of a three-year pilgrimage to Rome with 11,000 other women (in fact more likely a party of 11, expanded in the storytelling), who were slaughtered on their return journey by Attila the Hun for refusing to become concubines, and were thus martyred. Hildegard's chants in this collection reflect her response to their sacifice. Norma Gentile sings them radiantly, and they soar up over a constantly sustained drone choral pedal. Beautifully recorded.

Hymns and sequences: Ave generosa; Columba aspexit; O Ecclesia; O Euchari; O Jerusalem; O ignis spiritus; O presul vere civitatis; O viridissima virga

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66039. Gothic Voices, Muskett, White, Page

This Hyperion CD by the Gothic Voices was the disc which put Hildegard firmly on the map. It draws widely on the Abbess of Bingen's collection of music and poetry, the Symphonia armonie celestium revelationum – 'the symphony of the harmony of celestial revelations'. These hymns and sequences, most expertly performed and recorded, have excited much acclaim – and rightly so. A lovely CD.

O Jerusalem; Voice of the Blood

Ⓑ  DHM/BMG 2-CD 74321 88689-2 (2). Sequentia Women's and Men's Vocal & Instrumental Ens., Thornton

The present pairing offers two collections. The first is called 'O Jerusalem'. The bells of Bamberg Cathedral toll through the opening title-piece, which also has simple instrumental backing, and there is more purely instrumental music here than in previous collections, joining flute, rebec, organ and vielle (hurdy-gurdy). There follows a lively Magnificat for St Rupert. The following music, beginning with O tu illustrata, soaringly evokes a radiantly mystical image of the Virgin Mary, to stand as symbol for the consecration of the women who were to renounce the physical world and join Hildegard's order; but for the hymn to the Holy Spirit a male group enters impressively, before the closing rapturous Marian testament from the women.

As leader of a spiritual community of women, Hildegard felt a strong identification with Ursula, and the opening lament of the cycle, O rubor sanguinis; and later her purity is compared with apple-blossoms. After a reference to the Trinity, the fifth piece is an address to Ecclesia, a female personification of the heavenly community, and this symbolic (and vulnerable) figure is to return in the closing pieces, of which the antiphon, Nunc gaudeant, brings an extraordinary burst of spiritual energy. Two purely instrumental interludes add variety to a carefully planned collection which is, understandably, often rather sombre in its basic mood. Unfortunately, no texts or translations are offered.

The Origin of Fire (Music and Visions)

🔑  HM Surround Sound SACD HMU 807327. Anonymous 4

Hildegard of Bingen's celestial music is well suited to SACD, offering the listener the ability to use the controls for the sound to float all around, while staying well focused. The present collection explores the theme of the 'fiery spirit' and climaxes with the extended hymn, O ignee spiritus, with the melismas of this central sequence and the following vision of Love particularly memorable. The Anonymous 4 are ideal exponents, blending together and soaring up and over Hildegard's curving lines, the effect at once ecstatic and serene in a well-judged, spacious ambience.

HILLIER, Ferdinand (1811–85)

Piano Concertos 1 in F min., Op. 5; 2 in F sharp min., Op. 69; 3 in A flat, Op. 170

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67655. Shelley, Tasmanian SO

Ferdinand Hillier was immensely famous in his day, and it is no surprise to learn that he was a pupil of Hummel; but he is now merely a footnote in history. The early First Concerto dates from 1831, and its brilliance was designed to show off the composer's prowess at the keyboard. The Second Concerto, considered his finest, was premièred in 1843 and is a more complex work with some quite original touches: the pianist launches in without any introduction, for example, and one's ear is constantly tickled by the many keyboard embellishments of the thematic material. The finale with its occasional Hungarian colouring is most enjoyable. The Third Concerto lives up to its subtitle (Concerto espressivo) at the opening, but when the piano enters the Allegro con anima score-marking is apt, with its crisp and perky writing, and the movement as a whole is very charming indeed. The following Andante has a pleasing and gentle melancholy about it, and the finale is spirited and sometimes offers unexpected interruptions – such as the two fermentas which hold up the movement's progress. That this record is so successful must be attributed to Howard Shelley's sparkling playing, and his direction adds much to the intrinsic value of the music – as does Hyperion's excellent balance and recording.

HINDEMITH, Paul (1895–1963)

Complete Orchestral Works, Volume 1: Amor and Psyche; Nobilissima Visione; Philharmonic Concerto; Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Carl Maria von Weber (CPO 999 004-2). Lustige Sinfonietta; Rag Time; Symphonic Dances (CPO 999 005-2). Concert Music for Strings & Brass;

Nusch-Nuschi Dances; Symphony Die Harmonie der Welt (CPO 999 006-2). Symphony in E flat; Symphony in B flat for Concert Band; Overture, Neues vom Tage (() CPO 999 007-2). Mathis der Maler (Symphony); Sinfonia Serena. Prelude: When Lilacs Last in the Door-yard bloom'd (CPO 999 008-2). Concerto for Orchestra; Pittsburgh Symphony; Sinfonietta in E; Marsch über den alten Schweizerto (CPO 999 014-2)

Ⓜ  CPO 999 248-2 (6). Queensland SO, Melbourne SO, or Sydney SO, Albert (no longer available separately)

Werner Andreas Albert's survey of the Hindemith canon was recorded between 1987 and 1992, and some of the individual discs have been discussed in earlier volumes. Both the playing of the various Australian orchestras and the radio recordings are of a high standard. The set serves as a reminder of the vigorous and lively creative imagination this (at present) underrated master possessed and the treasures that abound in his output. The Sinfonia serena, the Nobilissima visione and the Die Harmonie der Welt Symphony are masterpieces.

'Hindemith Conducts Hindemith' (complete DG recordings): Amor und Psyche: Overture; Concerto for Orchestra, Op. 38; (i) The Four Temperaments (Theme and Variations for Piano and Strings); (ii) Konzertmusik for Harp, Piano & Strings, Op. 49; Symphonic Dances; Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Carl Maria von Weber; Symphony (Die Harmonie der Welt); Symphony (Mathis der Maler)

() DG mono 474 770-2 (3). BPO, composer; with (i) Otte; (ii) Haas

Hindemith made a number of records for Deutsche Grammophon in the early 1950s, before transferring his allegiance to EMI. Works like the exhilarating Symphonic Dances, the Konzertmusik for Harp, Piano and Strings, and the Harmonie der Welt Symphony have not been in currency since the days of vinyl. DG certainly lavished first-class sound on them and the Mathis Symphony and the Weber Metamorphosis are impressively detailed and full-bodied, given their date. Those who have treasured their LPs of these pieces can rest assured that a great deal of trouble has been taken over these transfers, and it is particularly good to have Hindemith's own thoughts on the Harmonie der Welt Symphony, one of his greatest works.

Concert Music for Brass & Strings, Op. 50; (i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Horn Concerto; Nobilissima visione (Suite); Symphonia serena; Symphony in B flat for Concert Band

Ⓑ  EMI 3 77344-2 (2). Philh. O, composer, with (i) Cahuzac; (ii) Brain

Hindemith's own performances with the Philharmonia Orchestra of half a dozen of his most characteristic works come out with astonishing vividness. Particularly welcome is the Clarinet Concerto, played here by the French virtuoso, Louis Cahuzac. The Horn Concerto dazzlingly played by its original performer, Dennis Brain. But it is a revelation to have the other works. Nobilissima visione, the fine ballet score on the theme of St Francis, shows Hindemith at his most inspired. There is dignity and nobility in its splendid opening, and the slow movement has a grave beauty that is quite haunting. The Concert Music is characteristic of Hindemith's early music and the Symphonia serena is a splendid affair. The composer proves a most persuasive interpreter in his own music, drawing refined and committed performances and finding wit in the Symphony for Concert Band.

(i; ii) Concert Music for Brass and Strings; (iii) Mathis der Maler (Symphony); (i; iv) Noblissima visione (Suite); (v) Der Schwanendreher (Viola Concerto); (vi) Symphonia Serena; (i; iv) Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD/DDD) 2 06863-2 (2). (i) Phd. O; (ii) Ormandy; (iii) BPO, Karajan; (iv) Sawallisch; (v) Zimmerman, Bav. R. O, Shallow; (vi) Philh., composer

As a vintage collection of the composer's key works this EMI two-CD set is hard to beat. The Concert Music for Strings and Brass is given a superb performance and recording by Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, who bring virtuosity and opulent tone to this score. Karajan's 1957 account of Mathis der Maler is equally impressive. It was made in the Berlin Jesus-Christus-Kirche and the sound is impressively spacious, the strings gloriously full. The full-blooded performance is remarkably dramatic and convincing, the central movement very touching. Karajan is convincing in everything he does. In the Noblissima visione Sawallisch also draws a warm, rich-texture sound from the Philadelphia Orchestra, giving a performance that does full justice to its breadth and dignity, and if his account of the Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber could be sharper and more fleet of foot, it is still very well characterized. Moreover, everything about the performance of Der Schwanendreher is excellent – indeed it is arguably the best before the public: the artistic and technical quality are equally fine. To cap the compilation, the composer's own account of the Symphonia serena is a splendid affair.

Concert Music for Strings & Brass; (i) Violin Concerto. Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber

 Chan. 9903. (i) Kavakos; BBC PO, Tortelier

The Concert Music for Strings and Brass is superbly played here. The Violin Concerto of 1939 has been memorably recorded by David Oistrakh and the composer but this newcomer by Leonidas Kavakos is without doubt the best since then.

Cello Concertos 1 in E flat, Op. 3; 2 (1940); Kammermusik 3, Op. 36/2

(BB)  CPO 999 375-2. Geringas, Queensland SO, Albert

The Cello Concerto, Op. 3, is naturally a derivative piece, with a lot of Reger and Strauss and not too much of the Hindemith we know. The 1940 Second Concerto is a fine piece, though not the equal of the Violin Concerto of the previous year, and the programme is completed by the little concerto from the Kammermusik. David Geringas is a generally impressive soloist and the orchestral response maintains the eminently respectable standard we have come to expect from this series.

(i) Cello Concerto 2; (ii) The Four Temperaments (theme and variations for piano and strings)

🔑  Chan. 9124. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Shelley; BBC PO, Tortelier

Both the Cello Concerto and The Four Temperaments are vintage Hindemith. The four variations of the latter are ingenious and subtle and are splendidly realized by Howard Shelley and the BBC Philharmonic under Yan Pascal Tortelier. Raphael Wallfisch is the eloquent soloist in the Cello Concerto. The Chandos recording is very good indeed.

Complete Orchestral Works, Volume 2: (i; ii) Cello Concertos 1–2; (iii; ii) Piano Concerto; (iii; ii) Der Dämon, Op. 28; (v) Film Music: In Sturm und Eise; (ii; iii) Four Temperaments; (ii) Hérodiade (2 versions); (v) Kammermusik 1, Op. 24; (ii; iv) 2, Op. 36/1; (i; ii) 3, Op. 36/2; (v) 5 Pieces for String Orchestra; (v) Plöner Musiktage: excerpts; Suite französischer Tänz

Ⓑ  CPO 999 783-2 (5). (i) Geringas; (ii) Frankfurt RSO; (iii) Mauser; (iv) Queensland SO, Albert; (v) Tasmanian SO

Apart from the Cello Concertos, which are still available separately, among the key works here is the Piano Concerto, and The Four Temperaments, one of the composer's most immediately accessible works, both equally successful here in the hands of Siegfried Mauser. Der Dämon ('The Demon') is an early ballet; it has great resourcefulness in matters of colour and is full of imaginative, original textures. Hérodiade derives its inspiration from Mallarmé's poem and is another beautiful score. It is an excellent idea to have it first with the text, then again without it, and Annie Giequel speaks it in exemplary fashion. The Kammermusik 1–3 are well represented by Chailly's Decca set, but are no less effective here. The Konzertmusik is as original as its instrumental setting for piano, brass and harps might suggest. Throughout, Werner Albert gets excellent results from his forces in Frankfurt, Tasmania and Queensland, and the CPO engineering team produce recordings that are a model of good balance.

Complete Orchestral Works, Volume 3: (i) Clarinet Concerto; Concerto for Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, Bassoon, Harp & Strings; (ii) Horn Concerto; (iii) Organ Concerto; (iv) Concerto for Trumpet, Bassoon & Strings; (v) Violin Concerto; Kammermusik 4–5, Op. 36/3–4; 6 & 7, Op. 46/1–2; (vi) Konzertmusik, Op. 48; Der Schwanendreher (Viola Concerto); Trauermusik (for viola and strings); Tuttifäntchen Suite

Ⓑ  CPO 999 784-2 (2). (i) Mehlhart; (ii) Neuncker; (iii) Haas; (iv) Friedrich, Wilkening; (v) Olding; (vi) Dean; Frankfurt RSO or Queensland SO, Albert

The Clarinet Concerto was written for Benny Goodman; here the soloist is placed rather too forwardly; the Horn Concerto is equally familiar and both performances are eminently acceptable. The Organ Concerto was the composer's last work and is a rarity. To be frank it is a rather manufactured piece, not by any means vintage Hindemith. The Kammermusik No. 7, also for organ, is infinitely more rewarding; its austere contrapuntal slow movement is particularly impressive. But it is the Violin Concerto which is the main work, and here Dene Olding acquits himself well. He is particularly impressive in the slow movement, which is thoughtful and inward-looking. The Concerto for Woodwinds, Harp and Strings is the more rewarding of the other two composite works, and is also more varied in texture. The viola was Hindemith's own instrument and he writes gratefully for it. The Kammermusik No. 5 is fairly generously represented on disc, while the Konzertmusik, Op. 48 has a particularly engaging first movement and an imaginative and deeply felt slow movement. It operates at a higher level of inspiration than Der Schwanendreher, good though that is, or the Trauermusik that Hindemith composed at high speed on the death of George V. The Australian violist and composer Brett Dean gives masterly accounts of all four pieces, and the Queensland Symphony Orchestra plays with excellent ensemble and precision for Werner Albert. This CD is the highlight of the present collection.

(i) Horn Concerto; Concert Music for Brass and Strings

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 67782-2. (i) Brain; Philh. O, Sawallisch – R. STRAUSS: Horn Concertos 1–2 () ❀

The Hindemith Horn Concerto at first seems lyrically much less voluptuous than its Strauss couplings, but it is very atmospheric and has a brief but witty central Scherzo which Brain articulates very winningly. Towards the close of the haunting palindromic finale the soloist imaginatively declaims a short poem – written by the composer – in such a way that the horn's note values match the syllables of the words (which are not intended to be spoken). Brain's performance is incomparable, with splendid support from Sawallisch, a superb Straussian, who also directs a fine account of the Concert Music for Brass and Strings. Both were recorded in the Kingsway Hall in 1956 and the early stereo is clear and full.

(i) Organ Concerto; (ii) Organ Sonatas 1–3

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex (ADD) 2564 60227-2. (i) Heiller, Austrian RSO, Hórvat; (ii) Ullmann

The First and Second Organ Sonatas are both exhilarating and masterly. The Third Sonata was written shortly after Hindemith had settled in Yale. The Organ Concerto is not to be confused with the last of the Kammermusik of 1927, but is the larger-scale four-movement score, commissioned by the New York Philharmonic in 1962 and which was to prove the composer's last work. The performance by Anton Heiller and Austrian Radio forces under Milan Hórvat is authoritative and well recorded, and the sonatas are also finely played on the organ of the Brucknerhaus, Linz.

Violin Concerto

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 470 258-2 (2). D. Oistrakh, LSO, composer – MOZART: Sinfonia concertante, etc. (*); BRUCH: Scottish Fantasia ***

David Oistrakh's 1962 reading of the Violin Concerto is still first choice. It was a revelation on its release: the work has never before or since blossomed into such rewarding lyricism on record. The orchestral contribution, under the composer himself, is strikingly passionate, with the soloist providing many moments when the ear is ravished by the beauty of phrasing and inflexion. The superb sound emerges freshly in the transfer.

Concerto for Winds, Harp & Orchestra; Konzertmusik for Brass & Strings, Op. 50; Mathis der Maler: Symphony

🔑  Chan. 9457. Czech PO, Bělohlávek

The Concerto for Winds, Harp and Orchestra has never been heard to better effect on record. The Konzertmusik for Brass and Strings is hardly less imposing. Bělohlávek takes a broad and spacious view that is most impressive. Competition is of course much keener in the Mathis der Maler Symphony, and here Bělohlávek is a little more detached and wanting in intensity. The playing of the Czech Philharmonic is as expert and responsive as one might expect, and the Chandos engineers cope well with the reverberant acoustic.

Kammermusik 1 for 12 Instruments, Op. 24/1; (i) 2 (Piano Concerto), Op. 36/1; (ii) 3 (Cello Concerto), Op. 36/2; (iii) 4 (Violin Concerto), Op. 36/3; (iv) 5 (Viola Concerto), Op. 36/4; (v) 6 (Viola d'amore Concerto), Op. 46/1; (vi) 7 (Organ Concerto), Op. 46/2; Kleine Kammermusik for Wind Quintet, Op. 24/2

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 473 722-2 (2). (i) Brautigam; (ii) Harrell; (iii) Kulka; (iv) Kaskhashian; (v) Blume; (vi) Van Doeselaar; Concg. O, Chailly

The Decca set is complete and includes the delightful little Wind Quintet (Kleine Kammermusik). The playing of the distinguished soloists and the members of the Concertgebouw is beyond praise, so is the Decca recording.

Kammermusik 5, Op. 36/4; Konzertmusik for Viola & Orchestra, Op. 48; Viola Concerto (Der Schwanendreher)

 ASV CDDCA 931. Cortese, Philh. O, Brabbins

Paul Cortese is the accomplished soloist in all three works, including the fifth of the Kammermusik. The Philharmonia respond with some enthusiasm to Martyn Brabbins's direction, and although there are finer recordings of Der Schwanendreher (above all, Tabea Zimmermann on EMI, now deleted) this disc gives undoubted pleasure. The recording is very good indeed, with great presence and body.

5 Pieces for strings, Op. 44/4

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 442 8414. ASMF, Marriner – BARTÓK: Divertimento for Strings ; PROKOFIEV: Visions Fugitives; VIVALDI: Concertos ***

With finely etched playing in precise ensemble, Marriner and the Academy transform the Hindemith Pieces from exercises to works of genuine imagination. Also included on this disc is the Moscow Chamber Orchestra's classic (1962) recording of Bartók's Divertimento for strings: the ensemble and intonation are faultless. This is a performance of extreme brilliance and, if emotionally it is driven very hard, it is quite appropriate in such music.

Pittsburgh Symphony; Ragtime; Symphonic Dances

 Chan. 9530. BBC PO, Tortelier

The Symphonic Dances is one of Hindemith's most inventive and enjoyable works and it is full of resource and imagination and deserves to be as popular as the Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber. The Pittsburgh Symphony is a rewarding piece full of good ideas. Yan Pascal Tortelier and the BBC Philharmonic give meticulously prepared and committed performances, and the Chandos sound is above reproach. Strongly recommended.

Sinfonia serena; Symphony (Die Harmonie der Welt)

🔑  Chan. 9217. BBC PO, Tortelier

The Sinfonia serena (1946) is a brilliant and inventive score. The scoring is inventive and imaginative. The Symphony, Die Harmonie der Welt (1951), is another powerful and consistently underrated score. These well-prepared and finely shaped BBC performances are given state-of-the-art recording quality. An outstanding issue.

Symphonic Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber

 BBC Legends BBCL 4176-2. LSO, Jochum – HAYDN: Symphonies 100 & 101 ***

(*) Telarc SACD 60648. Atlanta SO, Shaw – COPLAND: Appalachian Spring, etc. **(*)

Jochum brings out the joy of what might be regarded as Hindemith's most extrovert work. What he relishes is the colour, brilliance and humour in the way Hindemith orchestrates the Weber themes, giving the music swaggering flamboyance, underlining the sharp contrasts of timbre. The LSO, then as now acknowledged as the most brilliant of the London orchestras, respond with virtuoso playing, with horn and timpani in particular having a wonderful time.

Robert Shaw treats Hindemith's colourful variations almost neoclassically. His is a sharp, incisive performance that misses some of the bounce and charm but is very well recorded – although the SACD enhancement is marginal. A curious coupling for the three Copland ballet scores.

Symphony in E flat; Overture Neues vom Tage; Nobilissima visione

 Chan. 9060. BBC PO, Tortelier

The Symphony in E flat is an inventive and resourceful score and is well worth investigating. Yan Pascal Tortelier gets excellent results from the BBC Philharmonic. Good, musicianly performances of Nobilissima visione and the much earlier Neues vom Tage Overture complete an admirable addition to the Hindemith discography.

Trauermusik

 Cal. CAL 9364. Bukac, Czech RSO, Válek – BARTÓK: Viola Concerto; MARTINŮ: Rhapsody-Concerto ***

When Hindemith came to London to perform his Schwanendreher Concerto, he was greeted by the news that King George V had died. The BBC commissioned him to write his Funeral Music, which he accomplished in a few days: a poignant seven-minute piece which Vladimir Bukac, the violist of the Talich Quartet, plays with feeling and dignity.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Bassoon Sonata; Harp Sonata; Horn Sonata; Sonata for 2 Pianos; Sonata for Piano, 4 Hands

 MDG 304 0694-2. Ens. Villa Musica, with Thunemann, Storck, Vlatkovic, Piret, Randalu

These are not only well-fashioned but often very satisfying pieces. Klaus Thunemann is an expert and persuasive advocate of the Bassoon Sonata and its companions here receive highly accomplished performances. Throughout the Ensemble Villa Musica's Hindemith series we have heard so far, the recording is very faithful and lifelike.

(i) Double-bass Sonata; (ii) Trombone Sonata; (iii) Tuba Sonata; (iv) Cello Sonata; Small Sonata for Violoncello; A Frog He Went A-courting

🔑  MDG 304 0697-2. Randalu, with (i) Güttler; (ii) Slokar; (iii) Hilgers; (iv) Ostertag

This collection is both artistically rewarding and technically excellent. The sound is very vivid and present and the programme intelligently laid out. Hindemith was enormously prolific and often composed on automatic pilot, but these pieces are fresh and inventive.

Horn Sonata

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4164-2. Brain, Mewton-Wood – BEETHOVEN: Quintet (); JACOB: Wind Sextet; VINTER: Hunter's Moon ()

Dennis Brain gives a masterly account of the lyrically unpredictable and at times marmoreal Hindemith Sonata which, like the Concerto, was written for him. His outstanding partner, Noel Mewton-Wood, is a strong musical personality in his own right: in the slow movement his delicate, bravura articulation is memorable, and elsewhere his playing is truly authoritative. The mono recording is well balanced.

Kleine Kammermusik for Wind Quintet, Op. 24/2

 Nim. NI 5728. V. Quintet – LIGETI: 6 Bagatelles; NIELSEN: Wind Quintet ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553851-2. Thompson Wind Quintet – BARBER: Summer Music (*); JANÁČEK: Mládí (*); LARSSON: Quattro tempi **

The Vienna Quintet fully convey the wit and lightness of touch that distinguish Hindemith's writing in this entertaining Kleine Kammermusik. The playing is a delight from first to last and is beautifully recorded in the Wiener Konzerthaus. The coupling, too, is logical in giving us an exact contemporary, the Nielsen Wind Quintet.

The Michael Thompson Wind Quintet give an excellently spirited and alert performance with plenty of wit but the close balance is a distinct handicap. If you think this would not worry you, it is worth the modest outlay.

String Quartet 3, Op. 22

✿ () Testament mono SBT 1052. Hollywood Qt – PROKOFIEV: Quartet 2; WALTON: Quartet in A min. () ✿

The Hollywood Quartet possessed extraordinary virtuosity and perfection of ensemble, and it is difficult to imagine more persuasive advocacy. The transfer is excellent and, although the mono sound is less than ideal, the performance still sweeps the board.

String Quartet 4, Op. 22

 ECM 1874 476 5779. Zehetmair Qt – BARTÓK: Quartet 5 ***

Those who find Hindemith's music ugly should hear the Zehetmair Quartet's refined and commanding account of the Fourth Quartet. They are totally inside this idiom.

Viola Sonata in F, Op. 11/4

() Biddulph mono LAB 148. Primrose, Sandromá – BAX: Fantasy Sonata for Viola & Piano; BLOCH: Suite ()

The classic 1938 Primrose recording of Hindemith's most lyrical sonata, with Jesús María Sandromá, probably remains unsurpassed for sheer style and refinement of tone. Given the date, the sound is very acceptable.

(Unaccompanied) Viola Sonatas 1; 2, Op. 11/5; 3, Op. 25/1; 4, Op. 31/4

 ASV CDDCA 947. Cortese

(i) Viola Sonatas (for viola and piano) Op. 11/4; Op. 25/4; (Unaccompanied) Viola Sonatas: Op. 11/5; Op. 25/1; Op. 31/4

🔑  ECM 833 309-2 (2). Kashkashian, (i) with Levin

The solo sonatas are played with superb panache and flair – and, even more importantly, with remarkable variety of colour – by Kim Kashkashian, who has an enormous dynamic range. The performances of the sonatas with piano are hardly less imaginative and the recording is good.

Violin Sonatas 1 in E flat, Op. 11/1; 2 in D, Op. 11/2; 3 in E; 4 in C

 BIS CD 761. Wallin, Pöntinen

As with most Hindemith, both the Op. 11 Sonatas are well crafted and inventive. The finest of the four is the last, in C major, which is both individual and finely wrought. Ulf Wallin and Roland Pöntinen play this repertoire with real dedication and conviction, and the BIS recording is very lifelike and present. They include a fragment of an alternative finale for the E flat Sonata, Op. 11/1, that Hindemith subsequently discarded.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonatas 1–3; Variations

 Marco 8.223337. Petermandl

Hindemith's crisply contrapuntal piano writing brings a strong consistency to the three contrasted works. No. 1 is the most challengingly ambitious, with the compact No. 2 more easily lyrical. Yet it is No. 3, directly echoing the first of Beethoven's late sonatas, Opus 101, which is the clearest masterpiece. Built on strikingly memorable themes and ending with a formidable double fugue, it inspires Petermandl Hans, to a powerful performance, very well recorded.

Ludus tonalis; Suite (1922), Op. 26

(*) Hyp. CDA 66824. McCabe

Hindemith's Ludus tonalis has been recorded before, but not with more concentration and authority than it is on Hyperion by John McCabe. He offers also the Suite 1922 which, if anything, is thornier still. So if you are a Hindemith addict, this is surely a disc you will want to explore.

Organ Sonatas 1–3

 Chan. 9097. Kee – REGER: 4 Organ Pieces ***

Piet Kee plays on the Müller organ of St Bavo in Haarlem, an instrument more suited to Hindemith than the somewhat spacious acoustic in which it is recorded. This small point apart, Kee plays with his customary distinction and character. All three sonatas are rewarding, and no one investing in this disc is likely to be disappointed on either artistic or technical grounds.

VOCAL MUSIC

When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd (Requiem)

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80132. DeGaetani, Stone, Atlanta Ch. & SO, Shaw

This 'Requiem for those we loved' is one of the composer's most deeply felt works and one of his best. Shaw gives a performance of great intensity and variety of colour and nuance. Both his soloists are excellent, and there is both weight and subtlety in the orchestral contribution. Splendid recording.

OPERA

(i; ii) Sancta Susanna (complete). Das Nusch-Nuschi: Dances, Op. 20; Tuttifäntchen: Suite; (i) 3 Songs, Op. 9

 Chan. 9620. (i) Bullock; (ii) D. Jones, Gunson & Soloists, Leeds Festival Ch.; BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier

In the one-Act opera Sancta Susanna Hindemith's musical language is distinctly expressionist, lyrical and atmospheric, though with traces of Gallic influence (and in particular Debussy) and Puccinian elements happily intermingled. It is a far cry from the austere, monochrome contrapuntalist of the later symphonies. Written immediately after the end of the First World War, it scandalized its first audiences by its erotic-cum-blasphemous character. It is a short piece, some 23 minutes in length, but enormously intense and concentrated in feeling. The performance is gripping, splendidly sung and expertly played by Yan Pascal Tortelier and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra.

The oriental elements in the Nusch-Nuschi Dances simply adorn a 1920s-style score, while the suite from the children's pantomime, Tuttifäntchen, of 1922 is delightful in its use of tunes from children's games, with ragtime introduced in the Dance of the Dolls. The Straussian Drei Gesänge, Op. 9, written earlier, in 1917, are luxuriant and rich, and again unlike anything we know from the mature composer. Susan Bullock sings them with great conviction and flair.

HODDINOTT, Alun
(1929–2008)

(i) Clarinet Concerto, Op. 3; (ii) Harp Concerto, Op. 11; Piano Concertos: (iii) 1, Op. 19; (iv) 2, Op. 21

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRCD 330. (i) De Peyer; (ii) Ellis; (i; ii) LSO, cond. Atherton; (iii) Fowke, RPO, Wordsworth; (iv) M. Jones, RPO, A. Davis

The Clarinet Concerto is an early work which (in 1954) put Hoddinott on the map. Fluent as it is, it does not match the Harp Concerto in the quality of its invention or the intensity of its atmosphere. The Harp Concerto, written for Osian Ellis in 1957, is a most beautiful work, strongly individual in feeling and quite haunting. The textures are splendidly lucid and transparent, and the recording is a model of its kind in the balance between solo instrument and orchestra. The two Piano Concertos were written one after the other in 1960, although the Second was revised in 1969. Both have strongly motivated themes and each makes use of the device of a palindrome. These recordings were made by Decca engineers and are of the most spectacular realism.

(i; ii) Concertino for Viola & Small Orchestra, Op. 14; (iii; iv) Nocturnes & Cadenzas for Cello & Orchestra, Op. 62; (v; ii) Dives and Lazarus (cantata), Op. 39; (vi; iv) Sinfonia Fidei (for soprano, tenor, chorus & orchestra), Op. 95

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRCD 332. (i) Erdélyi; (ii) New Philh. O, Atherton; (iii) Welsh; (iv) Philh. O, Groves; (v) Palmer, Allen, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch.; (vi) Gomez, Burrowes, Philh. Ch.

Csaba Erdélyi, the superb principal viola of the New Philharmonia in the mid-1970s, makes an admirable advocate in the imaginatively conceived Viola Concertino of 1958, the point of the argument made sharper by the lightness of the string section against a normal woodwind group. By comparison the Nocturnes and Cadenzas is less easy to come to grips with, presenting a more withdrawn face. Nevertheless Moray Welsh excels himself as the cello soloist, making his soliloquy seemingly improvisational, and Sir Charles Groves draws excellent playing from the Philharmonia Orchestra. Dives and Lazarus is highly individual, especially in the dramatic closing section, When Lazarus died, with its exultant 'Allelujas'. Sinfonia Fidei (1977) returns to a more conservative idiom than that contained in Hoddinott's purely serial music, but the result is hardly less passionately compelling. Soloists, chorus and orchestra join to project all this music with the most ardent advocacy; and the recordings, spaciously atmospheric, whether analogue or digital, are in every respect first rate.

Symphonies (i; ii) 2, Op. 29; (i; iii) 3, Op. 61; (iv) 5, Op. 81

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 331. (i) LSO; (ii) Del Mar; (iii) Atherton; (iv) RPO, A. Davis

The Second Symphony dates from 1962 and is clearly the work of a composer who, though a serialist, still retains an allegiance to tonal centres and who uses twelve-note technique as a spur rather than a crutch. Its arguments are not difficult to follow and there is a great outburst of passionate lyricism from the strings at the climax of the molto adagio. Norman Del Mar directs the work confidently, and the LSO respond with eloquence. The Third Symphony is even more powerfully wrought, dark in colouring and deeply imaginative. David Atherton's performance (again using the LSO) is wholly convincing. The Fifth Symphony is a more abrasive work than the Third and less immediately approachable, although the second of its two movements is laid out in six clearly differentiated sections. The vintage recordings of both the Third and Fifth Symphonies were made by a Decca engineering team in the early 1970s and are spectacularly vivid in their presence, range and definition.

HOFFSTETTER, Romanus
(1742–1815)

String Quartets: 1 in C; 2 E (attrib. Haydn as Op. 3/1–2)

(BB)  Naxos 8.555703. Kodály Qt – HAYDN: Cassations, Hob II/21–22 (arr. for String Quartet) ***

String Quartets 3 in G; 4 in B flat; 5 in F (Serenade); 6 in A (attrib. HAYDN, as Op. 3/3–6)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555704. Kodály Qt

Romanus Hoffstetter, if it was he who composed these works, seems fated never to have his name on them, even though H. C. Robbins Landon discovered that 'Signor Hoffstetter' was inscribed on the plates from which the original parts were printed. Haydn never questioned their authenticity when Pleyel included them in the complete edition of his string quartets. They are elegant, neatly composed works with lively outer movements, gentle, graceful slow movements and the kind of lilting, intoxicating Minuets that are an integral part of Austrian music of this period. The C major stands out for its resourceful opening Fantasia con variazioni and its charmingly wistful Andante. But it is the F major that is justly the most famous, for not only does it have the unforgettable 'Serenade' for its Andante cantabile, but also another galant lilting tune as the second subject of the opening movement, and another amiable Scherzando finale.

The Kodály Quartet's performances are in every way first class, treating the music with all the finesse that is its due, and winningly acknowledging its vitality and charm. The recording is most real and vivid.

HOLBORNE, Antony
(c. 1560–1602)

Pieces for bandora: Almain: The Night Watch; Fantazia; A Ground; for cittern: A French Toy; A Horne Pype; The Miller; Praeludium; Sicke Sicke and Very Sicke; (i) for cittern with a bass: Galliard; Maister Earles Pavane; Queenes Galliard; for lute: Almains: Almaine; The Choice. Fantasia. Galliards: As it fell on a holie yve; The Fairy-rownde; Holburns passion; Muy linda; Responce; The teares of the muses. Pavans: Heres paternus; Pavan, and Galliard to the same; Posthuma; Sedet sola. A French Toy. Variations: Il Nodo di gordio

🔑 ❀  Gaudeamus CDGAU 173. Heringman, (i) with Pell

An entirely delightful representation on CD of an Elizabethan lutenist, composer and poet, now totally overshadowed by Dowland. Indeed, his melancholy pavane, Posthuma, has as much 'dolens' as almost anything by Dowland. It is this meditative quality which Jacob Heringman catches to perfection and which makes this collection so appealing. He improvises his own divisions when needed, as was expected by the composer, and his playing is appealingly spontaneous. But there is lively writing too, like The Miller and A French Toy; and how well they sound on the cittern, a robust-timbred instrument favoured mainly by the lower classes, and which came to be much played in barber's shops. Heringman is beautifully recorded in a most suitable ambience, providing the ideal CD for a late-evening reverie.

Lute pieces

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553974. Wilson (lute) – ROBINSON: Lute Pieces & Duets ***

Christopher Wilson plays these pieces very well, notably the lively items like The Fairy Round and Wanton, with Muy Linda a highlight. But he does not penetrate the inner core of the ruminative pieces as touchingly as Jacob Heringman. However, there is not too much duplication here and this inexpensive Naxos disc is well worth obtaining for the coupled repertoire (including duets) by Holborne's contemporary, Thomas Robinson.

Pavans, Galliards, Almains

 HM HMX 2907238. The King's Noyse, O'Dette

In 1599 Antony Holborne published a collection of his 'Pavans, Galliards, Almains and other Short Airs', containing 65 dances for five-part consort, which he suggested could be played on 'viols, violins, or other musical wind instruments'. Most of the pieces on this CD come from this anthology and are stylishly and warmly played by a string group, but with the occasional solo from Paul O'Dette on lute or cittern. The programme is arranged under the title 'My Self' and is subdivided into biographical sections. But this is just a charming conceit for, although the titles of many of the pieces reflect the described events, they are not directly associated with them. Nevertheless, it makes for an attractive and varied programme, very well played and recorded.

HOLBROOKE, Josef (1878–1958)

The Birds of Rhiannon, Op. 87

 Lyrita SRCD 269. LPO, Handley – BANTOCK: Overture to a Greek Tragedy: Oedipus at Colonus: Philh. O, Braithwaite; ROOTHAM: Symphony 1 ***

The Birds of Rhiannon is a shortish piece, lasting about 15 minutes and drawing on Holbrooke's operatic trilogy on Welsh legends that occupied him from 1912 to 1920. The piece ends with birdsong. The level of inspiration of Holbrooke's piece does not quite rise to the theme and it would be idle to pretend that it is a masterpiece. But the playing of the LPO under Handley is excellent, as it is also in the rather more interesting coupling.

HOLMBOE, Vagn (1909–96)

(i) Cello Concerto, Op. 120; (ii) Brass Quintet, Op. 79; (iii) Triade, Op. 123; (iv) Benedic Domino, Op. 59

🔑  BIS (ADD/DDD) CD 078. (i) Bengtsson, Danish RSO, Ferencsik; (ii) Swedish Brass Quintet; (iii) Tarr, Westenholz; (iv) Camerata Ch., Enevold

Vagn Holmboe's magificent Cello Concerto is given an excellent performance here, and the account of the choral piece, Benedic Domino, has an austere beauty and elevation of feeling that are rare in contemporary music. The Brass Quintet is effective and stirring; and the Triade for trombone and organ is hardly less striking. Only the Quintet is a digital recording, but its companions here are also strikingly good as sound.

Chamber Concertos (i) 1, Op. 17; (ii) 3, Op. 21; (iii) 7, Op. 37; (iv) Beatus Parvo for Choir & Orchestra, Op. 117

 BIS CD 1176. Aalborg SO, Hughes, with (i) Ogawa; (ii) Fröst; (iii) Hunt; (iv) Danish Nat. Op. Ch.

The Beatus Parvo (1971), composed for an amateur music society in southern Sweden, has clarity of texture and immediacy of response. Readers coming to this repertoire afresh will find the present issue and its companions bring performances of real distinction and very vivid recorded sound.

Chamber Concertos 8 (Sinfonia concertante), Op. 38; 10 (Woodwind, Brass and Gut), Op. 40; Concerto giocondo e severo, Op. 132; Den Galsindede Tyrk (The Ill-tempered Turk): Ballet Suite, Op. 32b

 BIS CD 917. Aalborg SO, Hughes

There is a strongly neoclassical flavour to both scores, and those who enjoy the exhilarating Fifth Symphony will derive much pleasure from both, and particularly the resourceful theme-and-variations that comprise the second movement of the Eighth.

The Concerto giocondo e severo is scored for much larger forces than its predecessors but it has much of their ambience and spirit and is every bit as rewarding. His ballet Den Galsindede Tyrk ('The Ill-tempered Turk') was never mounted. In 1970 Holmboe returned to the score and fashioned a five-movement work of quality from the original, recasting and rescoring much of it. Owain Arwel Hughes and his fine Aalborg musicians are completely attuned to Holmboe's world and the recording has all the realism, clarity and presence one has come to expect from BIS.

Chamber Concertos (i) 11 for Trumpet & Orchestra, Op. 44; (ii) 12 for Trombone, Op. 52; (iii) Tuba Concerto, Op. 152; Intermezzo Concertante, Op. 171

🔑  BIS CD 802. (i) Hardenberger; (ii) Lindberg; (iii) Larsen; Aalborg SO, Hughes

The noble neo-baroque Concerto No. 11 for Trumpet (1948) could hardly be better served than by Håkan Hardenberger's account with the Aalborg Orchestra, and any newcomer will have to be pretty good to match Christian Lindberg's account of the Twelfth Chamber Concerto. These are inspiriting and inspiring pieces. The one-movement Tuba Concerto explores the virtuoso possibilities of this instrument as do few others; so does the Intermezzo Concertante. These are dazzling performances and the orchestral support under Owain Arwel Hughes is first class. The recording is state of the art. Highly recommended.

Epilog, Op. 80; Epitaph (Symphonic Metamorphosis), Op. 68; Monolith, Op. 76; Tempo variabile, Op. 108

🔑 ❀  BIS CD 852. Aarhus SO, Hughes

The first of Vagn Holmboe's Symphonic Metamorphoses brings musical ideas that unfold, change shape and assume new identities without losing sight of their individuality, in much the same way as does, say, the Seventh Symphony of Sibelius. The playing of the Aarhus Orchestra is excellent and Owain Arwel Hughes is in total sympathy with these magnificent scores. The recording is state of the art.

Flute Concertos 1, Op. 126; 2, Op. 147; (i) Concerto for Recorder, Strings, Celesta & Vibraphone, Op. 122

 BIS CD 911. Wiesler, (i) with Laurin; Aarhus SO, Hughes

The Flute Concertos and the Concerto for Recorder, Strings, Celesta and Vibraphone are wonderfully inventive scores whose luminous, shining textures captivate the mind and reaffirm the conviction that Holmboe stands head and shoulders above his contemporaries in the North. Strong performances from all concerned, and splendid recording too. Don't miss this.

Symphonies 1, Op. 4; 3 (Sinfonia rustica), Op. 25; 10, Op. 105

 BIS CD 605. Aarhus SO, Hughes

Symphony 2, Op. 15; Sinfonia in memoriam, Op. 65

 BIS CD 695. Aarhus SO, Hughes

Symphonies (i) 4 (Sinfonia sacra), Op. 29. 5, Op. 35

(*) BIS CD 572. (i) Jutland Op. Ch.; Aarhus SO, Hughes

Symphonies 6, Op. 43; 7, Op. 50

(*) BIS CD 573. Aarhus SO, Hughes

Symphonies 8, Op. 56 (1951); 9 (1968)

🔑 ✿ * BIS CD 618. Aarhus SO, Hughes

Symphonies 11, Op. 141; 12, Op. 175; 13, Op. 192

 BIS CD 728. Aarhus SO, Hughes

The general outlook of the First Symphony (Sinfonia da camera) is neoclassical and its proportions are modest, but one recognizes the vital current of the later Holmboe, the lucidity of thinking and the luminous textures. The last movement has an infectious delight in life; so, too, has the exhilarating finale of the Third (Sinfonia rustica), the first of his three wartime symphonies. The Tenth is dark, powerful and imaginative: altogether one of the Danish composer's most subtle and satisfying works. The performances and recordings are altogether first class.

The Second Symphony with its imaginative middle movement and its vital companions is a splendid piece. The Sinfonia in memoriam is a dark work of striking power and imaginative breadth and is masterly in every way.

The Fifth Symphony makes a good entry point into Holmboe's world. The only word to describe its outer movements is exhilarating. The slow movement has a modal character, but an anguished outburst in the middle serves as a reminder that this is a wartime work, composed during the dark days of the Nazi occupation. The Fourth (Sinfonia sacra) is a six-movement choral piece. It encompasses a bracing vigour and underlying optimism alongside moments of sustained grief.

Holmboe's Sixth Symphony is a much darker piece than its predecessor. Its distinctively Nordic world is established by the brooding, slow-moving fourths of the long introduction; there is writing of great luminosity too. The one-movement Seventh Symphony is a highly concentrated score, individual in both form and content, which encompasses great variety of pace and mood.

This conductor penetrates the spirit of the score of the Eighth Symphony. The Ninth Symphony is a dark, powerful work, among the finest Holmboe has given us. This is music which, one can feel with some certainty, future generations will want to hear. The Aarhus Orchestra are equally persuasive in the Ninth as in the Eighth, and the recording is the best so far in the cycle.

The Thirteenth Symphony is an astonishing achievement for a composer in his mid-eighties. It is a veritable powerhouse. The Twelfth is tautly structured and well argued, though less inspired than the Eleventh Symphony, which finds Holmboe at his most visionary. Every credit is owed to Owain Arwel Hughes and the Aarhus Symphony Orchestra for their fervent advocacy of all this music and to the splendid BIS engineers for the vivid and superbly natural sound.

PIANO MUSIC

Romanian Suite; Sonatina Briosa (symphonic suite); Suono da bardo; Suite, Op. 4

 Danacord DACOCD 502. Blyme

Suono da bardo is Holmboe's most important piano piece and comes from the same period as the Seventh Symphony. Subtitled 'Symphonic Suite', it is undoubtedly more symphonic than pianistic. Holmboe's composer-pianist colleague, Niels Viggo Bentzon, gave its first performance, and Anker Blyme made its first LP recording a few years later, in 1956. He returned to it some four decades later to give this admirable account; the rest of the programme is equally impressive.

HOLST, Gustav (1874–1934)

Beni Mora (Oriental Suite); Egdon Heath; Fugal Overture; Hammersmith; (i) Invocation for Cello & Orchestra; Somerset Rhapsody

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553696. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones; (i) with Hugh

The six works here are neatly balanced, three dating from before the climactic period of The Planets and three after. So the generously lyrical Somerset Rhapsody, Beni Mora and the long-neglected Invocation for Cello and Orchestra (with Timothy Hugh a moving soloist) lead on to the tauter and more astringent post-war works: the Hardy-inspired Egdon Heath, the darkly intense prelude and fugue, Hammersmith, and the Fugal Overture. Fresh and idiomatic performances, superbly recorded in full and brilliant sound.

(i) Beni Mora (Oriental Suite), Op. 29/1; A Fugal Overture, Op. 40/1; Hammersmith – A Prelude & Scherzo for Orchestra, Op. 52; (ii) Japanese Suite; (i) Scherzo (1933/4); A Somerset Rhapsody, Op. 21

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 222. (i) LPO; (ii) LSO; Boult

Beni Mora (written after a holiday in Algeria) is an attractive, exotic piece that shows Holst's flair for orchestration vividly. Boult clearly revels in its sinuousness. The Japanese Suite is not very Japanese, although it has much charm, particularly the piquant Marionette Dance and the innocuous Dance under the cherry tree. The most ambitious work here is Hammersmith, far more than a conventional tone-picture, intensely poetic. As with other records in this Lyrita series, the first-class analogue recording has been splendidly transferred to CD.

(i) Brook Green Suite for String Orchestra; (ii) Fugal Concerto for Flute and Oboe; The Perfect Fool (Ballet Suite); St Paul's Suite for String Orchestra; Somerset Rhapsody, Op. 21/2; (iii) Six Choruses for Male Voices, excerpts: Good Friday; Love Song; Intercession; Before Sleep; Drinking Song; A Dirge for Two Veterans

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (DDD/ADD) 575 9812. ECO, (i) Menuhin; (ii) with Snowden, Theodore; (iii) with Baccholian Singers, Humphries

There are a number of collections of Holst's shorter orchestral works currently available on CD, but none is better played or recorded than this and none is better value. There is some delightful solo playing from Jonathan Snowden and David Theodore in the Fugal Concerto. Even if the suite from The Perfect Fool involves duplication, this is still a disc well worth having, the more so as EMI have now added a short but memorably beautiful collection of Holst's shorter choral pieces, beautifully sung and warmly recorded two decades earlier. Most memorable of all is the darkly compressed A Dirge for Two Veterans, a processional setting with brass and percussion, written in 1914.

Brook Green Suite; (i) Double Violin Concerto, Op. 49; (ii) Fugal Concerto for Flute, Oboe & Strings, Op. 40/2; (iii) Lyric Movement for Viola & Small Orchestra; 2 Songs Without Words, Op. 22; St Paul's Suite, Op. 29/2

 Chan. 9270. (i) Ward, Watkinson; (ii) Dobing, Hooker; (iii) Tees; City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

The most striking piece here, a fine example of Holst's later, sparer style, is the Double Concerto for two violins and small orchestra, very taut and intense. The delicacy of the solo playing in the central Lament of this fine work is matched by the ethereal pianissimo from Stephen Tees at the opening of the Lyric Movement. The woodwind playing is delightful here too, as is the gentle clarinet solo which opens the Country Song, the first of Holst's two Songs Without Words. What matters throughout this programme is the surging warmth that Richard Hickox draws from his modest forces. The recording is superb – very real indeed.

Brook Green Suite; (i; ii) Double Violin Concerto, Op. 49; (iii) Fugal Concerto for Flute, Oboe & Strings, Op. 40/2; (iv) Lyric Movement for Viola & Chamber Orchestra; (i) A Song of the Night (for violin & orchestra), Op. 19/1. St Paul's Suite

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.570339. E. Sinfonia, Griffiths, with (i) Graham; (ii) Ewins; (iii) Pyne, Harmer; (iv) Viytovych

An outstandingly imaginative collection of Holst's shorter works, four of them in concertante style, with excellent soloists from the orchestra. New to the catalogue is the beautiful Song of the Night for violin and orchestra, written in 1905 but not published until 50 years after the composer's death. It is beautifully played here, but then the solo contributions to the other works are hardly less memorable, and Howard Griffiths displays his Holstian credentials with vigorously expressive accounts of the better-known Brook Green and St Paul's Suites, extremely well played by the English Sinfonia. The recording has splendid body and atmosphere.

Cotswolds Symphony in F (Elegy: In memoriam William Morris), Op. 8; Indra (Symphonic Poem), Op. 13; (i) Invocation (for cello & orchestra), Op. 19/2; (iii) The Lure (ballet music); The Morning of the Year: Dances, Op. 45/2; Sita: Interlude from Act III, Op. 23; (ii) A Song of the Night (for violin & orchestra), Op. 19/1; A Winter Idyll

 Lyrita (DDD/ADD) SRCD 209. (i) Baillie; (ii) McAslan; LPO, or (iii) LSO; Atherton

The earliest work here, A Winter Idyll, was written in 1897 when Holst was in his early twenties. Both in this work and in the Elegy, which is a slow movement originally forming part of a Cotswolds Symphony, one can detect little of the mature Holst. The familiar fingerprints do surface, however, in Indra (1903) and A Song of the Night (1905), which is among the scores Colin Matthews has edited. The Lure (1921) was written at short notice for Chicago and is characteristic, but the inspiration is not of the quality of The Perfect Fool. The Dances from The Morning of the Year enjoy the distinction of being the very first commission made by the BBC Music Department. Holstians will need no urging to acquire this interesting, well-played and well-recorded disc. None of the music is Holst at his best, but it usefully fills in our picture of him.

(i) Egdon Heath; (ii) Fugal Concerto, Op. 40/2

Ⓜ () BBC mono/stereo BBCB 8007-2. (i) LSO, Britten; (ii) Adeney, Graeme, ECO, I. Holst – BRITTEN: The Building of the House Overture; BRIDGE: Enter Spring; The Sea ***

Though the 1961 mono recording is dry, with the limited dynamic range sabotaging pianissimos, the concentration of Britten interpreting Egdon Heath, one of Holst's most inspired works, makes this well worth hearing, particularly with such excellent couplings.

Imogen Holst's urgent, robust reading of her father's Fugal Concerto comes from 1969 in much finer sound, also recorded at the Aldeburgh Festival. She brings out a bluff honesty in Holst's very English neoclassical writing. Fine solo work, too, from Richard Adeney on the flute and Peter Graeme on the oboe.

Egdon Heath; The Perfect Fool (ballet suite)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 62615-2. LSO, Previn – BRITTEN: Sinfonia da Requiem, etc. ***✿

Previn's account of Egdon Heath is full of dark intensity and his Perfect Fool ballet suite makes a colourful, extrovert contrast. First-class recording makes this an excellent bonus for Previn's outstanding Britten coupling.

Hammersmith: Prelude & Scherzo, Op. 52; Marching Song, Op. 22; Military Band Suites 1 in E flat; 2 in F, Op. 28/1–2; arr. of BACH (attrib.): Fugue à la gigue

 Chan. 9697. Royal N. College of Music Wind O, Reynish – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: English Folksongs Suite, etc. ***

Truly marvellous bravura playing from the Royal Northern College of Music's Wind Orchestra in the Second Military Band Suite. Timothy Reynish catches the jaunty quality of this attractive music and is especially perceptive in the way he sneaks the Greensleeves melody into the Fantasia on the Dargason. The only slight disappointment is the climax of the great Chaconne, at the opening of the First Suite, and the bass drum is submerged – not nearly as telling as on the Telarc recording. As a compensation we are given an inspired account of Hammersmith, the finest performance on record. The work's haunting atmosphere is fully captured. It is good, too, to have Holst's effective arrangement of the spirited Fugue à la gigue. Apart from the matter of the bass drum, the vivid Chandos recording is demonstration-worthy, with splendid range, detail and a rich underlying sonority. Most enjoyable!

Invocation for Cello and Orchestra, Op. 19/2

 Nim. NI 5763. Wallfisch, RLPO, Dickins – BRIDGE: Oration; ELGAR: Cello Concerto ***

Holst's Invocation is a highly attractive and lyrical piece, with a big central climax, finely realized here, and a valuable addition to the catalogue, with some touching solo playing from Wallfisch, and it is splendidly recorded.

Military Band Suites 1 in E flat; 2 in F

🔑 ✿ * Telarc CD 80038. Cleveland Symphonic Winds, Fennell – HANDEL: Royal Fireworks Music ****

Frederick Fennell's Telarc versions of Holst's two Military Band Suites have more gravitas though no less joie de vivre than his old Mercury set. They are magnificent, and the recording is truly superb – digital technique used in a quite overwhelmingly exciting way. The Chaconne of the First Suite makes a quite marvellous effect here. The playing of the Cleveland wind group is of the highest quality.

Military Band Suites 1–2, Op. 28/1–2; Moorside Suite for Brass Band (all orch. Gordon Jacob); Suite de Ballet in E flat, Op. 10; Walt Whitman Overture, Op. 7

 Lyrita (ADD/DDD) SRCD 210. LPO, Braithwaite

The Suite de Ballet, written in 1910, is Holst's earliest published instrumental work, and already in this sequence of engaging genre pieces – Danse rustique, Valse, Scène de nuit and Carnival – he showed his flair for brilliant and often unexpected orchestration. The even earlier and resourcefully melodic Walt Whitman Overture of 1899, with its bold Wagnerian influences, again shows Holst's assurance in writing for brass and indeed his natural orchestral skill. Although repetitive, its jolly progress to a strong climax is well caught in this very lively performance. As a brass player himself, Holst welcomed the chance to compose the Moorland Suite as a test piece for the National Brass Band Festival Championships at Crystal Palace in 1928. For all the skill of Gordon Jacob's orchestration, with the view of giving the music a wider circulation, the original scores are superior. Nevertheless, Nicholas Braithwaite's performances are freshly appealing and very well recorded. The Moorland Suite is the most successful transcription, especially the lovely central Nocturne and the grandiloquent closing March.

The Planets (suite), Op. 32

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 417 5532. Montreal Ch. & SO, Dutoit

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 8225. V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Karajan – STRAUSS: Don Juan ***

 DG CD 445 860-2. Monteverdi Ch. women's voices, Philh. O, Gardiner – GRAINGER: The Warriors ***

Ⓜ  EMI 5 67748-2. Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., LPO, Boult – ELGAR: Enigma Variations ***

 DG 439 011-2. Berlin Ch., BPO, Karajan

(i) The Planets; Beni Mora; (ii) The Perfect Fool (Ballet Suite)

Ⓑ  CfP 585 9132. (i) BBC SO; (ii) RPO; Sargent

(i) The Planets (suite); (ii) Brook Green Suite; (i) St Paul's Suite

(BB)  Regis Alto ALC 1013. Amb S., RPO; (i) Handley; (ii) Wordsworth

The Planets (suite); Egdon Heath, Op. 47

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89087-2. BBC SO, with women's chorus & organ, A. Davis

Charles Dutoit's natural feeling for mood, rhythm and colour, so effectively used in his records of Ravel, here results in an outstandingly successful version of The Planets, both rich and brilliant, and recorded with an opulence to outshine almost all rivals. It is remarkable that, whether in the relentless build-up of Mars, the lyricism of Venus, the rich exuberance of Jupiter or in much else, Dutoit and his Canadian players sound so idiomatic. It won the Gramophone Engineering Award in 1987, as well it might, and now appears in Universal's 'Gramophone Awards Collection' at mid-price.

With Karajan at his peak, his extraordinarily magnetic and powerful (1961) Decca account of The Planets is still uniquely individual, bringing a rare tension, an extra magnetism, projected by superb Decca recording, produced by John Culshaw in the Sofiensaal.

With speeds never exaggerated, John Eliot Gardiner avoids vulgarity, yet with his rhythmic flair he gives The Planets a new buoyancy. The offstage women's chorus at the end of Neptune has seldom been more subtly balanced.

With spectacularly brilliant and wide-ranging digital recording, engineered by Tony Faulkner, Andrew Davis's set of Planets is among the finest of modern recordings, and this Apex disc is a first choice among super-bargain versions. Egdon Heath then follows on very effectively, another intense performance, but here the spectacular recording at climaxes sounds more uninhibited, less in character than in the older Boult and Previn versions.

Sir Adrian Boult with the LPO gives a performance at once intense and beautifully played, spacious and dramatic, rapt and pointed. The great melody of Jupiter is calculatedly less resonant and more flowing than previously but is still affecting, and Uranus as well as Jupiter has its measure of jollity.

After a sinister opening, Handley builds up the climax of Mars impressively and the well-separated closing chords have malignant impact. The noble tune of Jupiter develops a similar build-up of intensity; Saturn too has a well-graduated melancholy climax and the choral diminuendo to silence is beautifully managed by the Ambrosians. Venus is warm and beautiful rather than sensuous or withdrawn, and the resonance provides a lustrous Mercury, undoubtedly chimerical if less sharply etched than in some versions. But the sound overall is attractively rich, giving glowing orchestral colour, the horns expansively opulent. What makes this budget version well worth considering is the bracingly fresh account of the St Paul's Suite which Handley offers as a bonus, while Barry Wordsworth'sBrook Green Suite* is hardly less appealing.

Sir Malcolm Sargent introduced many of us to The Perfect Fool and, like The Planets, his performance is full of character. Mars, taken fast, like Uranus, has plenty of clarity and bite and the organ pedals come through well in the sombre portrayal of Saturn, while the central tune in Jupiter is given special dignity. Sargent is equally at home in Beni Mora, an attractively exotic piece that shows Holst's flair for orchestration in a different but equally vivid way. Altogether a splendid collection, showing Sargent at his most charismatic Karajan's early (1981) digital DG recording is spectacularly wide-ranging, while the marvellously sustained pianissimo playing of the Berlin Philharmonic – as in Venus and the closing pages of Saturn – is very telling indeed. Mars has great impact, and the sound, full and firm in the bass, gives the performance throughout a gripping immediacy and presence. In short this is a thrilling performance and highly recommendable, but it remains at full price and without a coupling.

The Planets (suite, including Colin Matthews: Pluto and Neptune with original ending); Lyric Movement

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55350. Hallé O, Elder

* EMI 3 59382-2. Berlin R. Ch., BPO, Rattle – DEAN: Komarov's Fall; PINTSCHER: Towards Oasis; SAARIAHO: Asteroid 4179; TURNAGE: Seres

The Planets (suite; including Matthews: Pluto); The Mystic Trumpeter

🔑 Ⓑ  Naxos 8.555776; also Audio DVD 5.11004. RSNO, Lloyd-Jones

Sir Simon Rattle's latest recording of The Planets is not only superbly played, but it has state-of-the-art sound, with radiant orchestral textures and very beautiful string pianissimos, although the wide dynamic range may offer problems domestically. But with this recording we have to accept a second (free) disc, including four short works commissioned by the conductor. These are vividly scored, evocative, colourful and rhythmic, even jazzy by turns; but, like Matthews' Pluto, they are musically no match for Holst's masterpiece.

Mark Elder conducts the Hallé Orchestra in a warm rather than bitingly dramatic reading of The Planets, which ends in Colin Matthews's extra movement, Pluto – The Renewer. It was the idea of Kent Nagano as Elder's predecessor with the Hallé to add such a movement, with Matthews proving the ideal composer for a seemingly impossible task. Though the tempo is very fast, the rapid scurrying seems to move round in circles, evoking an atmosphere of mystery apt for the smallest, remotest planet.

Since it emerges out of Holst's last movement, Neptune, involving a slight modification of the score, Elder conducts a second performance of that movement with the original ending of offstage women's choir fading into nothing. The tender, reflective Lyric Movement, with Timothy Pooley a fine viola soloist, makes a generous bonus.

David Lloyd-Jones's reading with the Royal Scottish National Orchestra is even finer than Elder's, more spontaneous-sounding if not always quite so polished. Where Lloyd-Jones scores is in bringing out the contrasted character of each movement, starting with an account of Mars which in its urgency and menace contrasts strongly with the strangely relaxed view of Elder. Where Elder has for coupling a rare late work, Lloyd-Jones and Matthews have unearthed a very early work of Holst's that was never performed, a Scena to a text by Walt Whitman, which may reveal little of Holst's mature style, but which is colourful and atmospheric and well worth hearing. Full, vivid sound.

(i; ii) The Planets (suite, arr. 4 hands), Op. 32; (i) Christmas Day in the Morning; Jig; Nocturne; O! I Hae seen the Roses Blaw; The Shoemaker; Toccata

 Black Box BBM 1041. (i) John York; (ii) Fiona York

Holst's own arrangement of The Planets for piano duet may lack the atmospheric warmth and rich orchestral colours of the original, but in this alert reading by the York duo the clarity is refreshing and there is plenty of magnetism in the rhythmic writing. It follows that the fast movements are much more effective than the three slow movements, Venus, Saturn and Neptune, even if the fading of the alternating chords at the end, originally given to offstage women's chorus, is persuasively done. The delight of the disc is to have this major work preceded by six pieces for piano duet, which sparkle from first to last, ranging from the vigorous Toccata of 1924 to the tonally equivocal Jig of 1932, all brilliantly played and very well recorded.

St Paul's Suite

🔑 Ⓑ  Warner Apex 2564 61437-2. RPO, Warren-Green – BRITTEN: Simple Symphony; BUTTERWORTH: Banks of Green Willow; ELGAR: String Serenade; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Fantasia on a Theme of Tallis ***

Warren-Green's strongly characterized performance is second to none, with the outer movements characteristically full of joyous energy and a wide range of dynamic used to charm the listener with the wistful delicacy of the engaging second-movement Ostinato. Fine playing and first-class recording.

Air & Variations; 3 Pieces for Oboe & String Quartet, Op. 2

 Chan. 8392. Francis, English Qt – BAX: Quintet; MOERAN: Fantasy Quartet; JACOB: Quartet ***

The three pieces here are engagingly folksy, consisting of a sprightly little March, a gentle Minuet with a good tune, and a Scherzo. Performances are first class, and so is the recording.

VOCAL MUSIC

Part Songs

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55171. Holst Singers, Layton (with Theodore, Truman, Williams)

A wholly delightful collection: it has so many treasures and the music and singing (and recording) are of such quality that, as the original Gramophone review rightly commented, it is 'a joy to listen through without interruption'. The sheer technical excellence of the singing is remarkable, as is Stephen Layton's absolute control: the blending peerless, partly because the choir's intonation is absolutely secure.

The programme opens with carols (the eight-part double-choir setting of Ave Maria has an extraordinarily rich interplay of harmony, and the two linked numbers – A Welcome Song and Terlyi, terlow – both with David Theodore (oboe) and Robert Truman (cello) – are enchanting). A passage which has been used elsewhere (this time by Holst himself, in one of the Military Band Suites) pictures the syncopated hammering of The Song of the Blacksmith with its refrain, Kiki, kikki, kang, kang, which sounds for all the world like 'Chitty, chitty, bang, bang', and with the same rhythm.

The radiant Sweet and low and The splendour falls have superbly evocative imitative effects. The lovely Now sleeps the crimson petal brings delightful overlapping of parts, and the unpronounceable Welsh folksong translates as 'My sweetheart's like Venus'. Holst's imagination knows no bounds and this is altogether a superb reminder of his remarkable versatility.

(i) Ave Maria, H.49; (ii–iv; viii) A Choral Fantasia, Op. 51 (H.177); (iii–iv; viii) A Dirge for Two Veterans, H.121; (v–viii) The Cloud Messenger, Op. 30 (H.111); (i) The Evening Watch, H.159; (vi–viii) The Hymn of Jesus, Op. 37 (H.140); (iv; vi; viii) Ode to Death, Op. 38 (H.144); (i) 4 Partsongs; (ii–iv; viii) 7 Partsongs, H.162; (i) This have I done for my true love, H.128

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 241-6 (2). (i) Finzi Singers, Spicer; (ii) Rozario; (iii) Joyful Company of Singers; (iv) City of L. Sinfonia; (v) D. Jones; (vi) L. Symphony Ch.; (vii) L. Symphony Ch.; (viii) Hickox

Richard Hickox proves a passionate advocate of the shorter choral works of Holst, demonstrating that the two Whitman settings, A Dirge for Two Veterans and Ode to Death, are among his finest pieces for voices: the Dirge, written just after war had started in 1914, a grim processional for male voices, brass and percussion, and the Ode in 1919 when it was over and his disillusion was even more intense. That second work is in very much the same vein of inspiration as his masterpiece, the Hymn of Jesus, and, with the larger forces of the London Symphony Chorus, brings the most powerful performance here. It easily outshines even Sir Adrian Boult's vintage version for Decca. Hickox secures tauter and crisper ensemble, as well as treating the sections based on plainchant with an aptly expressive freedom.

The long-neglected choral piece, The Cloud Messenger, may lack the concentration of the Hymn of Jesus, but it brings similarly incandescent choral writing. Warmly and positively realized by Hickox and his powerful forces, with Della Jones a fine soloist, it makes a major discovery. Both the later works, the Seven Partsongs of 1925 as well as the Choral Fantasia of 1930, set poems by Robert Bridges, with the choral writing fluently beautiful. Though Patricia Rozario is not on her finest form, the Joyful Company of Singers sing superbly in intense and moving performances, helped by rich and full Chandos sound.

4 Canons for Equal Voices; 6 Choral Folk Songs; Choral Hymn from the Rig Veda: Hymn to Manas. The Homecoming

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 2 16155-2. Baccholian Singers, Ian Humphries – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Folk Songs ***

A beautiful and memorable collection of Holst's smaller choral pieces coupled with equally memorable Vaughan Williams folksong arrangements. Holst's highly original Hardy setting, The Homecoming, stands out with its stark narrative and dialogue.

A Choral Fantasia, Op. 51; Choral Symphony, Op. 41

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55104. Dawson, Guildford Choral Society, RPO, Davan Wetton

Though the ensemble of the Guildford Choral Society is not ideally crisp, and one really wants more weight of sound, the originality of Holst's choral writing and the purposeful nature of the argument are never in doubt in this surprisingly rare coupling, with Lynne Dawson the radiantly beautiful soprano soloist in both works. Holst is nothing if not daring in using well-known texts by Keats in the Choral Symphony, adding a new dimension even to the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn'. This is well worth considering in its bargain-priced reissue.

(i) A Choral Fantasia, Op. 51; (ii) Psalm 86

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 65588-2. (i) Baker; (ii) Partridge; Purcell Singers, ECO, Imogen Holst – FINZI: Dies natalis; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: 5 Mystical Songs, etc. ***

In Holst's Choral Fantasia Dame Janet Baker once again shows her supreme quality as a recording artist. The recording, though not lacking ambient warmth, is admirably clear (indeed the organ pedals are only too clear). The setting of Psalm 86, with its expressive tenor part sung beautifully by Ian Partridge, is also included in this generous compilation. The recording here is outstanding, and the success of both these performances owes much to the inspired direction of the composer's daughter.

Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda (Group 3), H. 99, Op. 26/3

 Hyp. CDA 66175. Holst Singers & O; Davan Wetton; Owen – BLISS: Lie Strewn the White Flocks; BRITTEN: Gloriana: Choral Dances ***

The third group of Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda, like the whole series, reveals Holst in his Sanskritic period at his most distinctively inspired. In this responsive performance, it makes an excellent coupling for the attractive Bliss and Britten items, atmospherically recorded.

(i) Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda; (ii) 6 Early Songs; (ii; iii) 4 Songs for Voice & Violin; (iv) 12 Humbert Wolfe settings; (ii) The Heart Worships; Margret's Cradle Song

(BB)  Naxos 8.557117. (i) Maltman; (ii) Gritton; (iii) Fuller (violin); (iv) Langridge; all with Steuart Bedford (piano)

Naxos have enterprisingly picked up a disc of rare Holst vocal repertoire, originally issued on the Collins label. Apart from the comparatively well-known, very Holstian and mystically atmospheric Hymns from the Rig Veda, sung sensitively (if with a slightly intrusive vibrato) by Christopher Maltman, the most striking songs are the Humbert Wolfe settings, in which Philip Langridge is in his element. But the star performer here is Susan Gritton, persuasive in the early songs but at her very finest in the Four Songs for Voice and Violin, set to medieval lyrics, with Louisa Fuller a responsive partner. Throughout, Steuart Bedford is thoroughly at home in the piano accompaniments, and the recording is excellent.

The Evening Watch, H.159; Six Choruses, H.186; Nunc dimittis, H.127; 7 Partsongs, H.162; 2 Psalms, H.117

 Hyp. CDA 66329. Holst Singers & O, Davan Wetton

Hilary Davan Wetton's performance of the comparatively austere but no less inspired Evening Watch creates a rapt, sustained pianissimo until the very closing bars, when the sudden expansion is quite thrilling. The Six Choruses for male voices show the composer at his most imaginative, while the comparable Partsongs for women often produce a ravishingly dreamy, mystical beauty. The final song, Assemble all ye maidens, is a narrative ballad about a lost love, and its closing section is infinitely touching. The performances are gloriously and sensitively sung and unerringly paced.

The Mystic Trumpeter

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 270. Armstrong, LSO, Atherton – PARRY: Ode on the Nativity; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Sons of Light ***

The Mystic Trumpeter is a setting of Whitman. There are some striking things in it and in both its harmonic language and metrical freedom it looks forward to things to come. Sheila Armstrong gives an impressive account of this rarity and she is given sympathetic support from Atherton and the LSO.

OPERA

(i) Savitri (complete); (ii) Dream City (song-cycle, orch. Matthews)

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55042. (i) Langridge, Varcoe, Palmer, Hickox Singers; (ii) Kwella, City of L. Sinfonia; Hickox

The simple story of Savitri is taken from a Sanskrit source. Felicity Palmer is earthy, vulnerable as Savitri, her grainy mezzo caught well. Philip Langridge and Stephen Varcoe both sing sensitively with fresh, clear tone, though their timbres are rather similar. Hickox is a thoughtful conductor both in the opera and in the orchestral song-cycle arranged by Colin Matthews (with Imogen Holst's approval) from Holst's settings of Humbert Wolfe poems. Patrizia Kwella's soprano at times catches the microphone rather shrilly.

HONEGGER, Arthur (1892–1955)

Les Aventures du Roi Pausole: Overture; Ballet; (i)Cello Concerto; Pastoral d'été; Pacific 231; Rugby; The Tempest: Prélude

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9764. Grand SO, composer, (i) with Marechal – JAUBERT: Ballade. PIERNÉ: Ramuntcho

Apart from the Cello Concerto, which was recorded in Paris during the war, these recordings were all made in 1930 and have great immediacy of feeling, in particular the Prélude to The Tempest, which has a frenzied intensity that is thrilling. Maurice Marechal was the dedicatee of the concerto, composed in 1928, and he plays it committedly. After the Second World War Honegger recorded the Symphonie liturgique, and we hope that Dutton will turn their attention to that in due course.

(i) Cello Concerto, H72; (ii) Cello Sonata, H32; Sonatina, H42; (iii) Sonatina for violin & cello, H80

* BIS-CD-1617. Poltéra, with (i) Malmö SO, Ollila-Hannikainen; (ii) Stott; (iii) Tetzlaff

Christian Poltéra proves an eloquent and sweet-toned soloist, and he is well supported by the fine Malmö Orchestra. Kathryn Stott proves highly sympathetic in the 1920 Sonata, and the Sonatina of 1922, originally for clarinet, is new to the catalogue in this form. This repertoire is neglected – quite unjustly so – and readers should investigate it urgently, particularly as it is so well played and recorded.

Symphonies 1; 2 for Strings with Trumpet Obbligato; 3 (Symphonie liturgique); 4 (Deliciae Basiliensis); 5 (Di tre re); Symphonic movements: 1, Pacific 231; 2, Rugby

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62687-2 (2). Bav. RSO, Dutoit

Symphonies 1; 2 for Strings with Trumpet Obbligato; 3 (Symphonie liturgique); 4 (Deliciae Basilienses); 5 (Di tre re); 3 Symphonic Movements: 1, Pacific 231; 3; The Tempest: Prelude

(M)  Sup. (ADD) 11 1566-2 (2). Czech PO, Baudo

Duitoit's inexpensive Apex set is an appealingly economical way of acquiring excellent, modern, digital recordings (dating from 1982) of the five symphonies, plus two of the Symphonic Movements (recorded three years later). In Dutoit's hands the phrasing of the Bavarian Orchestra has both dignity and eloquence. He gives thoroughly idiomatic accounts of both the Liturgique and 'Di tre re' Symphonies. In the Fifth he does not galvanize the orchestra into playing of the same volcanic fire and vitality that Serge Baudo secures from the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra in the alternative

Supraphon set (11 1566-2), but the Warner recording is fresher and more detailed. Both Pacific 231 and Rugby are well done; although the latter may be found a little genteel, the playing and recording are more than adequate compensation.

The Supraphon performances come from the 1960s, but they are more than merely serviceable. The sound comes up very well indeed and the playing of the Czech Philharmonic for Baudo is totally committed. The performance of the Fifth Symphony has never been surpassed (except possibly by the pioneering Munch recording) and has amazing presence and detail for its period.

Symphony 2 for Strings & Trumpet

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67595-2. O de Paris, Munch – RAVEL: Boléro, etc. ***

Honegger's wartime Second Symphony, scored for strings to which an obbligato trumpet is added at the very end of the work, commands a genuine intensity of feeling with a strong and vital imagination. Munch conducted the work's French première and made the pioneering set of 78s. The present version is his finest account of this dark and haunting score, and he secures first-class playing from the strings of the Orchestre de Paris. The naturally balanced recording is lively and has atmosphere as well as opulence.

Symphonies 2 for Strings with Trumpet Obbligato; 3 (Symphonie liturgique)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 447 435-2. BPO, Karajan – STRAVINSKY: Concerto in D ***

Karajan's accounts of these magnificent symphonies come from 1973 and still remain in a class of their own, luminous, incandescent and moving (one of DG's 'Legendary Originals').

Symphony 3 (Symphonie liturgique); Rugby; Mouvement symphonique 3; Pacific 231; Pastoral d'été

(BB)  Naxos 8.555974. New Zealand SO, Yuasa

Takuo Yuasa, currently principal conductor of the Ulster Orchestra, gets impressive results from the New Zealanders, and the recording has great presence and detail. This is not perhaps a first choice but, taken on its own merits, is a perfectly viable one and at its modest price will give much satisfaction.

Symphonies 3; 5; Pacific 231

 Chan. 9176. Danish Nat. R. O, Järvi

The Symphonie liturgique has stiff competition to meet in the classic Karajan account, but Neeme Järvi and the Danish Orchestra serve it very well indeed, and the digital Chandos recording is even more detailed and present, and certainly fuller, than the DG version. Järvi's version of the Fifth Symphony is also masterly, even if it does not match the hell-for-leather abandon of Baudo's Supraphon version (see above). But that is now over 30 years old and, though it still sounds pretty amazing, this is undeniably superior.

VOCAL MUSIC

Une Cantate de Noël

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP 586 1722 (2). Sweeney, Waynflete Singers, Winchester Cathedral Ch., ECO, Neary – BERLIOZ L'enfance du Christ (*); POULENC: Mass; Motets ***

At last a recording of Honegger's charming Christmas Cantata to do it full justice. It was the composer's last completed work and deserves to be more popular in the festive season outside France. The performance here is superior in every way and the recording is impressively wide-ranging and well defined.

Le Roi David (complete)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553649. Martin, Fersen, Borst, Todorovitch, Ragon, Guedj, Ch. Régional Vittoria d'Ile de France, O de la Cité, Piquemal

The Naxos set gives us the original scoring of Le Roi David for 17 instruments, the double bass being the only string instrument. In 1923, Honegger scored it in the familiar concert version, adding the narration which Naxos use here. Michel Piquemal's performance is a good one and, though there are certain weaknesses (the tenor's vibrato will not be to all tastes), there is a good feeling for the dramatic shape of the work. Piquemal keeps a firm grip on the proceedings and the instrumentalists play with real commitment, while the recording is very adequate.

HOROVITZ, Joseph (born 1926)

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Euphonium Concerto; (iii) Jazz Concerto for Piano, Strings & Percussion; (iv) Violin Concerto

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7188. (i) Cross; (ii) Mead; (iii) Owen Norris; (iv) Haveron; Royal Ballet Sinfonia, composer

Joseph Horovitz stands out among today's composers for writing approachable music beautifully crafted. These four compact concertos are prime examples, colourful and attractive. The Concerto for Clarinet and Strings is tuneful and lively, while the Concerto for Euphonium and Chamber Orchestra handles a tricky instrument imaginatively, even more tuneful than the clarinet work, with a warm melody in the slow movement. The Violin Concerto brings a jaunty first movement, while the Concerto for Jazz Band and Orchestra winningly draws on jazzy syncopations. Brilliant performances, strongly conducted by the composer.

HOVHANESS, Alan (1911–2000)

(i) Guitar Concerto 1; (ii) Khrimian Hairig, Op. 49; Symphony 60 (To the Appalachian Mountains), Op. 396

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559294. Berlin RSO, Schwarz, with (i) Leisner; (ii) Ranch

The Guitar Concerto uses the orchestra vividly, but for the most part consists of long, ruminative passages for the soloist, often interrupted by haunting instrumental solos, or indeed by the full orchestra. Khrimian Hairig was originally the slow movement of a trumpet concerto and consists of a melismatic soliloquy from the soloist, which reaches a striking apotheosis. The Symphony, with its magical opening for woodwind which leads to a chorale, is richly melodic, using Appalachian folk idioms. The second movement evokes a square dance, but all the other themes are both appealing and original. The performances here are of the highest quality and are superbly recorded.

(i) Guitar Concerto 2. Fanfare for the New Atlantis; Symphony 63 (Loon Lake)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.559336. RSNO, Robertson; (i) with Calderón

The Second Guitar Concerto was commissioned by Narciso Yepes. The solo guitarist (here the excellent Javier Calderón) dominates a kaleidoscope of orchestral chorale sonorities, pizzicati and fugati, in the most inventive way. The Fanfare moves from a solo trumpet to the climax of the rebirth of Atlantis in the full orchestra. The Symphony 63 (Loon Lake) is characteristically evocative, spectacular in its washes of orchestral colour both from the strings and the woodwind alike. Hovhaness's music is strangely haunting, when the performers are as dedicated and responsive as they are here and the recording worthy of the complex scoring.

Symphony 2 (Mysterious Mountain), Op. 132; (i) Lousadzak

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Nim. NI 2512. American Composers O, Russell Davies; (i) with Jarrett – HARRISON: Symphony 2 ***

The music of the Second Symphony is spacious, amiably melodic and easy to come to terms with. It begins with pastoral, modal writing, leading to a central fugal climax and returning compulsively to rich, expressive serenity. Lousadzak (a made-up word meaning 'dawn of light') is dominated by a throbbing, complex ostinato which moves through the piano's various registers in a most haunting way, with the accompaniment varied and the basic rhythmic figure steadily expanded and varied. This is far more than minimalism. The performances and recording could hardly be more inviting and the coupled symphony by Harrison is even finer.

HOWELLS, Herbert (1892–1983)

(i) Piano Concertos 1 in C min., Op. 4 (completed Rutter); 2 in C, Op. 39; Penguinski

🔑  Chan. 9874. (i) Shelley; BBC SO, Hickox

Long buried, Herbert Howells's First Piano Concerto, with its final pages now restored by John Rutter, is a revelation. With Grieg and Rachmaninov among the models, the piano writing is bold and powerful, full of strong themes, set in a warmly English idiom. Howard Shelley as soloist and Richard Hickox as conductor hold the expansive structure superbly together. The Second Concerto of 1925, more modest in scale but more advanced in idiom with its echoes of Debussy, Ravel and Stravinsky, is equally attractive, and the jolly occasional piece Penguinski makes a delightful encore.

Concerto for Strings; Elegy for Viola, String Quartet & Strings; Suite for String Orchestra; Serenade

🔑 ✿  Chan. 9161. City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

These three splendid and inspired works are all in the great and ongoing tradition of English string-writing. The Concerto (1938) opens with a great burst of energy, but the secondary theme is hauntingly nostalgic, and the elegiac character of the slow movement establishes the music's character. The viola Elegy, written much earlier (1917), is clearly modelled on Vaughan Williams's Tallis Fantasia, yet it is masterly in its own right and very moving. The delicate one-movement Serenade, which also features a solo quartet, dates from the same year. The Allegro deciso and Rondo which open and close the Suite (1938) are rhythmically extrovert in a Holstian 'St Paul's' manner, but then, after a gentle, rapturous Siciliano, the Minuet opens with a deeper-voiced pizzicato. The performances here are exemplary, superbly played and conducted by Hickox with deep commitment and understanding. The recording is warm, sonorous and clearly detailed.

The 'B's' (Suite for Orchestra); (i) 3 Dances for Violin & Orchestra; (ii) Fantasia; Threnody (both for cello & orchestra); The King's Herald; Paradise Rondel, Op. 40; (iii) In Green Ways (Song Cycle); Pastoral Rhapsody; Procession, Op. 36

🔑 (BB)  Chan. 2 for 1 CHAN 241-20 (2). (i) Mordkovitch; (ii) Welsh; (iii) Kenny; LSO, Hickox

The inspired suite, The Five 'B's, celebrates the composer's musician friends and colleagues at the Royal College of Music at the beginning of the 1914–18 war. As such it has something in common with Elgar's Enigma Variations, although Howells clearly identified each dedicatee. 'Blissy' (Arthur Bliss) inspires a dainty, chimerical Scherzo on the first disc, with the piano an orchestral soloist. The shorter evocations are framed by an exuberant Overture with a nobilmente lyrical expansiveness representing the composer himself ('Bublum') and the finale ('Benjee' – Arthur Benjamin), which begins lightheartedly but ends grandiloquently, recalls the composer's own themes from the overture. The Three Dances for Violin and Orchestra, another wartime work (1915), are in the best English folk/pastoral tradition, with Lydia Mordkovitch as a brilliant violin soloist; and the song-cycle, In Green Ways, with Yvonne Kenny also includes poignant elegies. The English countryside is strikingly evoked in this group of five songs, using lyrics by Shakespeare and Goethe. Yvonne Kenny sings the whole group most affectingly and Richard Hickox and the LSO are ardent and communicative advocates of all this fine music.

The most personal works on the second disc are the Fantasia and Threnody, both for cello and orchestra, together forming a sort of rhapsodic concerto. The other major piece is the Pastoral Rhapsody, written in 1923. Similarly pastoral but predominantly vigorous, the Paradise Rondel of 1925 is full of sharp contrasts, with one passage offering clear echoes of the Russian Dance from Petrushka. The collection opens with the boldly extrovert King's Herald, bright with Waltonian fanfares. Procession brings more echoes of Petrushka, again reflecting Howells's response to the Diaghilev Ballets Russes' appearances in London. Helped by rich, atmospheric sound, Richard Hickox draws performances that are both brilliant and warmly persuasive from the LSO, with Moray Welsh a movingly expressive soloist in the concertante works.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Clarinet Sonata; A Near-Minuet for Clarinet & Piano; Prelude for Harp; Rhapsodic Clarinet Quintet; Violin Sonata 3

(BB) * Naxos 8.557188. Mobius

Howells's Rhapsodic Quintet for clarinet and string quartet is one of the most beautiful clarinet works of the 20th century. Robert Plane, the clarinet of the talented group Mobius, plays with a ravishing range of tone and natural warmth, well supported by the string quartet led by Philippe Honore. Plane is also the brilliant soloist in Howells's even more ambitious Clarinet Sonata of 1946, more angular and percussive than one expects from Howells. Honore is the violinist with the pianist Sophia Rahman in the powerful Violin Sonata 3, written for Albert Sammons in 1923 after a visit by the composer to Canada, inspired by the rugged grandeur of the Rockies. The Prelude for Harp and the Near-Minuet for Clarinet and Piano are attractive make-weights for a superb disc, compelling in every way and vividly recorded.

(i) Fantasy String Quartet, Op. 25; (ii) Piano Quartet, Op. 21; (i; iii) Rhapsodic Quintet for Clarinet and Strings

🔑  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 292. (i) Richards Ens.; (ii) Richards Piano Qt; (iii) King

The Piano Quartet was written in 1916, when Howells, still in his early twenties, was studying with Stanford. It may have its roots in a Brahmsian conception of the genre but the inspiration is gloriously vital, and anyone not afraid to enjoy music composed without concern for fashion should sample a work that is far more than derivative and hardly immature. Within a year or so, when the young Howells had composed the other two works on the disc, the influence of the folksong movement had become more dominant. Though some of the youthful buoyancy had gone, this too is splendid music, warmly recommendable to anyone sympathetic to the English revival. The committed performances and fine recording add to the real joy of his disc.

Oboe Sonata

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55008. Francis, Dickinson – BOUGHTON: Pastoral; HARTY: 3 Pieces; RUBBRA: Sonata ***

Howell's Oboe Sonata is a florid work, but Sarah Francis surmounts its complexities very musically, echoed by her pianist, Peter Dickinson. She provides a full, singing tone. The balance is forward, within a resonant acoustic, and it is important not to set the volume control too high.

In Gloucestershire (String Quartet 3)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55045. Divertimenti – DYSON: 3 Rhapsodies ***

Howells's Third String Quartet is permeated with the spirit of Vaughan Williams; the opening movement, treating the first violin as a soloist, mistily yet radiantly evokes the Gloucestershire countryside. After the windswept Scherzo, the slow movement is elegiac; but the finale, jauntily alive and folksy in flavour, is drawn back eventually to the gently atmospheric mood of the work's opening. The performance by Divertimenti is deeply expressive and beautifully played and recorded.

Rhapsodic Clarinet Quintet, Op. 31

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55105. King, Britten Qt – COOKE: Clarinet Quintet; HOLBROOKE: Eilean Shona; HOWELLS: Rhapsodic Quintet; FRANKEL; MACONCHY: Clarinet Quintets ***

Howells's inspired single-movement Rhapsodic Quintet, which dates from 1919, is one of his very finest works, opening arrestingly with rich string harmonies and based on two utterly haunting, very English themes. Thea King, who plays ravishingly and with great poetic feeling, reckons its closing section 'to be one of the loveliest moments in music – the peace of ages is in it'. The performance here is fully responsive to this mood, and the recording is first class.

Violin Sonatas 1 in E, Op. 18; 2 in E flat, Op. 26; 3 in E min., Op. 38; Cradle Song, Op. 9/1; 3 Pieces, Op. 28

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55139. Barritt, Edwards

The three Violin Sonatas come from an intensely creative period. The First (1917) opens delicately and romantically, darkens a little in the Meno mosso, then, after a brief, unbridled Scherzo, ends in ravishing tranquillity. The Second, with a lovely, simple, folk-like slow movement, bursts into sparkling vitality in the finale. The Third Sonata maintains the English pastoral character in its underlying lyricism, but erupts with energy in the pizzicato centrepiece, which carries through into the restless finale: both are marked assai ritmico. The main theme of the delightful Cradle Song is rather like a Slavonic folk-tune, and while the first two of the Three Pieces are richly English in feeling, the haunting finale is actually based on a Russian folksong. Paul Barritt and Catherine Edwards are right inside this music and play together with a passionate and moving single voice; moreover, they are superbly balanced and recorded.

ORGAN MUSIC

Psalm Preludes, Sets I & II; 3 Rhapsodies, Op. 17; Rhapsody 4

 Priory PRCD 480. Cleobury (organ of King's College, Cambridge)

The Psalm Preludes are rich in ideas and powerfully communicative, each being a musical meditation on a single verse. The Rhapsodies, not surprisingly, are more powerfully romantic in a Lisztian way, with big, dramatic swells of tone. The Third was written in York during a Zeppelin raid in the First World War, and the malignant writing depicts the tumult of the experience and the composer's passionate reaction. The Fourth was written in 1958, some 40 years after the first three, and is actually marked turbulento. The climax is tremendous, with thundering pedals, and as a sonic experience it is overwhelming. Stephen Cleobury's performances have great vitality and passion (and delicacy when required), and the recording is quite superb.

VOCAL MUSIC

Anthems: The fear of the Lord; Like as the hart; Hymn: All my hope on God is founded; Sacred Part-Song; Long, long ago; Magnificat (Gloucester Service); Requiem

 Coll. COLCD 118. Soloists, Cambridge Singers, Rutter; Marshall (organ) – STANFORD: Anthems; Canticles, etc. ***

Rutter's programme opens with three very fine Magnificat settings, Howells's the most ambitious, framed by two of Stanford's, while a pair of Stanford's anthems also enclose two quite contrasted anthems of Howells: the comparatively gentle Like as the hart, and the more robust The fear of the Lord. All this music is rewarding and is capped by the lovely Requiem for a cappella double choir, which above all is thoughtful and serene. Its highly unconventional layout includes Psalms 23 and 121 (I will lift mine eyes unto the hills), surrounded by two different settings of the Requiem aeternam. John Rutter's performance is movingly dedicated and radiantly sung. The concert ends rousingly with a hymn, All my hope on God is founded. The recording is very fine.

Antiphon; 3 Carol-Anthems; Even such is Time; God is gone up; Haec Dies; The House of the Mind; Long, Long ago; 2 Madrigals; Mass in the Dorian Mode; Regina Coeli; Requiem; Salve Regina; A Sequence for St Michael; Take him, Earth, for cherishing; The Summer is coming; Sweetest of Sweets; Nunc Dimittis; Te Deum; Thee will I love

Ⓑ  Chan. 241-34 (2). Soloists, Finzi Singers, Spicer

The Requiem is the one large-scale work here; but many of the shorter settings, like the Mass in the Dorian Mode, A Sequence for St Michael and the Te Deum, are also among Howells's masterpieces. Many of them are available in fine alternative performances from other cathedral choirs, but they are also splendidly sung here and this collection inexpensively explores much else among Howells's choral output, from the early Even such is time to the ravishing Carol Anthems and the much later thrilling motet, God is gone up. The singing throughout is well up to the eloquent, finely blended and characterfully expressive performances we expect from this fine vocal group, while the Chandos recording is well up to the house standard.

Canticles for Morning and Evening Services, Vol. 1

 Priory PRCD 748. Collegiate Singers, Millinger, Moorhouse (organ)

Canticles for Morning and Evening Services, Vol. 2

 Priory PRCD 759. Collegiate Singers, Millinger, Moorhouse (organ)

Howells composed some 20 settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis and, while it is not difficult to pick one's favourites, the amazing consistency of inspiration shines out again and again through these two collections, making his contribution to the Anglican Matins and Evensong uniquely special, astonishing when one realizes that he was himself an agnostic.

The 1941 settings for men's voices and organ are here sung by women, with tonally lavish and at times radiantly ethereal effect. Similarly Howells's writing for the upper voices is richly harmonized for Oxford in 1970, showing that the composer's touch remained as sure as ever three decades later. Also included on the second CD is the brief but memorable Hymn for St Cecilia and the luminous unaccompanied Salve Regina which is so poignant in its emotional pull, for all its underlying serenity. The performances here are splendidly sung by the Collegiate Singers, under Andrew Millinger, while Richard Moorhouse's organ contribution always makes its mark. The recording, made in Marlborough College Chapel, could hardly be bettered.

3 Children's Songs; 4 French Chansons, Op. 29; A Garland for de la Mare (group of 11 unpublished songs); In Green Ways (song-cycle), Op. 43; Peacock Pie (song-cycle), Op. 33; 2 South African Settings; 4 Songs, Op. 22 (Madrigal); Miscellaneous songs

 Chan. 9185/6 (2). Dawson, Pierard, Mark Ainsley, Luxon, Drake

This two-disc collection covers virtually all of Howells's completed songs. One of the driving forces behind the project is the pianist Julius Drake, who plays the accompaniments with a consistent rhythmic spring and a sense of fantasy. Two of the finest songs are among the best known, King David and Come sing and dance, and such a group of miniatures as Peacock Pie, settings of Walter de la Mare written early in Howells's career, have a characteristic point and charm. Far more searching are the 11 much longer settings of de la Mare poems. Among the other fascinating examples are two South African settings to words by the Afrikaner poet, Jan Celliers, including one still very topical, Spirit of freedom. The sopranos, Catherine Pierard and Lynne Dawson, both have aptly fresh, English-sounding voices, with John Mark Ainsley as the thoughtful tenor and Benjamin Luxon the characterful baritone; a fine team, even though the recording brings out some unevenness in the vocal production of both Mark Ainsley and Luxon.

3 Carol Anthems: A Spotless Rose; Sing lullaby; Here is the little door; Collegium regale: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis; Hymn for St Cecilia; O love all beauteous things; O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem; A Sequence for St Michael; Salve Regina; Service for New College, Oxford: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis; Service for St George's Chapel, Windsor: Te Deum; Benedictus

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67494. Wells Cathedral Ch., Archer; M. Gough

Like the CRD New College, Oxford, collection below, this splendid programme from Wells Cathedral includes three of Howells's finest short choral works, and here Malcolm Archer uses them to open his programme. A Sequence for St Michael, a supreme masterpiece, is underpinned emotionally by the resonance of the tragic death of the composer's child, whose name was also Michael. Yet Howells invokes the Archangel himself as he stands in both mystery and glory on the Western cliffe of Paradise. It is work of grandeur and passion as well as beauty, and this is marvellously conveyed in the profoundly fervent performance here. A Hymn for St Cecilia is more direct and hymn-like, but it gathers intensity as it proceeds; O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem is, by contrast, meditative and is sung with affecting simplicity.

The anthem, O love all beauteous things, set to a poem of Robert Bridges, is another small-scale masterpiece, with characteristic moments of both sensuousness and passion, and there is to be a passionate response again from the choir in the rich St George's Te Deum and the vibrant Oxford Magnificat. The three delightful and tender carol settings come towards the end of the recital, to be followed by the most famous of Howells's settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, drawn from the Collegium regale, less extrovert than those written for Oxford, but no less moving, with the Nunc dimittis ending the programme in a burst of glory. The choir is superbly recorded within the cathedral ambience, yet is not too backwardly placed, with words clear and plenty of edge to the climaxes. With a playing time of nearly 80 minutes, this must be a prime choice among collections of Howells's church music.

Collegium regale: Office of Holy Communion; Requiem. St Paul's Service: Magnificat; Nunc dimittis. Motets: Like as the hart; Long, long ago; Take him, earth. Organ music: Paean; Rhapsody 3

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554659. St John's College Ch., Robinson, Farrington

No composer this century has surpassed Herbert Howells in the beauty and imagination of his Anglican church music. Naxos here offers a generous selection, in seductive performances from the Choir of St John's College, Cambridge, that match and almost surpass any previous versions. This will have King's Choir down the road looking to its laurels, helped by immaculate sound, at once atmospheric and cleanly focused.

(i) Hymnus paradisi; (ii) A Kent Yeoman's Wooing Song

 Chan. 9744. Rodgers, BBC Symphony Ch. & O, Hickox, with (i) Rolfe Johnson; (ii) Ogston

Hymnus Paradisi; An English Mass

 Hyp. CDA 66488. Kennard, Mark Ainsley, RLPO Ch., RLPO, Handley

(i) Hymnus paradisi; (ii) Sir Patrick Spens

(BB)  Naxos 8.570352. Gilchrist, Bach Ch., Bournemouth SO, Hill, with (i) C. Rutter; (ii) R. Williams

In Hymnus Paradisi Handley conveys a mystery, a tenderness rather missing from the previous recording, made by Sir David Willcocks for EMI, strong as that is. Handley's soloists bring a moving compassion, as in the haunting setting of the 23rd Psalm which makes up the third movement. The Hyperion digital recording is warm, full and atmospheric. An English Mass is simpler yet also hauntingly beautiful.

Hickox gives a deeply felt performance of Hymnus Paradisi, not as forthright as David Hill's on Naxos, but still with great warmth and power. He similarly has a rarity for a coupling in the form of the Kent Yeoman's Wooing Song. It was intended as a wedding present (in the end a very belated one) for two friends. Written in four parts, it finds the composer in an unexpectedly light-hearted mood, with the four sections of the score going through the mating process: in Part One the soprano announces she is 'on the market', and this is followed by the baritone stating his case. The third section is a love song, while the fourth brings things to a triumphant conclusion – but not, as the sleeve-note writer points out, before the soprano has played hard to get! The soloists are uniformly excellent, as is the warm Chandos sound.

David Hill directs a superb version of Howells's Hymnus Paradisi, with excellent soloists, choir and orchestra. His account is direct and fresh, exciting in the more flamboyant parts of the score, such as in the Sanctus, yet relaxing beautifully in the reflective passages. Sir Patrick Spens, written at the age of 25, was Howells's first major large-scale choral work. It opens with tremendous gusto, a bracing, briny, swashbuckling adventure which befits the nautical story of the text. It is excitingly and vividly performed here, with a superb recording to match.

Missa Sabrinensis

🔑 Ⓑ  Chan. 2 for 1 241-27 (2). Watson, D. Jones, Hill, Maxwell, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Rozhdestvensky – Stabat Mater ***

Rozhdestvensky here conducts a passionate account of what in many ways is the most powerful of all the composer's major works. There is little of the restraint that is typical of much of Howells's choral writing. Rather he exploits the lushest, most passionate elements in his richly post-impressionist style, and he hardly lets up over the whole span. It would be hard to imagine a more inspired performance than Rozhdestvensky's. Over the incandescent singing of the choir, the four excellent soloists give radiant performances, with the golden-toned soprano, Janice Watson, regularly crowning the mood of ecstasy in her solos. Full, glowing, atmospheric sound to match, and a superb coupling.

(Organ) De la Mare's Pavane; Flourish for a Bidding; Jacob's Brawl; St Louis Come to Clifton;

Walton's Toye. (Choral): House of the Mind; Hymn for St Cecilia; King of Glory; New College Service: Magnificat & Nunc Dimittis; O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem; A Sequence for St Michael

Ⓜ  CRD CRD 3454. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom

Higginbottom opens with the inspired Sequence for St Michael, a setting of a medieval lyric which was originally intended as part of Hymnus paradisi and is connected with the death of the composer's nine-year-old son. This beautiful and very dramatic motet is most movingly sung. The Hymn to St Cecilia is more direct yet, set to a poem by Ursula Vaughan Williams, and has increasing radiance. O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem was written during the war, while Howells and his wife were snowbound in a cottage in the Cotswolds. It has a magnetic, tranquil stillness. These are all fine performances, beautifully sung, with the choir more recessed, less dramatically projected, than with the Wells Cathedral Choir on Hyperion. The organ pieces act as contrasting interludes. The programme ends with a thrillingly unrestrained setting of George Herbert's King of Glory. Howells believed there was no dividing line between spiritual tranquillity and God-given ecstasy, and this remarkable piece carries both expressions of human experience. The whole programme is very well sung, played and recorded, and shows the composer at his most inspirational.

(Organ) Psalm-preludes, Set 1/1; Paen; Prelude: Sine nomine. (Vocal): Behold, O God our defender; Here is the door; Missa Aedi Christi: Kyrie; Credo; Sanctus; Benedictus; Agnus Dei; Gloria; Sing lullaby; A spotless rose; Where wast thou?

Ⓜ  CRD 3455. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom (organ)

A further collection of the music of Herbert Howells, splendidly sung by Edward Higginbottom's fine choir, while he provides the organ interludes in addition. Among the shorter pieces, the carol-anthem Sing lullaby is especially delightful, and the programme ends with the motet Where wast thou?, essentially affirmative, in spite of the question posed at the opening. Beautifully spacious sound makes this a highly rewarding collection.

Requiem. Motets: The House of the Mind; A Sequence for St Michael

 Chan. 9019. Finzi Singers, Spicer – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Lord thou hast been our refuge, etc. ***

Requiem; Take him, earth, for cherishing

 United Recordings 88033. Barber, Field, Johnstone, Angus, Vasari, Backhouse – MARTIN: Mass ***

Howells's Requiem is the work which prepared the way for Hymnus Paradisi, providing some of the material for it. For unaccompanied chorus, it presents a gentler, compact view of what in the big cantata becomes powerfully expansive. The Finzi Singers, 18-strong, give a fresh and atmospheric, beautifully moulded performance, well coupled with two substantial motets with organ by Howells, as well as choral pieces by Vaughan Williams.

On United the soloists and Vasari, a choir conducted by Jeremy Backhouse, are absolutely first class and give a well-nigh exemplary performance, possibly finer than its immediate rival. Doubtless couplings will resolve the matter of choice. The present disc offers the Requiem in harness with another Mass from the inter-war years by Frank Martin.

Stabat Mater

🗝 Ⓑ  Chan. 2 for 1 247-27 (2). Archer, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Rozhdestvensky – Missa Sabrinensis ****

The Stabat Mater was Howells's last major work. Though the ecstasy is not as consistently sustained as in the earlier Missa Sabrinensis, with which it is now coupled; with many more passages of hushed devotion, one registers with new intensity the agony of St John the Divine at the foot of the Cross, the companion of the Virgin Mary. The saint is personified in the tenor solos, here sung superbly by Neill Archer with a clear, heady tone, starting with his first thrilling entry on O quam tristis. As in the Missa, Rozhdestvensky proves the most passionate advocate, magnetically leading one through the whole rich score. Though ensemble sometimes suffers, it is a small price to pay for such thrusting, spontaneous-sounding conviction. Glowing, rich sound.

HUMMEL, Johann (1778–1837)

Bassoon Concerto in F

 Chan. 9656. Popov, Russian State SO, Polyansky – MOZART; WEBER: Bassoon Concertos ***

A first-class modern recording of Hummel's genial Bassoon Concerto was needed, and Valeri Popov fits the bill, twinklingly good-natured and elegant, especially in the swinging 6/8 finale. His woody timbre (a French instrument perhaps) is most appealing, and Polyansky provides a warmly polished accompaniment, helped by the resonant, but not clouded, recording.

Piano Concerto in A; L'Enchanment d'Oberon; Rondo brillant, 'Le Retour à Londres'; 8 Variations & Coda on 'O du lieber Augustin'

* Chan. 10374. Shelley, LMP

By far the earliest work here is the A major Piano Concerto, written, like another unnumbered A major concerto (already recorded by Shelley), in about 1798 when the composer was still in his teens. It is Shelley's gift that with his phenomenal agility and clarity of articulation he can make Hummel's decorative writing a delight. The slow movement of the concerto is a lyrical Romanze, again with plentiful keyboard decoration, leading to a charming Rondo finale with a lightly skipping main theme and with one more serious episode in the middle, when the key switches to the relative minor key of F sharp minor.

L'Enchanment d'Oberon (with that French word spelt incorrectly) not only echoes Weber's one-movement Konzertstück of six years earlier, but in its five sections it relates to the opera, if with few direct quotations. This is unashamedly light music, designed for immediate appeal, with a march in lightly dotted rhythm leading to a storm episode. Le Retour à Londres of 1831 was expressly designed as a tribute to the British capital on the first of his 'grand farewell tours'. A cadenza links the slow, ruminative introduction to the main body of the allegro, featuring a jaunty Rondo theme over an oompah rhythm, leading to an equally jaunty march. Shelley again proves an ideal soloist. As a tailpiece comes the purely orchestral set of variations and coda on the tinkling little German folksong, O du lieber Augustin. The tune may be unremittingly corny in its three-in-a-bar Laendler rhythms, but it is liable to stick in the mind for hours afterwards. First-rate recording, clear and vivid, warm and full.

Piano Concerto in C, Op. 34; Rondos brillants in A, Op. 56 & B flat, Op. 98

 Chan. 10216. Shelley, LMP

This disc from Howard Shelley, with full, open, well-balanced sound and sparkling performances, rounds off the Chandos series with the C major work, the earliest of Hummel's mature piano concertos, written in 1809, the year of Beethoven's Emperor Concerto. The two works labelled Rondo brillant were written later, in 1814 and 1822 respectively, each with a lyrical introduction of roughly five minutes leading on to a rondo finale, full of elaborate passagework for the soloist – both rather like concertos without a first movement.

Piano Concertos: in A min., Op. 85; B min., Op. 89

🔑 * Chan. 8507. Hough, ECO, Thomson

The A minor is Hummel's most often-heard piano concerto, never better played, however, than by Stephen Hough on this prize-winning Chandos disc. The coda is quite stunning; it is not only his dazzling virtuosity that carries all before it but also the delicacy and refinement of colour he produces. The B minor, Op. 89, is more of a rarity, and is given with the same blend of virtuosity and poetic feeling which Hough brings to its companion. He is given expert support by Bryden Thomson and the ECO – and the recording is first class.

Piano Concerto in A flat, Op. 113; Concertino in G, Op. 73; Gesellschafts Rondo, Op. 117

 Chan. 9558. Shelley, LMP

The Concertino is slight and frothy but is played with elegance and virtuosity by Howard Shelley, who directs from the keyboard. The A flat major Concerto comes from 1827 and was written for the composer's concert tours of 1828–30. It is well scored and the solo part is brilliantly decorative. Some have found the final Rondo alla Spagniola prophetic of Chopin's E minor Concerto. The Gesellschafts Rondo (Society Rondo) from 1829 is a 12-minute piece consisting of a slow introduction and a dashing vivace. It is all fresh and delightful, even if it plumbs no depths. Brilliant playing from Shelley.

Double Concerto for Piano & Violin, Op. 17; Violin Concerto (completed by Gregory Rose)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.557595. Trostiansky, Osetinskaya, Russian PO, Rose

Hummel echoes Mozart's great Sinfonia concertante in his Double Concerto of 1805, a charming work with elegant interplay between the soloists, particularly in the playful Rondo finale. The great merit of this Russian performance is the piano contribution of Polina Osetinskaya, with Hummel's rippling passagework played with crystal-clear articulation. The violinist, Alexander Trostiansky, is a fluent and able artist, but sadly his tone is unpleasantly acid, a failing which also mars the Violin Concerto. This is a piece that the Hummel scholar, Joel Sachs, has counted 'doubtful or unverifiable', though there are plenty of characteristic touches.

Grand Rondeau brillant; Oberon's Magic Horn; Variations & Finale in B flat, Op. 115; Variations in F, Op. 97

(BB)  Naxos 8.557845. Hinterhuber, Gävle SO, Grodd

The four concertante pieces on this imaginative disc were written between 1820 and 1833, primarily as vehicles to show off Hummel's virtuosity at the keyboard. Christopher Hinterhuber, who has already recorded piano music by C. P. E. Bach for Naxos, is a first-rate soloist, accompanied by the Gävle Symphony Orchestra, one of the oldest in Sweden, under its German music director, Uwe Grodd. An excellent disc of long-buried rarities, well worth hearing.

Trumpet Concerto in E flat

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony SMK 89611. Marsalis, Nat. PO, Leppard – HAYDN: Concerto  (with concert: Trumpet Concertos ✿ ***)

The Hardenberger and Wynton Marsalis performance has been reissued within a well-chosen collection heard in the familiar brass key of E flat. Marsalis (and his accompanists) do not miss the genial lilt inherent in the dotted theme of the first movement, and the finale captivates the ear with its high spirits and breezy bravura. Marsalis's approach is straight and classical. In matters of bravura, however, he relishes the sparkling finale.

(i) Violin Concerto in G; Adagio and Rondo alla Polacca in A (for violin & orchestra); Potpourri for Viola and Orchestra in G min., Op. 94; Variations, Op. 115 (for piano & orchestra)

 Chan. 10255. Shelley, LMP, (i) with Ehnes

The Hummel scholar Joel Sachs lists the composer's G major Violin Concerto among the 'doubtful or unverifiable works', but it has many characteristic touches, built as it is on warmly lyrical themes, starting with a clean-cut march tune marked by dotted rhythms. The Canadian violinist, James Ehnes, is the brilliant and persuasive soloist. The Variations in B flat for piano and orchestra finds the soloist, Howard Shelley, in peak form, dazzlingly finger-perfect, and the result is a delight. Played and recorded like this, all these works are immensely enjoyable.

Sappho von Mitilene (ballet), Op. 68; Die Zauberschloss: Suite; 12 Waltzes & Coda

* Chan. 10415. LMP, Shelley

The ballet Sappho von Mitilene, based on the Sapphic legend from ancient Greece, is here represented by 12 movements lasting a full 47 minutes. The scoring adds to the charming sequence, with weighty brass including alto, tenor and bass trombones as well as trumpet, timpani and horn. Howard Shelley draws beautifully sprung rhythms from the London Mozart Players who, as recorded, sound rather large for such a work. Die Zauberschloss ('The Magic Castle') is much more clearly illustrative and again nicely varied, with a Minuet, a Tarantella and a Laendler ending the work with fine panache. On a very well-filled disc the extra item is a charmer too, with 12 tiny waltzes, all of them less than a minute long. One hopes more Hummel ballet music will now be unearthed.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Amusement for Piano & Violin in F min., Op. 108; Violin Sonatas: in F, Op. 5/2; C, Op. 14; Variations 'alla Monferina' in D, Op. 54 for Piano & Cello

 Mer. CDE 84439. Triangulus

The title 'Amusement' for the first of the four works on this Meridian disc could not be more apt. This is in effect a compact sonatina for violin and piano, which brings out the open, unpretentious qualities of Hummel's writing at their most appealing. Though longer and structurally more elaborate, the two Sonatas are hardly more ambitious, two works similarly designed to entertain without making too many demands on the listener.

The Variations 'alla Monferina' for cello and piano, varied and inventive, have a haunting little refrain in 6/8 which recurs at various points. After ten variations the piece is rounded off with a galloping 6/8 coda. Though Alison Moncrieff's cello is not helped by the recording, which underlines some minor flaws, this is another engaging example of Hummel's attractive and undemanding writing. In both the works with violin and those with cello, Lyn Garland at the piano is the prime mover, as Hummel would have expected, always fresh and lively.

Flute Sonatas 1 in G, Op. 2/2; 2 in D, Op. 50; 3 in A, Op. 64; (i) Flute Trio in A, Op. 78; Grand rondeau brillant for Flute & Piano in G, Op. 126

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553473. Daoust, Picard, with (i) Dolin

Hummel's elegant, easy-going melodic style seems custom-made for the flute, and his three lightweight sonatas are lacking in neither diversity nor charm. The Grand rondeau brillant is entertainingly like a Weber display piece. The performances on Naxos are both sunny and technically felicitous, and are warmly recorded. The Trio is an ingenuous set of variations on a Russian folk tune which lends itself to sparkling divisions. Here there is plenty of bustle before the work ends peacefully.

Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 87; Piano Septet in D min., Op. 74

Ⓑ  Decca Australian Eloquence (ADD) 476 2447. Melos Ens. – WEBER: Clarinet Quintet ***

These two highly engaging works show the composer at his most melodically fecund and his musical craftsmanship at its most apt. His skill at shaping and balancing a movement can be impressive: it is the ideas themselves (as in all music) that can make or break a structure, and here they are entirely appropriate to music designed to entertain. This these works certainly do in such spontaneous and polished performances. The 1965 sound is warm, full and rich, and this is a vintage recording in every way; and this version of the Piano Quintet is preferable to that on its Hyperion Dyad competitor. The Weber coupling is a charmer too.

Piano Trios 1–7

Ⓜ  MDG 3307/8 (2). Trio Parnassus

Comparing the first with the last of the trios shows no marked development of style of the kind one expects with the very greatest composers, but all seven works are individually rewarding in their diverse ways, and the composer's fund of ideas never dries up for a moment. The Trio Parnassus play throughout with consistent zest and spontaneity and they obviously enjoy the simple lyrical melodies. They are admirably recorded and this box can carry a strong recommendation.

Septet in D min., Op. 74

🔑 Ⓜ  CRD 3344. Nash Ens. – BERWALD: Septet ***

Hummel's Septet is an enchanting and inventive work with a virtuoso piano part, expertly dispatched here by Clifford Benson. A fine performance and excellent recording make this a highly desirable issue, particularly in view of the enterprising coupling.

Serenades, Op. 63 & 66; Potpourri, Op. 53

 MDG 301 1344-2. Consortium Classicum (Dieter Klocker, Helman Jung, Andreas Krecher, Sonja Prunnbauer, Thomas Duis)

This, unashamedly, is a collection of fun music, performed by the members of Consortium Classicum with the sort of exuberance that Hummel and his friends must have brought to these confections, designed for relaxed festive evenings in the Imperial Gardens in Vienna or in private houses. Rounding things off comes a jaunty contredanse-cum-waltz, evidently Hummel's own invention. These evidently are the first ever recordings of light music from another age, and they can still give much pleasure in performances like these.

String Quartets: in C; in G; in E flat, Op. 30/1–3

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55166. Delmé Qt

Hummel's three quartets are closer to Haydn than Beethoven, though the first of the set in C major with its impressive opening Adagio e mesto in the minor key, and fine Adagio, obviously leans towards the influence of the later composer, while the audacious quotation of Comfort ye from Handel's Messiah in the preceding Andante brings yet another example of Hummelian sleight of hand. In short these are fascinating works, highly inventive, and crafted with the composer's usual fluent charm. They are splendidly played by the Delmé group, who provide plenty of vitality and warmth. The Hyperion recording is fresh and believable.

Piano Sonata 2, Op. 13; La bella capricciosa (Polonaise), Op. 55; Caprice, Op. 49; La contemplazione (Una fantasia piccola), Op. 107/3; Hungarian Rondo, Op. 107/6; Rondo, Op. 11; Variations on a Theme from Gluck's Armide, Op. 57

 Chan. 9807. Shelley

Starting with a wittily pointed account of the Rondo, Opus 11, Howard Shelley gives the most persuasive accounts of piano music by this leading virtuoso of his time. He may never have developed towards free Romanticism as Beethoven, Schubert and Weber did, but such stylish performances as Shelley's, beautifully recorded, bring many delights, as in the sparkling Gluck Variations, the well-constructed Sonata, Opus 13, and the late, polka-like Hungarian Rondo.

Piano Sonatas 3 in F min., Op. 20; 5 in F sharp min., Op. 81; 6 in D, Op. 106

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67390. Hough

These three Sonatas are arguably the finest of the series, and Hough gives the most characterful performances, beautifully recorded. The most radical of the three, written in 1819, is in F sharp minor, in which Hummel fully embraces the new romantic movement, with a first movement that brings a very free rendering of sonata form, full of contrasts and surprises, built on a striking, angular main theme. The slow movement after a weighty introduction then anticipates Chopin's Nocturnes, leading to an energetic Slavonic dance finale. No. 6 in D marks a return to a more classical manner, at times like Weber, with a fast mazurka for Scherzo, while No. 3 in F minor of 1807 has a quirkiness typical of the composer, with a central slow movement marked to be played 'majestically'. In its way this makes as much of a discovery as Richard Hickox's revelatory recordings of Hummel Masses.

VOCAL MUSIC

Masses in B flat, Op. 77; D, Op. 111; (i) Alma Virgo

🔑  Chan. 0681. Gritton, Collegium Musicum 90, Hickox; (i) with Gritton

Like Haydn's last six settings of the Mass they were written for the name-day of the Princess Esterházy, and they have inspired Hickox and his team to performances just as electrifying as those they have given of those Haydn Masses. These Hummel Masses, unlike Haydn's, are for chorus alone without soloists. The Mass in D (1808) begins in sombre mood with some adventurous harmonies, but Hummel in both Masses, like Haydn, prefers vigorous movement to meditation, often in fugal writing with sharply syncopated rhythms, which makes for exhilarating results.

As with Haydn, the settings of the final Dona nobis pacem in both Masses, far from conveying peace, are joyfully energetic, though, unlike Haydn, Hummel fades down to a gentle close in each. Susan Gritton is the pure-toned soloist in the fill-up, Alma Virgo, an aria in two sections, with the chorus joining in for the culminating Alleluia with whooping horns.

Mass in D min., S67/W13; Salve Regina

 Chan. 0724. Gritton, Nichols, Helen Stephen, Padmore, Varcoe, Coll. Mus. 90 Ch. & O, Hickox

In the D minor Mass of 1805 Hummel seems intent on taking the listener by surprise, with the Credo starting lyrically in a flowing triple time, the opposite of a positive affirmation of belief. Throughout the Mass Hummel demonstrates that he is intent on writing a thoughtful rather than a sharply dramatic setting, with the soloists generally treated as a corporate team, set against the full choir, and the triumphant setting of Dona nobis pacem ends not on a fugue such as Haydn preferred but on powerful homophonic writing. The Salve Regina is hardly elegiac in its operatic style with elaborate coloratura for the soprano soloist, here glowingly sung by Susan Gritton. Richard Hickox again proves an ideal interpreter, drawing superb playing and singing from Collegium Musicum 90.

(i) Mass in E flat, Op. 80; Quod in urbe, Op. 88; Te Deum

🔑  Chan. 0712. Coll. Mus. 90, Hickox, (i) with Gritton, Murray, Gilchrist, Varcoe

The Mass in E flat has a winning freshness, with a setting of the Kyrie which, after opening gently, promptly expands into a joyful Allegro. The performance consistently captures the joy of Hummel's inspiration, with clean attack and fine diction from the chorus as well as the soloists. That clarity extends to the superb setting of the Te Deum, written at high speed to celebrate peace with Napoleon in 1805. Quod in urbe, written as a gradual for inclusion in services, also starts strikingly, with timpani alone in fanfare rhythm, another fine work neglected for far too long. With full, clear sound, recorded in the Blackheath Concert Hall, Hickox must again be congratulated.

Missa Solemnis in C; Te Deum

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557193. Wright, McKendree-Wright, Power, Griffiths, Tower Voices, New Zealand SO, Grodd

Here with New Zealand forces, including the brilliant professional chamber choir, Tower Voices, we have the longest of Hummel's five Masses in coupling with an electrifying setting of the Te Deum. Both were written in 1806, and one is constantly reminded that this was the period of the Napoleonic wars, when each of these works so often features martial music with fanfares, trumpets and drums. Unlike most Anglican settings, this Te Deum ends on a grand fortissimo. A thrilling issue, all the more recommendable at super-bargain price.

HUMPERDINCK, Engelbert (1854–1921)

Hänsel und Gretel (complete; DVD version)

* EuroArts DVD 2055888. Papoulkas, Gabler, Vermillion, Ketelsen, Vilsmaier, Teuscher, Female & Children's Ch. of Saxon State Op., Dresden, Hoffstetter (Stage Director: Katharina Thalbach, V/D: Andreas Morell)

This is a wholly enchanting production of Humperdinck's wonderfully tuneful children's opera that cannot be recommended too highly. It was the Dresden Semperoper's Christmas presentation in 2006 and it would be an ideal Christmas gift for any musical youngster – and it is very entertaining for adults too. There are no voices here of the calibre of Schwarzkopf and Grümmer, but Hans-Joachim Ketelsen (as Peter, the children's Father) sings his 'Tra-la-las' with richly resonant amiability, and Irmgard Vilsmaier as their Mother is unusually convincing dramatically. Iris Vermillion is a gloriously camp Witch (she enters glamorously and then changes into a seedier costume). But vocally the children dominate. Their Dance Duet is a real highlight, and Anna Gabler is vocally and dramatically strong as Gretel, while Lydia Teuscher sings charmingly as the Sandman and Dew Fairy. Michael Hoffstetter directs with flair, pacing the opera spontaneously, yet finding much glowing detail in Humperdinck's score, especially the strings and horns, helped by demonstration-worthy sound in the lively opera-house acoustic. But it is Katharina Thalbach's production that makes this such an enchanting entertainment, full of imaginative detail, from the angels who either swing in on wires or come down a chute, to the Witch's house, made of eatable biscuits, which conveniently turns into the oven. And one must not forget the hugely real giant tortoise who stays around to guard the children; and the happy ending is exhilaratingly staged, with glorious singing from the chorus of women and children.

Hänsel und Gretel (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ✿ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.110897/8. Schwarzkopf, Grümmer, Metternich, Ilosvay, Schürhoff, Felbermayer, Children's Ch., Philh. O, Karajan (with additional excerpts sung by Supervia, Ferraris, Hüsch, Seinemeyer, Jung)

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 67061-2 (2). Schwarzkopf, Grümmer, Metternich, Ilosvay, Schürhoff, Felbermayer, Children's Ch., Philh. O, Karajan

Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) S2K 96455 (2). Cotrubas, Von Stade, Ludwig, Nimsgern, Te Kanawa, Söderström, Cologne Op. Children's Ch., Gürzenich O, Pritchard

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 478 0143 (2). Fassbaender, Popp, Berry, Hamari, Burrowes, Gruberová, Schlemm, V. Boys' Ch., VPO, Solti

Karajan's classic 1950s set of Humperdinck's children's opera, with Schwarzkopf and Grümmer peerless in the name-parts, is enchanting; this was an instance where everything in the recording went right. The original mono LP set was already extremely atmospheric. In most respects the sound has as much clarity and warmth as rival recordings made in the 1970s. There is much to delight here; the smaller parts are beautifully done and Else Schürhoff's Witch is memorable.

This is now reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', but there is no doubt that the alternative Naxos set is the one to go for. This is one of the finest transfers Mark Obert-Thorn has achieved to date. Moreover, as a bonus on the second disc we are offered a series of historical recordings of excerpts dating from 1928, with Conchita Supervia rattling away as Hansel, partnered by Maria Ferraris as Gretel singing the Dance Duet in Italian; Meta Seinemeyer and Helen Jung in 1929; Gerard Hüsch as Peter (in 1937); and three excerpts from 1935, with Elisabeth Schumann as the Sandman singing a duet with herself, accompanied by Ernest Lush.

Beautifully cast, the Pritchard version from Sony was the first in genuine stereo (in 1978) to challenge the vintage Karajan set. Cotrubas – sometimes a little grainy as recorded – and Von Stade both give charming characterizations, and the supporting cast is exceptionally strong, with Söderström an unexpected but refreshing and illuminating choice as the Witch. Pritchard draws idiomatic playing from the Gürzenich Orchestra, and the recording is pleasingly atmospheric. This is, however, another of those Masterwork reissues in which the libretto is only available via a CD-ROM and a personal computer.

Solti with the Vienna Philharmonic directs a strong, spectacular version, emphasizing the Wagnerian associations of the score. Solti does the Witch's Ride very excitingly, and the VPO are encouraged to play with consistent fervour throughout. The result, although rather lacking in charm, is well sung, with the two children (Brigitte Fassbaender and Lucia Popp) both engagingly characterized. Edita Gruberová is an excellent Dew Fairy and Walter Berry is first rate as Peter. Anny Schlemm's Witch is memorable if vocally unsteady, and there are some imaginative touches of stereo production associated with Hocus pocus and her other moments of magic. The recording is characteristically vivid. A full libretto accompanies the reissue.

Hänsel und Gretel: highlights

(BB)  EMI Encore 586097-2. Von Otter, Bonney, Lipovšek, Schwarz, Schmidt, Hendricks, Lind, Tölz Boys' Ch., Bav. RSO, Tate

It is good to have a set of highlights from the deleted Bavarian set conducted, fairly briskly but sympathetically, by Jeffrey Tate. Barbara Bonney as Gretel and Anne Sofie von Otter as Hänsel are hardly less fine than the exceptionally strong duos on rival sets, and the chill that Marjana Lipovšek conveys as the Witch, using the widest range of expression, is equally telling. The recording has plenty of warmth and atmosphere. A bargain.

Hansel and Gretel (complete; in English)

* Chan. 3143 (2). Larmore, Evans, Henschel, Plowright, Hayward, Tynan, Montague, New London Children's Ch., Philh. O, Mackerras

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 5 75993-2 (2). Kern, Neville, Howard, Hunter, Herincx, Robinson, Sadler's Wells Op. O, Bernardi – WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll: L. Sinf., C. Davis ***

Useful as the old Classics for Pleasure set has been, Mackerras's new English version of Hansel and Gretel trumps it on almost every point. With Chandos's digital recording clear and beautifully separated, yet with an agreeable bloom on voices, the version, sponsored by the Sir Peter Moores Opera in English Foundation, brings an exceptional, lively performance with Sir Charles Mackerras the inspired conductor. The new David Pountney translation is used, fresher and more naturally idiomatic, and the cast of soloists is distinguished, with even Jane Henschel as the Witch refusing to caricature the role. Jennifer Larmore and Rebecca Evans sing delightfully in the title-roles, their voices properly contrasted. Rosalind Plowright and Robert Harwood make an impressive Mother and Father, and the Dew Fairy (Sarah Tynan) and Sandman (Diana Montague) also create pleasingly different images. Mackerras directs the Philharmonia Orchestra with his usual vitality. This is a set that will clearly stand the test of time as an English version, in every way rivalling even the best of versions in the original German, with the fresh young voices of the New London Children's Choir beautifully caught.

From CfP, this was the first full-length Sadler's Wells Opera recording in English, and it proved to be one of the finest of all the company's ventures into the recording studio. It was also the first complete foreign opera in English on record since way back in the days of early operatic 78s. The result is warm and atmospheric and not at all artificial sounding.

HURLSTONE, William
(1876–1906)

(i) Piano Concerto in D; Fantasie-Variations on a Swedish Air; (ii) Piano Quartet in E min., Op. 43; Piano Trio in G

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 2286 (2). (i) Parkin, LPO, Braithwaite; (ii) Tunnell Piano Qt

Hurlstone's was a tragic career. He was a prodigy as a composer, sensitive and imaginative; his teacher, Stanford, thought him more promising than his contemporary, Vaughan Williams. He was also a fine pianist, but ill-health and poverty prevented him from developing these talents, and he died at the age of thirty. Neither of the two concertante works has the formal strength of his chamber music, but they are both distinctive, the Concerto the more positive, the Variations the more quirkily individual. Both performances do the music full justice and they sound excellent. The two chamber works offered here are characteristic, superficially Brahmsian in manner, as with Stanford, but with a winning Englishry. The Piano Quartet is the more vital of the two, but both are richly rewarding and very well played and recorded.

The Magic Mirror: Suite; Variations on a Hungarian Air; Variations on an Original Theme

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 208. LPO, Braithwaite

The Variations on an Original Theme date from 1896, though the theme on which they are based comes from a Trio, written two years earlier. They show considerable inventive resource and although, like the Variations on a Hungarian Air, there is also a certain debt to Brahms, they have a lightness of touch and a feeling for the orchestra which is marked. The Magic Mirror Suite of 1900 also offers reminders of the Elgar of The Wand of Youth. But it is not long before one can sense something quietly individual beginning to surface. The LPO and Nicholas Braithwaite give lively, cultured performances of this eminently well-crafted, immaculately scored and civilized music, and they are beautifully recorded.

Cello Sonata in D

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7102. Fuller, Dussek – HARTY: Butterflies, etc.; PARRY: Cello Sonata in A ***

Hurlstone's Cello Sonata is as well fashioned and musicianly as you would expect from this gifted composer. It receives excellent advocacy from Andrew Fuller, who also writes the intelligent notes, and his fine pianist, Michael Dussek. At the same time it is not easy to discern a distinctive voice here beneath the Brahmsian veneer. The recording is excellent, well balanced and present.

(i) Piano Quartet in E min.; Piano Trio in G; Adagio (arr. from (i) Cello Sonata 2)

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7128. Dussek Piano Trio; (i) with Boyd

The idiom in both the Piano Trio and the Piano Quartet is conservative, with echoes of Mendelssohn and Brahms as much as of Stanford. What raises them above the level of imitations is the fluent memorability of both the material and the arguments, as in the jig-like Scherzo and jaunty finale of the Trio and the sweetly tuneful Andante cantabile of the Quartet. The moving Adagio lamentoso slow movement of the Cello Sonata No. 2 was arranged for viola by Hurlstone's fellow composer, Frank Bridge, and it makes a fine supplement to the major works. It is played beautifully here by James Boyd, who also joins the excellent Dussek Trio for the Piano Quartet. When tunes sprang from Hurlstone's imagination so fluently, it would be good to hear some of his dozens of songs and the cantata, Alfred the Great.

HYDE, Miriam (1913–2005)

(i) Piano Concertos 1 in E flat min.; 2 in C sharp min.; (ii) Village Fair

(*) Australian Universal ABC Classics (ADD) 465 735-2. (i) Hyde; Australian SO, Simon; (ii) Sydney SO, Franks

Miriam Hyde was a well-respected composer and teacher in Australia, and we have here her early Piano Concertos, written in 1932–3 and 1934–5 respectively. They are unashamedly romantic in tradition, with bold writing and rich orchestration – Brahms and Rachmaninov being obvious models. The tunes are memorable and each work has many felicities, not least in the touches of folk-like melody and colour. It is all very enjoyable and the music is instantly appealing. These are excellent performances, though the 1975 recording is a little thin. With an attractive fill-up in the form of Village Fair, once again with folk-like themes, this is a valuable addition to the catalogue. Miriam Hyde certainly deserves wider recognition.

IBERT, Jacques (1890–1962)

(i) Bachannale; Bostoniana; (ii) Flute Concerto; (i) Divertissement; (iii) Escales; (i) Louisville Concerto;

(iii) Ouverture de fête; (i) Symphonie marine; (iii) Tropismes pour des amours imaginaires; (iv) 4 Chansons de Don Quichotte

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD/DDD) 5 17639-2 (2). (i) CBSO, Frémaux; (ii) Pahud, Zürich Tonhalle O, Zinman; (iii) French Nat. R. O, Martinon; (iv) van Dam, Lyon Opéra O, Nagano

A generous and interesting collection. Even if some of it does not show the composer at his best, it is all played idiomatically under Frémaux, and is well recorded in the early 1970s. Escales, the Ouverture de fête and Tropismes have genuine atmosphere in Martinon's hands. But the highlights of the collection are the virtuosic and stylish account of Ibert's delightful Flute Concerto by Emmanuel Pahud and the Zürich Tonhalle Orchestra under David Zinman, superbly recorded, and José Van Dam's fine performances of the rare Quatre chansons de Don Quichotte in which the closing Chanson de la mort is most movingly sung and Kent Nagano's accompaniment is very sensitive.

La Ballade de la Geôle de Reading; (i) Persée et Andromède (opera; complete); Sarabande pour Dulcinée

 Avie AV 0008. (i) Massis, Rouillon, Beuron; Strasbourg PO, Latham-Koenig

The Ballade de la Geôle de Reading, inspired by passages from Oscar Wilde's poem, ignores the text in a purely orchestral evocation, with echoes of Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé hardly suggesting the rigours of prison life. Persée et Andromède is a miniature opera in two compact Acts, telling of Andromeda and the monster Cathos who eventually, after being slaughtered by Perseus, rises from his remains to become a handsome prince. The opening immediately establishes an exotic atmosphere, very French and when Cathos is finally transformed, his music grows more sensuous too, culminating in a love duet. All three principal soloists are first rate, with fresh, youthful-sounding voices. The Sarabande pour Dulcinée, taken from Ibert's ballet Don Quichotte, is an attractive makeweight. Sensitive direction from Jan Latham-Koenig throughout and very well recorded, warmly responsive playing from the Strasbourg Philharmonic.

Concertino da camera for Saxophone & Orchestra

✿ * BIS CD-1357. Delangle, Singapore SO, Shui (with: MILHAUD: Scaramouche; Paule MAURICE: Tableaux de Provence; RAVEL: Pavane pour une infante défunte; Florent SCHMITT: Légende, Op. 66; Henri TOMASI: Saxophone Concerto ***)

Ibert's charming Concertino comes first and encapsulates the spirit of the disc. Two pieces are new to the catalogue: the Tableaux de Provence by the little-known woman composer Paule Maurice (1910–67) and the Concerto for alto saxophone and orchestra by the Corsican, Henri Tomasi (1901–72). In addition to the familiar Ravel Pavane pour une infante défunte in the arrangement by Tami Nodaira and Milhaud's Scaramouche, the Tomasi and Maurice have charm and atmosphere and radiate the sunny ambience of Provence. The Florent Schmitt Légende, Op. 66, is a strong piece, inventive and resourceful. Claude Delangle is a most distinguished exponent of this delightful repertoire and is eminently well supported by the Singaporeans under Lan Shui, and the BIS team.

Concerto for Cello & Wind Instruments

() BBC (mono) BBCL 4156-2. du Pré, Michael Krein Ens., Krein – DVOŘÁK: Cello Concerto **(*)

Jacqueline du Pré probably took Ibert's delightful concerto into her repertory for a BBC studio concert in 1962 with the Michael Krein Ensemble, whose enterprising and expert programmes were frequent at this period. A splendid performance and a worthwhile and welcome, if all too brief, supplement to her superb Prom performance of the Dvořák, superbly played, with the cello the first among many soloists.

Flute Concerto

🔑  BIS SACD 1559. Bezaly, São Paulo SO, Neschling (with BORNE: Carmen Fantasy) – RODRIGO: Concierto pastoral ***

Sharon Bezaly's account is very much the equal of Pahud's, ravishing in the reverie of the slow movement, and wonderfully exuberant in the finale, with its unbuttoned reminder of the Divertissment. Her Rodrigo coupling, too, is more tempting than Pahud's Khachaturian transcription, and the BIS programme includes also François Borne's seductive and dazzling Fantaisie brillante on airs from 'Carmen', played equally bewitchingly. The BIS multi-channel recording too is in the demonstration bracket.

Divertissement

🔑 * Chan. 9023. Ulster O, Tortelier – MILHAUD: Le Bœuf; Création; POULENC: Les Biches ****

() Testament mono SBT 1309. Paris Conservatoire O, Désormière – IPPOLITOV-IVANOV: Caucasian Sketches; DOMENICO SCARLATTI (arr. Tommasini): The Good-Humoured Ladies; TCHAIKOVSKY: Sleeping Beauty Suite ()

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 4 82103-2. City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox (with FAURÉ: Pavane) – BIZET: Symphony in C; RAVEL: Tombeau de Couperin; TCHAIKOVSKY: Serenade for Strings; Souvenir de Florence **(*)

Yan Pascal Tortelier provides at last a splendid, modern, digital version of Ibert's Divertissement. There is much delicacy of detail, and the coupled suite from Poulenc's Les Biches is equally delectable. Marvellous, top-drawer Chandos sound.

Désormière was a stylist, and it shows in every bar. This 1951 recording, produced (like the rest of the programme) by John Culshaw, remains unsurpassed in terms of sheer character and style, though there have been many since that have been played with greater polish and better recorded. Lovers of French music of the 1920s should not miss it.

Hickox presents the Divertissement with both style and gusto, and the City of London players respond with much spirit, especially in the finale, complete with police whistle. The recording is a shade over-resonant but fully acceptable when the proceedings have moments of riotous vigour. If you want the rest of the programme, this is enjoyable enough.

Escales (Ports of Call)

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) SACD 82876 61387-2. Boston SO, Munch – DEBUSSY: La Mer (*) ; SAINT-SAËNS: Symphony 3 ✿ ***

Munch's Escales brings some ravishing textures from the Boston violins, and the finale, Valencia, has sparkling dance rhythms. The 1956 recording, if balanced rather closely, has brilliance and transparency; and it sounds much fuller in this new SACD transfer.

CHAMBER MUSIC

3 Pièces brèves

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 6543. Athena Ens. – GOUNOD: Petite symphonie in B flat; POULENC: Sextet ***

() BBC mono BBCL 4066-2. Dennis Brain Wind Quintet (with instrumental recital ())

Ibert's Trois pièces brèves could hardly be played with more polish, wit and affection than in this brilliantly realized performance by the Athena group, the effect enhanced when they are recorded so realistically.

The characterful blend of Dennis Brain and his colleagues in his Wind Quintet (Gareth Morris, Leonard Brain, Stephen Waters and Cecil James) is fully captured in the BBC mono recording, and the warm, spirited geniality of their ensemble brings a delightful bonhomie to the music's wit – the pastoral opening is captivating.

INDIA, Sigismondo d' (1582–1629)

Amico hai vinto; Diana (Questo dardo, quest'arco); Misera me (Lamento d'Olympia); Piangono al pianger mio; Sfere fermate; Torna il sereno zefiro

 Hyp. CDA 66106. Kirkby, Rooley (chitarone) – MONTEVERDI: Lamento d'Olympia, etc. ***

Sigismondo d'India was in the vanguard of the new movement founded by Monteverdi, and his laments show him to be a considerable master of expressive resource. His setting of the Lamento d'Olympia makes a striking contrast to Monteverdi's and is hardly less fine. This is an affecting and beautiful piece, and so are its companions, particularly when they are sung as freshly and accompanied as sensitively as here.

Madrigals & Canzonettes: Arditi baci miei; Cara mia cetra; Infelice Didone; Intenerite voi, lagrime mi; La mia Filli crudel; Mentre che'l cor; Mormora seco alquanto; Odi quel Rossignolol; Piange Madonna; Questa mia aurora; Scherniscimi, crudele; Sfere, fermate li giri sonori; Sù, sù prendi la cetra; Torna il sereno zfiro; Un di soletto; La Virtù; Vorrei baciarti, o Filli

🔑  HM HMC 901774. Kiehr, Concerto Soave, Aymes (with: GIOVANNI-MARIA TRABACI: Gagliarda; Partita prima sopra Ruggiero; Partita sesta Cromatica sopra Ruggiero; Seconda Stravaganza; ASCANIO MAYONE: Toccata V per il cimbalo cromatico)

This is a superb disc and bears out the promise of the earlier Hyperion collection, above. Sigismondo d'India's madrigals undoubtedly rank alongside those of Monteverdi, both in the quality of their melodic lines and in their expressive, chromatic richness. And there could be no more ideal performer for them than Maria Cristina Kiehr. Her vocal beauty and ravishing phrasing have long been apparent from her previous records. Her vocal decoration is astonishing. But she is also infinitely touching in the songs of unrequited love. She closes the recital with the soaringly joyful La Virtù, a number to confirm d'India's mastery if one were needed. Three instrumental or keyboard pieces by contemporary composers, Giovanni-Maria Trabaci, Ascanio Mayone and Giovanni de Macque, are used as pleasing interludes. The accompaniments, employing a small instrumental ensemble including lute, guitar, harp and organ (or one of these), are just about perfect, and the recording is first class. Full texts and translations are included. A disc to put straight away at the top of your list.

Il primo libro de madrigali (1606): Interdette speranz'e van desio. Ottavo libro de madrigali: Il pastor fido, Act IV, Scene 9: Se tu, Silvio crudel, mi saetti (five madrigal cycle)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Virgin 5 61165-2. Chiaroscuro, L. Bar., Rogers – MONTEVERDI: Madrigals *** ✿

It is in the cycle from his Eighth Book of Madrigals, Se tu, Silvio crudel, mi saetti, that one experiences not only the composer's lyrical originality to the full but also his affinity with the operatic writing of his greater contemporary, Monteverdi. The vocal dialogue, which alternates solo and ensemble singing, is touching and dramatic by turns, and requires effortless vocal virtuosity. The quality of the performances is superlative, refined without a hint of preciosity, and always alive, while the accompaniments on the oboe and harpsichord are delicately balanced. An outstanding collection in every way.

INDY, Vincent d' (1851–1931)

(i) Choral varié; Lied. Saugefleurie; Wallenstein

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67690. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Fischer, (i) with Power

Memories of the old EMI recording of Wallenstein are not completely erased by this newcomer, but this is certainly a better played and recorded version of this rather enjoyable work. Thierry Fischer brings plenty of energy to this early but ambitious tone-poem, and the final and longest movement, La mort de Wallenstein, is very impressively done. The fill-ups are all rarities and well worth having: the two works for viola and orchestra are beautifully played by Lawrence Power (both very lovely works) while the tone-poem Saugefleurie is a typical mixture of the composer's Wagnerian influence mixing with his own very French style and producing some very beautiful, luminous colours from the orchestra. Very good sound, as usual, from this source.

Diptyque méditerranéen; Istar; Poème des rivages

🔑  Timpani 1C1101. Luxembourg PO, Krivine

The Poème des Rivages was the product of d'Indy's late love affair with a student, Caroline Janson, 36 years his junior. She returned his feelings, and d'Indy suddenly acknowledged the underlying sensuality of his own nature. The rich orchestral colours of these four seascapes develop an expressive radiance in his luminous scoring. The work is not another La Mer, but the final scene, Le mystère de l'océan, certainly depicts the sea's unpredictability and violence, returning at last to the gentle calm of the work's introduction.

The Poème des rivages followed in 1925/6 and reflects even more balmily the composer's new contentment with his young wife. Istar dates from 1896 and tells of the Assyrian goddess who (like Orfeo and Eurydice, only in reverse) seeks to retrieve her lover from the realm of the dead. Krivine makes the most of its sensuous feeling, and all three performances are of a high order. The Luxembourg Orchestra are obviously at home in these scores, and their conductor finds moments of genuine rapture in all three works, and he controls their differing structures admirably. The recording, too, is warmly atmospheric, and this disc should make new friends for the composer.

La forêt enchantée, Op. 8; Jour d'été à la montagne, Op. 61 ; Souvenirs, Op. 62

🔑 * Chan. 10464. Iceland SO, Gamba

These are three of d'Indy's most remarkable works; they reveal him not only as an impressionist in a Debussian mould, but also as influenced by both Wagner and folk-dance melodies from his own culture. La Forêt enchantée of 1878 is described as a Légende-symphonique; it is based on an epic romantic ballad by Ludwig Uhland. The orchestral writing is vividly melodramatic and the music is both sensuous and exciting. By the time the masterly Jour d'été à la montagne was written, some 30 years later, d'Indy's style had matured, and while the Wagnerian opulence remains this is written very much in the manner of Debussy and Ravel, with even a daybreak and chorus of birds at the opening. The sultry central section is entitled Après-midi sous les pins, but includes lively folk dancing before the weather clouds over with rumbles of thunder. Souvenirs followed almost immediately (in 1906) and was written in memory of his late wife (represented by an idée fixe – Bien-Aimée), romantically recalling their happy summers together and again evoking the countryside. The rich orchestration of the music in all three works is superbly realized by the excellent Iceland Symphony Orchestra under Rumon Gamba and the superbly expansive yet vivid Chandos recording, and this a very much a key record of d'Indy's orchestral music.

Jour d'été à la montagne, Op. 61; (i) Symphonie sur un chant montagnard (cévenole), Op. 25

(BB) (*) Warner Apex 0927 49809-2. R. France PO, Janowski; (i) with Collard

This inexpensive Apex reissue is worth having for the sake of Jour d'été à la montagne, one of d'Indy's most inspired pieces. This version is artistically superior to most rivals, though the late lamented Catherine Collard's version of the Symphonie sur un chant montagnard français, sometimes known as the Symphonie cévenole, is handicapped by some unsympathetic accompanying from Janowski, while the 1991 recording's synthetic balance does not allow the sound to expand. Good playing from the Orchestre Philharmonic de Radio France makes this disc value for money.

Karadec, Op. 34; Symphony 2; Tableaux de voyage

Ⓝ  Chan. 10514. Iceland SO, Gamba

D'Indy's Second Symphony remains one of the neglected masterpieces of turn-of-the-century French music. True, at almost 45 minutes it can seem a rather sprawling proposition, but Rumon Gamba's fresh, bracing performance brings out all the score's rich qualities, making one relish the many incidental delights this work offers. The melancholy and rather haunting theme played at the opening of the third movement, for example, is beautifully done here, but the standard of the playing from the Icelanders is generally very high. This is the finest performance of the score to date. The Tableaux de voyage, orchestrations by the composer of his piano music, makes an atmospheric and rather beautiful suite, and one relishes the exotic elements of the highly entertaining Karadec Suite.

Symphonie sur un chant montagnard français (Symphonie cévenole)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550754. Thiollier, Nat. SO of Ireland, De Almeida – FAURÉ: Ballade; FRANCK: Symphonic Variations **(*)

On Naxos the French-born but American-trained François-Joël Thiollier gives an intelligent performance, perfectly well accompanied and decently recorded, and with an interesting coupling. It is worth the money.

String Quartet 1

 Hyp. CDA 67097. Chilingirian Qt – CHAUSSON: String Quartet (completed D'INDY)

Among the string quartets which French composers wrote in the last years of the 19th century those of Vincent d'Indy are the most unjustly neglected, as this outstanding performance of 1 demonstrates. It is a striking work which in its bold thematic material often echoes Beethoven. A powerful first movement leads to an ecstatic slow movement, an elegant interlude and an exuberant finale. The Chausson quartet makes a very apt coupling here, completed by d'Indy after the composer's tragic death in a road accident.

IPPOLITOV-IVANOV, Mikhail (1859–1935)

Armenian Rhapsody, Op. 48; Caucasian Sketches, Set II: Iveria, Op. 42; Jubilee March (Voroshilov), Op. 67; (i) Mtzyri, Op. 54; Turkish Fragments, Op.

62; Turkish March, Op. 55; (ii) Aria: Assya: I wonder if it is misfortune

 ASV CDDCA 1102. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian; with (i) Hatsagortsian; (ii) Khachaturian

Tjeknavorian and ASV have turned up a second set of Caucasian Sketches, called Iveria, with a jubilant closing Georgian March that might become popular, like the Procession of the Sardar, given sufficient exposure. The Turkish Fragments describe the progress of an Eastern caravan, opening with a processional, and including a nocturnal sequence with a sultry Rimskian oboe melody. The symphonic poem Mtzyri is most notable for its interpolated ballad from the nymph who finds the young hero of the story wounded by a leopard in the forest. This is touchingly sung by Hasmit Hatsagortsian, if with a very characteristic Russian vibrato. Vardouhi Khachaturian's performance of the mezzo scena from Assya has no lack of temperament or eloquence, and the other (Turkish March) is enjoyably ebullient. Very well recorded, this CD is worth exploring if you enjoy this kind of undemanding and tuneful Russian orchestral music.

Caucasian Sketches (suite), Op. 10

 Chan. 9321. BBC PO, Glushchenko – KHACHATURIAN: Symphony 3, etc. ***

 ASV CDDCA 773. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian – KHACHATURIAN: Gayaneh, etc. **(*)

Once a popular repertory piece, the colourful Caucasian Sketches have fallen out of favour; only the final Procession of the Sardar is generously represented on CD. The present version by the BBC Philharmonic under Fedor Glushchenko is generally superior to the alternative on ASV.

The Procession of the Sardar is played by the Armenians with great brio. The other items rely mainly on picaresque oriental atmosphere for their appeal, which Tjeknavorian also captures evocatively in this brightly lit recording.

IRELAND, John (1879–1962)

Concertino pastorale; A Downland Suite (arr. composer and Geoffrey Bush); Orchestral Poem; 2 Symphonic Studies (arr. Bush)

🔑  Chan. 9376. City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

The valedictory Threnody of the Concertino pastorale and the lovely Elegy from the Downland Suite show the composer at his most lyrically inspired, and the rapt playing here does them full justice. The early Orchestral Poem (1904) is a surprisingly powerful work as presented here with great passion, with splendid brass writing at its climax. The two Symphonic Studies come from film music Ireland wrote for The Overlanders, not incorporated into the concert suites: the brass chromatics in the first have a familiar ring; the second has a wild momentum, recalling the cattle stampede in the film, but both stand up well as independent concert pieces.

Piano Concerto in E flat

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓜ * Dutton CDLX 7223. Stott, RPO, Handley – BRIDGE: Phantasm; WALTON: Sinfonia concertante ****

Piano Concerto in E flat; Legend for Piano & Orchestra; Mai-Dun (symphonic rhapsody)

 Chan. 8461. Parkin, LPO, Thomson

(i) Piano Concerto; Legend for Piano & Orchestra. Overture: Satyricon; 2 Symphonic Studies; (ii) These Things Shall Be

(*) Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 247. LPO, Boult, with (i) Parkin; (ii) Carol Case, LPO Ch.

John Ireland's Piano Concerto is unaccountably neglected in the concert hall, for it has an immediate and lasting appeal, and it is one of the very few true masterpieces among piano concertos by English composers. Kathryn Stott gives the most sympathetic reading of this delightful work on record since the original interpreter on disc, Eileen Joyce. Spaciously expressive in the lyrical passages and crisply alert in the jazzy finale, Stott plays with a sense of spontaneity, using freely idiomatic rubato. Very well recorded and well coupled, this version makes an easy first choice for this work.

The alternative versions include Eric Parkin's splendidly refreshing and sparkling performance, with excellent support from Bryden Thomson and the LPO, and they include the beautiful Legend and Mai-Dunn which are equally successful. It was also Parkin who was chosen for the 1968 Lyrita version, and here there is obviously dedicated playing by the LPO under Boult. The snag is the recording acoustic, opulent enough, but the reverberation blows up the textures of the music, piano and orchestra alike. However, the other works are worth having on disc, particularly These Things Shall Be, a choral work with a mixture of Elgarian nobilmente and Waltonian declamation which is very effective, although the lack of bite in the sound is a drawback.

A Downland Suite; Elegiac Meditation; The Holy Boy

 Chan. 8390. ECO, Garforth – BRIDGE: Suite for Strings ***

A Downland Suite was originally written for brass band. However, the present version was finished and put into shape by Geoffrey Bush, who also transcribed the Elegiac Meditation. David Garforth and the ECO play with total conviction and seem wholly attuned to Ireland's sensibility. The recording is first class, clear and naturally balanced.

A London Overture

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 79983-2. LSO, Barbirolli – BAX: Tintagel; DELIUS: Collection ***

Barbirolli's performance of the London Overture is a great success. The pithy main theme has character and the warm romanticism of the middle section is not allowed to overwhelm the work's conciseness. First-class recording means that this is unsurpassed.

A London Overture; Epic March; The Holy Boy; (i–ii) Greater love hath no man; These things shall be; (i; iii) Vexilla Regis

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 10110X. LSO, Hickox, with (i) L. Symphony Ch.; (ii) Terfel; (iii) Bott, Shaw, Oxley

Richard Hickox is a sympathetic interpreter of Ireland's music and he obtains sensitive results (and good singing) in The Holy Boy and These things shall be. The CD is of particular interest in that it brings a rarity, Vexilla Regis, for chorus, brass and organ, composed when Ireland was 19 and still a student of Stanford. First-class recorded sound.

MUSIC FOR BRASS

Comedy Overture; A Downland Suite (for Brass Band); The Holy Boy (arr. Cameron)

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55070. L. Brass Virtuosi, Honeyball – ELGAR: Severn Suite, etc.; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Prelude on 3 Welsh Hymns **(*)

John Ireland's Downland Suite and what was later – in its orchestral form – to become the London Overture were both conceived for brass band. The two central movements of the suite (Elegy and Minuet) and indeed the main 'Piccadilly' theme of the Overture sound especially well on brass, as does David Cameron's arrangement of The Holy Boy. Excellent performances and recording, but one could wish the ensemble was larger: these are first-rate players, but we need more of them.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Cello Sonata; (ii) Fantasy -Sonata for Clarinet & Piano; (iii) Phantasie Trio in A min; Piano Trios 2–3; (iv) Sextet for Clarinet, Horn & String Quartet; (v) Violin Sonatas 1–2

(*) Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 2271 (3). (i) Navarra; (ii) de Peyer; (iii; v) Neaman, (iii) Lloyd Webber; (i–iii; v) Parkin; (iv) Melos Ens. (members)

The Cello Sonata is both passionate and rhapsodic in feeling, and the performance here catches its romantic flair, even though Lloyd Webber's ASV version is finer. However, the performance of the Fantasy Sonata is marvellously persuasive, and this emerges as the most memorable of the three works recorded by the Melos group. The Sextet is an early work (1898), inspired by Brahms; its Brahmsian flavour is unmistakable, and the music has an attractive autumnal mood. The early First Violin Sonata is an attractive, spontaneous piece with a fine slow movement and a characteristically gay, dance-like finale. The Second (1917) is a splendid work, and admirers of the Piano Concerto are urged to discover its qualities in this very fine, dedicated performance, which catches its inspiration so well. Excellent recording throughout.

(i) Cello Sonata; (ii) Fantasy Sonata for Clarinet & Piano; (i) The Holy Boy (for cello & piano); (iii) Phantasie Trio; Piano Trios 2–3; (iv) Violin Sonatas 1–2

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Chan. 241-40 (2). (i; iii) Georgian; (i; iii–iv) I. Brown; (ii) de Peyer, Pryor; (iii–iv) Mordkovitch

Few British composers have written with quite such easy lyricism as John Ireland. The first two of the Piano Trios, well contrasted, are warmly appealing, but the masterpiece is the four-movement Piano Trio 3 of 1938, passionately intense. The two Violin Sonatas are both superb works too, masterfully played here by Lydia Mordkovitch with Ian Brown, who also accompanies Karine Georgian in the Cello Sonata. Completing the set, the recording of the Fantasy Sonata of 1943 for clarinet dates from earlier, with Gervase de Peyer and Gwenneth Pryor playing with equal commitment.

(i) Cello Sonata in G min.; The Holy Boy; (ii) Violin Sonata 1 in D min.; (i; ii) Piano Trio 2 in E

🔑  ASV Gold GLD 4009. McCabe; with (i) J. Lloyd Webber; (ii) Hope

Inspired performances, all with John McCabe at the piano. The First Violin Sonata, with Daniel Hope a masterly violinist, may not be as well known as the Second, but it is just as skilfully written, with a tenderly meditative slow movement between powerful outer movements. In a single movement, compact but well varied, the Piano Trio 2 is one of Ireland's tautest works, inspired by the horrors of the First World War, while the Cello Sonata of 1923 is stylistically more adventurous in its chromatic writing, rounded off with a vigorous finale that anticipates the jazzy rhythms of the comparable movement in Ireland's popular Piano Concerto. That and The Holy Boy in its cello version were recorded well before the rest, but the sound remains consistent, and the performances with Julian Lloyd Webber are characteristically sensitive.

Clarinet Trio in D (reconstructed Stephen Fox); Fantasy Sonata for Clarinet & Piano; The Holy Boy for Clarinet & Piano; Sextet for Clarinet, French Horn & String Quartet

Ⓝ (BB) * Naxos 8.570550. Plane, Rahman, Neary, Pyatt, Maggini Qt

All these works are available elsewhere in different permutations, except the delightful Clarinet Trio which the composer left unfinished. As the work used material from an early piano trio Stephen Fox has been able to rewrite the missing sections. It is ingeniously done and the result is most attractive. The other works also show the composer at his best and are beautifully played, with Robert Plane a characterful and sensitive clarinettist, and David Pyatt making an impressive horn contribution to the Sextet, underpinned by the excellent Maggini Quartet. With excellent recording this is a most desirable disc.

Phantasie Trio

 Daphne DAPHNE 1026. Trio Poseidon – BRAHMS: Piano Trio 1; HAYDN: Piano Trio 32 ***

The Ireland performance here demonstrates how fluent his writing already was, as he makes the transitions from one section to another with a warmly lyrical central sequence and dazzlingly brilliant conclusion. It makes one wish that the Poseidon Trio had recorded more Ireland, but much of the attraction of this disc is the very variety of the programme.

Violin Sonatas 1 in D min.; 2 in A min.; Bagatelle; Berceuse; Cavatina; The Holy Boy

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55164. Barritt, Edwards

Paul Barritt and Catherine Edwards make an effective partnership and give very persuasive accounts of both these fine sonatas. An excellent, well-balanced recording earns this a strong recommendation to those wanting just this repertoire alone on a single (budget) disc.

(i) The Holy Boy; (ii) Phantasie Trio; (iii) Violin Sonatas 1–2

Ⓜ () Dutton mono CDLX 7103. (i–ii) Hooton; (i) Pratt; (ii–iii) Grinke; (ii) Taylor; (ii–iii) composer; (iii) Sammons

We have long treasured Frederick Grinke's 78-r.p.m. set of the Violin Sonata 1 with the composer at the piano, and can confirm that the Dutton transfer of this 1945 recording brings its sound to life with striking effect. The Violin Sonata 2, on the other hand, again with John Ireland at the piano but with its dedicatee, the legendary Albert Sammons, recorded in 1930, also sounds very well for its age, as does the Phantasie Trio. An invaluable and self-recommending set which readers should cherish. Outstanding transfers.

String Quartets 1 in D min.; 2 in C min.; The Holy Boy

(*) ASV CDDCA 1017. Holywell Ens.

Both quartets come from 1897, when Ireland was 18, and were published posthumously. There is little sign of individuality but each work is beautifully crafted and gives much pleasure. The idiom is close to Dvořák and the ideas are fluent and pleasing. The Holywell Ensemble offer decent performances and are well recorded.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete Piano Music

Ⓝ Ⓜ () Lyrita mono REAM 3112 (3). Rowlands

Alan Rowlands's survey is distinctly authoritative, as he studied with the composer at length during the 1950s and Ireland recommended him to Lyrita for the first mono recording of the complete piano music. That these are dedicated performances is indisputable, and the mono recordings are fully acceptable. But Lyrita then re-recorded the music equally successfully with Eric Parkin in stereo, so now it is difficult to recommend the earlier set except to completists.

Piano Music: Ballade; The Darkened Valley; Decorations; Equinox; Greenways (The Cherry Trees; Cypress; The Palm and May); London Pieces (Chelsea Reach; Ragamuffin; Soho Forenoons); Merry Andrew; Month's Mind; On a Birthday Morning; 2 Pieces (For Remembrance; Amberley Wild Brooks); 2 Pieces (February's Child; Aubade); 2 Pieces (April; Bergomask); 4 Preludes (The Undertone; Obsession; The Holy Boy; Fire of Spring); Prelude in E flat; Rhapsody; Sarnia – An Island Sequence; Soliloquy; Sonata; Sonatina; Summer Evening; The Towing-Path

🔑 Ⓜ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 2277 (3). Eric Parkin

Ireland was at his most natural writing for the piano. He seems fully to have understood the instrument and he poured into it some of his finest invention. Eric Parkin's sympathy with the music is in no doubt and his technique is no less impressive. The first disc is framed by the Decorations and the equally delightful London Pieces. The second includes the Sonata, rightly admired as one of the composer's finest works. The third recital opens with the engaging Sonatina and concludes with Sarnia. But throughout the set there are many other indelible miniatures. The Holy Boy (the second of the Four Preludes) is justly the most famous, but try also Soliloquy, The Towing-Path and Merry Andrew. It is difficult to imagine Parkin's performances being surpassed, for he brings a command of colour and a temperamental affinity to the music, and the piano recording is very real indeed. Parkin went on to re-record much of this repertoire digitally on three CDs for Chandos (Chan. 9056, 9140 and 9250) and he included a few pieces not offered in the earlier survey. It goes without saying that he remains completely inside the composer's idiom and he is again very well recorded. But the earlier, analogue recordings have a feeling of discovery and indeed a very special magic.

Piano Music, Volume 1: Piano Sonata; Ballade; Decorations; London Pieces; Sonatina

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Somm SOMMCD 074. Bebbington

Mark Bebbington has now begun a new survey of this repertoire to offer the collector an embarrassment of riches. Sufficient to say that his performance of the Sonata is most convincing and the Decorations and London Pieces as admirably evocative and beautifully played and recorded.

Aubade; February's Child; The Darkened Valley; Decorations; April; Leaves from a Child's Sketchbook; Merry Andrew; 3 Pastels; Rhapsody; Sonatina; Summer Evening; The Towing-Path

(BB)  Naxos 8.553889. Lenehan

Ballade; Columbine; In Those Days; London Pieces; Prelude in E flat; Sarnia

(BB)  Naxos 8.553700. Lenehan

Piano Sonata 1; The Almond Tree; Ballad of London Nights; Equinox; Green Ways (The Cherry Tree; Cypress; The Palm and May); On a Birthday Morning; 2 Pieces (Amberley Wild Brooks; For Remembrace); Preludes (The Undertone; Obsession; The Holy Boy; Fire of Spring); Soliloquy; Spring will not wait

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570461. Lenehan

John Lenehan is making a complete survey for Naxos and he too proves the most persuasive advocate, warmly expressive, using rubato in a totally idiomatic way. The most ambitious work is the three-movement suite, inspired by Guernsey, Sarnia, far more than a set of atmospheric colour pieces and its last movement has echoes of the Piano Concerto in E flat.

The second programme offers a score of miniatures, including two of Ireland's most hauntingly atmospheric pieces, The Towing-Path and The Darkened Valley, a Blake inspiration. The longest work here is the Sonatina in three short movements, with the opening Moderato bringing echoes of Ireland's colourful Piano Concerto, the second a dark meditation leading to a galloping finale. Impeccable performances, vividly recorded.

The third programme includes the Piano Sonata and the Four Preludes, the third of which, The Holy Boy, is justly one of the composer's most famous and touching miniatures.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Baritone Songs, including: I have twelve oxen; Marigold; 5 Poems by Thomas Hardy; 6 Sacred and Profane Songs; Sea Fever; Spring Sorrow; 5 16th-Century Songs; Santa Chiara; Songs of a Wayfarer; We'll to the woods no more. (ii) Contralto Songs, including: Earth's Call; The 3 Ravens; 3 Arthur Symons Songs; Mother and Child; 3 Thomas Hardy Songs; (iii) Tenor Songs, including: The East Riding; Heart's desire; Love is a sickness; The Land of Lost Content; My true love hath my heart

Ⓜ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 2261 (3). (i) Luxon; (ii) Hodgson; (iii) Mitchinson; (i–iii) Alan Rowlands

Benjamin Luxon's understanding performances of these baritone songs, splendidly accompanied, form the main part of the collection and, though the ever-popular Sea Fever and I have twelve oxen may still strike most indelibly, many of the others also have vigorous memorability. Earth's Call is the most ambitious of the contralto songs – almost a dramatic scena – but most of both these and the tenor songs reflect the tinge of melancholy that was an essential part of Ireland's temperament, subtle miniatures which sensitively follow the cadences of English lyric poetry. Alfreda Hodgson's and John Mitchinson's performances (with the piano balanced rather backwardly) are admirably responsive.

Songs: 5 Poems by Thomas Hardy; 3 Songs to Poems by Hardy; The Bells of St Marie; The cost; During Music; If there were dreams to sell; I have twelve oxen; Marigold – Youth's spring; Palm Sunday, Naples; Penumbra; Salley Gardens; Santa Chiara; Sea Fever; Spleen; Tryst in a Fountain Court; The Vagabond; We'll to the woods no more; When I am dead my dearest; Tutto è scolto; Great things

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570467. Williams, Burnside

John Ireland's settings of English poems are among the most sensitive of the early 20th century, as this fine collection makes plain. They include one of the best known of all songs of the period, his setting of John Masefield's Sea Fever, a haunting tune that completely transcends the genre of the drawing-room ballad. But there is much else to treasure here, notably Masefield's The Vagabond, the Thomas Hardy settings and, of course, I have twelve oxen, and If there were dreams to sell. Roderick Williams's voice seems ideally focused for this repertoire and in this respect is preferable to a more extended collection with Christopher Maltman (together with John Mark Ainsley and Lisa Milne) on Chandos CDA 67261/2.

IVES, Charles (1874–1954)

'An American Journey': From the Steeples and the Mountains; Symphony 4: 3rd Movement: Fugue; Three Places in New England; The Unanswered Question. Choral: (i) The Circus Band; (i; ii) General William Booth Enters into Heaven; (i) The Pond (Remembrance); Psalm 100; They are There! Songs: (ii) Charlie Rutlage; In Flanders Field (orch. David Tredici); Memories; Serenity (orch. John Adams); The Things our Fathers Loved; Tom Sails Away

🔑 ❀ * RCA 09026 63703-2. (i) San Francisco Girls' Ch.; (ii) Hampson; San Francisco Symphony, Tilson Thomas

Michael Tilson Thomas's programme opens with one of Ives's most succinct and evocative orchestral explosions of dissonant polyphony, From the Steeples and the Mountains, and ends with his most beautiful, enigmatic and visionary work, The Unanswered Question.

Tilson Thomas places Ives's other out-and-out masterpiece, Three Places in New England, at the centre of a collection of vocal music. The choral items range from the mystically brief evocation of The Pond (subtitled Remembrance) for female voices, and a heartfelt setting of Psalm 100, to the rumbustiously syncopated Circus Band and the enthusiastically patriotic but characteristically zany They are There!

Thomas Hampson is obviously in his element in this repertoire. But the vocal highlight is General William Booth Enters into Heaven, where soloist and the excellent choruses exultantly combine in Ives's glorious portrayal of Booth and his Salvation Army leading his assembly of converted drunks and floozies into heaven, to the discomfiture of the angels. Not to be missed.

Instrumental Pieces for Small Orchestra: (i; ii) Aeschylus and Sophocles. (i) All the Way Round and Back. (i; ii) The Bells of Yale or Chapel Chimes. (i) From the Steeples and the Mountains; The Gong on the Hook and Ladder; Mists; (i; ii) On the Antipodes. (i) Over the Pavements; The Pond; The Rainbow; Sets 1–3; Tone Roads 1 & 3. Songs: (iii) Ann Street; At the River; The Cage; Charlie Rutlage; A Christmas Carol; Evening; Farewell to Land; from 'The Swimmers'; General William Booth enters into Heaven; The Greatest Man; Side Show; Soliloquy; West London

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 06631-2. (i) Ens. Modern, Metzmacher ; (ii) with Herford; (iii) Nixon, McCabe

The Ives discography which has deluged on us over the last few years has tended to show a brilliant imagination, plus a remarkably original mind and a daunting exploration of discord. But then Ives himself could afford to be daring, for he was also a very successful businessman, and although he was disappointed by his musical neglect he said 'If a composer has a nice wife and some nice children, how can he let the children starve on his dissonance.' Yet the Tone Roads are atonal and way ahead of their time in their rhythmic unpredictability, and all these instrumental pieces, which are daringly full of both vitality and originality, are not designed for musical fainthearts. Many of them are pictorially evocative; many of them are also essentially vocal in conception, and the texts which inspired them are given here in the accompanying booklet. They are played and presented with great élan. As for the group of songs, they lay claim to Ives being considered one of the greatest twentieth-century song writers; many of them are worthy of Schubert in their marriage of vocal line and pianistic partnership. Marni Nixon sings them superbly and with the right simplicity of approach and a voice of consistent tonal beauty. John McCabe accompanies splendidly and the spacious stereo is suitably atmospheric.

(i) Central Park in the Dark; (ii) Holidays Symphony; Symphonies 2 & 3 (The Unanswered Question) (original version for Trumpet, Flute Quartet & Strings)

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony (ADD) 516023-2 (2). NYPO, Bernstein; with (i) Ozawa & Peress (assistant conductors); (ii) Camerata Singers, Kaplan (with talk: 'Leonard Bernstein discusses Charles Ives')

Central Park in the Dark, as the title implies, provides a brilliant collection of evening sounds, evocative yet bewildering. The first three sections of the so-called Holidays Symphony, with their still-startling clashes of impressionistic imagery, are well enough known. The fourth – full title: Thanksgiving and/or Forefathers' Day – is more of a rarity, bringing in a full chorus to sing a single verse of a hymn at the close. The performance is red-bloodedly convincing yet has remarkably clear detail. The Unanswered Question is probably the most purely beautiful music Ives ever wrote, with muted strings (curiously representing silence) set against a trumpet representing the problem of existence. Superb playing (the trumpeter is William Vacchiano) and vivid recording, but the forward balance means the lack of a true pianissimo, especially noticeable in The Unanswered Question.

Bernstein's earlier, CBS/Sony recordings of the Symphonies have characteristic conviction and freshness. The remastered sound is amazingly improved over the old LPs, full and atmospheric. The balance is too close, but the dynamics of the playing convey the fullest range of emotion. This reissue includes Bernstein's illustrated lecture on Ives (recorded in 1966).

Three Orchestral Sets: 1 (3 Places in New England: original version, ed. Sinclair); (i) 2 (complete). 3 (includes During Camp Meetin' Week – One Secular Afternoon in Bethel (ed. Porter); Andante (realized Josephson))

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.559353. Malmö SO, Sinclair; (i) with Chamber Ch.

Ives created his Sets by assembling a trio of independent short pieces to make a composite work. The Three Places in New England (of 1913–14) is a prime example, and many consider it among his very greatest music, with its extraordinary pictorialism enhanced by popular musical quotations, followed by an ecstatic climax in the finale. Here we are offered the work's first draft, less complex than the finished Set, but introducing the hauntingly weird and beautiful string writing which is common to all three Sets. It opens the Second with its Elegy to our Forefathers, which again has an exuberant closing movement. Ives didn't finish his Third Set (1927). He had gathered the material together in sketches, but, sapped by a heart attack and diabetes, he had lost the concentration to pull the disparate material into a single work. Thus, the first two movements have been put together by David Gray Porter, climaxed with a cacophonous mêlée of popular tunes, while the utterly haunting closing section has been ethereally realized by Nors Josephson. The result, played with marvellous intensity and dedication by the Malmö Symphony Orchestra under James Sinclair (and superbly engineered by Mike Hatch), is unforgettable. As Jan Swafford says in his excellent note, 'it is like one of Michelangelo's unfinished sculptures'.

Symphonies 1–4; Central Park in the Dark; (i) General William Booth enters into Heaven

🔑 * Hyp. SACDA or CDA 67540 (Symphonies 1, 4 & Central Park); SACDA or CDA 67525 (Symphonies 2 & 3 & General Booth). Dallas SO, Litton; (i) with Albert

Recorded live in Dallas in January 2006, Andrew Litton's two discs cover the symphonies of Ives in the most logical way, with the four main works supplemented by two of his most striking shorter pieces, a coupling offering an advantage over rival versions. Litton is totally in sympathy with Ives's distinctive use of hymns and marches. The First Symphony, with its echoes of Dvořák's New World, already points forward to the composer's later radical development. The Fourth Symphony emerges as a masterpiece, amazing music to have been conceived as early as it was, with the contrapuntal element so important in Ives's writing clarified, and the hilarious introduction of 'Yankee Doodle' in the fourth movement given delightful point. The Second Symphony is distinctively Ivesian in many of its procedures, with hymns and marches superimposed on more conventional passages, often celebrating the American brass band. The finale is a quodlibet with one theme piled on another, erupting finally in a shattering fortissimo account of Columbia Queen of the Ocean. The Third Symphony, on the face of it less radical than the others, is entitled The Camp Meeting, with the three movements based on organ pieces Ives wrote early in his career. General William Booth Enters Heaven develops to a massive climax, vividly caught in Litton's performance with Donnie Ray Albert as soloist. The sound, though not the most immediate, is vivid too, and is particularly spacious on SACD, with textures commendably clear, as in Ives's use of the piano as part of the orchestra in 4.

Symphony 1 in D min.

 Chan. 9053. Detroit SO, Järvi – BARBER: Essays 1–3 ***

Neeme Järvi gives a very persuasive account of the First

Symphony, and there is a fresh and unforced virtuosity from the Detroit orchestra. Excellent, very natural recorded sound, excellently balanced.

Symphonies (i) 1 in D min.; 2; (ii) 3; (iii; iv) 4; (iii) Orchestral Set 1; (iii; iv) Orchestral Set 2; (iii) Three Places in New England

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 466 745-2 (2). (i) LAPO, Mehta; (ii) ASMF, Marriner; (iii) Cleveland O, Dohnányi; (iv) Cleveland Ch.

Mehta's Los Angeles recordings of the first two symphonies are very well recorded indeed. The First is superbly played, but the drawback here is a substantial cut in the last movement. Marriner's account of the Third Symphony is first rate in every way, just as successful as Bernstein's account, and much better recorded. For the Fourth Symphony, Orchestral Sets 1 & 2 and the masterly Three Places in New England we move into the digital era with Dohnányi's Cleveland forces: these performances are very fine, and the sound is superb. In short, if you don't mind about the cut mentioned above, this is an inexpensive way of making a representative collection of Ives's major works at a modest outlay.

Symphony 2

 Chan. 9390-2. Detroit SO, Järvi – CRESTON: Symphony 2 ***

Symphony 2; Central Park in the Dark; The Gong on the Hook and Ladder; Hallowe'en; Hymn for Strings; Tone Roads 1; The Unanswered Question

🔑 * DG 429 220-2. NYPO, Bernstein

Bernstein's DG disc brings one of the richest offerings of Ives yet put on record, offering Symphony 2 plus six shorter orchestral pieces. They include two of his very finest, Central Park in the Dark and The Unanswered Question, both characteristically quirky but deeply poetic too. The extra tensions and expressiveness of live performance here heighten the impact of each of the works. The difficult acoustic of Avery Fisher Hall in New York has rarely sounded more sympathetic on record.

The Chandos CD offers a very good performance, and has the great advantage of also offering Neeme Järvi's account of Paul Creston's vital and invigorating Second Symphony.

(i) Symphony 2; (ii) The Unanswered Question

Ⓝ 🔑 ✿ DVD DG 073 4513. (i) Bav. RSO; (ii) NYPO; Bernstein (with GERSHWIN: An American in Paris; Rhapsody in Blue; Bernstein, piano & NYPO ****✿)

An indispensable DVD. To watch Bernstein conduct these supreme masterpieces of American music is a joy and a privilege in itself, his face expressing almost every emotion and his communication with the orchestral players absolute. The richly resonant acoustic of the Royal Albert Hall casts a glow on the glittering rhythmic detail of An American in Paris from every member of the NYPO (especially the solo brass), which is as unforgettable as the arrival of the great blues centrepiece. Taking the solo role in the Rhapsody, Bernstein dominates completely, playing with unfettered freedom of tempo and nuance (his virtuosity is tangible), while in the Ives Symphony he produces radiantly expressive string textures from the Bavarian strings and captivates the ear with the composer's kaleidoscopic quotations of popular tunes. The symphony's close is all but overwhelming, to be followed by the epilogue of the Unanswered Question with its insistent, haunting trumpet solo. At a Harvard University lecture Bernstein said 'I'm no longer sure what the question is, but I do know the answer is Yes.' After the music drifts into silence he leaves the podium to delay any applause. (The DVD includes a talk about the symphony by Bernstein himself.)

Symphony 3

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 475 8237. ASMF, Marriner – BARBER: Adagio; COPLAND: Quiet City; COWELL: Hymn & Fuguing Tune; CRESTON: A Rumor ****

Marriner's vintage account still stands up against all the competition and it sounds excellent in the current transfer for Decca's 'Originals'. The couplings are all highly recommendable.

Variations on America (orch. Schuman)

(BB)  Naxos 8.559083. Bournemouth SO, Serebrier – SCHUMAN: Violin Concerto, etc. ***

Ives's Variations on America is an apt coupling for two outstanding works of William Schuman, who proves an infinitely imaginative colourist in orchestrating the former's brilliant and sometimes whimsical variations on the national melody, which has quite different words and implications in the USA and Britain. Serebrier's performance with the excellent Bournemouth Orchestra has subtlety of detail as well as gusto, and the recording is first class.

Instrumental Pieces: The Gong on the Hook and Ladder (Original version); Hallowe'en; In Re Con Moto; (Piano) 5 Take-offs: The Seen and Unseen? (Sweet and Tough); Rough and Ready et al. and/or The jumping Frog; Song without (Good) Words; Scene Episode; Bad Resolutions and Good WAN! (Jan 1, 1907); 3 Quarter-Tone Pieces; Songs: Aeschylus and Sophocles; The Housatonic at Stockbridge; On the Antipodes; The Pond; Remembrance; Soliloquy or A Study in Sevenths and Other Things; Sunrise

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.559194. Continuum (members), Seltzer & Sachs (directors & pianists)

The opening song-group, very well sung, begins lyrically with The Housatonic at Stockbridge, but at its climax the piano accompaniment goes wild; the following Soliloquy explodes similarly, and the dissonant, untamed accompaniment continues its conflict to underline On the Antipodes. Sunrise (Ives's final song) initially brings relative peace and an Elysian violin solo but still has an agitated climax.

The first of the instrumental pieces, The Gong on the Hook and Ladder, pictures the annual parade of the neighbourhood Fire Company, for the appliance was heavy and had to be held in check manually down the hill, while the violent clanging gong on the hand wheel 'must ring steady'. Hallowe'en is a busy, dissonant Scherzo (the strings playing in different keys), suggesting the growing flames of the bonfire, with children running round it. In Re Con Moto et al. brings the most ferocious dissonance of all 'to stretch ear muscles', as Ives suggested. The piano pieces, Five Take-offs (implying improvisatory freedom, but in fact highly organized), were published as recently as 1991, and would make a stimulating centrepiece for any modern piano recital. The untamed, feral Jumping Frog has an underlying boldly controlled cantus firmus. Then, astonishingly, Song without (Good) Words is quite beautiful – very romantic, but with wrong notes – and Scene Episode begins in much the same mood of emotional serenity, which is not quite sustained.

The Three Quarter-Tone Pieces are aurally the most fascinating of all, more remarkably so as they are very listenable. They really do 'tweak the ear muscles'. All in all, this makes a fine, characteristic anthology, splendidly realized by artists not named individually, except for the pair of director/pianists. The Take-offs (an expression Ives used as meaning improvisation) are simpler but just as original, the two excellent pianists are Joel Sachs and Cheryl Seltzer, and the sopranos, both projecting well, are Victoria Villamil and Sheila Schonbrun. This collection shows the composer as slightly off the beam at times, but endearingly so. The recording is excellent and the (essential) documentation praiseworthy, including the words of the songs.

(i) Piano Trio; (ii) Violin Sonatas 2 & 4 (Children's Day at the Camp Meeting); (iii) Largo for Violin, Clarinet & Piano; (iv) 7 Songs

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 34450-2. (i–iii) Dicterow; (i) Stepansky (i–iii) Margalit; (iii) Drucker; (iv) Voigt, Zeger

This is all vintage Ives material, very well played, especially the Piano Trio, although the Violin Sonatas bring a fine partnership between Glenn Dicterow and Israela Margalit. Deborah Voigt also has the measure of the songs now added to the reissue as a bonus.

String Quartets 1–2

(BB)  Naxos 8.559178. Blair Qt

The Second Quartet (written between 1911 and 1913) still draws on popular material, but used in densely polyphonic bursts so that the themes are fragmented and difficult to recognize, while the weird harmonies and moments of fierce dissonance in the argument become all but atonal in the finale. The Scherzo – not quite two minutes long – treats its popular material more recognizably but with intense unpredictabilty. Superb performances here and fine recording: the disc is worth having for the student quartet; but only the aurally brave will venture to return to the later work very frequently.

Violin Sonatas 1–4

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559119. Thompson, Waters

Ives's four extraordinary Violin Sonatas were written between 1902 and 1906, and are quite a find. Their erratically stimulating originality is in no doubt, but they are also among his most immediately appealing works, with the usual tantalizing snatches of hymns and popular tunes to spice the melodic flow.

There is no doubt that the full-timbred Curt Thompson and Rodney Waters are excellent artists. It is difficult to imagine this music being played better or more idiomatically, and the daunting bravura is readily forthcoming. The recording too is most realistic.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonata 1

 Mode 93. Laimon – COPLAND: Piano Fantasy ***

Ives's five-movement First Piano Sonata was composed over a long period and finally put together in 1919. The result is a series of events, the piano writing is alternately lyrically expressive or hard-hitting, and often chromatically dense. The boldly discursive finale, the longest movement, recaptures some of the evocative mood of the opening, and the work ends enigmatically, as it began. Sara Laimon obviously has the full measure of the piece and certainly demonstrates its intractable nature and its compulsive originality.

Piano Sonata 2 (Concord, Mass., 1840–1860)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67469. Hamelin – BARBER: Piano Sonata ***

(i) Piano Sonata 2 (Concord, Mass.); (ii) Three Quarter-tone Pieces

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49515-2. Lubimov; with (i) Verney, Cherrier; (ii) Aimard

Piano Sonata 2 (Concord, Mass.); Celestial Railroad; Emerson Transcriptions 1; Varied Air & Variations

(BB)  Naxos 8.559127. Mayer

As with the Barber coupling, Marc-André Hamelin is completely at home in Ives's eccentric, discursive Sonata whose four movements are each inspired by key 19th-century literary figures in Concord, from Emerson to Thoreau. The second movement (Hawthorne), which brings oscillation between thunderous complexity and tender lyricism, is superbly played, so that the touching and boldly romantic picture of the Alcotts that emerges in the third movement leads easily into the finale, with its flute solo stealing in beguilingly. (When asked why he put in this interlude, Ives suggested that as no one was likely to play his sonata he saw no reason not to include a flute when required.) Well, he was wrong about the performances, and Hamelin's account of this fascinatingly eccentric and rewarding work shows why. The recording is first class.

Alexei Lubimov and Pierre-Laurent Aimard (see below), both also include Ives's brief (and optional) obbligatos for viola and flute in the first and fourth movements respectively. Steven Mayer, who omits them, is also remarkably lucid and sympathetic, and he ends the finale most movingly and memorably. As couplings he offers also the tough, though briefly soft-centred, Varied Air and Variations and The Celestial Railroad, a nightmarish, noisy train journey, a trip to a promised land which never materializes. The Emerson

Transcription is essentially a reworking of the opening material of the Sonata, and of less general interest.

Lubimov on Apex offers as his bonus the remarkable Quarter-tone Pieces, in which he is joined by Aimard at the second piano. Whether or not they achieve identical tuning with Seltzer and Sachs on the Naxos/Continuum anthology (above), they produce a more lyrically romantic effect in the opening Largo and are less dauntless in the fantasia on America/God save the King.

(i) Piano Sonata 2; (ii) Songs: Ann Street; The Cage; The Circus Band; A Farewell to Land; From The Swimmers; The Housatonic at Stockbridge; The Indians; Like a sick eagle; Memories: Very pleasant; Rather sad; 1, 2, 3; September; Serenity; Soliloquy (or A Study in 7ths and other things); Songs my mother taught me; The sound of a distant horn; The Things our Fathers Loved; Thoreau

🔑  Warner 2564 60297-2. Aimard, with (i) Zimmerman, Pahud; (ii) Graham

Pierre-Laurent Aimard's reading of the Sonata ranks with the best in all respects and it is beautifully recorded. Aimard also provides outstanding accompaniments for the equally recommendable song selection. Susan Graham's voice is not quite as richly alluring as Roberta Alexander's, but her singing is truly idiomatic and has moments of real beauty; moreover, her selection is balanced to include more of the rugged numbers like the hair-raising Soliloquy, while she is at her best in the contrasts of Memories, Very pleasant and Rather sad.

Songs (complete recording; recorded and listed in alphabetical order)

Vol. 1: 1, 2, 3; Abide with me – Cradle Song (8.559269)

Vol. 2: December – Gruss (8.559270)

Vol. 3: Harpalus – Luck and Work (8.559 271)

Vol. 4: Majority – Over all the Treetops (8.559272)

Vol. 5: Paracelsus – Swimmers (8.559273)

Vol. 6: Tarrant Moss – Yellow Leaves (8.559274)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.559269/74. Various Singers, Instrumental Ens.; Dickson, Garrison, Pennna, Trudel (piano), Kabaoka (glockenspiel), Teardo (organ)

What can we say about such an enterprise as this – a recording of all of Ives's songs, listed in alphabetical order on each disc so that one can easily retrieve any single item? The cast of singers includes some stalwarts, such as Lielle Berman, Jennifer Casey Cabot, Patrick Carfizzi, Michael Cavalieri, Robert Gardner, and Tamara Mumford; others come to the fore as necessary. As one progresses through the series one is amazed, not only by the quality of the songs (and their remarkable variety) but the skill of the casting of both singers and accompanists. Altogether a fascinating survey, well worthy of its modest cost. The documentation is excellent, although no texts are given.

Allegro; At the River; The Children's Hour; The Circus Band; A Christmas Carol; Down East; Evening; Evidence; Ilmenau; In Flanders Fields; In the Alley; The Last Reader; The Light that is Felt; Mists; My Native Land; Night Song; Omens and Oracles; On the Counter; Premonitions; Romanzo (di Central Park); The See'r; Slow March; Songs my mother taught me; The South Wind; They are There!; Those Evening Bells; To Edith; Two Little Flowers (and dedicated to them); Watchman!; The World's Wanderers

🔑 ✿  Hyp. CDA 67644. Finley, Drake

The very opening song here, On the Counter, is totally nostalgic, and this is immediately followed by his vociferous reaction to The Circus Band. Then comes Two little flowers, which he wrote with his wife as a sentimental tribute to his adopted daughter and her playmate, while Mists, also written jointly, is an elegy after her mother's sudden death. Both are touchingly beautiful. The closing song here Romanzo (di Central Park) sets Leigh Hunt's succinct Love Song with its dozen words, written vertically and rhyming in pairs, yet telling their story of a lover's tryst, the last four being 'Kiss, Bliss, Blest, Rest.' The performances here from Gerald Finley and Julius Drake are wonderfully characterful and warmly sympathetic. This is a disc one can enjoy right through without stopping, and if you respond to it as we have, there is a companion, by the same artists (CDA 67516).

JACOB, Gordon (1895–1984)

Mini-Concerto for Clarinet & String Orchestra

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55069. King, Northwest CO of Seattle, Francis – COOKE: Concerto; RAWSTHORNE: Concerto ***

Gordon Jacob in his eighties wrote this miniature concerto for Thea King, totally charming in its compactness. She proves the most persuasive of dedicatees, splendidly accompanied by the orchestra from Seattle and treated to first-rate (1982) analogue sound, splendidly transferred. An enticing bargain reissue.

Horn Concerto

🔑  Lyrita SRCD 316. Pyatt, LPO, Braithwaite – ARNOLD; BOWEN; GIPPS: Horn Concertos; VINTER: Hunter's Moon ***

This is one of Gordon Jacob's best concertos, a highlight of this collection of works by British composers and, like several of its companions, first performed by Dennis Brain. Opening with a hint of neoclassicism, the work's ripe romanticism soon emerges with a particularly successful interplay between bravura passagework and lyrical melody. A daunting cadenza acts as an intermezzo, before the haunting nocturnal slow movement contrasts with a brilliant finale demanding (and receiving here) crisply pointed virtuosity from the soloist; yet again there is a contrasting evocative lyrical element. David Pyatt's performance is superbly confident and assured and, with Braithwaite in partnership, the work's touches of gentler nostalgia are well realized. Demonstration sound.

Symphonies 1; 2 in C

* Lyrita SRCD 315. LPO, Wordsworth

The two symphonies recorded here were separated by fifteen years. The opening movement of the First (1929) is full of great energy and drive, with contrasting themes strongly and convincingly developed. The composer wrote of the second movement, '[it is] elegiac in character and is somewhat in the style of a funeral march'. The finale, with its striking opening four downward leaps of a fifth, is also full of energy and drive, and is generally optimistic in spirit. The Second Symphony (1944–5) is spirited and outgoing. The first movement is followed by an intense, searching Adagio which opens plangently on high strings, but later assumes the character of a threnody, and was written in memory of the composer's brother, who was killed on the Somme. The composer called it 'a meditation on war, suffering and victory'. Recording of great clarity and richness of sonority.

Clarinet Quintet in G min.

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios (ADD) CDH 55110. King, Aeolian Qt – SOMERVELL: Clarinet Quintet ***

Gordon Jacob wrote his fine Clarinet Quintet for Frederick Thurston. It is essentially pastoral, even autumnal, in feeling but has an engaging second movement Scherzo, a Rhapsody for slow movement and a chirpy Theme and Variations for finale. Thea King plays with deep understanding and much character, and she is strongly matched by the Aeolian Quartet, led by Emmanuel Hurwitz. The fine 1979 analogue recording is impeccably transferred to CD, and this reissue is a worthwhile bargain

Divertimento for Harmonica & String Quartet

 Chan. 8802. Reilly, Hindar Qt – MOODY: Quintet; Suite ***

Gordon Jacob's set of eight sharply characterized miniatures shows the composer at his most engagingly imaginative and the performances are deliciously piquant in colour and feeling. The recording could hardly be more successful.

Oboe Quartet

 Chan. 8392. Francis, English Qt – BAX: Quintet; HOLST: Air & Variations, etc.; MOERAN: Fantasy Quartet ***

Gordon Jacob's Oboe Quartet is well crafted and entertaining, particularly the vivacious final Rondo. The performance could hardly be bettered, and the recording is excellent too.

(i; ii) Oboe Quartet; (i; iii) Oboe Sonata; (ii) 6 Shakespearian Sketches; (i; iv; v) Trio for Flute, Oboe & Harpsichord; (i) Sonatina for Solo Violin

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7177. (i) Francis; (ii) Tagore String Trio; (iii) Dussek; (iv) Fitton; (v) Beach; (vi) Mason

The Oboe Quartet is most appealing in its essentially pastoral nature, with some gorgeously lyrical passages, often very haunting, or in the bubbling vitality of the Scherzo and the catchy Rondo finale. The Oboe Sonata establishes a rather more serious mood from the word go, but a mood which is curiously hypnotizing. The Sonatina for Violin Solo (1954) is a tour de force for the soloist and highlights the composer's skill at providing enormous variety with a single instrument. The Six Shakespearian Sketches (1946) opens with an exquisite atmosphere which pervades much of this work's six movements, though it ends with rumbustious humour. The Trio for Flute, Oboe and Harpsichord dates from 1958, and there is much wit and delight – and certainly quirky humour – in this offbeat score, not least in the finale, where the flautist changes to a piccolo. Superb performances and recording.

Piano & Wind Sextet, Op. 3

Ⓜ () BBC mono BBCL 4164-2. Malcolm, Dennis Brain Wind Quintet – BEETHOVEN: Quintet (); HINDEMITH: Horn Sonata; VINTER: Hunter's Moon ()

Gordon Jacob's Piano and Wind Sextet is most delightfully scored and full of attractive invention. The opening and closing of the work are elegiac, and there is a sparkling Scherzo for which the forward recording is very close indeed! The slow movement, a B flat minor Cortège, is imbued with a gentle melancholy; the Minuet is an engaging highlight, and the buoyant, syncopated finale is joyously zestful, but with a recurring lyrical horn theme, of which Dennis makes the very most.

JADASSOHN, Salomon
(1831–1902)

Piano Concertos 1 in C min., Op. 89; 2 in F min., Op. 90

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67636. Becker, Berlin RSO, Michael Sanderling – DRAESEKE: Piano Concerto in E flat ***

Jadassohn was known in his day mainly as a composition teacher in Leipzig, and he counted many famous names among his pupils, including Grieg, Delius and Busoni. Unlike his more famous pupils, however, Jadassohn was unable to provide truly memorable themes. That is not to say that his music is unenjoyable – it is far from that. Liszt is an obvious role-model for him in both form and temperament; and with first-rate performances and recordings it is good, for those curious about musical byways, to be able to assess this music again for themselves.

JANÁČEK, Leoš (1854–1928)

(i) Capriccio for Piano (left hand) & 7 Wind Instruments; Concertino for Piano & Chamber Orchestra; (ii) Sinfonietta; (iii) Violin Sonata; (iv) 7 Piano Pieces; (iv; v) The Diary of One who Disappeared; (vi) Glagolitic Mass

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2-CD 2 37606-2 (2). (i) Rudy, Paris Op. Nat. (members), Mackerras; (ii) Philh. O, Rattle; (iii) Amoyal, Rudy; (iv) Adès; (v) Bostridge, Philogene, Diane Atherton, Flannery, Edwards; (vi) Palmer, Gunson, Mitchinson, King, CBSO Ch. & O, Rattle

An outstanding two-CD anthology, with Rattle's memorable coupling of the Sinfonietta and Glagolitic Mass as its centrepiece. Mikhail Rudy is completely inside the quirky left-hand Capriccio and also gives a totally idiomatic account of the Concertino. The uniquely involving song-cycle, The Diary of One who Disappeared, was prompted by the composer's passionate unrequited love for a young married woman, Kamila Stosslova, and the wildness of the writing – spontaneous, electric, for both voice and piano – reflects the urgency of his inspiration, with Ian Bostridge taking the central role. This is a performance which fully exploit's Bostridge's great gift for conveying nervily intense emotion, with nervous tension giving way to moments of ecstasy. The mezzo, Ruby Philogene, is also ideally cast, sensuously rich-toned, and the offstage trio is atmospherically caught. Thomas Adès accompanies with comparable inspiration and completes the anthology with seven of the composer's piano miniatures. The volatile Violin Sonata is hardly less successful.

(i) Capriccio for Piano & Wind; Concertino for Piano & Chamber Ensemble; (ii) Lachian Dances; (iii) Sinfonietta; (iv) Suite for String Orchestra; (iii) Taras Bulba; (v) Mládí (suite for wind)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 448 255-2 (2). (i) Crossley, L. Sinf., Atherton; (ii) LPO, Huybrechts; (iii) VPO, Mackerras; (iv) LACO, Marriner; (v) Bell, Craxton, Pay, Harris, Gatt, Eastop

On this Double Decca, Paul Crossley is the impressive soloist in the Capriccio and the Concertino, performances that can be put alongside those of Firkušný – and no praise can be higher. This account of Mládí is among the finest available; the work's youthful sparkle comes across to excellent effect here. In Mackerras's VPO coupling of the Sinfonietta and Taras Bulba the massed brass of the Sinfonietta has tremendous bite and brilliance as well as characteristic Viennese ripeness. Taras Bulba is also given more weight and body than usual, the often savage dance-rhythms presented with great energy. The performance of the Lachian Dances under the Belgian conductor, François Huybrechts, is highly idiomatic and effective, and he is helped by fine playing from the LPO. The Suite for String Orchestra was Marriner's first recording with the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, and the sound is characteristically ripe. The Suite is an early and not entirely mature piece but, when played as committedly as it is here, its attractions are readily perceived, and it certainly does not want character. Excellent sound throughout.

(i; ii) Capriccio; Concertino; (iii) Lachian Dances; (iv) Sinfonietta; (v) Suite for String Orchestra; (iv) Taras Bulba; (vi; vii) Dumka (for violin & piano); (viii) Mládí; (ix; vi) Pohádka; Presto (for cello & piano); (vi; vii) Romance (for violin & piano); (x) String Quartets 1; 2; (v; vi) Violin Sonata; (i) In the Mist; On an overgrown Path; Teme con variazioni (Variations for Zdenka); (xi) Glagolitic Mass; (xii) Ríkadla

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 475 523-2 (5). (i) Crossley; (ii) L. Sinf. (members); (iii) LPO, Huybrechts; (iv) VPO, Mackerras; (v) LAPO, Marriner; (vi) Atherton; (vii) Sillito; (viii) Bell, Craxton, Pay, Harris, Gatt, Eastop; (ix) van Kampen; (x) Gabrieli String Qt; (xi) Urbanová, Be aková, Bogachov, Novák, Slovak Phil. Ch., VPO, Chailly; (xii) London Sinf. Ch.

This set adds to the Double Decca collection of orchestral and concertante works above and proves a useful and inexpensive way of acquiring a lot of Janáček. The two String Quartets are among the composer's most deeply individual works and are profoundly impassioned utterances. The Gabrieli Quartet have the measure of this highly original music and give an idiomatic account of these masterpieces, playing with clarity as well as warmth, and with the advantage of vintage (1978) Decca sound. In the account of Mládí, the work's youthful sparkle comes across to excellent effect here. Crossley's survey of the piano music is both poetic and perceptive. The set brings a number of rarities, including the Violin Sonata and the Ríkadla for chamber choir and ten instruments, both works very much worth getting to know. Finally, Chailly's strong and refined reading of the Glagolitic Mass makes a splendid finale, with fine detail emerging in the glowing Decca recording (1998), the emotional depth is fully brought out, with fine, idiomatic singing and a virtuoso display from Thomas Trotter in the final organ solo.

(i) Capriccio for Piano; Concertino; (Piano) Sonata (1.x.1905); Along an Overgrown Path I & II; In the Mist; Reminiscences; Zdenka Variations

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 449 764-2 (2). Firkušný; (i) Bav. RSO (members), Kubelik

Capriccio; Concertino; Mládí (Youth) for wind sextet; March of the Blue Boys for piccolo & piano; (i) Nursery Rhymes (Ríkadla) for chamber ch. & chamber ens.

 Chan. 9399. Berman, Netherlands Wind Ens., Fischer; (i) with Prague Music Ac. Ch.

Kubelik partners Rudolf Firkušný in his thoroughly idiomatic earlier account of the Concertino. Now reissued in DG's series of 'Originals', this collection is eminently recommendable. Firkušný has long been regarded as the most authoritative exponent of the piano music. He recorded these pieces in the early 1970s, and he produces seamless legato lines, hammerless tone and rapt atmosphere. The recordings are all of high quality.

Though Firkušný remains in a class of his own, Boris Berman is a good soloist in both the Concertino and Capriccio. The astonishing Ríkadla are given with great character by the Netherlands Wind Ensemble and the Prague Academy Choir. Thierry Fischer directs the proceedings impressively: the playing throughout is full of life and sensitivity. Vibrant recorded sound – every detail tells.

Violin Concerto (Pilgrimage of the Soul) (reconstructed Faltus & Štědrŭ)

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 40812-2. Zehetmair, Philh. O, Holliger – BERG: Violin Concerto; HARTMANN: Concerto funèbre ***

This is highly original music, with some delightful lyrical ideas, imaginatively scored, albeit also with moments of top-heavy orchestral writing, searing in its intensity – particularly as played here by Thomas Zehetmair and the Philharmonia under Heinz Holliger. Excellent recorded sound. A most rewarding triptych, well worth exploring at budget price.

(i) Violin Concerto (Pilgrimage of the Soul); (ii) Danube Symphony; Sinfonietta; (iii) Schluck und Jau (incidental music): excerpts

Ⓝ  Sup. 11 1422-2. Brno State O, Jílek, with (i) Zenatý; (ii) Dvořáková; (iii) Beneš

Ivan Zenatý is an aristocrat of the violin and his performance of the concerto is tenderly affecting. The incidental music to Schluck und Jau is a two-movement piece about as long as the Violin Concerto and likewise full of characteristic ideas. Jílek's performance of the Sinfonietta can hold its own with the best, as can the Danube Symphony which has invention of great imagination. Altogether a highly recommendable disc.

(i) The Fiddler's Child; (ii) Idyll for String Orchestra; (i) Jealousy: Overture; Sinfonietta; (ii) Suite for Strings; (i) Taras Bulba; The Cunning Little Vixen: Suite

Ⓑ  Chan. 2-for-1 241-7 (2). (i) Czech PO, Bělohlávek; (ii) Jupiter O, Rose

Idyll; Suite for String Orchestra

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9816. Norwegian CO, Brown – BARTÓK: Divertimento for Strings ✿ ****

In the Idyll the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra and Iona Brown sweep the board. Their playing is vibrant, full of enthusiasm and vitality, and yet finding also a touching nostalgia in the slow sections of the Idyll and an even more subtle and haunting espressivo in the two lovely Adagios of the Suite. The recorded sound is absolutely state-of-the-art and the Bartók coupling quite outstanding.

The Idyll and the Suite for Strings are also ravishingly played by the Jupiter Orchestra under Gregory Rose, who shows himself completely at home in the lilting Czech idiom and who achieves rapt concentration in the touching slow movements. The rest of the Chandos programme is also very stimulating. This splendidly vivid account of the Sinfonietta is unsurpassed, and throughout all these performances the beauty of the orchestral playing, and opulence and detail of the recordings add to the attractions of a very well-chosen compilation.

Sinfonietta

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66980-2. Philh. O, Rattle – Glagolitic Mass ***

🔑  Chan. 8897. Czech PO, Bělohlávek – MARTINŮ: Symphony 6; SUK: Scherzo ***

Sinfonietta; Lachian Dances; Taras Bulba

(BB)  Naxos 8.550411. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Lenárd

Rattle gets an altogether first-class response from the orchestra and truthful recorded sound from the EMI engineers, and his coupling with the Glagolitic Mass is very attractive indeed.

Jiří Bělohlávek's exultant and imaginative account of the Sinfonietta is one of the best currently on offer and is coupled with an outstanding version of Martinů's Sixth Symphony; the recording, made in the Smetana Hall, Prague, is impressive.

On Naxos we have the normal LP coupling of the Sinfonietta and Taras Bulba, but with the Lachian Dances thrown in for good measure, all played by musicians steeped in the Janáček tradition – and all at a very modest cost. These are excellent performances; the recording, made in a fairly resonant studio, is natural and free from any artificially spotlit balance.

Sinfonietta; Preludes: From the House of the Dead; Jealousy (original Overture to Jenůfa); Katya Kabanova; The Makropulos Affair

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 2 35720-2. Pro Arte O, Mackerras (with WEINBERGER: Schwanda the Bagpiper: Polka & fugue; SMETANA: The Bartered Bride: Overture ***)

Sir Charles Mackerras's 1959 version of the Sinfonietta was the first of his many recordings. This performance has a fire and bite that were not even matched by his later, Decca recording. The playing of the Pro Arte Orchestra is immensely vivid; its lack of the last degree of refinement seems to increase its forceful projection. The brass sonorities (the work used 12 trumpets) are pungent, and elsewhere the recording has striking detail and colour. The original coupling of the four operatic Preludes was an imaginative choice, and similar comments apply to the vibrant playing here. Both the Weinberger and Smetana fill-ups are lively and engaging, and the remastering in this bargain CD seems more successful than in its last incarnation, although the recording sounds its age.

Sinfonietta; Taras Bulba; Jealousy Prelude; The Cunning Little Vixen: Suite; Káta Kabanová: Overture & Interludes; Šárka Overture; Schluck und Jau (incidental music): excerpts: Andante & Allegretto

🔑 * Sup. SU 3739-2 (2). Czech PO, Mackerras

No one can match Sir Charles Mackerras as an inspired and dedicated advocate of the music of Janáček. Šárká is represented by the Overture, and the Káta Kabanová excerpts (including the two delightful little Interludes that Mackerras himself discovered in Prague) similarly come from his complete recording. The other items all come in new recordings, with the Czech Philharmonic responding warmly. Apart from Jealousy, the original prelude to Jenůfa, the rarity in the collection are the two pieces from the incidental music for a play by Gerhardt Hauptmann, Schluck und Jau. The first of the two completed movements brings some intriguing echoes of the fanfares in the Sinfonietta, and the second in 5/8 time is equally original in its unexpected instrumentation. The suite taken from The Cunning Little Vixen, consisting of virtually the whole of Act I without the voices, is here given in Janáček's own sharply original orchestration. Best of all, the two central orchestral works, the Sinfonietta and Taras Bulba, come in live recordings which are even warmer and more idiomatic, crowning the whole collection, helped by full and spacious recording.

Taras Bulba

 Australian Decca Eloquence 467 602-2. Cleveland O, Dohnányi – KODÁLY: Concerto for Orchestra; BARTÓK: Concerto for Orchestra ***

Dohnányi's warmly expressive reading of Taras Bulba is recorded in Decca's finest digital Cleveland style, and is imaginatively coupled on this excellent Australian Eloquence CD.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i; iii) Allegro; Dumka; Romance; Sonata (for violin & piano); (ii; iii) Pohádka (Fairy Tale); Presto (for cello & piano); (iii) (Piano) Along an Overgrown Path, Series I–II; In the Mists; 3 Moravian Dances; Paralipomena; Reminiscence; Piano Sonata in E flat min. (I. X. 1905); Theme & Variations (Zdenka's Variations)

 BIS CD 663/664. (i) Wallin; (ii) Rondin; (iii) Pöntinen

This excellent collection ranges from the Romance for violin and piano from the late 1870s, to the much later Reminiscence for piano. Pöntinen is an unfailingly intelligent player. Ulf Wallin proves a strong yet sensitive advocate of the Violin Sonata, and the cellist Mats Rondin is no less admirable in the Pohádka (Fairy Tale) and the Presto for cello and piano. Readers wanting this whole collection may rest assured that both playing and recording are of a generally high standard.

Concertino; Mládí

(BB)  HM HMA 1901399. Walter Boeykens Ens. – DVOŘÁK: Serenade in D min. for Wind ***

The Walter Boeykens Ensemble is a most distinguished group, and anyone wanting this coupling need have no qualms about investing in it. Both the Concertino, with Robert Groslot as the soloist, and Mládí are as fresh and compelling as any currently on disc. The 1991 recordings from Antwerp have worn well.

Mládí

 Nim. NI 5812. Quintett Wien (with PIRCHNER: String Quartet: Variations on a Tyrolean Slave Song) – MOZART: Serenade 12 ***

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553851-2. Michael Thompson Wind Quintet – BARBER: Summer Music (*); HINDEMITH: Kleine Kammermusik (*); LARSSON: Quattro tempi **

Mládí, scored for wind sextet including bass clarinet, is a spirited and atmospheric piece. The splendid Vienna Ensemble makes the very most of the music's changing moods and is very well recorded. The Pirchner Quartet/Variations is audacious and resourceful; even if the music itself is not of the quality of either of the major works on this disc, it is expertly played and makes a diverting encore.

Janáček's Mládí is superbly played by the Michael Thompson Wind Quintet, who are sensitive to every nuance of this glorious and haunting score. Wonderfully accomplished and sensitive though they are, they are let down by a close balance, which robs the music of atmosphere.

String Quartet 1 (Kreutzer Sonata)

 Sup. SU 3922-2. Pavel Haas Qt – HAAS: String Quartets 1 & 3 ***

 Testament (ADD) SBT 1074. Smetana Qt – DVOŘÁK: Piano Quintet, etc. ***

(*) BBC Legends BBCL 4180-2. Smetana Qt – DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 14, etc. **(*)

The new Supraphon account by the Pavel Haas Quartet now leads the field, superbly played and most realistically recorded, and the Haas couplings are equally illuminating.

The Smetana Quartet's account of the First Quartet (Kreutzer Sonata) is also one of the very best versions of the work ever committed to disc. There is a wonderful feeling that these players have lived with this music all their lives – and in fact live for it, so committed do they sound. Worth every penny of its full price.

The Smetana Quartet was recorded at London's Queen Elizabeth Hall in February 1975. The BBC recording sounds very acceptable, and the performance has a powerful involvement and intensity, and the presence of an audience always draws something extra from the players.

String Quartet 2 (Intimate Letters)

 Sup. SU 3877-2. Pavel Haas Qt – HAAS: String Quartet 2 ***

 Testament (ADD) SBT 1075. Smetana Qt – DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 14, etc. ***

Like its companion, coupled with the equally stimulating music of Haas, this performance by the Pavel Haas Quartet is passionately convincing and very well recorded indeed. Recommended, alongside the Smetana Quartet's version.

The Smetana account deserves the same accolade. In terms of subtlety, tonal finish and technical polish, this is absolutely flawless – and the 1960s sound is superb, and not just for its period. Strongly recommended alongside its companion.

String Quartets 1 (Kreutzer); 2 (Intimate Letters)

 Cal. CAL 9333. Talich Qt – SCHULHOFF: Quartet 1

 ASV CDDCA 749. Lindsay Qt – DVOŘÁK: Cypresses ***

Ⓝ (*) DG 477 8093. Emerson Qt (with MARTINŮ: 3 Madrigals for violin & viola)

EMI Encore 2 08121-2. Alban Berg Qt (with DVOŘÁK: Piano Quintet, Op. 81: Dumka only ***)

(i) String Quartets 1 (Kreutzer Sonata); 2 (Intimate Letters); (ii) Allegro for violin and piano; Violin Sonata

 Meridian CDE 84560. (i) Dante Qt; (ii) Osostowicz, Rados

(i) String Quartets 1–2; (ii) On an Overgrown Path: Suite 1

🔑 Ⓜ  Cal. CAL 5699. (i) Talich Qt; (ii) Kvapil

(i) String Quartets 1–2; (ii) Pohádka for Cello & Piano; (iii) Violin Sonata

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553895. (i) Vlach Qt; (ii) Ericsson; (ii–iii) Maly; (iii) Vlachová

 Brodsky BRD 3503. (i) Brodsky Qt; (ii) Cousin (ii; iii) Thomas; (iii) Haveron

Pride of place must go to the Talich Quartet on Calliope, not because their recording is the best, but because of their extraordinary qualities of insight. They play the Intimate Letters as if its utterances came from a world so private that it must be approached with great care. The disc's value is much enhanced by a fill-up in the form of the First Suite, On an Overgrown Path. Radoslav Kvapil is thoroughly inside this repertoire.

The latest coupling from the Talichs is also among the very finest available. This Talich is a different ensemble from the recording we list on CAL 5699. Their leader, Jan Talich, is the son of the Talich, violist and violinist, of the previous quartet. In any event, this is big-boned and impassioned playing that carries the listener with it. The recording is a little forward, but not unacceptably so.

The Lindsays on ASV are also eminently competitive and have the right blend of sensitivity and intensity. Theirs must certainly rank very highly among current recommendations. They play with the same concentration and sensitivity they bring to all they do, and are recorded with great naturalness.

Immaculately prepared accounts by the Dante Quartet, which are among the best to have appeared recently and can hold their own with the finest. Their coupling is a splendid and persuasive account of the Violin Sonata from Krysia Osostowicz and the Hungarian pianist Ferenc Rados, with whom she also gives us the Allegro originally a sketch for the last movement of the violin sonata but eventually formed the basis for the third movement.

The Vlach Quartet on Naxos give well-played, impassioned accounts of both Quartets and are warmly recorded. Moreover, the account of the Violin Sonata by Jana Vlachová and František Maly is very fine, and the Pohádka for Cello and Piano is given as touching and imaginative a performance by Mikael Ericsson as any in the catalogue. Good recordings and excellent value for money.

The Brodsky Quartet also play the two Janáček String Quartets, both of them masterly examples of the composer's late style, with characteristic flair and drive, with richness as well as power and with a natural feeling for their lyrical qualities. They readily rival other quartets in that coupling but, like the Vlach Quartet on Naxos, they generously add the fairy-tale suite for cello and piano, Pohádka, and the Violin Sonata, also very well played. Excellent sound.

From the Emerson Quartet, magnificent playing, awe-inspiring in its ensemble and tonal subtleties. However, it is wanting in the real intensity and spontaneity that these works demand. Listen to an excerpt and one is bowled over by the Emersons' mastery; listen to either of the complete quartets and one realizes that there is something missing in terms of character. Superb sound.

The Alban Berg coupling was made at public performances in the Mozartsaal and the Konzerthaus in Vienna in 1993. They play with enormous and at times almost frenzied intensity and are not frightened to produce rough, gutsy sound. Indeed, that impression is possibly enhanced by the fierce, strident recording. Although the reissue is inexpensive, the fill-up is a curious choice.

Violin Sonata

🔑  Praga PRD 250 153. Remés, Kayahara – DVOŘÁK: Sonatina; MARTINŮ, SMETANA: Violin Sonatas ***

🔑  Analekta FL2 3191. Ehnes, Laurel – DVOŘÁK: Romantic Pieces; Sonatina in G; Humoresque; SMETANA: From the Homeland ***

 HM HMC 901793. Faust, Kupiec – LUTOSŁAWSKI: Partita; Subito; SZYMANOWSKI: 3 Mythes ***

(*) Avie AV0023. Gleusteen, Ordonneau – PROKOFIEV: Violin Sonata 1; SHOSTAKOVICH: 19 Preludes **(*)

This newest Praga account from Václav Remés and the rich-timbred Sachito Kayahara is fierily intense, yet warmly affectionate, the questing closing Adagio highly dramatic, and with the closing pages creating a mood of tender intensity. The playing itself is superbly assured and characterful, and the recording first class.

In the equally fine collection of violin and piano music by the three greatest Czech composers on Analekta, Ehnes and Laurel make light of the technical and interpretative problems of the Janáček Sonata, always an elusive work. Playing with ease and warmth, they are persuasively spontaneous-sounding, with Ehnes using the widest tonal range, as in an ecstatic pianissimo at the end of the second-movement Ballada.

The programme on the Harmonia Mundi disc may seem an odd mixture, but it works well. There is a spontaneous sense of fantasy in all these performances which lightly brings out the quirky side of the Janáček. In the lyrical Ballata second movement, Isabelle Faust's pianissimo playing is breathtaking.

The similarly mixed bag of Slavonic works on the Avie disc makes an impressive showcase for the talents of the Canadian-born violinist, Kai Gleusteen, and his French accompanist, Catherine Ordonneau. Their account of the quirky Janáček Violin Sonata is most compelling. The recording, one of a series made in the 'inspirational and innovative working space' of Crear, on the west coast of Scotland, is on the reverberant side, but there is no lack of detail.

PIANO MUSIC

Along an Overgrown Path, Books I & II; In the Mists; Piano Sonata (1.x.1905); Reminiscence

🔑 Ⓜ  SOMMCD 028. Owen

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1172. Kvapil

Along an Overgrown Path: Suite 1; In the Mists; Piano Sonata (1.x.1905)

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 3 49913-2 (2). Andsnes – NIELSEN: Chaconne, etc. ***

It says much for Charles Owen and his understanding of Janáček, that he should present this music with such a distinctive voice. Here and throughout the disc Owen is helped by the clarity of the well-balanced recording. The qualities that make Owen's performance of the Sonata so impressive recur in the other works here. So Along an Overgrown Path reflects the composer's folk influences in lyrical freshness. In the Mist conveys the impression of improvisations caught on the wing, again gaining from the extra clarity and range of the Somm recording. The tiny Reminiscence, product of the year the composer died, makes a moving supplement.

Radoslav Kvapil is naturally at home in this engaging music, and he is very well recorded. So you cannot go wrong with this 1994 Regis CD (originally issued on the Unicorn label). It is also available in a first-class Regis compilation of Czech piano music, together with works by Dvořák, Smetana & Suk (RRC 4005).

Leif Ove Andsnes, too, is a first-class exponent of this repertoire and, if you are tempted by the equally fine Nielsen coupling, this can also be strongly recommended, although he offers less music.

Piano Sonata (1.x.1905)

 MDG 604 1141-2. von Eckardstein – MESSIAEN: La Rousserolle effarvatte; PROKOFIEV: Piano Sonata 8 ***

Severin von Eckardstein's approach is extremely sensitive and thoughtful. As fine an account of the work as we have encountered.

VOCAL MUSIC

Glagolitic Mass (original version, ed. Wingfield)

🔑 * Chan. 9310. Kiberg, Stene, Svensson, Cold, Danish Nat. R. Ch. & SO, Mackerras – KODÁLY: Psalmus hungaricus ****

The added rhythmic complexities of this original version, as interpreted idiomatically by Mackerras, encourage an apt wildness which brings an exuberant, carefree quality to writing which here, more than ever, seems like the inspiration of the moment. The chorus sings incisively with incandescent tone, and the tenor soloist, Peter Svensson, has a trumpet-toned precision that makes light of the high tessitura and the stratospheric leaps that Janáček asks for. The soprano Tina Kiberg, also bright and clear rather than beautiful in tone, makes just as apt a choice. Recorded sound of a weight and warmth that convey the full power of the music.

Glagolitic Mass

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 66980-2. Palmer, Gunson, Mitchinson, King, CBSO & Ch., Rattle – Sinfonietta

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 466 902-2. Kubiak, Collins, Tear, Schöne, Brighton Festival Ch., RPO, Kempe – KODÁLY: Laudes organi; Psalm 114 ***

Rattle's performance of the standard published score, aptly paired with the Sinfonietta, is strong and vividly dramatic, with the Birmingham performers lending themselves to Slavonic passion. The recording is first class and is now reissued as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Kempe stresses the lyrical elements of the score rather than going for outright fervour, but the orchestra and chorus are fully committed, and the solo singing is first rate too, with Teresa Kubiak particularly impressive. Everything is helped by the most realistic recording, which has transferred very well to CD. The unusual Kodály coupling is appropriate and adds to the interest of this reissue on Australian Decca's Eloquence label.

OPERA

(i) The Cunning Little Vixen (with Orchestral Suite); (ii) From the House of the Dead; (iii) Jenůfa; (iv) Káta Kabanová; (v) The Makropulos Affair; Sinfonietta; Taras Bulba; Zárlivost: Overture

Ⓑ (*) Decca (ADD/DDD) 475 6872 (9). (i) Bratislava Children's Ch.; (i; ii) Jedlická; (ii) Zídek; (i; iii) Popp, Randová, (ii; iii) Zahradniček; (iii) Ochman; (iii; iv; v) Söderström, Dvorský; (iv) Kniplová, Krejčik, Márová; (v) Blachut; (i–v) V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Mackerras

Sir Charles Mackerras's recordings of Janáček's five key operas are one of the outstanding achievements of the Decca operatic catalogue and cannot be too highly praised. In a bargain box, with three orchestral works thrown in for good measure, the attraction is obvious. However, although synopses are provided, they are not cued. These are operas where the libretti with translations are almost essential, and it is a pity that they are not made available separately – perhaps at extra cost.

The Cunning Little Vixen (complete; DVD version)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 240. Allen, Jenis, Minutillo, O de Paris, Mackerras

With Sir Charles Mackerras again bringing out the characteristic sharpness of Janáček's writing in this fantasy opera, the power of the score as well as its charm comes over strongly in this DVD production at the Châtelet Theatre in Paris with Nicholas Hytner as stage director. Central to the production's success are the designs of Bob Crowley which take one into a toytown world with stylized, brightly coloured sets in angular shapes, and costumes to match. Musically, the singing of Thomas Allen as the Forester focuses the whole performance, strong and sympathetic in conveying this character's devotion to the life of the forest. He is one of the few singers who dominate the orchestra in a recording which favours instruments against voices. The bright, penetrating voices of Eva Jenis as the Vixen and Hana Minutillo as the Fox also defy the recording balance. With Czech titles for individual tracks it is not always easy to identify which character is singing.

The Cunning Little Vixen (complete; CD version); The Cunning Little Vixen (suite, arr. Talich)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 417129-2 (2). Popp, Randová, Jedlická, V. State Op. Ch., Bratislava Children's Ch., VPO, Mackerras

 Sup. SU (ADD) 3071/2 612 (2) (without suite). Tattermuschová, Zikmundová, Kroupa, Hlavsa, Prague Nat. Ch. & O, Gregor

Mackerras's thrusting, red-blooded CD reading on Decca is spectacularly supported by a digital recording of outstanding, demonstration quality. The inspired choice of Lucia Popp as the vixen provides charm in exactly the right measure: sparkling and coquettish, spiteful as well as passionate. The supporting cast is first rate, too. Talich's splendidly arranged orchestral suite is offered as a bonus in a fine new recording.

Janáček's opera is given on Supraphon with plenty of idiomatic Slavonic feeling by the composer's compatriots, with the part of the little vixen here charmingly sung by Helena Tattermuschová. The recording is evocatively warm and atmospheric. While the digitally recorded Decca Mackerras set (with Lucia Popp) remains a more obvious first choice, this earlier Czech version can hold its own.

The Cunning Little Vixen (sung in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3101 (2). Watson, Allen, Tear, Knight, Howell, ROHCG Ch. & O, Rattle

The Rattle set gains from having been recorded as a spin-off from a highly successful Covent Garden production with the same excellent cast. In interpretation, Rattle's approach provides a clear alternative to that of Sir Charles Mackerras on his classic Decca version with a Czech cast. Where Mackerras characteristically brings out the sharp, angular side of Janáček's writing, the distinctly jagged element, Rattle's manner is more moulded, perhaps more immediately persuasive, if less obviously idiomatic. The recording is beautifully balanced, and this is important in the ensembles. What matters is that the words are ideally clear, with excellent diction from everyone.

The Excursions of Mr Brouček (complete)

🔑 * DG 477 7387 (2). Vacík, Straka, Janál, Haan, Plech, BBC Singers, BBC SO, Bělohlávek

🔑  Sup. (ADD) 11 2153-2 (2). Přibyl, Svejda, Jonášová, Czech PO Ch. & O, Jílek

Mr Brouček is a delightful piece (to quote John Warrack, 'a genuinely amusing and a touching and most original work'). This DG version comes from a concert performance mounted by the BBC at the Barbican in 2007 with Czech soloists, a Czech conductor and the BBC Singers and Symphony Orchestra. The result is a thoroughly idiomatic performance and an excellent balance. Although the second half ('Mr Brouček's Excursion to the fifteenth century') is less well sustained than the first, his excursion to the Moon, Jiří Bělohlávek gives a persuasive account of it. The two parts are accommodated on a CD each, and the DG production offers elegant results in the best traditions of the company.

This Supraphon performance comes over with real charm, thanks to the understanding conducting of Jílek, but also to the characterization of the central character, the bumbling, accident-prone Mr Brouček (literally Mr Beetle). Vilém Přibyl portrays him as an amiable, much-put-upon figure as he makes his excursions. The big team of Czech singers (doubling up roles in the different parts, with Vladimír Krejčík remarkable in no fewer than seven of them) are outstanding, bringing out both the warmth and sense of fun behind the writing. The result is a delight, as sharp and distinctive as any Janáček opera. The analogue recording, made in Prague in 1980, is full and atmospheric, with a fine sense of presence on CD.

Orchestral Suites: The Excursions of Mr Brouček; Jenůfa (arr. Breiner)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570555. New Zealand SO, Breiner

An ideal disc for those who like Janáček's musical language, but not opera. Both these Suites are very well compiled, keeping faithfully to the composer's orchestrations, though substituting the vocal lines to the orchestra and providing concert endings. These two contrasted suites – 70 minutes of first-rate music – are most enjoyable and the performances and recording very good.

From the House of the Dead (complete; DVD version)

 DG DVD 073 4426. Bär, Stocklossa, Margita, Sulzeno, Mark Ainsley, Haberfield, Arnold Schoenberg Ch, Mahler CO, Boulez

Patrice Chéreau was just the man to produce and direct this intensely powerful account of what must be one of the most depressing opera scenarios in the repertoire. Certainly Dostoevsky's original memoirs, on which the opera is based, do have an upbeat ending, as the central character, Goryanchikov – the excellent Olaf Bär – is released (alongside the eagle the prisoners have tended), and the young Alyeya (the very believable Eric Stocklossa) shows he is now able to read. Nevertheless, the narrative is fascinating, and here, with excellent characterization from all the main characters, and powerful musical direction from Boulez (bringing out what he calls the 'primitivism' in Janáček's score), the narrative is brought vividly to life throughout by Stéphane Merge's film direction. There is excellent documentation. And the bonus includes much extra material about the rehearsals, plus a discussion between Patrice Chéreau and Boulez on Dostoevsky's text.

(i) From the House of the Dead; (iii) Mládí (for wind sextet); (ii; iii) Říkadla (for chamber ch. & 10 instruments)

🔑  Decca DDD/ADD 430 375-2 (2). (i) Jedlička, Zahradníček, Janska, Zídek, Zítek, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Mackerras; (ii) L. Sinf. Ch.; (iii) L. Sinf., Atherton

With one exception, the Decca cast is superb, with a range of important Czech singers giving sharply characterized vignettes. The exception is the raw Slavonic singing of the one woman in the cast, Jaroslav Janska, as the boy Alyeya, but even that fails to undermine the intensity of the innocent relationship with the central figure which provides an emotional anchor for the whole piece. The chamber-music items added for this reissue are both first rate.

Jenůfa (complete; DVD version)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 208. Alexander, Silja, Langridge, M. Baker, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, A. Davis (V/D: Nikolaus Lehnhoff)

(*) TDK DVD DVWW-OPJENU. Stemme, Marton, Silvasti, Lindskog, Gran Teatre del Liceu Ch. & SO, Schneider (Stage Director: Olivier Tambosi, V/D: Pietro d'Agostino)

The impact of Nikolaus Lehnhoff's production of Jenůfa was always strong and positive, with the stark yet atmospheric designs of Tobias Hoheisel adding to the sharpness. On DVD, with close-ups in this television film of 1989 adding to the impact, the result is even more powerful. This visual treatment exactly matches the sharp originality of Janáček's score, with its often abrasive orchestration heightened by passages of surging beauty, superbly realized by Andrew Davis and the LPO.

Roberta Alexander makes a warm, slightly gawky Jenůfa, with Philip Langridge as the frustrated lover, Laka, making this awkward character totally believable, an object for sympathy, finally fulfilled. Both sing superbly, and so do the rest of the cast, including Mark Baker as the wastrel, Steva, a tenor well contrasted with Langridge. Yet dominating the cast is the Kostelnicka of Anja Silja. The abrasiveness in her voice, which with Wagner heroines was often obtrusive, is here a positive asset, and her portrayal of this formidable character, positive and uncompromising yet ultimately an object of pity, is totally convincing in all its complexity. The way she delivers Kostelnička's apprehensive cry at the end of Act II was 'as if death were peering into the house'. Full, vivid sound very well transferred, if with an edge that suits the music.

Olivier Tambosi's production on TDK sets the major part of the action on a raised portion of the stage against a rather effective, plain but pastoral, backcloth, showing the growing corn. He places a symbolic rock at centre stage to suggest the foetus of the child which dominates the opera's narrative, which grows in size in Act II to dominate the scene and is then broken up into rocky terrain in the third Act. Nina Stemme's vulnerable portrayal of Jenůfa is warmly sympathetic, and she is at her finest at the close of the opera when the story reaches its climax, with the discovery of the frozen body of her child. The men in her life, step-brothers Jorma Silvasti as Laca and Pär Lindskog as Steva, sing passionately and are convincingly characterized. But, of course, the key to the opera is the Kostelnička, and there is no doubt that Eva Marton gives a strongly dominating performance; and herein lies the flaw. She sings powerfully and emotionally but with a consistently wide vibrato which for some ears will be a deterrent to listening to her voice. Overall, the performance is gripping and Peter Schneider's musical direction is admirable, as is Pietro d'Agostino's camerawork. The very necessary documentation is excellent.

Jenůfa (complete; CD versions)

🔑 ❀ Ⓜ * Decca 475 8227 (2). Söderström, Ochman, Dvorský, Randová, Popp, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Mackerras

 Erato 0927 45330-2 (2). Mattila, Silja, Silvasti, Hadley, Randová, ROH Ch. & O, Haitink

The Decca CDs bring a performance from Mackerras and his team which is deeply sympathetic, strongly dramatic and superbly recorded. Elisabeth Söderström creates a touching portrait of the girl caught in a family tragedy. The two rival tenors, Peter Dvorský and Wieslav Ochman as the half-brothers Steva and Laca, are both superb; but dominating the whole drama is the Kostelnicka of Eva Randová. Some may resist the idea that she should be made so sympathetic but the drama is made stronger and more involving.

Haitink's version, recorded live at Covent Garden in October 2001, is distinguished not only by the warm, intense conducting but by the fine singing of the principals, notably Karita Mattila in the title role. Mattila with her fresh, girlish tone combined with great emotional depth, outshines even Elisabeth Söderström, whose more mature voice is less appropriate for the role, warmly expressive as she is. Anja Silja also gives a most memorable performance. Randová is here masterly in the much smaller role of Grandmother Buryja, and both tenor roles are very well taken, too, with Jorma Silvasti as Laca rising most movingly to the challenge of the final scene and the reconciliation with Jenůfa, while Jerry Hadley sings with comparable freshness as Steva. Though the sound on this live recording does not have the weight and power of the Decca digital studio recording and stage noises inevitably intrude at times, it is finely detailed, and the atmosphere adds to the compulsion of the performance, with refined playing from the orchestra.

Handsomely repackaged, with full libretto and translation, the 1979 Supraphon set, while lacking the concentration of Mackerras's set for Decca, is fresh, sharp and enjoyable. A strong cast is headed by two veteran singers, Vilém Přibyl as Laca and Nadejda Kniplová as the Kostelnitčka; their singing is most assured, but their voices are often raw for the gramophone. So too with most of the singers in the smaller parts, though the role of Jenůfa went to the now famous, creamy-toned Gabriela Beňačková, with no hint of a Slavonic wobble. As Stewa, the tenor Vladimir Krejčík makes an excellent impression. (SUP SU 3869-2)

Jenůfa (sung in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3106 (2). Watson, Barstow, Wedd, Robson, Davies, WNO Ch. & O, Mackerras

Based on the acclaimed production of Jenůfa from Welsh National Opera, Sir Charles Mackerras's Chandos set offers an important alternative to the classic, prize-winning version he conducted in 1982 for Decca. The benefit of the Chandos sound is that the colour and originality of Janáček's orchestral textures come over even more vividly than on the brilliant Decca set, at once opulent and well defined, with each strand clarified and the exotic percussion effects brought out. Helped by a few sound-effects, the result is generally more atmospheric.

When it comes to the rival casts on CD, they are both very strong, with no weak links. Janice Watson on Chandos has a beautiful voice, sounding aptly young, fresh and girlish, and deeply expressive too. As the Kostelnička, Dame Josephine Barstow is edgier and more abrasive, and with that she conveys not only the obsessive side of this powerful character but an element of vulnerability, apt for the story. The two tenor roles are also very well taken, with Peter Wedd as Steva and Nigel Robson as Laca nicely contrasted, effectively bringing out the sharp differences of character between the half-brothers. Elizabeth Vaughan as Grandmother Buryja and Neal Davies as the Foreman complete a formidable line-up of principals. Not surprisingly, words are much clearer from the male singers than from the female but the final duet between Jenůfa and Laca is even more tender than it was in the Vienna performance, bringing out all the subtlety of Janáček's evocative writing.

Káta Kabanová (complete; DVD versions)

🔑  Arthaus DVD 100 158. Gustafson, Palmer, R. Davies, McCauley, Graham-Hall, Winter, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, A. Davis (V/D: Nikolaus Lehnhoff)

(i) Káta Kabanová (complete; CD version); (ii) Capriccio for Piano & 7 Instruments; Capriccio for Piano & 6 Instruments

🔑  Decca (ADD) 475 7518 (2). (i) Söderström, Dvorský, Kniplová, Krejčik, Márová, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Mackerras; (ii) Crossley, L. Sinf., Atherton

First seen at Glyndebourne in 1988, this Arthaus DVD offers the ground-breaking production by Nikolaus Lehnhoff with stark, striking designs by Tobias Hoheisel, which led to a whole sequence of memorable Janáček productions. It remains one of the most powerful, with Nancy Gustafson tenderly moving as the heroine starved of love, constantly frustrated by her implacable mother-in-law, the deeply unsympathetic Kabanicha, brilliantly portrayed and sung by Felicity Palmer, with a powerful cutting edge. The production, too, is exactly suited to the distinctive idiom of Janáček, with its contrasts of abrasiveness and rich beauty. Strong contributions too from Ryland Davies as Tichon, Káta's husband, Barry McCauley as Boris, and John Graham-Hall as Kudrjas, with characterful contributions too from such a veteran as Donald Adams as Boris's father, Dikoj. Bright, forward sound adds to the impact.

It was understandable that Decca should have chosen Káta Kabanová for one of their new series of Originals, for Elisabeth Söderström dominates the opera as Káta in one of her finest and most moving recorded performances. The rest of the cast is Czech and, with Mackerras at the helm, the performance overall can hardly fail. The two concertante works, with Paul Crossley also on top form, were added for the original reissue.

Though Mackerras's Supraphon set offers digital sound and has an excellent Czech cast, it cannot match his earlier, Decca version in colour or bite. Though his speeds are a degree faster than before, the result is less violent and less involving, thanks partly to the low-level recording, set in a reverberant acoustic. Beňačková, rich and vibrant, is an exceptionally characterful Káta, arguably more idiomatic than Söderström on Decca, and the other principals are first rate too, but at every point this pales before its rival. (SU 3291-2632)

Kátya Kabanová (sung in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3145 (2). Barker, Henschel, Brubaker, Hoare, Wedd, Howell, WNO Ch. & O, Rizzi

Carlo Rizzi, who conducted the live performances for WNO, is a persuasive Janáček interpreter, and it is fascinating to compare this English version with the Decca recording made by Mackerras with the Vienna Philharmonic and an excellent, mainly Czech, cast but with the title-role taken by the Swedish soprano, Elisabeth Söderström. Taking the title-role is Cheryl Barker, again fresh, clear and powerful, more girlish-sounding than Söderström on Decca and, when in Act III Emilia Marty is at last given a sustained solo, the new version is even more powerful than the old one, aptly abrasive and less moulded. Jane Henschel is outstanding as Marfa Kabanová, the rich widow who persecutes her daughter-in-law, Katya, wonderfully rich and firm throughout her range. It is remarkable too that, as in the Czech cast for Mackerras, the three tenor roles are exceptionally well taken, even if the contrast between Robert Brubaker as Boris, Peter Wedd as Kudryash and Peter Hoare as Tichon, husband of Katya and son of Marfa, is not ideally marked. Gwynne Howell as the merchant, Dikoi, uncle of Boris, is also excellent. Another outstanding issue in the Opera in English series.

The Makropulos Affair (DVD version)

🔑 ✿  Warner DVD 0630 14016-2. Silja, Begley, Braun, Shore, LPO, A. Davis (Director: Nikolaus Lehnhoff, V/D: Brian Large)

Now comes the 1995 Glyndebourne production by Nikolaus Lehnhoff, whose Káta Kabanová we so much admired, and with an astonishingly powerful account of the heroine from Anja Silja. In fact, it is difficult to flaw this production on any count. It is excellently cast, with Kim Begley as Gregor, Viktor Braun as Pruš and Andrew Shore as Dr Kolenaty, and it is conducted with a sense both of atmosphere and of pace by Sir Andrew Davis. He is hardly less idiomatic and sensitive than Mackerras. Those who were privileged to see this will not forget the commanding portrayal of Emilia by Silja. As usual, Brian Large brings everything to the screen with scrupulous care and taste to make this a very special contribution to the Janáček DVD discography.

(i) The Makropulos Affair (CD version): complete; (ii) Lachian Dances

🔑  Decca (ADD) 430 372-2 (2). (i) Söderström, Dvorský, Blachut, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Mackerras; (ii) LPO, Huybrechts

Mackerras and his superb team provide a thrilling new perspective on this opera, with its weird heroine preserved by magic elixir well past her 300th birthday. Elisabeth Söderström is not simply malevolent: irritable and impatient rather, no longer an obsessive monster. Framed by richly colourful singing and playing, Söderström amply justifies that view, and Peter Dvorský is superbly fresh and ardent as Gregor. The recording, like others in the series, is of the finest Decca analogue quality. The performance of the Lachian Dances is highly idiomatic and makes a good bonus.

The Makropulos Case (sung in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3138 (2). Barker, Brubaker, Graham-Hall, Xanthoudakis, Wegner, Walker, Clark, ENO Ch. & O, Mackerras

It says much for the quality of the English National Opera Orchestra that for this new version in English, the playing is just as polished as that of the Vienna Philharmonic, with the benefit of extra dramatic bite, thanks to experience in the opera house. The recording of the new set brings an advantage too with extra separation, suiting Janáček's music better, as Sir Charles says in his conversation with Rodney Milnes. Also, the words are astonishingly clear, even more so than in other recordings in the Moores series. As to the Chandos cast, Cheryl Barker rivals Elisabeth Söderström on Decca in the dramatic bite of her singing, fresh and clean-cut, and when in Act III Emilia Marty is at last given a sustained solo, the new version is even more powerful than the old one, aptly abrasive and less moulded. Though the American, Robert Brubaker, cannot quite match Peter Dvorský on Decca in the key role of Albert Gregor, and in some of the smaller roles the Czech singers have an advantage too in sharper characterization, all give strong, firmly focused performances.

Osud (complete, in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3029. Langridge, Field, Harries, Bronder, Kale, Welsh Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Mackerras

Though this recording was made with Welsh National Opera forces, its success echoes the ENO production. Philip Langridge is again superb in the central role of the composer, Zivny, well supported by Helen Field as Mila, the married woman he loves, and by Kathryn Harries as her mother – a far finer cast than was presented on a short-lived Supraphon set. Sir Charles Mackerras captures the full gutsiness, passion and impetus of the composer's inspiration, from the exhilarating opening waltz ensemble onwards, a passage that vividly sets the scene in a German spa at the turn of the century. The warmly atmospheric recording brings out the unusual opulence of the Janáček sound in this work, written immediately after Jenůfa, yet it allows words to come over with fine clarity.

Šárka (complete)

🔑  Sup. SU 3485-2. Urbanová, Straka, Kusnjer, Brezina, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Czech PO, Mackerras

Šárka, written originally in 1887, was Janáček's very first opera. Though the idiom has more echoes of Dvořák and Smetana than anticipations of the mature Janáček, its dramatic point comes over strongly, with the legend reduced to bare essentials to give it a dream-like quality, making it a Freudian fantasy before its time. Janáček regarded this as his Wagnerian opera, ending as it does with the immolation of the formidable heroine, Šárka (an Amazonian figure sworn to avenge herself on man) on the funeral pyre of Ctirad, the hero-figure with whom, against her will, she falls in love. It is not just an immolation, but a Liebestod, or love-death. This first stereo recording could hardly be finer, with Mackerras inspiring his Czech singers and players to give an incandescent performance, with Eva Urbanová and Peter Straka ideally cast, both characterfully Slavonic and clean in attack. First-rate sound, with atmospheric choral effects beautifully caught.

JAUBERT, Maurice (1900–40)

Ballade

(BB) () Dutton (mono) CDBP 9764. SO, composer – HONEGGER: Cello Concerto, etc.; PIERNÉ: Ramuntcho ()

Maurice Jaubert graduated from the Nice Conservatoire and practised law before turning to music. He is best remembered for his film music; he wrote the scores for Un Carnet de Bal and La Fin du Jour in the late 1930s. The Ballade was recorded in 1934. But the attraction of this issue is naturally the Honegger, for which this makes a pleasing makeweight.

JENKINS, John (1592–1678)

Consort Music: Ayres a 4 in D min. & G min. (Ayre; Almaine; Couranto); Divisions for 2 Basses in C; Fantasia: in C min.; D; E min.; Fantasias in C min. (2); Fantasia in F (All in a Garden Green); Fantasy-suite in A min.; In nomine in G min.; Newarke Seidge (Pavan; Galliard); Pavan in F

(BB)  Naxos 8.550687. Rose Consort of Viols, with Roberts

Consort Music: Divisions for 2 Bass Viols in D; Fantasias: a 4 in D; in F (2); a 5 in C min. (2); & D; a 6 in A min. & C min.; In nomines: a 6 in E min. & G min.; Pavan for 2 Bass Viols; Pavan a 6 in F; Pieces for Lyra Viol; Suites 4 in C for 2 Trebles, Bass & Organ; 7 in D min., for Treble, 2 Basses & Organ in D min.

 Virgin 5 45230-2. Fretwork, with Nicholas

John Jenkins spent his life in Norfolk and lapsed into obscurity. Yet on the evidence of these two fine, complementary CDs his viol music is of high quality and well worth rediscovering. It does not seek great profundity, although the beautiful Pavan in F major, common to both discs, is memorable, and all the Fantasias are well crafted – their invention appealingly immediate. Although they overlap, both collections are thoroughly recommendable, with the difference between them accentuated by the difference in performance pitch, with Fretwork slightly higher, giving a brighter, fresher impression, whereas the Rose Consort have a somewhat warmer tonal blend, especially noticeable in that fine Pavan.

Consort Music for Violins in 6 Parts: Fantasies 1–11; Bell Pavan; In nomines 1–2

 Astrée ES 9962. Hespèrion XX, Savall

The performances here are richly blended and bring out the full, expressive depth of this music. At times one feels that the playing of the faster pieces could have produced a brighter projection, but viols are not violins and have a more limited dynamic range, so this remains a highly recommendable anthology. The recording itself, warm and full and not too close, cannot be faulted.

12 Fantasies in 6 parts; Bell Pavan in A min.; In nomines in G min. and E min.; Pavan in F

🔑  Avie AV 2099. Phantasm

With their elaborate counterpoint, these pieces – all but one in the minor mode – hark back to the Golden Age of Elizabethan music, even though they probably date from the 1620s, after the great queen died, early in the long career of John Jenkins. The writing is masterly and the performances consistently sympathetic; but, with music with little variation of dynamic or texture, this is not a disc to play all the way through at one go, but to sample appreciatively. Well recorded.

17 Fantasies & 3 Pavans in 5 parts

🔑  Avie 2120. Phantasm

Phantasm, the outstanding viol consort, here offers the first complete recording of all 20 of Jenkins's works in five parts. These outstanding performances help in offering beautifully tuned instruments, which might otherwise sound edgy. Phantasm bring out the drama of much of the writing, a biting quality which hardly matches the portrait of the composer that has been handed down.

An earlier pioneering collection from the 1980s comes from the Consort of Musicke, directed by Trevor Jones, including Fantasias, Fantasy-Suites and dances, all played with dedication, communicating the music's freshness and lyricism and worth its mid-price. The (originally Oiseau-Lyre) recording is excellent. (Explore EXP 0010)

JENKINS, Karl (born 1944)

'Quirk': Allegretto from Palladio for Strings. (i) Concerto for Flutes, Keyboards & Percussion (Quirk); (ii) Concerto for 2 Harps & Orchestra (Over the Stone); (iii) Concerto for Marimba & Orchestra (La Folia); (iv) Concerto for Violin & Orchestra (Sarikiz)

Ⓝ 🔑 * EMI 5 00235-2. (i) Davies, Alley, Percy; (ii) Finch; (iii) Percy; (iv) Bisengalliev; LSO, composer

'Quirk' is the title chosen by the composer for this delightful collection of miniature concertos and which he has also given to the lively Double Flute Concerto with its finale entitled 'Chasing the Goose'. Vivaldi is the comparison who springs to mind, for although the Jenkins style is light-hearted, his inspiration and communicative musical skills easily match those of the baroque concerto composer. Moreover, he includes a haunting set of variations on the baroque favourite theme, La Folia, but scored for solo marimba, a remarkably apt choice. The other works captivate the ear with equal felicity, the sparkling Violin Concerto has a memorably expressive central Romanza and the gentle, evocative Concerto for Two Harps is so written that both instruments can be played by a single harpist, in this instance the very sensitive Catrin Finch. The programme ends with the catchy Allegretto ostinato from Palladio (originally the first movement of a concerto grosso) which has since become a top popular hit, difficult to dislodge from the memory. All the performances are enticing, and the recording is excellently balanced.

The Armed Man (A Mass for Peace)

(*) EMI DVD DVB3 32345-9. John S. Davies Singers, Serendipity, Welsh Nat. Op. O, composer

The special interest of Jenkins's Mass is that it thematically draws on a famous 15th-century Burgundian popular song, L'Homme armé (translated as 'The armed man is to be feared'), which had been used as a basis for a Mass by countless medieval composers before him, so establishing a link with a long tradition, instantly recognizable at the opening. The DVD performance, filmed live, is illustrated by back-projections of a daunting series of war images, mostly in black and white, taken from various cinema newsreels and TV broadcasts, giving added point to the composer's music. This is at its most moving in the penultimate triptych, the Agnus Dei, Now the guns have stopped, and Benedictus, before the optimistic and blander closing Better is Peace. The well-recorded performance under the composer is unambitious visually, but otherwise cannot be faulted.

Stabat Mater

🔑 * EMI 5 00283-2. Adamonyte, Sykes, EMO Ens., RLPO Ch. & O, composer

It is obvious that with the Stabat Mater Karl Jenkins has another big hit with the public on his hands. The whole work is communicatively tuneful in a way that most music-lovers can respond too. The composer has interpolated six texts not in the Stabat Mater liturgy, including a previously composed Ave verum. Incantation, the second section, is in early Arabic, with Belinda Sykes singing idiomatically. Then the following Vidit Jesum in tormentis is a simple and rather lovely chorale, magnetically elaborated. The fourth-movement Lament (with a text especially written by Carol Barratt), with another memorable theme, is touchingly sung by Jurgita Adamonyte, and the Sancta Mater creates an explosive contrast in its choral response to the Crucifixion. Are you lost out in the darkness?, the ninth section, is a lament drawing on a story from the Epic of Gilgamesh, and the Paradisi gloria makes a thrilling close, building with its closing 'Alleluias' to a great climax. The soloists and Liverpool forces respond to the composer's direction passionately, and the recording is excellent.

JOACHIM, Joseph (1831–1907)

Hamlet Overture, Op. 4

 Simax PSC 1206. Oslo PO, Jansons – BRAHMS: Symphony 1 ***

Though this first of Joachim's two Shakespearean overtures (the second being Heinrich IV) cannot compare in quality of material with the Brahms symphony, it makes an apt and enjoyable coupling, when the young Brahms admired it so much that he made a piano transcription. Excellent performance and fine sound.

Heinrich IV Overture, Op. 7

 Simax PSC 1205. Olso PO, Jansons – BRAHMS: Symphony 4 ***

Joachim wrote the second of his Shakespearean overtures, based on Henry IV, over a prolonged period in 1853 and 1854, reacting to the adverse criticism of Schumann that it was too gloomy. Whether or not through Joachim's revisions, it is certainly not that, with its fanfares and marches a sharper, more inventive piece than the earlier Hamlet Overture, making an interesting coupling for the Brahms symphony, similarly well recorded.

JOHANSEN, David Monrad (1888–1974)

String Quartet, Op. 36

BB  Naxos 8.550879. Oslo String Qt – GRIEG: String Quartets ***

David Monrad Johansen's String Quartet, composed in 1969 when in his early eighties, is persuasively played by the Oslo String Quartet and is impeccably recorded. It is a well-crafted piece but not as distinctively personal as Pan or the best of his mature works.

JOHNSON, Robert (c. 1563–1633)

Lute Pieces: Almaynes 1–4; Fantasia; The gipsies dance; My Lady Mildmay's Delight (Gallyard); Pavans 1–3; Songs: (i) As I walked forth; Away delights; Care-charming sleep; Come heavy sleep; Come hither you that love; Hark! hark! the lark; Have you seen the bright lily grow?; How wretched is the state; Oh let us how; Tell me dearest; Where the bee sucks; With endless tears; Woods, rocks and mountains

(*) Avie 2053. (i) Sampson; Wadsworth, Levy

Robert Johnson, son of John Johnson, lutenist to Queen Elizabeth I, became in his turn lutenist to King James I, also serving under Prince Charles and remaining with him after he became Charles I. Johnson was later to provide songs for Shakespeare's plays, notably The Tempest. His writing has a wider range of mood than Dowland's, although he can certainly achieve movingly expressive dolour, as in Care-charming sleep, With endless tears and Come heavy sleep, which are as fine as any of Dowland's songs. The delightful Have you seen the bright lily grow?, with its upward leap, is a number that ought to be really famous. Carolyn Sampson has a sweet but full voice and sings most pleasingly and stylishly, and she is felicitously accompanied by Matthew Wadsworth (and occasionally by Mark Levy's bass viol); the lute solos are also attractively played. The one snag to the recording is the resonance of St Mary's Church, South Crake, Norfolk, which has not been fully controlled by the recording engineer and sometimes catches the voice slightly on louder climaxes.

JONES, Daniel (1912–93)

Symphonies (i) 4 (In Memory of Dylan Thomas); 7; (ii) 8

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 329. (i) RPO, Groves; (ii) BBC Welsh SO, Thomson

There is no doubt, listening to these symphonies, that Daniel Jones is a genuine symphonic thinker, capable of arguing in long, coherently related paragraphs. The Fourth Symphony, written in memory of Dylan Thomas, is powerfully atmospheric; and the Seventh is strong in feeling and organically conceived. 8, too, is finely crafted and tersely argued. These symphonies are worth hearing and, given such fine playing and recording, they can certainly be recommended.

Symphonies (i) 6; (ii) 9; (i; iii) The Country beyond the Stars (cantata)

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 326. (i) RPO, Groves: (ii) BBC Welsh O, Thomson; (iii) with Welsh Nat. Op. Ch.

The Sixth Symphony (1964) is certainly one of his finest, eclectic in style; but the cogency of the argument is matched by his ability to communicate emotional experience. The Ninth Symphony, written a decade later, is in normal four-movement form, finely crafted and tersely argued, but its material is not quite so strongly personalized. It is very well played by the BBC Welsh Orchestra under Bryden Thomson and truthfully recorded. The Country beyond the Stars is the earliest work here (1958) and is obviously designed to suit the traditional qualities of Welsh choirs: warm, relaxed writing with bursts of eloquent fervour, but always easy on the ear. The Welsh National Opera Chorus do it full justice and the sound, like Groves's performance, is very fine.

String Quartets 1–8

 Chan. 9535 (2). Delmé Qt

The First Quartet is a particularly impressive work, with a certain cosmopolitanism and a distinctly French tinge to its atmosphere. But Jones is always his own man. 2 is exploratory and has a characteristically concentrated Lento espressivo. 3–5 are distinguished by seriousness of purpose and fine craftsmanship. The last three quartets are even more succinct (each lasting about a quarter of an hour). 6 marked the 250th birthday of Haydn and uses two of that master's themes. Its mood is strongly focused, moving from a solemn introduction (and back again) via the Haydnesque Scherzo and a simple slow movement. 7 is masterly, intensely concentrated: its central movement is marked Penseroso. The last quartet, full of memorable ideas, was left unfinished; it was skilfully completed from the composer's sketches by Giles Easterbrook. Appropriately, it has a hauntingly elegiac close. It is played here with enormous dedication and, like 7, holds the listener in a powerful emotional spell. A fitting conclusion to a splendid series, given definitive readings from a quartet closely identified with the music, and first-class Chandos sound.

JONES, Robert (1570–1615)

Lute Songs

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 624 10-2 (2). Kirkby, Rooley – DOWLAND: Lute Songs **(*)

Robert Jones was a younger contemporary of John Dowland of whom we know little, except that he never enjoyed the same acclaim. Yet his songs, if seldom exploring the greater depths of emotion (there is little or no despair in his amorous encounters), have great charm and are often very touching. These songs suit Emma Kirkby's voice and her simplicity of style to perfection. She catches their mood admirably and is especially delightful in the more optimistic celebrations of love from the Second Book: Love wing'd my hopes, Love is a bable, and Love's god is a boy, with its pretty refrain. In short, this recital is most rewarding, and it suggests that Robert Jones was a finer composer than his reputation suggests. Anthony Rooley accompanies most supportively, and voice and lute are admirably balanced.

JONGEN, Joseph (1873–1953)

Symphonie Concertante for Organ & Orchestra, Op. 81

 Telarc CD 80096. Murray, San Francisco SO, de Waart – FRANCK: Fantaisie, etc. ***

Anyone who likes the Saint-Saëns Third Symphony should enjoy the Jongen Symphonie Concertante. Even if the music is on a lower level of inspiration, the passionate Lento misterioso and hugely spectacular closing Toccata make a favourable impression at first hearing and wear surprisingly well afterwards. Michael Murray has all the necessary technique to carry off Jongen's hyperbole with the required panache. He receives excellent support from Edo de Waart and the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, and Telarc's engineers capture all the spectacular effects with their usual aplomb. A demonstration disc indeed.

JOSQUIN DESPRÉZ
(died 1521)

Chansons; Instrumental pieces (viols or lute): Adieu mes amours; Fors seulment; Fortuna desperata; Ile fantazies; Mille regretz; La plus des plus; Si j'ay perdu mon amy

🔑 Ⓑ  HM Musique d'Abord HMA 1951279. Ens. Clément Janequin

'Un magnifique condensé de l'art de Josquin', justly commented Le Monde about this disc. The vocal numbers are sung with dolour or vitality as required, and the blending of the two, three, four, five or even six voices is as admirable as the intonation is secure. Lute and viol pieces provide interludes. The programme ends with the sparkling six-voice Allégez moy, followed by the infinitely touching tribute to Ockeghem. A pity there are texts but no translations, but that is the French way. A marvellous disc just the same, and very well recorded.

Missa Ad fugam; Missa Sine nomine

Ⓝ  Gimell CDVGIM 039. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

It seems likely that the Missa Ad fugam is either a very early work or not by Josquin at all, but the Missa Sine nomine shows the composer at his very finest, holding the listener in its grip by its sheer intensity through textures of great variety. The Tallis performances ensure that the music unfolds with a kind of inevitable spontaneity and they are, as usual, beautifully recorded.

Chansons; Mass Movements; Motets

Ⓜ  Gaudeamus CDGAU 361. Clerks' Group, Wickham

The very opening Tu solus qui facis grabs the attention, and the following five-voice setting of Salve Regina is equally beautiful. The three chansons, Adieu mes amours, Bergerette Savoysienne and Baisés moi, make an apt contrast, and the excerpts from the four Masses included are also well chosen to show the eloquence of the composer's writing. The collection ends with Ave Maria . . . Virgo serena which Edward Wickham suggests in his accompanying note 'has come to represent the quintessence of Josquin'. The performances could hardly be bettered, and the recording too is of very high quality, so if you want a Josquin sampler, this is ideal.

(i) Messe Ave Maris Stella; Missa de Beata Virgine; Missa Gaudeamus; Missa L'homme armé sexti toni; Missa lLhomme armé super voces musicales; Missa Pange lingua; Motets; Motets à la Vierge; (ii) Missa Hercules dux Ferrariae; Motets: Inviolata, integra, et casta es, Maria; Miserere mei, Deus. Instrumental pieces: Chi à Martello Dio Gu'il Toglia; Deus, in nomine tuo salvum me fac

✿ Ⓑ * Naive Astrée Auvidis E 8906 (6). A sei voci (i) Maîtrise des Pays de Loire (members); (ii) Maîtrise Notre-Dame de Paris, Les Saqueboutiers de Toulouse, Ens. Labyrinthes; all directed Fabre-Garrus

Bernard Fabre-Garrus's pacing and flexibility of line are masterly. Five of the six discs include a major Mass setting, together with a group of motets, of which the Paris recording is the most spectacular. This CD (E 8601) offers the Mass for Hercules, Duke of Ferrara, which is supported throughout by a brass group, who play an introduction and postlude (for sackbuts and drums) and include also a specially sung and played tribute to the Duke, plus memorable performances of the Misere mei, Deus and an invocation to the Virgin, Inviolata, integra, et casta es, Maria.

The disc including the beautiful Missa de Beata Virgine (in six parts, richly sung by twelve voices) includes five appropriate linking motets à la Vierge, including a fine Ave Maria and Stabat Mater (E 8560). The Missa Gaudeamus (E 8612) with its soaring soprano line also stands out as among Josquin's most beautiful Mass settings, while it is fascinating to hear both versions of L'homme armé where Josquin draws on his cantus firmus so subtly that one has to listen very hard to spot it. Altogether a superb set, faithfully recorded in a warm but not clouding acoustic, and well documented, if in very small print.

Motetti de Passione ... B (1503): Ave verum corpus; Christem ducem/Qui velatus; Domine, non secundum; O Domine Jesu Christe; Tu solus, qui facis mirabilia; Missa Faisant regretz

🔑 ✿  Gaudeamus CDGAU 302. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with FRYE: Tut a par moy ***)

Josquin's compact but characteristically fluent and appealing four-part Mass setting, Faisant regretz, is based on a four-note motif taken from Walter Frye's rondeau for three voices, Tut a par moy, which is also included on this CD. This dolorous song must have been very famous in its day and Josquin ingeniously weaves the very striking motto theme (always easy to recognize) into his vocal texture with great imaginative resource – right through to the Agnus Dei.

But even more striking in this outstanding collection is the cycle of five motets largely based on the readings in Petrucci, Motetti de Passione ... B of 1503. They are arrestingly chordal in style, the opening declamatory Tu solus, qui facis mirabilia, with its bare harmonies, arrestingly so. The extended Christem ducem/Qui velatus (a setting of Passiontide hymns by St Bonaventure) which Wickham rightly places last, is the most movingly expressive of all. Superb performances, given an uncanny presence in an ideal acoustic.

Ave Maria (for 4 voices); Chanson: L'homme armé; Missa l'homme armé super voces musicales; Missa l'homme armé sexti toni; Missa la sol fa re mi; Plainchant: Pange lingua; Missa Pange lingua; Praeter rerum serium

🔑 Ⓑ * Gimell CDGIM 206 (2).Tallis Scholars, Phillips

This two-for-the-price-of-one offer generously combines nearly all the contents of two outstanding Josquin CDs, including two of the most famous Mass settings of the medieval era, both based on a familar chanson, L'homme armé, also used by other composers. The recordings of the Missa Pange lingua and the ingenious Missa la sol fa re mi are also unsurpassed and won a Gramophone award in 1987. The motet Ave Maria makes a beautiful closing item. The recordings are as outstanding as the perfectly blended flowing lines of the singing.

Motets: Inter natos mulierum; Pater noster/Ave Maria; Planxit autem David; Recordare, virgin mater

 Hyp. CDA 67183. Binchois Cons., Kirkman (with BAULDEWEYN: Ave caro Christi cara; CHAMPION (or JOSQUIN): De Profundis; FORESTIER (or JOSQUIN): Veni sancte spiritus; CRAEN: Tota pulchra est; WILLAERT: Verbum bonum et suave)

What the disc amply demonstrates is that, though Josquin's fame and reputation are securely based (a supreme master of the period – witness the lovely Recordare for upper voices), there was much superb music being written by less celebrated composers from the early 16th century. Willaert's six-part Verbum bonum is wonderfully inventive, and Forestier's Veni sancte spiritus, long thought to be by Josquin, is equally powerful. Under Andrew Kirkman the Binchois Consort sing with fine, beautifully matched ensemble, and are treated to finely balanced recording.

Antiphons, motets and sequences: Inviolata; Praeter rerum serium; Salve regina; Stabat mater dolorosa; Veni, sancte spiritus; Virgo prudentissima; Virgo salutiferi

 Mer. (ADD) ECD 84093. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom

The Meridian anthology collects some of Josquin's most masterly and eloquent motets in performances of predictable excellence by Edward Higginbottom and the Choir of New College, Oxford. An admirable introduction to Josquin, and an essential acquisition for those who care about this master.

Chanson: Fortuna desperata (probably by BUSNOIS); Missa Fortuna desperata; Adieu mes amours; Bererette savoysienne; Consideres mes incessantes (Fortuna); La plus des plus

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 220. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with ISAAC: Bruder Conrat/Fortuna; SENFL: Herr durch dein Bluet/Pange lingua/Fortuna; ANON.: Fortuna Zibaldone; GREITER: Passibus ambiguis/Fortuna valubis errat ***)

The fascination of the collection from the Clerks' Group is the inclusion of not just the chanson on which Josquin's Mass was based, probably by Antoine Busnois (1430–92), but also eight further treatments and rearrangements of a song which in its time was obviously as popular as L'Homme armé – including four by Josquin himself. Most striking of all is the anonymous Florentine Fortuna Zibaldone, in which one really needs the provided translation, for the four voices sing three different light-hearted texts simultaneously, together with the original chanson, with the whole performance taking just over a minute! As usual, the singing here is admirable in its blending and clarity of line, and the recording quite excellent.

Missa Faisant regretz; Missa di dadi

Ⓜ 🔑 * Decca O/L 475 9112. Medieval Ens. of London, P. & T. Davies

The two Josquin Masses recorded here are both parody Masses, based on English music of the period. The Missa di dadi is among the earliest of Josquin's Masses and takes its cantus firmus from the tenor part of the chanson, N'aray-je jamais mieulx by Robert Morton; its companion, the Missa Faisant regretz, draws for its cantus firmus on another by Walter Frye. The latter is among the shortest of Josquin's Masses and acquires its name from the fact that its four-part cantus firmus occurs on the words 'Faisant regretz' in the chanson Tout a par moy. They are both ingenious works and, more to the point, very beautiful, particularly when sung with such dedication and feeling as they are here. The Medieval Ensemble of London sing superbly; they not only blend perfectly but are blessed with perfect intonation.

Missa Hercules dux Ferrariae; Miserere mei Deus. Motets; Chansons: Le Déploration de la mort de Johannes Ockeghem; El grillo; En l'hombre d'ung buissonet au matinet; Je me complains; Je ne me puis tenir d'aimer; Mille regretz; Petite camusette; Scaramella va' alla guerra – Loyset Compère: Scaramella fa la galla; GOMBERT (attrib. JOSQUIN): Motet: Lugabet David Absalon

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 62346-2 (2). Hilliard Ens., Hillier

The Hilliard Ensemble find the full measure of Josquin's Mass, Hercules dux Ferrariae, probably written just before the composer's appointment to Ferrara in 1505, and featuring a cantus based on the letters of the work's title, paying homage to the composer's future employer, Duke Ercole d'Este. The performance revels in the rich flowing lyricism of the Kyrie and Agnus Dei, whose second section includes a fascinating three-in-one canon, yet bringing passionate ardour to the climaxes of the Sanctus and Benedictus.

The motets are sung with dignity and feeling, but the chansons display infinite variety and colour. Petite camusette ('Little Snubnose') has a winning charm to set against the deeply touching Mille regretz, while the sparkling Italian frottola, Scaramella va' alla guerra and the witty portrait of a cricket, El grillo, show Josquin in lighter vein. The disc ends movingly with an elegiac tribute to Ockeghem, who succeeded Josquin in Ferrara after only a year, only to perish later in the plague. Expertly balanced and eminently truthful, these discs make an admirable pair (at budget price) to kindle the enthusiasm of the uninitiated. But it is a pity there are no texts and translations.

Missa l'homme armé sexti toni. Motets: Absalom, fili mi; Ave Maria

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.553428. Oxford Camerata, Summerly – VINDERS: Lament on the Death of Josquin ***

An interesting feature of the Josquin setting is his interpolation of a trope (Laeta dies) following the Credo and before the Sanctus using a non-liturgical text. The effect is undoubtedly dramatic at the centre of a work where the flowing lines of the polyphony have such a rich harmonic implication. The long Credo breaks free, with the polyphony becoming more animated, and so becomes the central focus of the whole Mass – and what a beautiful Mass it is; very beautifully sung and recorded here. The Ave Maria is used to create a tranquil mood before the Mass itself begins, and the very touching motet, Absalom, fili mi, makes a poignant coda. This is followed by the radiant elegy of Josquin's contemporary, Jheronimus Vinders, with its soaring treble line, surely a fitting tribute. With full texts provided, this CD is one of the very finest of this distinguished Naxos series.

JOUBERT, John (born 1927)

Sinfonietta, Op. 38; Temps perdu (Variations for String Orchestra), Op. 99; (i) The Instant Moment, Op. 110

 British Music Society BMS 419CD. E. String O, Boughton; (i) with Herford

John Joubert was born in Cape Town but settled in Britain during the early years of apartheid. He taught at the Universities of Hull and Birmingham, but his large output has received scant recognition in the record catalogues. All three works are unfailingly inventive and don't waste notes. Those who feel at home in the worlds of Sibelius or Britten will respond to these fine scores. Joubert's is a quiet but distinctive voice. The performance, alas, is no more than adequate: the strings are lacking in body and tonal bloom. Nevertheless, this is recommended, for we are unlikely to have an alternative.

Symphony 1, Op. 20

(M)  Lyrita SRCD 322. LPO, Handley

Finely crafted and cogently argued, the symphony receives excellent advocacy from Handley and the LPO, and first-rate recording. It comprises a traditional four-movement structure and is scored for a classical symphony orchestra (with piano) and is largely tonal in nature. All in all, it is a fine symphony, with echoes of the music of Bax, Alwyn, Walton – and, in the finale, even Poulenc. The CD lasts just over half an hour and is offered at mid-price.

(i) Piano Trio; (ii) String Quartet 2; (iii) Piano Sonatas 1, Op. 24; 2, Op. 72; 3, Op. 57; (iv) Lyric Fantasy on themes from 'Jane Eyre'; (v) Landscapes (for soprano & piano trio)

(M)  Somm Céleste SOMMCD 060 (2). (i; iv; v) Bebbington; (i; v) Chadwick; Anna Joubert; (ii) Brodsky Qt; (iii) McCabe; (v) Rozario

The Piano Trio is a most inventive work ending with a fine Passacaglia, and Patricia Rozario passionately joins the group for Landscapes, a group of five poems imaginatively set. (The personnel of the Trio, incidentally, includes the composer's daughter as cellist.) The Second Quartet, while being very much Joubert's own creation, quotes ingeniously from both Beethoven and Shostakovich. It is superbly played by the ever reliable Brodskys. John McCabe proves thoroughly at home in the three Piano Sonatas (2 brings another Passacaglia, while 3 is inspired by an anti-war Hardy poem), and the Lyric Fantasy, offered as a bonus, is endearingly melodic, played sensitively by Mark Bebbington, who also leads the trio. Excellent recording throughout makes this a thoroughly recommendable set to explore.

Choral music: How are my Foes increased, Lord, Op. 51; 3 Hymns to St Oswald, Op. 74; Nowell, Op. 58; O Praise God in his Holiness, Op. 52; 3 Pro Pace Motets; (i) Sleep Canticle, Op. 18

(*) British Music Society (ADD) BMS 012CDH. Louis Halsey Singers, Halsey; Martin Neary (organ), (i) with J. Knibbs, Covey-Crump

John Joubert writes tonally in an individual, somewhat plangent harmonic style, well demonstrated by the music performed here, which includes the Pro Pace Motets, three powerful Latin motets, of which Solus ad Victimam is the most ambitious, and a trio of hymns, also in Latin, where the harmonic style is plainer. The Sleep Canticle effectively uses tenor and soprano soloists to dramatize its theme (described by the composer as 'a meditation on the subject of sleep as a kind of rehearsal for the experience of death'). The Louis Halsey Singers perform all this music with fervour and they close with an attractive Nowell setting in English, but again with a medieval text. The 1975 recording is good without being outstanding, but the composer's strong personality comes over in every item here.

KABALEVSKY, Dmitri
(1904–87)

Colas Breugnon: Overture & Suite; The Comedians (Suite); Romeo and Juliet (Suite)

 ASV CDDCA 967. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

(BB)  Naxos 8.553411. Moscow SO, Jelvakov

The suite from The Comedians, music for a play called The Inventor and the Comedian, is cheap and cheerful, quite attractive and very well laid out for the orchestra – though, as in the score for Romeo and Juliet (which derives from 1956), some of its faster movements are tiresomely scatty. Still, there are others which are inventive and atmospheric. Tjeknavorian's performances are characterized more sharply than Jelvakov's and in Romeo and Juliet these fine Armenian players find echoes of Prokofiev. Both The Comedians and Colas Breugnon are exceptionally vivid, for the ASV recording projects the orchestra in the brightest hues and with a striking presence.

The Comedians (suite), Op. 26

🔑 (M)  RCA (ADD) 09026 63302-2. RCA Victor SO, Kondrashin – KHACHATURIAN: Masquerade Suite; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Capriccio espagnol; TCHAIKOVSKY: Capriccio italien *** ✿

On the RCA collection the Comedians' Galop follows on almost immediately after the finale of Khachaturian's Masquerade, and the impetuous stylistic link is obvious. Kondrashin's performance is affectionate and colourful as well as lively, and the warm resonance of the recording helps to prevent the music from sounding too brash. The Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakov couplings are marvellous.

(i) Cello Concertos 1 in G min., Op. 49; 2 in C min., Op. 77; Spring (symphonic poem), Op. 65

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553788. (i) Rudin; Moscow SO, Golovschin

The enchanting First Concerto in G minor was written in 1949 for Kushevitzky, and it wears well. Alexander Rudin is a first-rate soloist who yields nothing to the majority of his full-priced rivals. The orchestral playing is decent and acceptable but falls short of distinction. Good recording. The short, slight and charming symphonic poem is not otherwise available.

Cello Concerto 2, Op. 77

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 5 61490-2 (2). Isserlis, LPO, Litton – BLOCH: Schelomo; ELGAR: Cello Concerto; R. STRAUSS: Don Quixote; TCHAIKOVSKY: Rococo Variations, etc. ***

(*) BIS CD 719. Lindström, Gothenburg SO, Ashkenazy – KHACHATURIAN: Cello Concerto **(*)

Steven Isserlis on Virgin gives a compelling and ardent account of the concerto and the LPO play well for Andrew Litton. As far as recorded sound is concerned, it is impressive.

Mats Lindström also proves an admirably sensitive soloist in Kabalevsky's Second Concerto. The recording is of high quality and well balanced but is a shade over-resonant, although the ear adjusts.

Piano Concertos 1, Op. 9; 2, Op. 23

(BB)  Naxos 8.557683. Banh, Russian PO, Yablonsky

(i) Piano Concertos 2 in G min., Op. 23; 3 in D, Op. 50; Colas Breugnon: Overture. The Comedians, Op. 26; Suite

 Chan. 10052. BBC PO, Sinaisky with (i) Stott

It is good to have Kabalevsky's enjoyable Piano Concertos at bargain price for those who wish to explore this characterful if uneven composer. The (sub-Rachmaninov) First Concerto and (Prokofievian) Second have nice dashes of colour and melody, even if neither is a masterpiece. These performances are thoroughly committed and idiomatically Russian.

The Third, his 'Youth' Concerto is simple and direct in style, rather like the Second Piano Concerto of Shostakovich. Miss Stott brings both wit and charm to this slight if often predictable piece – not a work that many people will want to revisit very often – and gives a no less outstanding account of the Second. The BBC Philharmonic under Vassily Sinaisky give admirable support and lively and well-characterized accounts of the popular Colas Breugnon and The Comedians Suite, and the Chandos/BBC recording is first class.

(i) Piano Concerto 1; The Comedians: Suite; Pathétique Overture; (i) Rhapsody for Piano & Orchestra on the Theme of 'School Years'; Spring

(BB)  Regis RRC 1287. Russian Cinematographic SO, Mnatsakanov; (i) with Sheludiakov

A bargain introduction to the tuneful charm of Kabalevsky. Beginning with the melodically melodramatic Pathétique Overture, the more substantial First Piano Concerto follows, offering easy-going invention with an obvious Russian flavour. The symphonic poem Spring is attractive enough, while the Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra is wittier and more inventive. The Comedians finds the composer at his best: a suite which brims and sparkles with good tunes. Excellent, authentic-sounding performances and decent sound.

(i) Piano Concertos 1; 4 (Prague); Symphony 2

🔑  Chan. 10384. BBC PO, Sinaisky, (i) with Stott

The Fourth Concerto, written for a piano competition in 1979, brings together three miniature movements based on Czech themes – hence its nickname of 'Prague' Concerto. Kathryn Stott is the brilliantly persuasive soloist, with Sinaisky warm and idiomatic in his conducting of the BBC Philharmonic. As to the Symphony, it is consistently refreshing in its strongly rhythmic writing and striking themes, a fine work representing Soviet music at its best. Brilliant, vivid sound, typical of this source.

(i) Piano Concerto 3 (Dedicated to Soviet Youth); Rhapsody for Piano & Orchestra on a Theme of the Song 'School Years'; (ii) Poem of Struggle for Orchestra & Chorus

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557794. RPO, Yablonsky, with (i) Liu; (ii) Gnesin Ac. Ch. – RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Piano Concerto ***

The light and cheerful Third Piano Concerto receives a sparkling performance here and is very well recorded. The Rhapsody, premièred in 1964, is based on a popular song Kabalevsky wrote called School Years in 1957. It is unashamedly tuneful and unpretentious, and its simple and catchy tunes are irresistible in this lively performance. The Poem of Struggle, written in 1931, is more serious, with the composer intending to portray contemporary modern reality. It is no masterpiece, but the rousing chorus at the end is quite effective.

Violin Concerto in C, Op. 48

🔑 Ⓜ  DG 457 064-2. Shaham, Russian Nat. O, Pletnev – GLAZUNOV: Concerto; TCHAIKOVSKY: Souvenir d'un lieu cher, etc. ***

 Chan. 8918. Mordkovitch, SNO, Järvi – KHACHATURIAN: Violin Concerto ***

Kabalevsky's Violin Concerto has never enjoyed the same popularity among players as either of the Cello Concertos. However, its effortless invention and Prokofievian charm lend it a genuine appeal. Gil Shaham's brilliant account of the piece, in partnership with Pletnev should win it many more friends.

Lydia Mordkovitch also plays with great flair and aplomb and is given first-class recording. This is coupled with an equally fine version of the Khachaturian concerto, which collectors who already have the Glazunov might prefer.

Cello Sonata in B flat, Op. 71

 Simax PSC 1146. Birkeland, Gimse – MARTINŮ: Cello Sonata 1; Variations ***

Ⓜ  Somm CD 029. Walton, Grimwood – MIASKOVSKY: Cello Sonata 2; PROKOFIEV: Cello Sonata ***

Øystein Birkeland and Håvard Gimse offer a Kabalevsky rarity: his Sonata in B flat. It is one of Kabalevsky's better pieces. This version is a first recommendation. Excellent, full-bodied and well-balanced sound, as well as being artistically impeccable. A rewarding issue.

Jamie Walton and Daniel Grimwood are young artists, and Somm deserve credit for giving them their début. Their playing is fresh and in every way unaffected.

Piano Sonatas 1–3; Piano Sonatinas 1–2

Ⓝ (BB) (*) Naxos 8.570822. Dossin

The First Sonata in F is early but has a memorable Andantino semplice; the Second in E flat is famous for demanding much bravura from its performer, and also again for its delectable Andante sostenuto. But we were even more taken with the pair of Sonatinas, smaller in scale, but most attractively neo-classical, particularly the First in C major which is most winning. Alexandre Dossin's performances all rise to the occasion, but the piano fortissimos are inclined to sound rather percussive.

KAJANUS, Robert (1856–1933)

Sinfonietta in B flat, Op. 16; Finnish Rhapsody 1 in D min., Op. 5; Kullervo's Funeral March, Op. 3; (i) Aino (Symphonic Poem for male chorus and orchestra)

 BIS CD 1223. Lahti SO, Vänskä, (i) with Helsinki University Ch.

As a conductor Kajanus was Sibelius's most fervent advocate, interpreting all his major works and directing those premières that the composer himself didn't conduct. It was a performance that Kajanus gave in Berlin of his Aino Symphony that inspired Sibelius to compose his Kullervo Symphony. Before Sibelius burst on the scene with Kullervo and En Saga, Kajanus made a considerable name for himself as a composer, but his energies became increasingly consumed by conducting. His music is typical of the national romanticism of the period and, although few would make great claims for its individuality, it is always finely crafted and, in the case of the Sinfonietta of 1915, often arresting. Osmo Vänskä and the Lahti orchestra play it with fervour and conviction, and the BIS team serves them well.

KALLIWODA, Johann (1801–66)

String Quartets 1–3, Opp. 61/2 & 90

🔑  Call. CAL 9357. Talich Qt

Johann Kalliwoda was a Bohemian court musician of considerable talent, and these three String Quartets make delightful listening. They are very much post-Haydn, but they brim over with attractive invention, freely distributed between the players, and formally they are impressively cultivated. The performances here are superbly polished, the soul of finesse, yet they are imbued with expressive feeling and vitality. The recording is most realistic, and this engaging disc is highly recommended to anyone who enjoys the string quartets of Haydn.

KÁLMÁN, Emmerich (1882–1953)

Countess Maritza (highlights; in English)

(*) TER CDTER 1051. Hill-Smith, Remedios, Livingstone, Moyle, Rice, Martin, Barber, Bullock, New Sadler's Wells O, Wordsworth

Set in the Hungarian countryside, Countess Maritza gave Kálmán plenty of chances to display his skill in writing memorable numbers with a Hungarian flavour. The plot is slight, but the nostalgic Luck is a Golden Dream, sung by Lynn Barber as a gypsy girl, sets the scene, followed by the delightful How Do You Do, characterfully sung by Count Tassilo, the opera's hero, with children's chorus. But the score's highlight must be the evocative Vienna Mine, one of the composer's most catchy melodies, although Remedios has not quite the easy smoothness of a Tauber to make it as captivating as it might be. Marilyn Hill-Smith as the Countess, singing with her customary style, is charming in the sentimental duet with the Count, Be Mine, My Love, as well as in the aria, Set the Gypsy Music Playing – another popular hit. The opera ends with a swinging waltz. Barry Wordsworth conducts securely and catches the spirit of Kálmán's world with a fair degree of success. The recording, though perhaps not ideally atmospheric, is reasonably full and bright.

Die Csárdásfürstin (The Gypsy Princess)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660105/6 (2). Kenny, Roider, Erdmann, Kathol, Slovak Philh. Ch., Slovak RSO, Bonynge

Die Csárdásfürstin tells an improbable tale of the mismatch between a showgirl, Sylva, and an aristocrat, Prince Edwin. Richard Bonynge conducts a lively, beautifully sprung performance, made the more idiomatic by using an East European orchestra. Yvonne Kenny as Sylva gives a characterful, idiomatic performance, well supported by singers very much in the operetta tradition, and by Michael Roider as Edwin and Mojca Erdmann and Marko Kathol as the second couple. Well produced, the numbers are introduced by a sprinkling of dialogue. The first-rate sound brings out the beauty of Kálmán's orchestration.

Die Csárdásfürstin (highlights)

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 86875-2. Rothenberger, Brokmeier, Anheisser, Gedda, Miljakovic, Bav. State Op. Ch., Graunke SO, Mattes

Launching straight away into a spectacular opening number, this highly attractive selection from 1915 is full of excellent tunes, with plenty of Hungarian spice; all served up, one after another, in the live (1971) performance. A bargain, even without any texts and translations. Warm yet lively sound.

Der Zigeunerprimas (complete)

 CPO 777 058-2 (2). Lienbacher, Rossmanith, Todorovich, Saccà, Stiefermann, Slovak R. Ch., Bav. State Op. Children's Ch., Munich R. O, Flor

The composer's trademark Hungarian writing is given full rein in this operetta, a sort of Hungarian Die Meistersinger, of which Hungarian gypsy music is very much part of the work's essence. Kálmán supplied his operettas with attractive waltzes and other dances, but he is really seductive in such numbers as Pali Rácz's Lied, Auf dem dolg'nem . . . where the theme is hummed over shimmering strings and a harp. None of the singers is outstanding; one or two (such as the bass) are rather wobbly, but most are acceptable. Flor conducts warmly and sympathetically, with plenty of energy in the lively numbers which, like the Act II duet, Ich schau hin, go with a real swing; yet he is beautifully relaxed in the lyrical central section. The sound is warm and atmospheric. The main drawback is that there is no libretto, and the track analysis is not exactly crystal clear. The notes are plentiful, but heavy-going.

KARLOWICZ, Mieczyslaw (1876–1909)

Symphonic Poems: Episode at a Masquerade, Op. 14; Lithuanian Rhapsody, Op. 11; Stanislav and Anna Oswiecimowie, Op. 12

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570452. Warsaw PO, Wit

Symphonic Poems: Eternal Songs, Op. 10; Returning Waves, Op. 9; A Sorrowful Tale (Preludes to Eternity), Op. 13

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570295. New Zealand SO, Wit

Born some months after Ravel, Karlowicz's life was cut short in his early thirties when he was engulfed in an avalanche in the Tatra mountains. He is a composer of some substance who bridges the gap between Moniuszko and Szymanowski. At times there is a Straussian opulence (Karlowicz writes well for the orchestra) and, given the modest price, readers with an adventurous taste and a liking for post-romanticism might well want to investigate the six symphonic poems here, written between 1904 and 1909. They are colourfully scored and their melodic inspiration varies between brooding melancholy, delicate evocation, and more positive life affirmation: the climax of Song of Love and Death generates real excitement. Indeed, Antoni Wit gets playing of considerable ardour from both the Warsaw Philharmonic and the New Zealand Symphony Orchestra, and detail is persuasively warm and polished. The recording is excellent. Well worth trying.

Violin Concerto in A, Op. 8

Ⓝ  EMI 3 79034-2. Kennedy, Polish CO, Kaspszyk (with CHOPIN: Nocturnes, Op. 9/1 & 2) – MLYNSARSKI: Violin Concerto 2 ***

Good to see that, instead of another Bruch or Mendelssohn, Nigel Kennedy has chosen to champion the Karlowicz Concerto along with the Second Concerto of his contemporary, Emil Mlynsarski (1870–1935). Those willing to explore music off the beaten track will find their enterprise well rewarded; both composers have their own voice. A pity about the gaudy front cover, but that is of no real moment.

KELLY, Bryan (born 1934)

(i) Crucifixion; Missa brevis; Magnificat from the Emanuel Evening Service; Like as the Hart; O Clap your Hands; Praise his Name in the Dance; The Lovely Lady

 Priory PRCD 755. (i) Manahan Thomas, Mulroy; Clare College, Cambridge, Ch., Brown, Reid (organ)

It is good to have a Crucifixion setting so powerful and immediate in its appeal, completely removed from the Victorian heritage of Stainer, while still featuring simple sung chorales. The bold contrasts between soprano and tenor soloists are a strong feature of a work which intersperses biblical texts with poems by George Herbert, the librettist, Anne Ridler and W. H. Auden's 'Shield of Achilles', and the touching solo dialogue, A Ragged Urchin, makes a poignant interlude after Jesus' final cry of despair to God.

Kelly's Missa brevis is equally compelling, with the chorus later joyfully moving into waltz tempo without a suggestion of triviality. The exuberant Magnificat is trumped in rhythmic energy by Praise His Name in the Dance, and while O Clap your Hands is more tranquil, the use of a 5/8 time signature gives the melodic lines a subtle lift. Neither the lovely medieval carol setting, The Lovely Lady Sat and Sang, nor the passionate closing, Like as the Hart, is in the least predictable, but both show the composer at his imaginative best. The Clare College Choir under their current conductor, Timothy Brown, are naturally at home in this moving, highly communicative music, while the organist John Reid's contribution is in every way admirable. They are excellently recorded.

KERLL, Johann Kasper (1627–93)

Complete Free Organ Works

Ⓜ  Oehms OC 362. Kelemen (Ededacher organ, Schlägl Abbey)

Joseph Kelemen has here collected Kerll's complete solo works suitable for the organ, including seven Toccatas, which are clearly influenced by Froberger, and six spirited Canzonas. But to cap the programme there is a fine Ciaccona, a spectacular Battaglia (which Kelemen makes the very most of), and he ends with a very impressive Passacaglia, which shows how resourceful Kerll could be. In short, this music is highly inventive, and most enjoyable when played with such lively spontaneity. Kelemen's documentation is extensive, discussing the composer, the organ and traditional performance practice. An off-the-beaten-path disc, well worth exploring.

KERN, Jerome (1885–1945)

Show Boat (complete recording of original score)

🔑 ✿  EMI 3 61543-2 [3 61554-2] (3). von Stade, Hadley, Hubbard, O'Hara, Garrison, Burns, Stratas, Amb. Ch., L. Sinf., McGlinn

In faithfully following the original score, this superb set at last does justice to a musical of the 1920s which is both a landmark in the history of Broadway and musically a work of strength and imagination hardly less significant than Gershwin's Porgy and Bess of a decade later. The original, extended versions of important scenes are included, as well as various numbers written for later productions. As the heroine, Magnolia, Frederica von Stade gives a meltingly beautiful performance, totally in style, bringing out the beauty and imagination of Kern's melodies, regularly heightened by wide intervals to make those of most of his Broadway rivals seem flat. The London Sinfonietta play with tremendous zest and feeling for the idiom; the Ambrosian Chorus sings with joyful brightness and some impeccable American accents. Opposite von Stade, Jerry Hadley makes a winning Ravenal, and Teresa Stratas is charming as Julie, giving a heartfelt performance of the haunting number, Bill (words by P. G. Wodehouse). Above all, the magnificent black bass, Bruce Hubbard, sings Ol' man river and its many reprises with a firm resonance to have you recalling the wonderful example of Paul Robeson, but for once without hankering after the past. Beautifully recorded to bring out the piece's dramatic as well as its musical qualities, this is a heart-warming issue.

(i) Show Boat (highlights); (ii–v) Music in the Air (excerpts); (ii, v; vi) Roberta (excerpts)

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 35980-2. (i) Watters, McKay, Bassey, Te Wiata, Bryan, Webb, Rita Williams Singers, O, Collins; (ii) Cole, Fitzgibbon; (iii) Grimaldi, (iv) Linden Singers; (v) New World Show O; (vi) Bronhill, Scott, O, Ornadel

These highlights from 1959 were reviewed in the first Stereo Record Guide in 1960. That review itself is a period piece now, with the text referring to the artists as belonging to 'the current hit parade'. There is also advice to 'sample Miss Shirley Bassey and Don McKay before purchasing the record'. Indeed, their singing style sounds more of the late 1950s than of the 1920s, but it is still very enjoyable. All the cast have music-theatre voices, and all are obviously enjoying themselves. Inia Te Wiata is outstanding in Ol' man river: he does not over-sentimentalize it, as many others do. Other highlights include the memorable Dora Bryan – always an entertaining actress – as Ellie, singing Life upon the wicked stage.

The excerpts from the other two musicals are very attractive too. Music in the Air remains one of Kern's finest lesser-known scores, with the songs worked skilfully into the plot. I've told every little star is one of its more famous numbers, but the four others, including When the spring is in the air (difficult to get out of your head) and I'm alone, make one long to hear the rest of the show. It is very well performed and recorded (1961). Hardly less appealing is the music to Roberta, dating from 1933 (filmed in 1935 and 1952) and similarly containing some vintage hits: Smoke gets in your eyes and Yesterdays (both sung gorgeously by June Bronhill, though the latter was recorded a couple of years earlier). Excellent sound from 1961.

KETÈLBEY, Albert (1875–1959)

'Appy 'Ampstead; Bells across the Meadows; In a Chinese Temple Garden; In a Monastery Garden; In a Persian Market; In the Mystic Land of Egypt; The Phantom Melody; Sanctuary of the Heart; Wedgwood Blue

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 444 786-2. RPO & Ch., Rogers (with Concert of Gypsy Violin Encores: Sakonov, L. Festival O. ***)

Eric Rogers and his orchestra present the more famous pieces with both warmth and a natural feeling for their flamboyant style, and the tunes throughout come tumbling out, vulgar but irresistible when played so committedly.

Bells Across the Meadow; Chal Romano (Gypsy Lad); The Clock and the Dresden Figures; In a Chinese Temple Garden; In a Monastery Garden; In a Persian Market; In the Moonlight; In the Mystic Land of Egypt; Sanctuary of the Heart

🔑 Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 52399-2. Midgley, Temperley, Pearson (piano), Amb. S., Philh. O, Lanchbery (with LUIGINI: Ballet Egyptien ***)

A splendid collection in every way. John Lanchbery uses every possible resource to ensure that, when the composer demands spectacle, he gets it. In the Monastery Garden the distant monks are realistically distant, in Sanctuary of the Heart there is no mistaking that the heart is worn firmly on the sleeve. The recording is excellent, full and brilliant. Luigini's Ballet Egyptien is equally successful.

KHACHATURIAN, Aram
(1903–78)

The Battle of Stalingrad (film score: Suite); Dance Suite, excerpts: Caucasian Dance; Uzbek Dance; Masquerade Suite; The Valencian Window (Incidental Music): Suite

(BB)  Regis Alto ALC 1019. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

The Battle of Stalingrad (a film score for which its composer won a Stalin Prize) is very much Soviet popular music, although it draws on a folk tune, 'There's a Crag on the Volga'. It is suitably illustrative and it has a lively march, Forward into Victory which, although presented with conviction, is hardly distinguished. The Masquerade Suite is played with vigour and has plenty of local colour, but the highlight of this reissue is the early suite from the incidental music to the Spanish comedy, The Valencian Widow (1940), which is probably the composer's first major score. It is brimming over with striking tunes: this is the Khachaturian of Gayaneh. Tjeknavorian and his orchestra play all this music with great spirit and they relish its Armenian flavours.

Cello Concerto in E min.

(*) BIS CD 719. Lindström, Gothenburg SO, Ashkenazy (with RACHMANINOV: Vocalise *) – KABALEVSKY: Cello Concerto **(*)

Khachaturian's Cello Concerto of 1946 has some sinuous Armenian local colour for its lyrical ideas, but none of the thematic memorability of the concertos for violin and piano and the Gayaneh Ballet score, on which Khachaturian's reputation must continue to rest. The combined concentration of Lindström and Ashkenazy prevents the writing from sounding too inflated. The recording is a bit over-resonant, but otherwise faithful and well balanced.

Cello Concerto in E min.; Concerto-Rhapsody for Cello & Orchestra in D min.

(BB) (*) Regis (ADD) RRC 1094. Tarasova, Russian SO, Dudarova

Marina Tarasova plays both works with great eloquence and expressive vehemence; she has a big tone and impeccable technique. The orchestral playing is gutsy and sturdy without, perhaps, the finesse that might have toned down some of the garishness of the orchestral colours. The recording is bright and breezy – not worth a three-star grading and nor is the orchestral contribution, though Tarasova certainly is.

Piano Concerto in D flat

🔑  Warner 2564 63074-2. Berezovsky, Ural PO, Liss – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 ***

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110673. Kapell, Boston SO, Koussevitzky – PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto 3 (); SHOSTAKOVICH: 3 Preludes; Piano Concerto 3 ()

(i) Piano Concerto in D flat; Dance Suite; Polka & Waltz (both for wind band)

 ASV CDDCA 964. (i) Serviarian-Kuhn; Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

(i) Piano Concerto in D flat; Gayaneh (ballet) Suite; Masquerade: Suite

(*) Chan. 8542. (i) Orbelian; SNO, Järvi

Berezovsky's is the most electrifying account of the Khachaturian Piano Concerto on disc. For once, not only does the opening movement not sag, it moves forward irresistibly, and Berezovsky and Liss can even relax in the lyrical central section without letting the tension subside, for the orchestral playing brings out all the sinuous, Armenian colour in the scoring. The slow movement opens and closes with a creepy bass clarinet and moves towards its passionate climax with a real romantic sweep. The finale sets off thrillingly at a furious pace, and once again the performers can relax in the central cadenza-interlude before Berezovsky is dazzling us again with his digital brilliance, and the reprise of the first movement's opening theme is unashamedly raucous. The recording is first class, too.

The Kapell performance is quite electrifying and inspiriting, although Koussevitzky's presence at the helm also has something to do with it. The same must also be said for the Prokofiev. The Naxos transfer gives us the Prokofiev, which is equally remarkable.

The Armenian partnership of Dora Serviarian-Kuhn and Loris Tjeknavorian provides another recommendation for a modern version of Khachaturian's somewhat uneven Piano Concerto. The other pieces on the ASV disc are very slight but lively enough; easily the most memorable item is the second Uzbek Dance in the Dance Suite, quite extended and touchingly atmospheric.

The Chandos recording is splendid technically, well up to the standards of the house. Constantin Orbelian, an Armenian by birth, plays brilliantly, and Järvi achieves much attractive lyrical detail. The couplings, sumptuously played, are both generous and appealing.

Violin Concerto in D min.

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA [ADD] 09026 63708-2. Kogan, Boston SO, Monteux – PROKOFIEV: Alexander Nevsky **** ✿

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 059. Fischer, Russian Nat. O, Kreizberg – GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto *; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 1 ****

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 3 61570-2. D. Oistrakh, Philh. O, composer – TANEYEV: Suite de Concert ***

 HM Naïve V 4959. Sergey Khachaturian, Sinfonia Varsovia, Krivine – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto ***

 Chan. 8918. Mordkovitch, SNO, Järvi – KABALEVSKY: Violin Concerto ***

Leonid Kogan's powerfully direct approach to this once-popular concerto, aided by superlative playing from the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Monteux, is electrifying. Together, they make it sound like an unqualified masterpiece, and the astonishingly vivid (1958) recording puts many digital recordings to shame with its vivid presence. This is the most exciting performance of Khachaturian's underrated concerto that you can buy.

Julia Fischer offers the first Surround Sound SACD of this attractive concerto, made in May 2004 in Moscow – and very impressive it is in its vividness and presence and in the clarity of the orchestral sound. The clarity and freshness of her performance are what immediately strike home in the chattering figuration at the start, with a rare tenderness developing in the lyrical second subject. The yearning tenderness of the slow movement confirms that this was one of the composer's most inspired works in a performance of high contrasts, while the biting clarity of Fischer's performance in the finale brings lightness and sparkle.

Khachaturian wrote his Violin Concerto (perhaps his finest work) for David Oistrakh, and here the composer provides a brilliant and warmly sympathetic backing for the great violinist's masterly and, indeed, definitive performance, with the central Andante ravishingly phrased and the finale sparkling with effortless brilliance. It is very sad that orchestral tuttis are often fierce. Truly a great recording spectacular, and the coupling too is uniquely valuable.

The young Sergey Khachaturian has found an ideal partner in Emmanuel Krivine, who brings out all the colourfully imaginative orchestral detail to match the soloist's commanding lyrical flow, especially in the unforgettable, sinuous main theme of the first movement. Splendid recording, spacious, open and wide-ranging.

Among other recent performances of this attractively inventive concerto, Lydia Mordkovitch is probably the most competitive. She plays with real abandon and fire, and Chandos balance her and the orchestra in a thoroughly realistic perspective.

(i) Gayaneh (ballet; original, 1942 score), Op. 50; (ii) Masquerade (Suite); Spartacus (excerpts); Russian Fantasy

🔑 Ⓑ  RCA 82876 65836-2 (2). (i) Nat. PO; (ii) LSO, Tjeknavorian

Khachaturian began his score for Gayaneh in 1939 but later revised it during the period which also produced the Violin Concerto. It was completed in 1942 and is among his finest works. It is admirably played here under a conductor (himself an Armenian, like the composer) who has a natural feeling for Khachaturian's music. So we must be grateful that this well-balanced recording of the original is now available again, coupled to naturally sympathetic performances of the Masquerade Suite and excerpts from Spartacus (with the great Adagio splendidly expansive and passionate), recorded a decade later. The Russian Fantasy is not memorable, but the set as a whole is indispensable.

Gayaneh (ballet; excerpts); Spartacus (ballet; excerpts)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 460 315-2. VPO, composer – GLAZUNOV: The Seasons **(*)

Gayaneh (ballet): Suite; Masquerade: Suite; Spartacus (ballet): Suite

(*) ASV (ADD) CDDCA 773. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian – IPPOLITOV-IVANOV: Caucasian Sketches *

Gayaneh (ballet): Suite; Masquerade: Waltz & Mazurka; Spartacus (ballet): Suite

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89237-2. Bolshoi SO, Lazarev

Gayaneh (ballet; highlights); Spartacus (ballet; highlights)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 93229-2. LSO, composer (with GLAZUNOV: The Seasons: Autumn: Philh. O, Svetlanov ***)

Khachaturian came to Vienna in 1962 to record these inspired performances of the most popular numbers from his two ballets, and this Decca record (reissued in Decca's 'Legends' series) is the one to go for. It is superbly remastered to restore and even improve on the demonstration quality of the original LP, recorded in the Sofiensaal. Like the sound, the performances are very fresh.

The composer's later, EMI Classics for Pleasure selections from his two famous ballets offer one more item from Gayaneh than on his earlier, Decca coupling. The EMI sound, more modern than the Decca, is a shade reverberant for the more vigorous numbers. The LSO play excitingly throughout. The inclusion of only Autumn from Glazunov's Seasons decreases the appeal of this CD, when the competing Decca disc offers the whole ballet.

At the opening of Alexander Lazarev's Bolshoi CD, the famous Sabre Dance bursts into the room spectacularly, with thumping drums and blazing percussion, and the Lezginka is similarly vibrant and exciting. Yet Ayshe's awakening could not be more evocative with its growling bass clarinet. The two best-known Masquerade items are brightly done, but with plenty of dynamic shading to counter the ebullience. Then Lazarev opens his Spartacus selection with the famous Adagio, and the gentle oboe solo and languorous Bolshoi strings soon expand passionately. In short, with extremely spectacular, if reverberant, recording, this super-bargain reissue makes an easy first choice for those wanting a modern digital selection of this music.

The Armenians also clearly relish the explosive energy of this music. The Masquerade Suite relies rather more on charm for its appeal, but Tjeknavorian and his players bring a determined gusto, even to the Waltz and certainly to the ebullient closing Galop.

Masquerade Suite

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 09026 63302-2. RCA Victor SO, Kondrashin – KABALEVSKY: The Comedians Suite; RIMSKY-KORSAKOV: Capriccio espagnol; TCHAIKOVSKY: Capriccio italien ✿ ***

Kondrashin certainly knows how to play this music, with warmth as well as sparkle, and even a touch of romantic elegance when Oscar Shumsky plays the violin solo in the Nocturne. Yet the final Galop is as boisterous as one could wish. The resonant recording gives the orchestra a pleasing ambience.

Spartacus (ballet; complete. Choreography: Yuri Grigorovich)

() Arthaus DVD 101 115. Mukhamedov, Verrov, Semenyaka, Belova, Bolshoi Ballet & Theatre O, Zhuraitis (V/D: Shuji Fujii)

Khachaturian's ballet Spartacus has had a very chequered history. After four years in gestation, the huge score was ready in 1954. But it was never to be performed in its original form.

Finally, in 1968 Yuri Grigorovich started afresh. He centred the narrative on the conflict between the two main characters and their lovers. The action is framed by the military scenes, with Act I opening spectacularly, Crassus and his legions filling the huge Bolshoi stage with their visceral prowess, and the choreography full of stabbing swords and goose-stepping to show they are fascists.

Alas, one wants to laugh for the wrong reasons. It is all rather crass, and one soon realizes that this is the Soviet equivalent of a second-rate Hollywood epic movie. Khachaturian's music, with its continuous sequential climaxes which almost never produce a distinctive melody, is no better than a low-grade film score, with the orchestration carrying the main interest. The dancing of the principals, however, is very impressive and their stamina extraordinary, when the choreography is so continuously athletic. Spartacus's continuous leaps are amazing, and Aegina and Phrygia's solos are as graceful as the (often curiously awkward) movements they are given to dance will allow. We get just a hint of the score's single really inspired number in Phrygia's Monologue, but for the ravishing full Adagio sequence we have to wait until Act II, and it is worth waiting for.

Spartacus (ballet): Suites 1–3

 Chan. 8927. RSNO, Järvi

The ripe lushness of Khachaturian's scoring in Spartacus narrowly skirts vulgarity. Järvi and the RSNO clearly enjoy the music's primitive vigour, while the warmly resonant acoustics of Glasgow's Henry Wood Hall bring properly sumptuous orchestral textures, smoothing over the moments of crudeness without losing the Armenian colouristic vividness.

Symphonies 1 in E min.; 3 in C (Symphonic Poem)

 ASV CDDCA 858. Armenian PO, Tjeknavorian

The First Symphony was Khachaturian's exercise on graduating from Miaskovsky's class in 1934. It is far from negligible and in some ways is superior to some of his later work – certainly to the bombastic Third. Now there is a modern account which enjoys the advantage of good digital recording. The Armenian Orchestra play well for Tjeknavorian, and his is a safe recommendation.

Symphony 2 (original version); Gayaneh: Suite (excerpts)

 Chan. 8945. RSNO, Järvi

Neeme Järvi and his Scottish forces give a very fine account of themselves and they enjoy the benefit of a superb recording. It runs to some 51 minutes.

(i) Symphony 3 (Symphonic Poem); Triumphal Poem

 Chan. 9321. BBC PO, Glushchenko, (i) with Lindley – IPPOLITOV-IVANOV: Caucasian Sketches ***

If the Third Symphony was as strong on musical substance as it is on decibels, it would be something to reckon with. But, alas, it is garish and empty; there are no fewer than 18 trumpets in all! Analgesics and earplugs will be in brisk demand in its vicinity. The BBC Philharmonic, spurred on by their Russian conductor, play as if they believe in it, and the Chandos recording is in the demonstration category. The three stars are for the performance and the recording – not for the music!

PIANO MUSIC

10 Children's Pieces; 2 Pieces; Poem; Sonata; Sonatina; Toccata; Waltz (from Masquerade)

(BB) (*) Regis RR 1184. McLachlan

Apart from the Toccata (1932), which is a frequent encore, Khachaturian's piano music rarely features in piano recitals. At 80 minutes, this CD offers all of it with the exception of the Scenes from Childhood and the Recitative and Fugues. The early pieces, Poem (1927) and the Valse-caprice and Dance (1926), are much like the Toccata, pretty empty, but the later pieces including the Sonatina (1959), the Ten Children's Pieces (1964) and the Sonata (1961) are worth a hearing, even though they are limited in range and rely on a small vocabulary of musical devices. Murray McLachlan is a persuasive guide. His recording, made at All Saints' Church, Petersham, is eminently serviceable, though there are times when the attentions of a tuner would not have come amiss (particularly in the garrulous first movement of the Sonata).

KLAMI, Uuno (1900–61)

Kalevala Suite, Op. 23; Karelian Rhapsody, Op. 15; Sea Pictures

Ⓑ (*) Chan. 10427X. Iceland SO, Sakari

The Kalevala Suite is Klami's best-known work but, like the other two pieces on this disc, it is highly derivative. Ravel and Schmitt mingle with Falla, Sibelius and early Stravinsky; while there are some imaginative and inspired passages (such as the opening of the Terheniemi or Scherzo), there is some pretty empty stuff as well. The performances under Petri Sakari are very good indeed, and the recording has a good perspective and a wide dynamic range. The reissue is well worth its bargain price.

Lemminkäinen's Island Adventures; (i) Song of Lake Kuujärvi; Whirls: Suites 1 & 2

 BIS CD 656. (i) Ruuttunen; Lahti SO, Vänskä

Klami was a master of orchestral colour. Lemminkäinen's Island Adventures dates from 1934 and is more Sibelian than is usual with this composer, but its musical substance does not really sustain its length. There is quite a lot of Prokofiev and Shostakovich in the ballet, Whirls, and in Song of Lake Kuujärvi, and greater depth in the orchestral song. The performances are good and Esa Ruuttunen is an excellent baritone; and the recording offers wide dynamic range and natural perspective.

KODÁLY, Zoltán (1882–1967)

Concerto for Orchestra

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 467 602-2. Philh. Hungarica, Dorati – JANÁČEK: Taras Bulba; BARTÓK: Concerto for Orchestra ***

Concerto for Orchestra; Dances of Marosszék; Symphony in C; Theatre Overture

🔑  Chan. 9811. BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier

Concerto for Orchestra; Dances of Galánta; Dances of Marosszék; Háry János: Suite; Symphony in C; Summer Evening; Theatre Overture; Variations on a Hungarian Folksong (The Peacock)

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 443 006-2 (2). Philh. Hungarica, Dorati

Yan Pascal Tortelier and the BBC Philharmonic prove a superb partnership here, while the Chandos and BBC engineering team have surpassed themselves to produce demonstration quality. Kodály's Concerto for Orchestra was written for the Chicago orchestra and Bartók actually took it with him to America in 1940. This, the Dances of Marosszék and the Theatre Overture leave no doubt that Kodály was a past-master of the orchestra.

The Symphony comes from the composer's last years and lacks real concentration and cohesion. Even so, in Dorati's hands the passionate Andante is strong in gypsy feeling and the jolly, folk-dance finale, if repetitive, is colourful and full of vitality. Summer Evening, too, is warmly evocative, but in the Theatre Overture, brightly and effectively scored, the invention is thin. The 1973 sound remains of vintage quality, and the CD transfers are first rate.

Dorati's warmly committed performance of Kodály's Concerto for Orchestra in fine analogue sound is also available in Australia with the more obvious coupling of Bartók's Concerto, while Janáček's Taras Bulba is equally worth having.

Dances of Galánta

 Linn CKD 234. Scottish CO, Mackerras – BARTÓK: Divertimento; Music for Strings, Percussion & Celesta ***

On Linn, the Dances from Galánta make a valuable supplement for Sir Charles Mackerras's warm, refined readings of the two great Bartók works. In this genial work he brings out the dance element delectably, and the recording brings out the colourfulness of Kodály's orchestration.

Dances of Galánta; Dances of Marosszék; Háry János Suite; (i) Psalmus hungaricus, Op. 13

Ⓜ  DG mono/stereo 457 745-2. Berlin R.I.A.S., Fricsay, (i) with Ernst Haefliger, St Hedwig's Cathedral Ch.

Dances of Galánta; Dances of Marosszék; (i) Háry János Suite, Instrumental Excerpts & Singspiel; Gergëly-Járás; (ii) Táncnóa; Túrót eszik a cigány

🔑 * Ph. 462 824-2. Budapest Festival O, Ivan Fischer; with (i) Children's Ch. Magnificat, Budapest; (ii) Children's Ch. Miraculum, Kecskemét

(i) Dances of Galánta; (ii) Dances of Marosszék; Háry János Suite; (i) Variations on a Hungarian Folksong (The Peacock)

(*) BIS CD 875. (i) Brno State PO; (ii) SWF SO, Baden-Baden; Serebrier

Dances of Galánta; Háry János Suite; Variations on a Hungarian Folksong (The Peacock)

Ⓜ * Nim. NI 7081. Hungarian State SO, A. Fischer

Iván Fischer's Kodály is no less successful than his Bartók records. His set has the advantage of totally idiomatic playing from a very fine orchestra and superbly well-defined recording from the Philips engineers. This Budapest collection is now the front-runner in the Kodály discography and the point from which lovers of this genial composer should set out. The extra items are very enticing.

The Nimbus CD also has the advantage of totally idiomatic playing. The detail in Háry János is a delight, not least the sensitive cello playing in the central song, while the cimbalom is perfectly balanced. The Galánta Dances rise to a thrilling vivace close, and the Peacock Variations, too, are full of colour and vitality. An excellent alternative collection, with demonstration sound in a warmly resonant but unclouded acoustic.

José Serebrier gets very good playing from the Brno Orchestra in both the Dances of Galánta and the Peacock Variations, and the remaining two works with the Südwestfunk Orchestra in Baden-Baden are, if anything, even better and the recording warmer. There is plenty of character in the orchestral playing of both ensembles, and the BIS recordings are up to house standard.

Fricsay's performances are crisp and exciting, the orchestra superbly on its toes, a notable passage being the beautifully managed horn solo in the central trio of the intermezzo in Háry János. The mono recording was demonstration-worthy in its day and is still pretty remarkable.

Háry János Suite

(BB)  Naxos 8.550142. Hungarian State O, Mátyás Antal (with Concert: 'Hungarian Festival' ***)

The Naxos Hungarian performance of the Háry János Suite is also wonderfully vivid, with the cimbalom – here perfectly balanced within the orchestra – particularly telling. The brilliant digital sound adds to the vitality and projection of the music-making, yet the lyrical music is played most tenderly.

(i) Hungarian Rondo. Summer Evening; Symphony

(*) ASV CDDCA 924. (i) Warren-Green; Philh. O, Butt

The Summer Evening is a beautiful piece, eminently well served by Yondani Butt. It comes with a well-characterized account of the Symphony, not more impressive than Dorati's version but, of course, a more up-to-date recording. Very good indeed, albeit not quite three-star.

(Unaccompanied) Cello Sonata, Op. 8; (i) Cello Sonata (for cello and piano), Op. 4

🔑  Sup. SU 3515-2. Barta, (i) with Cech – NOVÁK: Cello Sonata ***

(Unaccompanied) Cello Sonata, Op. 8; Cello Sonata, Op. 4; Adagio (both for cello and piano)

(B)  EMI Debut 5 75685-2. Yang, Moon

(Unaccompanied) Cello Sonata, Op. 8; (i) Cello Sonata (for cello & piano), Op. 4; 3 Chorale Preludes (arr. from Bach, BWV 743, 747 & 762)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553160. Kliegel, (i) with Jandó

(Unaccompanied) Cello Sonata, Op. 8; (i) Duo for Violin & Cello, Op. 7

🔑 * Delos D/CD 1015. Starker, (i) with Gingold

When, not long before the composer's death, Kodály heard Starker playing this Cello Sonata, he apparently said: 'If you correct the ritard in the third movement, it will be the Bible performance.' The recording is made in a smaller studio than is perhaps ideal; the Duo, impressively played by Starker and Josef Gingold, is made in a slightly more open acoustic. There is a small makeweight in the form of Starker's own arrangement of the Bottermund Paganini Variations.

Kodály's Solo Cello Sonata also receives a performance of exceptional power, precision and clarity from the Czech cellist Jiří Barta. Deeply reflective, the intensity of his performance never flags, with a rare depth of concentration in the darkly intense central Adagio. In both movements of the Op. 4 Sonata, Barta and his pianist, Jan Cech, make the switches of speed seem natural as though part of an improvisation, and the folk element is aptly heightened by an element of rawness, with the players striking sparks off each other in fiery fantasy. The Novák Sonata makes a welcome and substantial supplement.

Maria Kliegel in Kodály's magnificent solo Cello Sonata offers a warm and fanciful performance, powerful and flowing. Jenö Jandó is an outstandingly sympathetic partner in the two-movement Op. 4 Sonata, a performance deeply introspective in the slow first movement and full of fantasy in the Allegro con spirito of the finale. The three Chorale Preludes are romantic arrangements – with the cello generally underlining the chorale melodies – of organ pieces attributed to Bach but now thought spurious.

The two Korean musicians introduced on EMI's Debut label are very impressive, and Sung-Won Yang's account of the Solo Cello Sonata can withstand the most elevated comparisons and must receive the strongest recommendation, particularly as the disc includes the 1905 Adagio for Cello and Piano, which was originally intended to serve as a movement of the Op. 4 Sonata and is of considerable quality. The expertise and warmth of both players is matched by first-rate recording.

String Quartet 2, Op. 10

🔑  DG 419 601-2. Hagen Qt – DVOŘÁK: String Quartet 12; etc. ***

🔑  Testament (ADD) SBT 1072. Hollywood Qt – DVOŘÁK; SMETANA: Quartets ()

The Hagen give a marvellously committed and beautifully controlled performance of the Second – indeed as quartet playing it would be difficult to surpass. In range of dynamic response and sheer beauty of sound, this is thrilling playing and welcome advocacy of a neglected but masterly piece. The recording is well balanced and admirably present.

The Hollywood Quartet's was recorded in 1958 and, unlike the Dvořák and Smetana with which it is coupled, is in stereo. The present performance can only be described as masterly, enhancing the attractions of an already excellent issue.

VOCAL MUSIC

Laudes organi (Fantasia on a 12th-Century Sequence); Psalm 114 (from the Geneva Psalter)

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 466 902-2. Brighton Festival Ch., Heltay, Weir – JANÁČEK: Glagolitic Mass ***

These works were written towards the end of Kodály's career; they are richly rewarding and show that even when the composer took on dramatic subjects, his was a relatively gentle art (in contrast to his friend Bartók). Heltay directs persuasive performances, with Gillian Weir brilliant as the organ soloist (the Laudes organi performance receives its CD début here). The recording is excellent, and these works make a fine bonus for the Janáček coupling.

Psalmus hungaricus, Op. 13

🔑 * Chan. 9310. Svensson, Copenhagen Boys' Ch., Danish Nat. R. Ch. & SO, Mackerras – JANÁČEK: Glagolitic Mass ****

As the unusual but refreshing coupling for the Janáček Mass, the Psalmus hungaricus is infected by Mackerras with an element of wildness that sweeps away any idea of Kodály as a bland composer. As in the Janáček, the tenor Peter Svensson is an excellent, clear-toned and incisive soloist, if here rather more backwardly balanced. The glory of the performance lies most of all in the superb choral singing, full, bright and superbly disciplined, with the hushed pianissimos as telling as the great fortissimo outbursts. It is a mark of Mackerras's understanding of the music that the many sudden changes of mood sound both dramatic and natural. Full, warm and atmospheric recording, with plenty of detail.

KOECHLIN, Charles (1867–1950)

Le Buisson ardent; The Jungle Book (Le Livre de la Jungle); La Course de printemps

🔑  Häns. CD 93.045. SWR Stuttgart SO, Holliger

La Course de printemps is astonishingly atmospheric and its range of sonorities bold and forward-looking. Holliger has also recorded Le Buisson ardent ('The Burning Bush'), another luminous and evocative score, the composer's last symphonic poem, which calls for a huge orchestra, including ondes martenot, five saxophones, piano and organ. It is an evocation of rebirth – at times ardently intense in the strings but with the ondes martenot later used to represent the incorporeal manifestation of the reborn spirit. The sense of ecstasy then gives way to the vigour and potency of life itself, but closing temperately. Koechlin is one of the most remarkable figures in French music after Debussy, a master of the orchestra and completely original.

Les Heures persanes, Op. 65

 Marco Polo 8.223504. Reinland-Pfalz PO, Segerstam

Koechlin's powers as an orchestrator are evident in these 16 exotic mood-pictures, which were originally composed for the piano in 1913. They evoke a journey recorded by Pierre Loti in 1900: 'He who wants to come with me to see at Isfahan the season of roses should travel slowly by my side, in stages, as in the Middle Ages.' The work is generally slow-moving, but this music has tremendous atmosphere and exotic colours. In the hands of Leif Segerstam and the Reinland-Pfalz orchestra this music casts a powerful spell. It is also beautifully recorded.

The Jungle Book (Le Livre de la jungle)

🔑 * Marco Polo 8.223484. Reinland-Pfalz PO, Segerstam

Koechlin's lifelong fascination with Kipling's Jungle Book is reflected in this four-movement tone-poem whose composition extended over several decades. La Course de printemps, Op. 95, the longest of them, is extraordinarily imaginative and pregnant with atmosphere: you can feel the heat and humidity of the rainforest and sense the presence of strange and menacing creatures. La Loi de la jungle is the most static and the least interesting. Leif Segerstam is excellent in this repertoire and with his refined ear for texture distils a heady atmosphere and he is beautifully recorded. Anyone with a feeling for the exotic will respond to this original and fascinating music.

CHAMBER MUSIC

L'Album de Lilian, 1st Series, for Voice, Flute & Piano; 2nd Series, for Flute & Piano, Op. 149; Morceau de lecture, Op. 217; 14 Pièces, Op. 157b (both for flute & piano); (i) Sonata for 2 Flutes; Sonata for Piano & Flute, Op. 52

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55107. Fenwick Smith, West, Amlin; (i) with L. Buyse

Charles Koechlin's writing for the flute is very French, very delicate and very special. The Quatorze Pièces, which open this programme, are enchanting and show his supreme gifts as a miniaturist. The Première Série of L'Album de Lilian is slightly more substantial, but only slightly. Only two have lyrics, the first translates as 'Keep that schoolgirl complexion', the second, Tout va bien, suggests 'All is well because love's sorrow lasts but a moment'. The others are for piano solo and are slightly Satiesque, while the delicious Skating – Smiling, and En route vers le bonheur are for voice and piano, but without words. Two of the Quatre Pièces of the magical Second Series, Swimming and Le Jeux du clown, are worthy of Debussy in their simple impressionism, while Le Voyage chimérique could only be Koechlin himself. The Flute Sonata opens with tranquillity, moves on to a wistful Sicilienne and closes in vivid animation. The Sonata for Two Flutes begins very sadly, but after a cheerful little Scherzando moves to a perky allegro and then, inevitably, back to the mood of the opening. These top Boston musicians play all this music with supreme understanding and elegance: indeed, the performances here are little short of exquisite and full of life. They are beautifully recorded. If you only buy one disc of the music of Charles Koechlin, this is the one to get.

Cello Sonata, Op. 66; Chansons bretonnes, Book 1, Op. 115

 Hyp. CDA 66979. Lidström, Forsberg – PIERNE: Cello Sonata ***

Koechlin's sonata is pensive and introspective, ruminative in character, and Mats Lidström and Bengt Forsberg give a cultured, finely controlled performance of compelling subtlety. The sound is natural and lifelike. In every respect this is a disc of quality.

Chansons bretonnes (for cello & piano), Book 3

 Hyp. CDA 67244. Lidström, Forsberg – MAGNARD & WIDOR: Sonatas ***

The Koechlin Chansons bretonnes have the charm and imagination one associates with this composer. Lidström and Bengt Forsberg play all these pieces, which are quite short, with eloquence and flair. The sound is excellent.

Horn Sonata, Op. 70; 15 Pieces, Op. 180; Morceau de lecture (for horn); Sonneries

 ASV CDDCA 716. Tuckwell, Blumenthal

The Sonata is a richly conceived three-movement work, linked by its evocative opening idea. The Morceau de lecture is freer, more rhapsodic, immediately stretching up ecstatically into the instrument's higher tessitura. The 15 Pieces are delightful vignettes, opening with a rapturous evocation, Dans la forêt romantique. While some of them are skittish, notably the muted Scherzo (4) or jolly Allegro vivo (11), many explore that special solemn melancholy which the horn easily discovers in its middle to lower register, as in 10 and 12 (both marked doux). Two others are for hunting horns, and they robustly use the open harmonics which are naturally out of tune (an effect Britten tried more sparingly), while the 11 brief Sonneries are all written for cors de chasse in two, three or four parts, which Tuckwell plays by electronic means. This is a collection to be dipped into rather than taken all at once, but Tuckwell's artistry sustains the listener's interest; and the fine pianist, Daniel Blumenthal, makes the most of his rewarding part in the Sonata. The recording is excellent.

String Quartets 1, Op. 51; 2, Op. 57

Ⓝ  Arrese AR2006-3. Ardeo Qt

Like Milhaud, Koechlin studied at the conservatoire with André Gedalge, the 'cher maître' of the dedication, and also with Fauré, whose influence can be felt here. The First Quartet occupied him between 1911 and 1913 and the Second, which was to be the basis of his First Symphony, during 1915–16. Both are products of an inquiring and cultivated intelligence and make compelling listening. Decent playing from the all-female quartet.

PIANO MUSIC

Les Heures persanes, Op. 65 (16 Pieces for Piano)

 Chan. 9974. Stott

This is the original piano score of Les Heures persanes ('The Persian Hours') of which the orchestral version is praised above. Almost all this music is seductively unhurried. The listener is thus made to linger in scenery that is often picturesque in a gently evocative way. The closing number speaks for itself: Derviches dans la nuit. Assez animé, nocturne mystérieuse – Variante – Clair de lune sur a place désert, ending the journey mystically as it began, after the legendary roses have blossomed. Kathryn Stott's pianistic colours are sensuously warm and often exotic, and she is very atmospherically recorded.

KORNGOLD, Erich (1897–1957)

'Erich Wolfgang Korngold – The Adventures of a Wunderkind': A Portrait; with Concert: (i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto; (iii) Don Quixote: excerpt; 2 Fairytale Pictures, Op. 3

 Arthaus DVD 100 362. (i) Frankfurt RSO, Wolff; with (i) Viersin; (ii) Kavakos; (iii) Frey (Producers: Axel Hempel, Klaus Helmbold, Director: Barrie Gavi)

The feature on Korngold's career in Vienna and then Hollywood comes from Hessischen Rundfunk and is enriched with rare archive material from the family archives and Warner Brothers' films. It is intelligently directed. Korngold's life unfolds in a leisurely and effortless way and the biography includes musical illustrations by Anne Sofie von Otter, Bengt Forsberg and Mats Lindström. The Cello and Violin Concertos are expertly played and the Frankfurt Orchestra responds well to Hugh Wolff's direction. Those with an interest in the composer or in music in pre-war Vienna should not hesitate to get this.

Baby Serenade, Op. 24; Sursum corda (Symphonic Overture), Op. 13; Der Schneemann: Prelude & Serenade; Die tote Stadt: Prelude; Das Wunder der Heliane: Interlude

🔑  ASV CDDCA 1074. Bruckner O, Richter

This is a delightful disc, centring on a work new to the catalogue, the Baby Serenade, providing a musical evocation of family life with a baby, charmingly unpretentious. The Overture, Sursum corda, is like Respighi with a German accent, and even the excerpts from The Snowman, an opera written when Korngold was only eleven, are rich and lush, though the orchestration is by Zemlinsky, a point not mentioned in the booklet. The other two operatic excerpts make up the warmly enjoyable programme, helped by excellent playing and recording.

(i) Cello Concerto in C, Op. 37; (ii) Piano Concerto in C sharp for the Left Hand, Op. 17; Symphonic Serenade for Strings, Op. 39; Military March in B flat

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 10433X. (i) Dixon; (ii) Shelley; BBC PO, Bamert

The Cello Concerto is an adaptation of a short piece Korngold composed in 1946 for the film Deception starring Bette Davis and Claude Rains. The Concerto in C sharp for Piano Left Hand (1924) is an altogether different matter. Composed, like Ravel's concerto, for the one-armed pianist Paul Wittgenstein, who had lost his right arm during the First World War, it is an extraordinarily imaginative and resourceful work. Although it springs from a post-Straussian world, it is full of individual touches. Howard Shelley gives it a radiant performance and is given splendid support. To complaints that the Military March (1917) was rather fast, Korngold is said to have replied that it was intended to be played for the retreat! The Symphonic Serenade for Strings is a very beautiful (as well as beautifully crafted) work with a highly inventive Scherzo and an eloquent, rather Mahlerian slow movement. First-rate playing and opulent, well-balanced recording. Well worth exploring.

Violin Concerto in D, Op. 35

✿ * Onyx 4016. Ehnes, Vancouver SO, Tovey – BARBER; WALTON: Violin Concerto ✿ ****

🔑  DG SACD 474 874-2; CD 474 515-2. Mutter, LSO, Previn – TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto in D ***

Ⓜ  EMI 5 62590-2. Perlman, Pittsburgh O, Previn – SIBELIUS: Concerto; SINDING: Suite in A min. ***

Ⓜ  EMI 5 09676-2. Perlman, Pittsburgh SO, Previn – GOLDMARK: Violin Concerto; SINDING: Suite in A min. ***

(BB)  Naxos 8.553579. Tsu, Razumovsky Sinfonia, Yu Long – GOLDMARK: Violin Concerto ***

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Much Ado About Nothing (suite), Op. 11

🔑  DG 439 886-2. Shaham; (i) LSO, Previn; (ii) Previn (piano) – BARBER: Violin Concerto ***

In this inspired and generous coupling, James Ehnes gives one of the finest performances of the concerto, bringing out its full emotional thrust without vulgarity or exaggeration. His playing has always been impressive on disc, but here he excels himself in the expressive range as well as the tonal beauty of his performance, with expressive rubato perfectly controlled, drawing from Ehnes some ecstatic playing of the many stratospheric melodies above the stave. The opening oboe solo of the slow movement is radiantly played and later Ehnes takes it up with ravishing warmth, as does the orchestra. The finale is dazzling and this unsurpassed, spectacular recording is made the more indispensable by its Barber and Walton couplings.

The Israeli violinist Gil Shaham gives a performance of effortless virtuosity and strong profile. Shaham is warm and committed. The suite from Korngold's incidental music to Much Ado About Nothing provides a delightful and apt makeweight, with Shaham yearningly warm without sentimentality, clean and precise in attack.

In another outstanding performance, Mutter adopts a freely expressive style, almost improvisatory in the way she inflects the ripe melodies drawn from the composer's scores for Hollywood films. Plainly, for her, this is the music of love, reflected in having her husband, André Previn, conducting. The inner depth of her playing at the end of the central slow movement is magical, and her dazzling virtuosity in the dashing finale is breathtaking.

Perlman, dashing and romantic, also gives a superlative account, and though he is placed too close to the microphone the recording overall is vivid, and the couplings are very recommendable.

This now comes alternatively coupled with Goldmark's engaging Concerto (besides the Sinding Suite), which is perhaps a more apt choice of coupling.

Vera Tsu, born in Shanghai and trained in America, is another outstanding soloist. In every way this ripely romantic version of the Korngold is a match for other full-price rivals, thanks to Tsu's rich, ample tone and her flawless intonation, as well as her fearless attack in bravura writing. In the quality of sound the recording outshines most other versions, rich and free, both immediate and atmospheric, with fine dynamic range and with the Chinese conductor, Yu Long, drawing beautiful, refined playing from the Bratislava orchestra.

There is also a very fine recording by František Novotný (on Arco Diva UP0108-2131) with the Philharmonia Orchestra under Martin Turnovský, catching both its lyrical nostalgia and its brilliance. But the couplings seem less suitable: Karla Bytnatová sings the Mahler Rückert Lieder ravishingly, but Turnovský's coupled, vividly played account of Strauss's Don Juan is not as voluptuous as the finest versions.

(i; ii) Violin Concerto; (ii) Much Ado About Nothing: Suite; (iii) Symphony in F sharp; (ii) Theme and Variations, Op. 42; (iv) Piano Trio. Die tote Stadt: (v) Mariettas Lied; (vi) Pierrots Lied

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Gemini 2 17650-2 (2). (i) Hoelscher; (ii) Stuttgart RSO, Mattes; (iii) Phd. O, Welser-Möst; (iv) Margalit, Dicterow, Stepansky; (v) Te Kanawa, Philh. O, Rudel; (vi) Hampson, Munich RSO, Luist

A good if perhaps not distinctive anthology including Hoelscher's enjoyable account of the Violin Concerto, and the engaging Much Ado About Nothing Suite. The key work here is the Symphony, a work of real substance. Welser-Möst secures an excellent account of it, although the Chandos version directed by Edward Downes is an even finer recording.

Film scores: Captain Blood; Elizabeth and Essex; The Prince and the Pauper; The Sea Hawk (all arr. Russ)

🔑  DG 471 347-2. LSO, Previn

He thought of the ripely romantic film scores for these four swashbucklers starring Errol Flynn as 'operas without singing'. Considering how quickly he had to work, the complexity of the writing is astonishing, with Korngold closely supervising sumptuous orchestrations by associates such as Hugo Friedhofer and Milan Roder. The sequence culminates in The Sea Hawk of 1940, with over 100 minutes of music deftly compressed into a colourful 18-minute suite of highlights, the most substantial of the four here, each with scores reconstructed and reassembled by Patrick Russ. Such a haunting movement as Sold into Slavery from the Captain Blood suite fully matches in originality anything Korngold ever wrote. André Previn, nurtured in Hollywood and himself the winner of four Oscars for his film music, proves the ideal interpreter, with the LSO both brilliant and passionate.

Film Scores: Deception; The Sea Hawk (arr. Morgan)

 Naxos 8.570110/1. Moscow Symphony Ch. & O, Stromberg

John Morgan has restored Korngold's amazing complete score for the famous Errol Flynn vehicle, The Sea Hawk, continually bursting with musical ideas, and Naxos have coupled it with the score for Deception, including a famous concertante cello part (warmly played here by Alexander Zagorinsky) which was to form the nucleus of the later cello concerto. The Russian performances have appropriate Hollywood-styled hyperbole, even if there is some lack of refinement in the sumptuous recording. But this is a unique set, showing the sheer fertility of the composer's imagination.

(i) Much Ado About Nothing (Suite), Op. 11; (ii) Abschiedslieder (Songs of Farewell), Op. 14; Einfache Lieder (Simple Songs), Op. 9; (iii) Prayor; (ii) Tomorrow

 ASV CDDCA 1131. Linz Mozart Female Ch., Bruckner O, Linz, C. Richter with (i) Hochstenbach; (ii) Mitchell-Velasco; (iii) Gould

The suite that Korngold provided for Much Ado About Nothing is richly orchestrated and includes the première recording of his Garden Music. The film The Constant Nymph (1942) centred on the life of a composer and needed an original composition for the climax. Korngold provided Tomorrow, a characteristically flamboyant work, in his lushest style, for large orchestra, female choir and mezzo soprano soloist, here the excellent Gigi Mitchell-Velasco. She also sings with great sensitivity in the two Mahlerian song-cycles, bringing much charm to the earlier – but by no means immature – Op. 9 set (the evocative Night Wanderer is another first recording), and she is no less successful in the moving Songs of Farewell of 1920–1. The Prayor is a short but effective liturgical work, dating from 1940, for female choir, organ and orchestra, though it is slightly marred by a solo tenor who is somewhat wobbly and not producing the sweetest of sounds. Otherwise, all the performances are warmly sympathetic, as is the sound, with a full amplitude and plenty of range to suit the music. Texts and translation are included.

Sinfonietta, Op. 5; Sursum corda, Op. 13

Ⓜ * Chan. 10432X. BBC PO, Bamert

Korngold's Sinfonietta is a four-movement symphony in all but name, betraying a prodigious expertise both in the organization of musical ideas of real quality and individuality. At 43 minutes, it is an extraordinary achievement for a 14-year-old – an adolescent composer springing as it were fully equipped on to the musical scene. Sursum corda, an early virtuoso showpiece lasting 20 minutes, is finer than one might expect, an extraordinarily sumptuous piece that in its wide range of moods keeps suggesting that it will turn into the Pines of Rome. The present performance of the Sinfonietta is a clear front-runner, and the Chandos recording is altogether superb in terms of definition and opulence. A ripely enjoyable disc of beautifully played performances, with a sumptuous sound-picture.

Symphonic Serenade, Op. 39

🔑  ASV Gold GLD 4020. LSO, Pittau – GRIFFES: Roman Sketches: The White Peacock ***

Korngold's Symphonic Serenade, lusciously memorable, ought by now to be a repertoire work. But there is no justice in music, and dreadful stuff is regularly heard, while this small-scale masterpiece languishes unplayed in concert halls. With its sensuous, glowing textures it has much in common with its Griffes couplings, but it has great vitality too, especially in its sparkling Scherzo, while the beautiful slow movement is written in the spirit of Mahler. It is superbly played here and the recording is in the demonstration bracket.

Symphony in F sharp, Op. 40; (i) Abschiedslieder, Op. 14

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 10431X. (i) Finnie; BBC PO, Downes

The Symphony is a work of real imaginative power. It is scored for large forces – a big percussion section including piano, celeste, marimba, etc. – and the orchestra is used with resource and flair. The BBC Philharmonic play with enthusiasm and sensitivity for Edward Downes. The Abschiedslieder are much earlier and were completed in 1920; there is a great deal of Strauss, Mahler and Zemlinsky here. Linda Finnie is a persuasive soloist, and the balance is eminently well judged. The Chandos recording is wide-ranging and lifelike.

Piano Music, 4 Hands: (i) Piano Trio in D, Op. 1. Solo Piano Music: Piano Sonatas 1–3; Don Quixote: 6 Character Pieces after Cervantes; 4 Little Caricatures for Children, Op. 19; Much Ado About Nothing (3 Pieces); Märchenbilder, Op. 3; Potpourri aus der Oper 'Der Ring des Polykrates'; The Snowman (Pantomime in 2 Scenes); Die tote Stadt: Schach Brugge; What the Woods Tell Me; 4 Waltzes; Das Wunder der Heliane: Intermezzo

Ⓑ  Nim. NI 5705/8 (4). Jones, (i) with McMahon

Martin Jones has always been one of the most exploratory of pianists and his four-CD set of the Korngold piano music is a valuable addition to the catalogue. The early music is of astonishing precocity and pianistic assurance – and some of it (such as the second of the Four Waltzes) touching. The Four Little Caricatures for Children in the style of Schoenberg, Bartók and others are quite elegant. The Second Sonata, composed when Korngold was 13, is a finely wrought piece, played with great conviction by Martin Jones. The Piano Trio, written when he was only 12, is given in its transcription for piano, four hands (the original was premièred by Bruno Walter, Arnold Rosé and Friedrich Buxbaum). There are some delightful shorter pieces, such as Heinzelmännchen ('The Imps'), which are quite haunting. A worthwhile set with well-balanced and truthful recorded sound.

SONGS

4 Abschiedslieder, Op. 14; 3 Lieder, Op. 18; 3 Lieder, Op. 22; 5 Lieder, Op. 28; 4 Shakespeare Songs, Op. 31; Songs of the Clown, Op. 29; Sonnets for Vienna, Op. 41; Unvergänglichkeit, Op. 27

Ⓝ  Signum SIGCD 160. Connolly, Dazeley, Burnside

Korngold's flair for combining music with drama and his natural melodic gift made him a natural contributor to German Lieder, and many of these settings appear drawn on his own personal experiences, although the Shakespeare songs in English evolved from his incidental music for Max Reinhardt's film of A Midsummer Night's Dream. To have so many of his settings on record is bounty indeed, but we found a problem with the performances. Sarah Connolly has a wide range and ability to slip up easily to Korngold's top notes, but she also has an intrusive vibrato. William Dazeley is inclined to over-dramatize and turn drama into melodrama. The Shakespearean English songs are more successful (especially those sung by Dazeley), but the vibrato problem still remains with Connolly's contributions. Ian Burnside accompanies well throughout and the recording cannot be faulted.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Piano Quintet in E, Op. 15; (ii) Suite for 2 Violins, Cello & Piano Left Hand, Op. 23

 ASV CDDCA 1047. (i) Schmolk; (ii) McFarlane; Schubert Ens. of London

The Piano Quintet is powerfully wrought and superbly laid out for the medium, and rightly enjoyed much exposure in the 1920s. Its resurrection in this fine new recording is more than welcome, for it reaffirms the fertility of Korngold's imagination and the quality of his invention. The Suite, Op. 23, one of six works written for Paul Wittgenstein, has some splendid ideas: the third-movement Grotesquerie is particularly striking.

String Sextet, Op. 10

 Hyp. CDA 66425. Raphael Ens. – SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht ***

 Kleos KL 5142. Concertante – BRIDGE: Sextet ***

The Korngold Sextet is an amazing achievement for a 17-year-old. Not only is it crafted with musicianly assurance and maturity, it is also inventive and characterful. The Raphael Ensemble play it with great commitment and the Hyperion recording is altogether first class.

Yet again the Sextet comes over as a splendid piece when played with such conviction, subtlety and feeling as by this fine American string group, Concertante. They are superbly recorded, and the Bridge coupling is equally persuasive.

OPERA

Die Kathrin (complete)

 CPO 999 602-2 (2). Diener, Rendall, Hayward, Watson, D. Jones, BBC Singers, BBC Concert O, Brabbins

Die Kathrin is a far warmer and more relaxed piece than Korngold's other operas. The opulent scoring and ripe lyricism go with a novelettish story of Kathrin, a servant-girl, and her wandering minstrel of a sweetheart. With echoes of Strauss's Arabella, Puccini's Suor Angelica and even Humperdinck's Hänsel und Gretel, Martyn Brabbins draws aptly sumptuous sounds from the BBC Concert Orchestra, in a recording taken from a BBC radio production. A characterful cast, including Della Jones and Lillian Watson in small roles, is headed by the radiant young German soprano, Melanie Diener, but with David Rendall rather strained as the hero, François.

Die tote Stadt (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) GD 87767 (2). Neblett, Kollo, Luxon, Prey, Bav. R. Ch., Tölz Ch., Munich R. O, Leinsdorf

At the age of 23 Korngold had his opera, Die tote Stadt, presented in simultaneous world premières in Hamburg and Cologne! The score again includes many echoes of Puccini and Richard Strauss, but its youthful exuberance carries the day. Here René Kollo is powerful, if occasionally coarse of tone, Carol Neblett sings sweetly in the equivocal roles of the wife's apparition and the newcomer, and Hermann Prey, Benjamin Luxon and Rose Wagemann make up an impressive cast. Leinsdorf is at his finest.

Recorded live at the Royal Swedish Opera in 1996, the Naxos version offers a warmly expressive reading, bringing out the ripeness of melodic writing. The recording too is admirably clear, with more orchestral detail than in the vintage first recording under Leinsdorf. The tenor, Thomas Sunnegardh, sings cleanly and freshly in the central role of Paul, with Anders Bergstrom youthfully convincing as his friend, Frank. Yet the glory of the set is the singing of Katarina Dalayman as Marietta – radiantly pure and tender in Marietta's song in Act I – which even outshines the model of Carol Neblett on RCA. The snag is that Segerstam observes various cuts in the score, omitting some 15 minutes of music. Naxos provide a detailed synopsis and a German libretto, but no translation. (8.660060/1)

KOŽELUCH, Leopold

(1747–1818)

Clarinet Concerto 2 in E flat

🔑  ASV CDDCA 763. Johnson, RPO, Herbig – CRUSELL; KROMMER: Concertos ***

Leopold Koželuch's concerto is a highly agreeable work, especially when performed so magnetically by Emma Johnson. There is plenty of Johnsonian magic here to light up even the most conventional passage-work and the 'naturally flowing melodies' (the soloist's own description), and she is accompanied well and recorded admirably, with the slow movement made to sound recessed and delicate.

Symphonies in D; F; & G min.

 Chan. 9703. LMP, Bamert

These symphonies are pleasingly crafted, sub-Mozart; but each is distinguished by a graceful and appealing slow movement and a vigorous, light-hearted finale. They are very well played on Chandos, and the fairly resonant recording ensures their weight and substance.

KRAMÁŘ, František

see KROMMER, FRANZ

KRAUS, Joseph Martin (1756–92)

Azire: ballet music; (i) Violin Concerto in C, VB 151. Olympie: incidental music

(BB)  Naxos 8.570334. New Zealand SO, Grodd, (i) with Nishizaki

The lively invention we know from the 'Swedish Mozart's' symphonies is found in this substantial 30-minute Violin Concerto. Classically elegant it may be, but it also contains passages of virtuosic brilliance. The slow movement (strings alone) has much relaxed charm, as has the rondo-finale. The Olympie incidental music is rather darker, as befits the rather grim story. It consists of a rather Sturm und Drang overture, a march, and four Entr'actes and a Postlude which is rather beautiful. The five short numbers form Kraus's 1779 Swedish opera Azire are all that survive from the work, and delightful they are too. Decent performances and sound.

Fiskarena (ballet; complete), VB 40; Ballet music for Gluck's 'Armide', VB 39; 2 Pantomimes, VB 37 & 38

(BB)  Naxos 8.557498. Swedish CO, Sundkvist

Kraus wrote his ballet Fiskarena (The Fishermen) for the Royal Stockholm Opera. It includes a familiar hornpipe and its melodic flow is disarmingly attractive, 18th-century light music at its most appealing. The two Pantomimes are like miniature symphonies. All this music is elegantly played by the Swedish Chamber Orchestra under its highly sympathetic conductor, Petter Sundkvist, and the recording is up to the best Naxos standard.

Symphonies: in A, VB 128; F (Buffa), VB 129; F, VB 130; C (Violin obbligato), VB 138; C, VB 139; C min., VB 142; E flat, VB 144; Olympie Overture; Symphonies in C sharp min., VB 140; E min., VB 141; in C min. (Funèbre), VB 148; Overture in D min.; Symphonies: in D, VB 143; in F, VB 145; Riksdagsmusiken Sinfonia per la Chiesa in D, VB 146; Miksdagsmarsh

(BB) * Naxos 8.554472 (VB 128–30; 138); 8.553734 (VB 139, 142, 144 & Olympie); 8.554 777 (VB 140, 141, 148 & Overture); 8.555305 (VB 143, 145, 146 & Marsch) (available separately). Swedish CO, Sundkvist

Born in the same year as Mozart, Kraus was dubbed the 'Swedish Mozart', but these lively symphonies, freshly performed by the Swedish Chamber Orchestra, suggest that his music has more in common with that of Haydn (who praised his music highly), above all in the Sturm und Drang period. Kraus was drawn to the minor keys (especially the Symphony in C sharp minor and the Symphonie funèbre), and the tough streak in his writing is emphasized by the sharpness of syncopated rhythms. The major-key symphonies are marginally less striking, although Allegros still have plenty of vitality. Indeed, the fourth volume (8.555305) contains all the positive qualities that mark the other three volumes, the major-key symphonies combining classical elegance with Kraus's more dramatic style. The music is animated and inventive, often with a compelling edge, with the spirit of Haydn strongly felt in the major-keyed works. First-class recording and lively, fresh playing complete the picture.

KREISLER, Fritz (1875–1962)

Violin Concerto in the Style of Vivaldi

 DG 439 933-2. Shaham, Orpheus CO – VIVALDI: Four Seasons ***

An amiable pastiche, which sounds almost totally unlike Vivaldi as we experience his music performed today. It is warmly played and clearly enjoyed by its performers, and the sumptuousness of the sound is the more striking, coming, as it does, immediately after Vivaldi's wintry winds.

Violin Music (complete)

Vol. 1: Viennese styled music; Works 'in the style of . . . Dvořák arrangements

Vol. 2: Original Pieces; Tartini/Corelli Pastiches. TARTELLI: Concerto in the Style of Vivaldi; Devil's Trill Sonata

Vol. 3: Tchaikovsky/Grainger arrangements; Trad. (Londonderry air); Works 'in the style of . . . Tambourin Chinois

Vol. 4: Classical arrangements: Schubert; Weber; Haydn; Gluck; Mozart

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Nimbus NI 2529/32. Shumsky, Wolfram

Oscar Shumsky has a gorgeous tone and is a supreme stylist in this repertoire – an ideal performer if you want a complete coverage of Kreisler's own music, which was both tuneful and elegant, to say nothing of demanding considerable bravura. For many, Kreisler fooled his public into believing in the authenticity of the encores 'in the style of . . . and certainly they are clever pastiches. Here Shumsky parades the whole collection in front of the listener, admirably accompanied by Milton Kaye and William Wolfram and most truthfully recorded (in 1983/4), originally on the MusicMasters label.

Allegretto in the Style of Boccherini; Aucassin & Nicolette; Berceuse romantique; Caprice viennois; La gitana; Liebesfreud; Liebeslied; Marche miniature viennois; Menuett in the Style of Porpora; Polichinelle; Praeludium & Allegro in the Style of Pugnani; La Précieuse in the Style of Louis Couperin; Rondino on a Theme of Beethoven; Schön Rosmarin; Sicilienne & Rigaudon in the Style of Francoeur; Syncopation; Tambourin chinois; Tempo di Minuetto in the Style of Pugnani; Toy-Soldiers' March

Ⓑ  Decca 2-CD 475 6715 (2). Bell, Paul Coker (with 'Violin Favourites': BLOCH: Nigun (Baal Shem); BRAHMS: Hungarian Dance 1 (arr. Joachim); FALLA, arr. Kreisler: La vida breve: Spanish Dance; GRASSE: Wellenspiel; NOVÁČEK: Perpetuum mobile; PAGANINI: Cantabile, Op. 17; SARASATE: Carmen Fantasy, Op. 25; SCHUMANN: Vogel als Prophet; SIBELIUS: Romance, Op. 78/2; Mazurka, Op. 81/1; WIENIAWSKI: Scherzo-tarantelle, Op. 16; Thème original varié, Op. 15 (with Sanders))

As readily shown by the opening Praeludium & Allegro, Joshua Bell refuses to treat this music as trivial, and there is a total absence of schmaltz. Tambourin chinois, impeccably played, lacks something in charm, but not the neatly articulated La Précieuse. And what lightness of touch in Schön Rosmarin, what elegance of style in the Caprice viennois, what panache in the paired Liebesfreud and Liebeslied, and how seductive is the simple Berceuse romantique, one of the novelties here, like the winning Toy-Soldiers' March and the unexpected, almost Joplinesque rag, Syncopation. The recording is completely realistic. This recital has now been reissued as a Double with a further disc of encores, of which the most substantial item is the luscious Carmen Fantasy of Sarasate. They are played with similar elegance and flair, and equally persuasively accompanied by Samuel Sanders. If you want 2 hours and 9 minutes of violin lollipops, very realistically recorded, this reissue could prove ideal.

Encores: Andantino in the style of Martini; Caprice Viennois; Liebeslied; Recitative & Scherzo

capriccioso, Op. 6; Schön Rosmarin; Siciliano & Rigaudon in the Style of Francoeur; Tempo di minuetto in the Style of Pugnani; Syncopation; Toy Soldiers' March; Tambourin chinoise.
Arrangements: ALBENIZ: Tango; CHAMINADE: Sérénade espagnole; DVOŘÁK: Slavonic Dances 2 in E min.; 3 in G; Songs my Mother taught me; GLUCK: Mélodie; GRAINGER: Molly on the Shore; GRANADOS: Spanish Dance 5; CHOPIN: Mazurka 45 in A min., Op. 67/4; LEHÁR: Frasquita: Serenade; SCHUMANN: Romance in A, Op. 94/2

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD/DDD) 5 62601-2. Perlman, Sanders

Perlman's supreme mastery has rarely been demonstrated more endearingly than in the collection of arrangements, where the partnership with Samuel Sanders has the intimacy of equals rather than that of star soloist and accompanist. The original pieces here include such artless charmers as Syncopation (jauntily relaxed), and the inclusion of Grainger's Molly on the Shore in the transcriptions is both unexpected and successful. The recording is vivid and realistic, the balance placing Perlman well forward but with the piano well in the picture.

KREUTZER, Conradin (1780–1849)

Septet (for clarinet, horn, bassoon, violin, viola, cello & double-bass), Op. 62

 MDG 308 0232. Charis-Ens. – WITT: Septet ***

A beautifully played and recorded version of Kreutzer's infectiously enjoyable Septet on MDG; it is full of lovely tunes and invention, all bubbling along with witty and felicitous writing for each of the seven instruments, and the Witt coupling is also delectable.

KREUTZER, Joseph (1778–1832)

Grand Trio for Flute, Clarinet & Guitar, Op. 16

 Mer. CDE 84199. Conway, Silverthorne, Garcia – BEETHOVEN: Serenade; MOLINO: Trio ***

Joseph Kreutzer, thought to be the brother of Rodolphe, dedicatee of Beethoven's A major Violin Sonata, wrote many works for the guitar, of which this is a delightful example. The guitar, given at least equal prominence with the other instruments, brings an unusual tang to the textures of this charming piece, ending with a rousing Alla polacca. A nicely pointed performance on Meridian, very well recorded in warm, faithful sound.

KREUTZER, Rodolphe (1766–1831)

Grand Quintet in C

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55015. Francis, Allegri Qt – CRUSELL: Divertimento; REICHA: Quintet **(*)

This is the Kreutzer of the Beethoven sonata. The Grand Quintet is thought to date from the 1790s; it is somewhat bland but rather enjoyable when played as beautifully as it is here. This is part of an attractive triptych, now offered by Hyperion at bargain price. However, the CD plays for under 50 minutes.

KROMMER, Franz (Kramář, František) (1759–1831)

Clarinet Concerto in E flat, Op. 36

🔑  ASV CDDCA 763. Johnson, RPO, Herbig – CRUSELL: Concerto 1; KOZELUCH: Concerto 2 ***

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49558-2. Kam, Württemberg CO, Heilbronn, Faerber – MOZART: Clarinet Concerto ***

Emma Johnson is at her most winning in this attractive concerto, which is made to sound completely spontaneous in her hands, particularly the engaging finale, lolloping along with its skipping main theme. The Adagio is darker in feeling, its mood equally well caught. Excellent accompaniments and warm, refined recording make this a most engaging triptych.

Sharon Kam's performance is also very attractive and full of personality, and she is well accompanied by Faerber. If you prefer the Mozart Concerto as a coupling, she plays that very well too and with real charm.

Double Clarinet Concerto

* EMI 3 79786-2. Meyer, Bliss, ASMF, Sillito – SPOHR: Clarinet Concertos 2 & 4 ****

Krommer's Double Clarinet Concerto starts in such a cheerful manner that it is hard not to smile, and the smile grows broader on hearing the delightful interplay between the two soloists, Sabine Meyer and Julian Bliss. The slow movement possesses, as the sleeve-note writer says, 'pathos and operatic passion', while the finale, beginning unexpectedly with pizzicato strings, is full of delightful invention and much brilliance. Superb performances and very natural recording.

Oboe Concertos in F, Op. 37 & 52

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55080. Francis, LMP, Shelley – MOZART: Oboe Concerto ***

These two concertos were published in 1803 and 1805 respectively. Needless to say, Sarah Francis winningly essays all the music's changes of mood and style: her exquisite timbre and elegant phrasing would surely have delighted this attractively inventive Bohemian composer, as would Howard Shelley's polished accompaniments, delicate or full-blooded as necessary.

Symphonies 2 in D, Op. 40; 4 in C min., Op. 102

 Chan. 9275. LMP, Bamert

The two symphonies played here by the London Mozart Players under Matthias Bamert present a different picture of Krommer: the D major Symphony (1803) opens in something of the manner of Don Giovanni, while much else conveys a distinctly Beethovenian visage. The C minor, Op. 102, composed towards the end of the second decade of the 19th century, already has a whiff of the changing sensibility that we find in Schubert and Weber. Very interesting and refreshing music, played with evident enthusiasm, and well recorded.

Divertimento in F, Op. 96; (i) Piano Quintet in E flat, Op. 95

Ⓝ  Phoenix 106. Kontraste Köln, (i) with Pullaev (fortepiano)

The six-movement Divertimento for string trio is a late work, lightweight but with a strikingly rhythmic second Minuet and two slow movements, of which the Adagio has a touch of melancholy and the Andante a lightweight charm. The Piano Quintet, however, is a work of stronger character, with a catchy scalic main theme for the first movement, an eloquent central Largo and a pulsing, energetic finale. Both works are very persuasively played and Alexander Pullaev brings much added character to the Quintet by using a fortepiano which seems just right for the music.

Oboe Quartets 1–2, IX: 21/2; 2 Oboe Quintets in C, VII:12/13

(BB)  Regis RRC 1201. Francis, Tagor String Trio, with Barritt

Krommer's music is slight, but its charm is as undeniable as its craftsmanship. Sample the simple interplay of parts at the opening Quintet in C or the wistful Adagio of the First Quartet to be instantly won over, while the Rondo finales are engagingly light and vivacious in the hands of the stylish Sarah Francis. She dominates the performances without swamping her companions, and the recording has an agreeable intimacy.

Partitas: in E flat; in B flat, Op. 45/1–2; in E flat with 2 Horns, FVK 2d

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553868. Michael Thompson Wind Ens.

Partitas: in F, Op. 57; E flat, Op. 71; B flat, Op. 78; Marches, Op. 31/3–5

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553498. Budapest Wind Ens.

Franz Krommer specialized in music for wind instruments, of which the two Partitas, Op. 45, were always among his most popular works, exploiting the conventional wind band (or Harmonie) of flutes, oboes, horns and bassoons in pairs, plus trumpet on occasion. Even more striking – and not published till this century – is the third Partita here, with the two horns given virtuoso solo roles, a concerto in all but name. Vividly recorded, this Naxos issue offers masterly performances from the ensemble of leading London performers previously led by Barry Tuckwell.

The second Naxos disc is just as successful as its predecessor. The Budapest Wind Orchestra, led by their exuberant clarinettist Kálmán Berkes, are a first-rate ensemble, full of spirit and personality. They yield nothing in terms of artistic excellence or recording quality to any rivals.

Octet-Partitas in B flat, Op. 67; in E flat, Op. 79

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3410. Nash Ens. – DVOŘÁK: Serenade for Wind ***

The Nash Ensemble give excellent and lively accounts of both these attractive pieces. This is not great music, but it is highly agreeable (the main theme of the first movement of Op. 67 is engagingly ingenuous) and the Nash Ensemble readily demonstrate their charms in a direct way, for which the bright recording is admirably suited.

KUHLAU, Friedrich (1786–1832)

Overtures: Elisa; Elverhøj (The Elf's Hill); Hugo and Adelheid; Lulu; The Magic Harp; The Robber's Castle; The Triplet Brothers from Damask; William Shakespeare

🔑  Chan. 9648. Danish Nat. RSO, Schønwandt

Lulu is a fairy-tale opera from the same source as Zauberflöte, while William Shakespeare is based on the Bard's (alleged) youthful exploit of poaching deer. This delightful disc, brilliantly played and recorded, offers all seven of Kuhlau's opera overtures, plus his most famous work: the overture to the classic Danish play, Elverhøj (Elf's Hill).

CHAMBER MUSIC

Flute Quintets 1–3, Op. 51

 ASV CDDCA 979. Stinton, Prospero Ens.

(BB)  Naxos 8.553303. Rafn, Sjogren, Rasmussen, Andersen, Johansen

Kuhlau's Flute Quintets are charmingly amiable works, well crafted, with fresh invention, the slow movements having surprising expressive depth. We are marginally inclined to prefer the playing of Jennifer Stinton, and she gets excellent support from the Prospero Ensemble, but their Scandinavian competitors are also first class, and Eyvind Rafn is also a soloist of personality. Both recordings are vivid and present.

Duo brillante in D, Op. 110/3; Introduction & Rondo on the Chorus 'Ah! quand il gèle', from Onslow's Opera 'Le Colporteur'; Grande Sonata concertante in A min., Op. 85

 Globe GLO 5180. Root, Egarr (fortepiano)

Flute Sonatas: in E flat, Op. 64; in G, Op. 69; in E min., Op. 71; in G, C & G min., Op. 83/1–3; in E min., Op. 71; Grande Sonata Concertante in A min., Op. 85

 Dacapo 8.224071/72. Rafn, Vagning

Flute Sonatas in G, C & G min., Op. 83/1–3

(BB)  Naxos 8.555346. Grodd, Napoli

The Grand Sonata in A minor has a Hummelian first movement with an engaging dotted secondary theme, followed by a bouncing Scherzo, a serene Adagio and a gay, chirping closing Rondo. The Duo brillante is in much the same vein as the Sonata. The Introduction and Rondo opens dramatically and is instantly more operatic in its melodic flow. All these works are of quality but essentially lightweight. They are admirably played and recorded here. Marten Root uses a copy of an early 19th-century German flute, and Richard Egarr a bright-toned 1825 fortepiano.

It is when we turn to the trio of Opus 83 Sonatas, published in Bonn in the same year, that we discover why their composer was regarded at the time as 'the Beethoven of the flute'. These are three of the very finest flute sonatas of the early 19th century and are fully worthy of the present, highly sympathetic performances on modern instruments, which do not try to over-dramatize or trivialize the music with exaggerated bravura. The recording is excellent and this disc is another real Naxos discovery.

However, the excellent Dacapo set offers all seven of Kuhlau's Flute Sonatas which he began writing in 1824. While the Grande Sonata Concertante represents the peak of his output, the earlier Sonatas of Opus 64 and 69 are also fine works. The very first uses an Ancien air danois for an engaging set of variations as its central movement, while the finale reminds one of Schubert as well as Beethoven; the G major work is lyrically appealing throughout, and again has a perky finale. Opus 71 is the only work of the seven (other than the Grande Sonata) to have four movements, including a lively Scherzo with a Ländler trio. Its slow movement has a touching simplicity and the finale sparkles irrepressibly. All six sonatas are most sympathetically played on modern instruments by Eyvind Rafn (a superb flautist) and Esther Vagning (an excellent pianist), and the recording gives them a vivacious presence.

OPERA

Lulu (opera; complete)

 Kontrapunkt/HM 32009/11. Saarman, Frellesvig, Kiberg, Cold, Danish R. Ch. & SO, Schønwandt

This Lulu comes from 1824 and is surely too long: the spoken passages are omitted here – but, even so, the music takes three hours. The opening of Act II has overtones of the Wolf's Glen scene in Der Freischütz and the dance of the black elves in the moonlight is pure Mendelssohn – and has much charm. The invention is generally fresh and engaging, though no one would claim that it has great depth. The largely Danish cast cope very capably with the not inconsiderable demands of Kuhlau's vocal writing, the Danish Radio recording is eminently truthful and vivid, and Michael Schønwandt draws excellent results from the Danish Radio Chorus and Orchestra.

KUHNAU, Johann (1660–1722)

Magnificat in C

🔑  EuroArts DVD 2053419. York, Bartosz, Dürmüller, Mertens, Amsterdam Bar. Ch. & O, Koopman – BACH: Magnificat, BWV 243a; Cantata 10 ***

🔑  BIS CD 1011. Persson, Tachikawa, Türk, Urano, Bach Coll., Japan, Suzuki – BACH: Magnificat in D; ZELENKA: Magnificats in C & D ***

Johann Kuhnau died the year before the Bach Magnificat came into being in its first (E flat) incarnation. Kuhnau's own setting is his most ambitious work and calls for large forces and is thought to have been composed for a Christmas service at Leipzig. It is not otherwise available on CD and any rival will have to be pretty stunning to match this version from Masaaki Suzuki and his largely Japanese forces. Apart from the excellence of his singers and instrumentalists, the recorded sound is quite exemplary.

Koopman's DVD has the added advantage of the visual imagery in the beautiful St Thomas's Church, Leipzig, where both this setting and Bach's follow-up version were first heard. In all respects the performance is first class, and the recording is wonderfully vivid. DVD collectors need not hesitate: it stands out among recordings in this medium.

KULLAK, Theodor (1818–82)

Piano Concerto in C min., Op. 55

 Hyp. CDA 67086. Lane, BBC Scottish SO, Willén – DREYSCHOCK: Piano Concerto ***

Theodor Kullak, on the evidence of this most attractive concerto, was a very gifted composer, with melody coming easily to him. A strong march-like theme dominates the first movement and, when the piano enters, the glittering passage-work lies somewhere between that in the Liszt and Chopin concertos, while the romantic secondary tune has a comparable heritage. The central movement is equally engaging, with bursts of energy, never languishing, and the glittering Weberian finale makes one smile with pleasure at the witty audacity of the main theme. The work is given a scintillating performance by Piers Lane, vigorously and sensitively supported by the BBC Scottish players under Niklas Willén. The recording is first class.

LALO, Edouard (1823–92)

Cello Concerto 1 in D min., Op. 33

 ASV CDDCA 867. Rolland, BBC PO, Varga – MASSENET: Fantaisie; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ***

 EMI (ADD) 5 55528-2. Du Pré, Cleveland O, Barenboim – R. STRAUSS: Don Quixote 🏵 ***

Sophie Rolland plays with effortless eloquence and is given responsive support from the BBC Philharmonic under Gilbert Varga, though he is a little brusque in the Intermezzo. An enjoyable and convincing performance. The excellence of the BBC/ASV recording makes for a strong recommendation.

Jacqueline du Pré's recording of the Lalo Concerto was taken live from a broadcast in Cleveland in January 1973, right at the end of du Pré's playing career, in one of her last remissions from multiple sclerosis. It is a masterly performance and is totally involving, even though the cello is balanced rather more backwardly than in du Pré's studio recordings. In spite of that, her fire at the opening grabs the attention, leading on to a performance that is both passionate and poetic.

(i) Cello Concerto 1, Op. 33; Symphony in G min.; Namouna (ballet): excerpts

 BIS CD 1296. (i) Thedéen; Malaysian PO, Bakel

Torleif Thedéen isn't a Rostropovich, but his playing is spontaneously persuasive and his wistful espressivo is very appealing in the secondary material of the first movement of the Cello Concerto. The Intermezzo is also touchingly responsive, and the performance ends triumphantly.

Kees Bakel proves a most sensitive exponent of Lalo's Symphony, and he opens the work evocatively. The main allegro has plenty of impetus, and after an eloquently shaped Adagio, the finale is vibrant and rhythmically not too heavy, so it does not sound Schumannesque. The bonus is a suite of six movements from Namouna, again played with plenty of spirit and colour. But here the full and resonant orchestral sound, is less ideal for light-textured dance music. Even so, this is still very enjoyable, and overall the disc is very recommendable, and especially so for the Symphony.

(i) Concerto russe; Violin Concerto in F. Scherzo; Le Roi d'Ys Overture

🔑  Chan. 9758. (i) Charlier; BBC PO, Y. P. Tortelier

Yan Pascal Tortelier opens with a marvellously rumbustious account of Le Roi d'Ys Overture. But the main value of this disc is Olivier Charlier's seductive accounts of the two concertante works. The Violin Concerto is engagingly songful and ought to be better known, but the real find is the Concerto russe, in essence a sister work to the Symphonie espagnole, but with Slavonic rather than sultry Spanish inspiration. Tortelier – with the help of Lalo – provides a vivid orchestral backcloth, and the opulent, well-balanced Chandos recording adds to the listener's pleasure.

Concerto Russe, Op. 9; Symphonie espagnole

🔑 Ⓜ * HM PRD 350 017. Poulet, Prague RSO, Válek

A superb disc. Gérard Poulet gives a highly individual account of the Symphonie espagnole, to which he brings many inimitable personal touches. But the performance of the Concerto Russe is full of warmth and tender lyrical finesse, revealing it as a true masterpiece, with the central movements particularly seductive, and with a finale which opens rapturously and the Russian dance finale scintillating. In both works Poulet is helped by the strong contribution of Vladimir Válek, whose orchestral backing is full of character, matching the soloist at every turn. The recording is in the demonstration bracket.

Namouna (ballet): extended excerpts (Suites 1–2 & Allegro Vivace; Tambourin; La Gitane; Bacchanale)

(*) Auvidis V 4677. Monte Carlo PO, Robertson

Namouna (ballet): Suites 1–2; Valse de la cigarette

(*) ASV CDDCA 878. RPO, Butt – GOUNOD: Mors et Vita: Judex

There is no complete version available of Lalo's ballet, but David Robertson has added four more items to the content of Lalo's two Suites, plus the charmingly Gallic Valse de la cigarette (which the composer extracted as a separate number). He has also re-established the music in ballet-order, whereas in the Suites Lalo reassembled the items for concert performance. Robertson secures sensitive, polished playing from his Monte Carlo Orchestra, who resound with warmth, and the recording has plenty of colour and ambience.

Yondani Butt achieves performances of the Suites and the Valse de la cigarette which have comparable colour and finesse, and the RPO play extremely well. Even so, they don't necessarily upstage their French competitors and they offer less music. The ASV disc offers a big religieuse Gounod tune as an encore, but more of Namouna would have been preferable.

Symphonie espagnole (for violin and orchestra), Op. 21

 Claudio CB 5256-2. Jin, LSO, Wordsworth – SARASATE: Carmen Fantasy ; PROKOFIEV: Solo Violin Sonata  (with KROLL: Banjo and Fiddle orch. BRADBURY; TARREGA: Recuerdos de la Alhambra, arr. RICCI(*))

Ⓜ (*) Sony 88697 99817-2. Stern, Phd. O, Ormandy – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1 **(*)

Min Jin's essentially delicate approach is very appealing. Barry Wordsworth's spacious opening sets the mood for her warm yet gently lyrical entry, and how delicately and seductively she introduces the secondary theme. The Andante then becomes the heart of the performance. The chirping woodwind opens the finale invitingly, and again she displays airily blithe phrasing in her lilting bowing. Among the encores the Recuerdos of Tárrega is a distinct novelty, but the transcription is not really convincing. Kroll's Banjo and Fiddle (with orchestra) is more successful.

Isaac Stern gives a rich, red-blooded performance, but one which does not lack rhythmic subtlety. He is recorded very close in relation to the orchestra, but Ormandy is not upstaged and otherwise the sound is vivid and still commendably opulent. A totally memorable performance.

Heifetz's 1951 account has superb panache and there are no complaints about the mono recording. Alas, he omitted the Intermezzo (a practice curiously common in his time), which is our loss, but the performance of the rest, like all the music on this CD, is dazzling. (RCA 09026 61753-2)

Zukerman's performance (coupled with Vieuxtemps) is also outstandingly successful. He plays with great dash and fire yet brings a balancing warmth. (Sony SBK 48274)

Piano Trios 1 in C min., Op. 7; 2 in B min.; 3 in A min., Op. 26

 ASV CDDCA 899. Barbican Piano Trio

As always with Lalo, this is the kind of unpretentious, inventive, well-crafted and delightful music which 19th-century civilization seemed able to foster and their composers to produce – and of which the late 20th was conspicuously and lamentably bare. There is not much to say about the performances, except to note their excellence and poise.

Le Roi d'Ys (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  Dynamic DVD 33592. Piunti, Girard, Martin-Bonnet, Guèze, Van Mechelen, Graus, Tissons Ch. & O of Opéra Royal de Wallonie, Davin (Director: Jean-Louis Pichon; V/D: Matteo Ricchetti)

Lalo's melodramatic overture to Le Roi d'Ys is comparatively well known, but not the opera from which it derives, so congratulations to the Belgian Royal Walloon Opera for mounting the work so successfully in 2008, as a co-production with the Opéra Théâtre de Saint-Etienne. First and foremost, it has costumes in the period of the story, and a convincing set which can handle the mystical appearance of the city's Patron St Corentin and the opera's spectacular watery climax convincingly. Secondly, the opera is strongly cast with the two sisters, Margared (Giuseppina Piunti) and Rozenn (Guylaine Girard), carrying their key parts dramatically. Sébastien Guèze, with a pleasingly French tenor voice, is an excellent hero, Mylio, loved by both sisters. Eric Martin-Bonnet as Le Roi holds his own with dignity, and Werner Van Mechelen is a splendid villain (Karnac), who is obsessed with Margared. She doesn't want him, but is furious not to have secured Mylio for herself. She persuades Karnac into helping her open the locks which will cause the sea to flood the city, and so have her revenge on the happy lovers immediately after their wedding. The score is pleasingly melodic, the opera has plenty of action and is altogether most entertaining in this excellent video presentation.

LAMBERT, Constant (1905–51)

Apparitions (Ballet; arr. of Liszt); Mars & Venus (Ballet; arr. of Scarlatti)

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7149. Royal Ballet Sinfonia, Wordsworth (with LANCHBERY: Tales of Beatrix Potter: Excerpts) – L. BERKELEY: Judgement of Paris: Suite ***

Constant Lambert's delightful arrangements of four Scarlatti Keyboard Sonatas, chosen by Marie Rambert, for a ballet strangely entitled Mars and Venus, managed to retain much of the character and charm of the originals, to make entertaining listening. But finer still was Apparitions, created jointly with Gordon Jacob. Lambert's scenario was derived from Berlioz's Symphonie fantastique, for which he chose the music of Liszt with great skill, and it was brilliantly orchestrated by Jacob. The music is superbly played and recorded, and this CD, which celebrates the choreography of Sir Frederick Ashton and includes also a suite from Lanchbery's Tales of Beatrix Potter, is far more than a nostalgic memento.

Aubade héroïque; (i) The Rio Grande; (ii) Summer's Last Will and Testament

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66565. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones; (i) with Gibbons; (ii) Burgess, Shimell, Ch. of Opera North & Leeds Festival

The Rio Grande, Lambert's jazz-based choral concerto setting of a poem by Sacheverell Sitwell, is one of the most colourful and atmospheric works from the 1920s. The Aubade héroïque is an evocative tone-poem inspired by Lambert's memory of a beautiful morning in Holland in 1940. Summer's Last Will and Testament is a big, 50-minute choral work, setting lyrics by the Elizabethan, Thomas Nashe, on the unpromising subject of the threat of plague. Lloyd-Jones and his outstanding team, mainly from Opera North, bring out the vitality and colour of the writing, with each of the nine substantial sections based on Elizabethan dance-rhythms. The recording in all three works is full, vivid and atmospheric.

The Bird Actors Overture; Pomona (ballet); Romeo and Juliet (ballet)

 Chan. 9865 Victoria State O, Lanchbery

Pomona is well served by John Lanchbery and his Victoria State Orchestra, even if it does not quite command the elegance of the David Lloyd-Jones account on Hyperion. This present issue also brings Romeo and Juliet, which Lambert composed for Diaghilev. The Bird Actors is a short overture of some three minutes, originally intended for an earlier ballet called Adam and Eve. Recommended to all with a taste for this engaging composer.

(i; ii) Piano Concerto (for piano & 9 players); (iii) The Rio Grande; (i) Elegiac Blues; Elegy; Old Sir Faulk (arr. Rodney Bennett)

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 86595-2. (i) Bennett; (ii) E. Sinfonia (members), Dilkes; (iii) Ortiz, Temperley, L. Madrigal Singers, LSO, Previn – WALTON: Symphony 2 ***

Richard Rodney Bennett's solo recording of the Piano Concerto, with Dilkes and members of the English Sinfonia (plus the three piano pieces) makes the music sparkle with wit. The key item among the shorter works is the Elegiac Blues, which Bennett presents rather slowly and expressively; the Elegy, more ambitious in scale, is less sharply inspired, but Old Sir Faulk shines out as the finest of these three delightful genre pieces. The pairing with Previn's equally persuasive 1973 account of The Rio Grande could not be more apt, with its colourful and genial jazz references in a setting of Sacheverell Sitwell's exotic poem.

(i) Piano Concerto (1924); The Bird Actors Overture; Elegiac Blues; Prize Fight; Romeo and Juliet (ballet)

 Hyp. CDA 67545. (i) Plowright; E. N. Philh., Lloyd Jones

This is not the Piano concerto with 9 players listed above but the 1924 work, altogether more characteristically life-enhancing, which was reconstructed from the piano duet short score by Edward Shipley and Giles Easterbrook. Jonathan Plowright gave the work its first performance in 1988 and he plays it here with panache, the freshness of new discovery still permeating the music-making. Prize Fight is as rumbunctious as it sounds, while the Elegiac Blues was a moving threnody for Lambert's favourite black singer, Florence Mills (written for piano, and not orchestrated until 1928). This is a key item in the Lambert discography, splendidly played and recorded, and highly recommended.

(i) Piano Concerto (1924); Merchant Seamen (Suite); Pomona; Prize Fight

🔑 Ⓜ  ASV CD WHL 2122. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth, with (i) Owen Norris

The Piano Concerto is very characteristic, with something of the spirit of Milhaud, jazzy and entertaining. Lambert's score for the documentary, Merchant Seamen, dates from 1940 and he drew on this for a five-movement suite two years later. The most familiar of the pieces here is the ballet Pomona, which receives a most sympathetic performance at the hands of the excellent BBC Concert Orchestra and Barry Wordsworth. In fact, the playing throughout is very good indeed, and so is the ASV/BBC recording.

Horoscope (complete ballet)

 ASV CDDCA 1168. BBC Concert O, Wordsworth – WALTON: Wise Virgins ***

Like The Wise Virgins, Lambert's Horoscope, a colourful work on an astrological theme, dates from a vintage period of the Sadler's Wells ballet company at the beginning of the Second World War. Until now it has appeared on disc only as an orchestral suite, but on this ASV issue Barry Wordsworth has resurrected four extra items to make up the complete ballet. Though the newly restored movements are not as striking as those we already know, Wordsworth's warmly sympathetic readings make a strong case for the revival of the original ballets.

Horoscope: Suite

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55099. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones – BLISS: Checkmate; WALTON: Façade ****

The suite from Horoscope is sheer delight. David Lloyd-Jones is very sympathetic to its specifically English atmosphere. He wittily points the catchy rhythmic figure which comes both in the Dance for the Followers of Leo and, later, in the Bacchanale, while the third-movement Valse for the Gemini has a delectable insouciant charm. Excellent playing and first-class sound, perhaps a shade resonant for the ballet pit, but bringing plenty of bloom. A superb bargain.

(i; iii) Horoscope (ballet suite); (iii; iv) The Rio Grande. Arrangements: (ii; iii) CHABRIER: Ballabile; LISZT: Apparitions (ballet): Galop; (iii; v) MEYERBEER: Les Patineurs (ballet Suite) (with (vi) WALTON: Fcçade (original version): excerpts)

(BB) () ASV Living Era mono AJC 8558. (i) RLPO; (ii) Philh. O; (iii) cond. Lambert; (iv) Harty (piano), St Michael Singers; Hallé O; (v) Sadler's Wells O; (vi) Lambert or Dame Edith Sitwell (reciters), Ens., cond. Walton

A unique and treasurable memento of Constant Lambert as composer, conductor and reciter – heard alongside the equally remarkable Dame Edith Sitwell in the first recorded performance of extended excerpts from Façade. Every word of the daft poetry is crystal clear, and Walton himself conducts with élan, coordinating text and music with remarkable precision. That was in 1929, the same year that Lambert's masterpiece, The Rio Grande, was recorded with the original performers, Sir Hamilton Harty playing the solo piano part with the Hallé Orchestra, and the composer conducting. Lambert himself also conducts the sparkling account of Horoscope, and the jazzy syncopations are caught in both works with splendid lift and panache. Lambert's own arrangement of Meyerbeer's Les Patineurs follows (long a key item in the Decca ballet catalogue under Martinon), alongside Chabrier's Ballabile, while the Galop is a brief reminder of his equally colourful scoring of the Lisztian ballet, Apparitions. The transfers throughout are vividly clear, but with thin and scrawny violin-tone at higher dynamic levels, though the gentler music glows pleasingly. All the same, an indispensable disc for admirers of this key figure in English music-making in the first half of the 20th century. Full texts of The Rio Grande and Façade are included. What a bargain!

(i) King Pest: Rondo Burlesca; (ii) Music for Orchestra; (iii) Pomona (ballet); Romeo and Juliet (ballet)

🔑  Lyrita (DDD/ADD) SRCD 215. (i) RPO, Joly; (ii) LPO, Wordsworth; (iii) ECO, Del Mar

The sparky invention of the precocious Lambert is well represented here and makes this another key disc. In the two ballet scores (he wrote most of Romeo and Juliet before he was twenty) he showed how cleverly he could pick up tricks from those fashionable in Paris at the time, including Milhaud and others. Del Mar directs bright and persuasive performances, well recorded. The King Pest Rondo Burlesca is a danse macabre from a much longer work, Summer's Last Will and Testament. It is brilliantly scored and reaches a demonic climax. Music for Orchestra is an early work, written soon after Lambert was a student at the RCM, but again shows his skills of orchestral evocation. The performances here are excellent and the recording is spectacular in range, body and colour.

Pomona (ballet); Tiresias (ballet)

 Hyp. CDA 67049. E. N. Philh. O, Lloyd-Jones

Pomona, written for Diaghilev in 1927, finds Lambert deftly echoing the neoclassical Stravinsky and Les Six in his sequence of formal dances. Tiresias, completed not long before Lambert died, is more ambitious, the work of a composer steeped in the dramatic needs of ballet. The thematic material may not be so memorable as in Lambert's finest works, but with strong rhythmic invention and rich sounds – the piano often prominent – it is most attractive, only disappointing in the downbeat ending.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i; ii) Concerto for Piano & 9 Players; (i) Piano Sonata; (iii; i) 8 Poems of Li-Po; (iv; i) Mr Bear Squash-you-all-flat

 Hyp. CDA 66754. (i) Brown; (ii) Nash Ens., Friend; (iii) Langridge; (iv) Hawthorne

Constant Lambert's remarkable qualities are in excellent evidence here in the Nash Ensemble's anthology which brings the Eight Poems of Li-Po, in a lovely performance from Philip Langridge. Ian Brown proves an equally exemplary advocate in the Concerto and the Piano Sonata, which is not generously represented on disc. Mr Bear Squash-you-all-flat is Lambert's first composition, an entertainment written at roughly the same time as Walton's Façade, when Lambert was still in his teens, and based on a Russian fairy story. It is not certain whether Lambert meant the text to be spoken, but Sir Nigel Hawthorne speaks it excellently; he is balanced somewhat reticently (a fault on the right side).

Salomé (incidental music): Suite

 Hyp. CDA 67239. Nash Ens., Lloyd-Jones – WALTON: Façade ***

The three items drawn from Constant Lambert's incidental music for Oscar Wilde's Salomé make a pleasing extra for the excellent Hyperion version of Walton's Façade entertainment. Giles Easterbrook confected this suite of two atmospheric scene-setting fragments, followed by Salomé's dance and sudden demise, a long way after Strauss. With Richard Hosford on clarinet and John Wallace on trumpet, the performance is exemplary and very well recorded.

Piano Sonata; Elegiac Blues; Elegy; Suite in 3 Movements

 Somm SOMMCD 062. Bebbington – ARNOLD: Piano Sonata, etc. ***

Even though the outer movements are comparatively prolix, Lambert characteristically insinuates jazz-derived syncopations and harmonic influences into the impressive Sonata, and indeeed into all the music here; and very attractive it is, especially the engagingly inventive and unpredictable Suite in Three Movements. The Elegy muses memorably and poignantly; the nonchalant Elegiac Blues is purely jazz-derived and makes a winning encore. Mark Bebbington is in his element in all this music, and he is splendidly recorded.

LANCHBERY, John (1923–2003)

Tales of Beatrix Potter (ballet)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 3 93230-2. ROHCG O, Lanchbery

This is a companion score to John Lanchbery's arrangement of La Fille mal gardée. The composer-arranger used Victorian popular tunes (including some by Sullivan) of the period of the Beatrix Potter stories, and they are linked so skilfully that one would think the score had been composed as original music. The ballet itself has a visual appeal for children but can prove boring for adults. But not the music when it is played as spiritedly and affectionately as here. This was top-drawer analogue Abbey Road recording from the beginning of the 1970s.

LANDINI, Francesco (c. 1335–97)

Love Songs

 HM HMU 907269. Anonymous 4

Francesco Landini was a key figure of his period, made the more so by the number of his songs (ballate) which have survived. Rather more that 150 of his works have survived, 140 are unaccompanied ballate in two or three voices, virtually all dealing with love (mostly unrequited), desire and rejection, but a very few, like Echo la primavera, considering the beauty of a lover's surroundings. Anonymous 4 have chosen 18 of the finest and sing them beautifully. The result is hypnotic: they have a lyrical atmosphere all their own, and they are very pleasingly recorded in a warm acoustic. Full texts and translations are provided.

LANGLAIS, Jean (1907–91)

Chant de paix; Chant héroïque; Paraphrase grégorienne: Hymne d'Actions de grâces (Te Deum); Improvisation on Veni creator spiritus; (i) Messe solennelle

 Priory PRDC 597. Lee (organ); (i) with Gloucester Cathedral Ch., Briggs – VIERNE: Messe solennelle ***

These four organ pieces sum up the style of Langlais's organ music admirably. He likes to contrast big swathes of organ sound with gentler textures – dramatically demonstrated in the Improvisation on Veni creator spiritus with its spectacular fortissimos framing the central evocation using the quiet vox humana stop. Bold contrasts are even more striking in the Te Deum, with the gentle opening chords immediately interrupted by powerful fortissimos, and the piece is dominated by loud, gleaming fanfares.

The Messe solennelle is similarly dramatic, with the organ thundering out in the Kyrie, the choir's response ecstatic but acting as a rich emotional foil to the organ turbulence. It is remarkable that the Gloucester Cathedral organ should be so suitable for this repertoire, every bit as much as a French organ, but Mark Lee's playing is gutsy, revelling in the plangent registration, and the Cathedral Choir under David Briggs rises excitingly to the musical challenges. A superb disc.

5 Méditations sur l'Apocalypse; Suite Médiévale

(BB)  Naxos 8.553190. Mathieu (Cavaillé-Coll organ at Saint-Brieuse Cathedral)

With his Cinq Méditations Langlais finds a partial affinity with Messiaen, although his writing is infinitely more direct and his theological conclusion, unlike Messiaen's, totally nihilistic. It is an extraordinary vision and one seemingly founded in despair. The organ registrations here are extraordinarily bizarre, the picaresque grotesquerie wholly original; and it ends the work in a cruel, pessimistic nightmare. By its side, the Suite Médiévale is comparatively innocuous. So these two remarkable works balance each other in their opposing responses to Christian belief. Performances and recording are of the highest quality.

(Organ) Symphonies 1; 2 (Alla Webern); Poem of Happiness; Suite brève; Suite française: Nazard; Arabesque for flutes

🔑  Nim. NI 5408. Bowyer (Carthy organ, Concert Hall, Calgary, Canada)

The First Symphony was composed during the dark period of the German occupation of France. Its first movement is angrily aggressive and dissonant, although its structure is comparatively traditional. The composer suggested that the second movement, Eglogue, reflected 'consolation', yet it includes a brief scherzando section. The tension continues to haunt the arch-like, emotionally ambivalent Choral, but lifts in the finale, marked Vif et joyeux. Langlais described it as a 'celebration', obviously looking to a brighter future: the music thrillingly extrovert, brilliant in the manner of a Widor Toccata, only more astringent.

The two Suites were composed after the Liberation, with the four-movement Suite brève opening with a characteristically full-throated Grand jeux and closing with a jolly and very French Dialogue sur les mixtures. The Poem of Happiness (1967) is by contrast unexpectedly vigorous, scurrying unpredictably, unfettered – exuberant rather than contented.

The Second Symphony 'Alla Webern' (1977) is a serial work with the serial theme immediately spelled out in the pedals. But (bearing in mind the sobriquet) each movement is very brief (the whole work lasts little more than five minutes), while the listener's interest lies with the ear-tickling registration.

(i) Messe solennelle; (i; ii; iii) Missa salve regina; (Organ): (i) Paraphrases grégoriennes, Op. 5; Te Deum. Poèmes évangéliques, Op. 2; La Nativité; Triptyque grégorien: Rosa mystica

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66270. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Hill, (i) with O'Donnell; (ii) Lumsden; (iii) ECO Brass Ens.

Jean Langlais's organ music owes much to Dupré's example, and the two Masses are archaic in feeling, strongly influenced by plainchant and organum, yet with a plangent individuality that clearly places the music in the 20th century. The style is wholly accessible and the music enjoys fervent advocacy from these artists, who are accorded sound-quality of the high standard one expects from this label.

LANNER, Joseph (1801–43)

Galops: Amazonen; Jägers Lust; Malapou; Ländler: Neue Wiener. Polonaise: Bankett. Polka: Cerrito. Waltzes: Marien-Walzer; Steyrische Tänze; Die Weber

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555689. Vienna Tanzquartett – J. STRAUSS: Pariser-Polka; Wiener Blut Walzer, etc. **(*)

The arrangements, for string quartet, would have been heard all over Austria's coffee-houses and restaurants in the 19th century, and the Tanzquartett Wien easily evoke that period. This CD sensibly mixes some energetic polkas with the more leisurely waltzes and a single Ländler to make a good representative programme. The recording and performances are both good, if not quite in the superlative league.

LA RUE, Pierre de (c. 1460–1518)

Antiphons: Bene omnia fecit; Dedit mihi Dominus pennas; Dum medium silentium; O quam gloriosum est regnum; Sancta Maria succurre miseris; Tribus miraculis; Virgo gloriosa; Magnificats Tone I, II, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII; Salve Regina II, IV & V

(BB) * Naxos 8.557896/7. VivaVoce, Peter Schubert.

This is the first complete recording of Pierre de la Rue's seven surviving Magnificats as well as three of his settings of Salve Regina. Salve Regina IV quotes from chansons of Dufay and Binchois. All the Magnificats and two of the Salve Reginas alternate verses of chant with verses of polyphony, using the same melodic material. The music itself is glorious, and is gloriously sung and recorded. Dipped into, this pair of discs will give much musical satisfaction, for there are excellent notes by Julie Cumming, and full texts and translations.

Missa de Sancta Cruce; Motets: Considera Israel; Salve Regina III; Vexilla Regis

 ASV Gaudeamus CDGAU 307. Clerks' Group, Wickham (with Johann de QUADRIS: Lamentations)

Pierre de la Rue travelled little and was not exposed to outside influences as was his more famous contemporary, Josquin. In his Masses his polyphony is complex and swift moving, the harmonic implications relatively plain, although the Salve Regina and Vexilla Regis are richer in texture. Edward Wickham and his Clerks' Group negotiate the intricacies of the imitative writing with skill, especially the triple-time writing in the Gloria and Credo. The two-part Lamentations of Johannes de Quadris are further examples of the spare vocal writing of the mid-15th century, but this is a specialist collection rather than one for the general collector.

Requiem

🔑  ASV Gaudeamus CD GAU 352. Clerks' Group, Wickham – BRUMEL: Requiem ***

Requiem; Missa L'Homme armé

(BB)  HM Musique d'Abord HMA 1951296. Ens. Clément Janequin, Visse

Pierre de la Rue's Requiem is an ideal coupling for Brumel's masterpiece, for not only is it sombre, and is performed solemnly by the Clerks Group, but it employs remarkably low ranges for the bass voices. This makes the contrasting entry of the trebles in the Gradual Psalm Sidcut cervus the more celestial. However, the main influences come from the Requiem of Ockeghem, and La Rue's dark sonorities here are balanced by less predictable melodic writing which is both communicative and moving in its serenity. Performance and recording are outstanding, as usual from this group.

Dominique Visse's approach to the Requiem brings a lighter touch and considerably faster tempi throughout than the performance from the Clerks' Group. The result is still solemn but less grave, and undoubtely freshly enjoyable. But Edward Wickham's approach is even more convincing. Similarly, the Clément Janequin Ensemble's singing of the Mass based on the chanson, L'Homme armé, flows forward in a similar way. Again, excellent recording.

LASSUS, Orlandus (1532–94)

Il Canzoniere di Messer Francesco Petrarca: excerpts

🔑  HM HMC 901828. Huelgas Ens., Van Nevel

Francesco Petrarca's 14th-century collection of 366 poems called Il Canzoniere caught the imagination of Orlandus Lassus in Venice, and he set more than 60 of them. Ten of them are here. The music's richness is deeply felt in these moving performances, and the varied and refined accompaniments are part of the pleasure this collection brings. Most are in five parts, but S'una fede amorosa (celebrating constancy and passion in love) is in eight and is particularly rich in texture. However, a touching sadness is the pervading mood, even Là ver l'aurora ('Around dawn') about the coming of spring. But they are sung, played and recorded so beautifully that one's mood is elevated rather than cast down.

Le lagrime di San Pietro a 7

BB  Naxos 8.553311. Ars Nova, Holten

 HM HMC 901483. Kiehr, Koslowsky, Berridge, Türk, Lamy, Koay, Peacock, Ens. Voc. Européen, Herreweghe

Le lagrime di San Pietro (The Tears of St Peter) is a late work, a setting of 21 verses of the poet, Luigi Transillo (1510–68), Howard Mayer Brown calls it a work of 'almost Baroque religious fervour'. The Naxos performance by a first-class Danish choir is comparatively robust yet offers singing of great sensitivity and a wide dynamic range. The recording, made at the Copenhagen Grundtvigskirken, has a properly spacious ambience, yet is admirably clear.

The Lagrime di San Pietro is also performed by Herreweghe's forces with dedication and perfection in the matter of intonation. Excellent recording.

9 Lamentationes Jeremiae

BB  Regis RRC 1123. Pro Cantione Antiqua, Turner

 HM HMC 901299. Paris Chapelle Royale Ens., Herreweghe

The performances under Bruno Turner are expressive and vital. The recording too is spacious and warm. So for that matter is the Harmonia Mundi recording for the Chapelle Royale and Philippe Herreweghe, whose performances of the Lamentations are hardly less admirable. However the Regis reissue has a considerable price advantage.

Lamentationes Jeremiae Prophetae (Prima Diei) (for Thursday in Holy Week). Tract: Absolve Domine; Missa pro defunctis (Requiem); Motets: In monte Oliveti; Vide homo

🔑  Signum SIGCD 076. Coll. Regale, Cleobury

The pairing of the Lamentations attributed to Jeremiah, for Maundy Thursday of 1585, with the Missa pro defunctis (one of three) of 1578 has been chosen by Stephen Cleobury to 'represent Lassus's treatment of death': both the sacrifice of Christ and human mortality. Of the two linked motets, the text of In monte Oliveti is also associated with Maundy Thursday, but Vide homo (which closes the programme) brings a text which is the most profoundly moving of all, as Christ accuses mankind with the words, 'See, O man, what things I endure for you; To you I cry, I who am dying for you.' This beautiful setting was the composer's own swansong, for he died three weeks after he completed it, in May 1594. Performances and recording are, as to be expected with Cleobury, of the very finest quality.

Missa bell'amfitrit'altera

🔑 BB  Naxos 8.550836. Oxford Schola Cantorum, Summerly – PALESTRINA: Missa hodie Christus natus est, etc. ***

Missa bell'amfitrit'altera (including music by Hans Leo HASSLER & Christian ERBACH)

BB  Hyp. Helios CDH 55212. Westminster Cathedral Ch., His Majesty's Sackbutts & Cornetts, O'Donnell

This magnificent Mass of Palestrina's great Flemish contemporary, Lassus, makes a superb coupling for the outstanding performances of Palestrina masterpieces on the Naxos disc. This is the full Schola Cantorum of Oxford, not just the smaller Camerata group, and arguably it is too large for the dedicated, intimate polyphony of Lassus; but the singing is superb and the recording is warm and atmospheric. Yet another outstanding Naxos issue of early music.

The Westminster Cathedral version of the glorious Missa bell'amfitrit'altera imaginatively simulates a re-creation of how 'it might have been performed on the Feast Day of a Martyr-Bishop, around 1600', with added music by two other contemporary composers. The Mass propers are given a rich instrumental accompaniment and interspersed with organ Toccatas and other music, and the performance concludes with the spectacular Canzon, La Paglia, of Erbach and the exultant Domine Dominus noster of Hassler for the full ensemble. A most successful venture, on all counts.

Marian Vespers

🔑 (*) CPO 777 182-2. Weser-Renaissance, Bremen, Cordes

Manfred Cordes has assembled here a complete service of Marian Vespers as performed at the Munich court of Duke Albrecht V, where Lassus took the post of Music Director in 1563. The sequence, after the Introitus, includes five psalms for the feasts Beatae Mariae Virginis, performed with their antiphons, sung before and after the psalms. These Introits are also sung polyphonically. In the cathedral, instruments (usually trombones and cornets) were also used. The Responsory followed, then the Hymn (here O glorioso Domina), with the Magnificat octavi toni a 8 and its antiphons forming the climax. Finally came the Benediction. The singing of the Weser-Renaissance group is of high quality and during the Psalms, Hymnus and Magnificat the brass sonorities are richly impressive, although in the resonance of the Stiftskirche, where the recording was made, the brass sometimes all but overwhelms the voices. With this reservation, this is a four-star CD.

Missa Entre vous filles; Missa Susanne un jour; Motet: Infelix ego

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550842. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

With its radiant presentation of the opening Kyrie, the Missa Entre vous filles is Lassus at his freshest and most telling, and the Sanctus is particularly beautiful. The Missa Susanne un jour, however, is more ambitious, based on what Jeremy Summerly describes as 'the most famous song of the 16th century – the l'Homme armé of its day'. Moreover, as it deals with the Apocryphal Susanna who was accused of wanton behaviour by two elders after she had spurned their sexual advances, this was just the sort of parody model that had caused the Council of Trent to be upset, two decades ealier. The motet, Infelix ego, is a sombre yet very touching meditation on Psalm 51, the words of which seem appropriate under the circumstances: 'Unhappy I, of all help bereft, who, against heaven and earth have offended'. The 12 voices of the Oxford Camerata under Jeremy Summerly are beautifully blended here, and they sing with dedication and feeling throughout. Excellent recording. A bargain.

Missa osculetur me; Motets: Alma redemptoris mater; Ave regina coelorum; Hodie completi sunt; Osculetur me; Regina coeli; Salve regina; Timor et tremor

🔑  Gimell CDGIM 018. Tallis Scholars, Phillips

Lassus learned the technique of double-choir antiphonal music in Italy. The Mass is preceded by the motet, Osculetur me (Let him kiss me with the kisses of his lips), which provides much of its motivic substance and is glorious in its sonorities and expressive eloquence. The singing of the Tallis Scholars under Peter Phillips is as impressive as it was on their earlier records, and the recording is beautifully present.

(i) Missa pro defunctis (Requiem) for 4 voices; (ii) Aurora lucis rutilat (hymn for Lauds); Magnificat on Aurora lucis rutilat. Motets: Christus resurgens; Regina coeli laetare; Surgens Jesus

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1124. Pro Cantione Antiqua, Brown; (ii) Turner

The Pro Cantione Antiqua's selection of music for Easter Sunday includes a glorious Aurora lucis rutilat for two five-part choirs and the Magnificat based on the motet, plus Mark Brown's fine performance of the four-part Requiem. The performances are of high quality, as is the recording.

Magnificat quarti toni; Missa Surge Propera. Motets from The Song of Songs: Osculetur me; Quam pulchra es; Surge propera amica mea; Tota pulchra es; Veni dilecti mi; Veni in hortum meum; Vulnerasti cor meum

* ASV Gaudeamus CS GAU 310. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Andrew Carwood is very adept at arranging a programme combining a Mass with motets, and here he has imaginatively framed the Missa Surge Propera with seven motets from the 'Song of Songs', or Canticum Canticorum, with the eight-part Magnificat making a rich-voiced finale. The texts of the 'Song of Songs' revel in the sensuous and uninhibited physical love of man for woman. Of course, Lassus's music is not sensual, but he does vividly pick up the expessive feeling of the text – just sample Vulnerasti cor meum ('You have ravished my heart'). Fine singing, of course, recorded in the warm acoustic of the Chapel at Arundel Castle. Excellent documentation, too, and full texts and translations.

Missa: Tous les regretz; Motets, Hymns & antiphons: Aurora lucis rutilat; Ave verum corpus; Domine convertere; Salve regina; Surgens Jesus; Timor et tremor; Tristis est anima meo; Veni creator

 CRD CRD 3517. New College, Oxford, Ch., Higginbottom

The Mass Tous les regretz is based on a six-voice chanson by Nicholas Gombert, and in this performance the Mass movements are interspersed with some of Lassus's finest shorter pieces, including the Eastertide hymn and motet, Aurora lucis rutilat and Surgens Jesus, with its joyous 'Alleluias' stirringly sung here, while Timor et tremor and Tristis est anima meo show the despairing and apprehensive side of the composer's faith. However, after the lovely, serene Benedictus and Agnus Dei of the Mass, Higginbottom ends his programme with the Marian antiphon, Salve regina, and the Pentecostal hymn, Veni creator, with its glowing confidence in salvation. Whether liturgically correct or not, this musical sequence works well, and the performances could not be more dedicated or more beautifully sung. The recording, too, is first class.

7 Penitential Psalms

🔑 Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22056 (2). Henry's Eight, Jonathan Brown

The Seven Penitential Psalms (6, 32, 38, 51, 102, 130, 148, 150 (the last two are combined as the Laudate Psalms)) were recited after Lauds on Fridays in Lent. Lassus's simple but touchingly plaintive settings first appeared soon after his appointment at the Munich court, although they were probably composed a few years earlier. Henry's Eight, directed by Jonathan Brown, sing unaccompanied; their ensemble, tonal blend and intonation are immaculate and the music is admirably paced; moreover, the singing has a richness of line and tone which is deeply felt but never overstated. The recording, made in St Jude-on-the-Hill, Hampstead, London, is beautifully balanced and has admirable clarity within an ideal acoustic. Full texts and translations and excellent notes accompany this mid-priced reissue.

LAURIDSEN, Morton
(born 1943)

Choral Music (collection)

 Hänssler CD 98272. Chamber Ch. Of Europe, Matt, with composer (piano); Halubek (organ)

(*) Hyp. CDA 67580. Polyphony, Britten Sinfonia, Layton

Morton Lauridsen, though less well known in Britain, is in some ways the American equivalent of John Rutter, if perhaps without the same melodic individuality. Yet he writes music that ordinary music lovers want to hear. His choral music is much performed in the USA, and there is no doubt that Lux aeterna and O magnum mysterium (which are offered only by the Chamber Choir of Europe) are memorably communicative and rewarding. Polyphony, alternatively, offer the fine Ave dulcissima Maria, the Mid-Winter Songs and Nocturnes. Both groups include Les chansons des roses, which have a charm of their own. However, although both sets of performances are admirable, the edge goes to the Hänssler CD, for the composer is present as pianist, the singing is very fresh and Nicol Matt catches the music's atmosphere and comparative simplicity of utterance uncommonly well.

LAWES, Henry (1596–1662)

Songs

 Hyp. CDA 66315. Kirkby, Consort of Musicke, Rooley

The Lawes songs were enormously popular in their time. Today their direct, declamatory style seems comparatively unsubtle alongside Purcell. The melancholy is tangible, but not overtly expressive. The brief but effective Tavola is like an arietta from an Italian opera. The Hyperion collection is fairly wide in its range: the title-number (Sitting by the streams) is a verse anthem. There are plenty of secular songs too, notably the engaging Angler's song, and admirers of Emma Kirkby – here in radiant voice – and Anthony Rooley's immaculately stylish Consort of Musicke will find much to enjoy.

LAWES, William (1602–45)

Consort Setts a 5 1–5; Consort Setts a 6 1–5

 Alia Vox AV 9823 (2). Hespèrion XXI, Savall

Consort Setts a 5 1–5; Consort Setts a 6 1–5; 2 Airs for Lyra Viol; Airs for 3 Lyra Viols; 5 Dances for Lyra Viol

Ⓑ (*) Virgin 2x1 5 62001-2 (2). Fretwork, Nicholson (organ)

The Consort Setts reveal a distinct musical personality, not as strong as Purcell's, but with an individual lyrical gift, a propensity for moments of dissonance and the skill of a craftsman. Like Dowland, Lawes also had a penchant for melancholy. Scored for viols with an underlying organ continuo, they are through-composed – each of the movements draws on the same thematic material, and Lawes weaves his part-writing to achieve the fullest possible sonorities. The Fantazies are searching, usually melancholy or sombre in feeling, while the Airs provide lighter contrast. Jordi Savall and Hespèrion XXI give well-paced, expressive performances, often intense, and the balance of the viols with the organ avoids making the texture opaque. However, unlike Fretwork, they offer no bonus items, which makes the Allia Vox issue less competitive, even though the Hespèrion performances would be a first choice for the complete set.

The Fretwork viols are closely balanced, which reduces the dynamic range of the playing, while the organ integrates so well with the vibrato-less string texture that there seems a lack of contrast in colour, if not in feeling. The pieces for lyra bring a livelier 'country dance' feel, but when one turns to the Concordia collection below, the effect is undoubtedly fresher.

Consort Setts a 6 in B flat; in F; in D; Lyra Viol Trios in D; in D min.; Catches; Come my Lads, Hark Jolly Lads; Whither go Ye?; The Wise Men were but Seven

🔑  Metronome METCD 1045. Concordia, Levy

Mark Levy and Concordia also give stylish and appealing performances of these three well-chosen Consort Setts in six parts. The playing is alert and sensitive, and the recording is very successful with a pleasing freshness of string texture attractively underpinned by the organ. The pacing here is exceptionally well judged to reveal the full character of all these works. It is good to have the Lyra Viol Trios: the D major, with its central movement entitled Humor and with a closing Saraband, is a striking little work. The catches, which act as interludes, are paired, in each case alternating slow and fast examples. The curious title of the collection, Knock'd on the Head, refers to the composer's death at the siege of Chester; but as the 'knock' came from a bullet, it hardly seems an appropriate description.

Fantasia Suites for 2 Violins, Bass Viol & Organ 1–8

 Chan. 0552. Purcell Qt

Lawes studied with Coperario, and Lawes's own Fantasia Suites are based on those of his mentor but are simpler, usually more extrovert works than the Consort Suites. They are in three movements, in each case a Fantazy followed by two Aires, in essence dance movements, Alman and Galliard, later Corant or Saraband. The organ does not just play a continuo role but is important in its own right. The music itself is lively in invention and by no means predictable, with surprise moments of passing dissonance, and the composer's individuality comes out in his special brand of lyricism. The performances here have plenty of life, and the recording balance is very successful: the result is enjoyably fresh.

Royal Consorts 1–10

 Chan. 0584/5. Purcell Consort

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 146/7. Greate Consort, Huggett

The 10 Royal Consorts, even though they are in four rather than five or six parts like the Setts, in many ways represent Lawes's most ambitious undertaking. Each suite is in six or seven movements, the first of which is the most extended, sometimes taking as long as the remaining charming Aires and increasingly lively Almans, Corants and Sarabands, all put together. Indeed, these opening expressive Fantazies or Pavanes offer the kernel of the arguments and contain the most adventurous music, combining nobility of feeling with ear-catching contrapuntal lines.

The playing of the Purcell Consort is notably sprightly, the recording fresh and vividly clear, but within an open acoustic of some depth. The brightness and transparency of the sound, without loss of sonority, means that the individual instruments are cleanly delineated, although blending well together, never better demonstrated than in the splendidly managed Echo movement that ends the first work of the series.

Monica Huggett and her Greate Consort are very slightly recessed; their sound is warmer and the expressive music is given a fuller texture by the resonance. Some will feel that, presented in this way, this music is afforded more atmosphere. They also play at a slightly lower pitch, which means that the effect is inevitably mellower when compared directly with the brighter Chandos sound, although on ASV detail is by no means unclear. Both sets of performances are very rewarding, and if we are inclined, marginally, to favour the bright projection and added transparency of Chandos, many collectors will surely respond differently.

Consort Setts a 5: in A; C (2); F & G; Consort Pieces a 4: 2 Aires in C; 2 Aires in C min.; Aire (Fantazy) in C; Fantazy in C min. (VdGS 108/113)

🔑 * Channel Classics CCS 15698. Phantasm

The playing of Phantasm explores a wide dynamic range and is beautifully blended in its delicacy and warmth, in no way edgy or acerbic. The group is most naturally recorded and this disc is as fine an introduction to Lawes's consort music as any in the catalogue.

Songs

(*) Hyp. CDA 67589. Blaze, Outram, MacDonald; Kenny and/or Carter (lute or theorbo) – HENRY LAWES: Songs **(*)

This collection of songs by Henry and William Lawes opens with William's charming Gather ye rosebuds while ye may, which Robin Blaze sings as a duet with Rebecca Outram (soprano). Robert MacDonald (bass) contributes When shall I see my captive heart? and four more come from Robin Blaze, with Elizabeth Kenny (lute or theorbo). Oh, let me still and silent be and When man for sin thy judgment feels are among the most deeply expressive in the collection, which suggests that William was the finer song composer of the two. The programme is given variety by items for solo lute and lute duets with William Carter. But one wishes the other vocal soloists had contributed more to the recital. The documentation is excellent.

LECLAIR, Jean-Marie (1697–1764)

Complete Flute Chamber Music: Sonatas, Op. 1/2 & 6; Op. 2/1, 3, 5, 7 & 11; (i) Trio Sonata, Op. 2/8; Flute Sonata, Op. 9/7; (ii) Second Récréation de musique for 2 Flutes & Continuo, Op. 8

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557440/1. Fenwick Smith, Gibbons, Blustein; with (i) Jeppesen (viola da gamba); (ii) Krueger

Violin Sonatas, Op. 5/1, 3, 4, 7 & 8

Ⓝ  ECM 476 6280. Holloway, Jaap ter Linden, Mortensen

The music of Jean-Marie Leclair hops in and out of the catalogue at regular intervals. His music tends to be underrated, yet its merits are considerable; although his lyricism is not strongly individual, it often has considerable charm and never more so than in the so-called Récréation de musique for two flutes, a seven-movement suite with a celebrated and diverting Chaconne for its penultimate movement and a Tambourin to finish. The Flute Sonatas each have four movements, with usually half of them dances: Correntes, Gavottas, Sarabandas. Their style, however, is distinctly French in its elegance and finish. The sonatas are fresh, well constructed and often highly expressive, even if the ideas are not in themselves always especially memorable.

Leclair wrote well for the flute, but in the main he dedicated himself to the violin, for which he wrote 40 sonatas against only the present collection for the flute. John Holloway has chosen five Violin Sonatas, all taken from Opus 5 which he and his colleagues consider among the finest in Leclair's output. 4 brings yet another Chaconne of considerable merit. Certainly the performances from Holloway, Jaap ter Linden and Lars Mortensen are very well played and impressively dedicated, so you can make a choice between flute and violin for approximately the same cost.

LECOCQ, Alexandre (1832–1918)

Mam'zelle Angot (ballet, arr. Gordon Jacob)

 Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9048 (2). Nat. PO, Bonynge – HEROLD: La Fille mal gardée ***

Mam'zelle Angot is a jolly, vivacious score with plenty of engaging tunes, prettily orchestrated in the modern French style. Richard Bonynge offers the first recording of the complete score, and its 39 minutes are consistently entertaining, especially with orchestral playing of such polish and wit. The Kingsway Hall recording is warm and vivid, bringing sharp detail and tangibility, especially at lower dynamic levels. A winner in every way, with an outstanding coupling to match.

LEHÁR, Franz (1870–1948)

Chinese Ballet Suite; Fata morgana; Korallenlippen; Ein Märchen aus 1001 Nacht; Marsch und Palótas; Peter and Paul in Cockaigne: Ballet Music; Preludium religioso; Resignation; Suite de danse; Zigeunerfest (ballet scene)

 CPO 999 761-2. German (Berlin) RSO, Jurowski

A delightful concoction of unfamiliar Lehár, most of it stemming from his stage works. It is all highly tuneful and vivacious in the Viennese manner, with splashes of local colour – such as the delightful Chinese Ballet Suite and the very Hungarian-sounding Fata morgana – with lively orchestrations adding spice. Lehár's inventive ideas always engage the ear, helped by enthusiastic performances and a warm recording.

Gold and Silver Waltz, Op. 79

🔑 * BBC (ADD) BBCL 4038. Hallé O, Barbirolli – HAYDN: Symphony 83 in G min. (La Poule); JOHANN STRAUSS JR: Emperor Waltz, etc.; R. STRAUSS: Der Rosenkavalier Suite ****

Lehár's finest waltz acts as an unforgettable encore for Barbirolli's 1969 Promenade Concert. He encourages the Prommers to hum along gently, yet not overwhelm the famous tune, and they even manage a pianopianissimo at the reprise. The result is magical.

Overtures: Clo-clo; Der Göttergatte; Die lustige Witwe; Waltzes: Adria; Altwiener; Grützner; Valse Boston (Wilde Rosen)

(*) CPO 999 891-2. Berlin RSO, Jurowski

These are large-scale performances of generally little-known Lehár, with the exception of the Merry Widow Overture (here in the composer's 1940 version). The less well-known concert waltzes are enjoyable. It is hard to understand why the Grützner Waltz, with its beautiful opening building up to a fine waltz, very much in the Strauss tradition, was never published. The Valse Boston dispenses with the Strauss-like introduction and replaces it with a short maestoso to call the dancers to the floor. The overtures to Clo-Clo and Der Göttergatte are lively works and full of delightful ideas. It is all very enjoyable, and the orchestra play to the manner born. The only reservation is the recording, which, although it allows details to emerge well, is just a bit too reverberant.

(i) The Count of Luxembourg: highlights; (ii) The Land of Smiles: highlights; (iii) The Merry Widow: highlights

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 575 9962 (2). (i–iii) Bronhill; (i) Jason, Fyson, McCarthy Singers, Studio 2 Concert O; (ii) Craig, Fretwell, Grant, Sadler's Wells Op. O; (i; ii) cond. Tausky; (iii) Round, McAlpine, Lowe, Sadler's Wells Op. Ch. & O, Reid

The Sadler's Wells pioneering recording of The Merry Widow in English with the excellent June Bronhill both stylish and charming in the lead is strongly characterized; only in Howard Glynne's Baron Zeta is there a suspicion of Gilbert and Sullivan. Thomas Round is an appropriately raffish Danilo, although it is a pity that the recording tends to accentuate the unevenness in his voice. William McAlpine as Camille de Rosillon comes over much better, and his Red as the Rose is exquisitely sung. The chorus is outstandingly good and these excerpts are most entertaining: the March Septet is a riot (if a well-drilled riot), and William Reid conducts with sensitivity, obvious affection and a real feeling for the music's idiom, and the recording is vividly atmospheric.

In The Land of Smiles June Bronhill takes the supporting role of Mi (the heroine's sister), and though Elizabeth Fretwell is less rich-timbred she sings sweetly enough. Charles Craig, as ever, is outstanding as Sou-Chong, with his rich, fine tenor voice sounding out gloriously in 'You are my heart's delight' (with different words). The recording has a good balance between brilliance on the one hand and warmth and resonance on the other.

The Count of Luxembourg is generally less distinguished, and although Tausky conducts just as understandingly as he does in The Land of Smiles, and Neville Jason makes an engaging Count, the singing overall is less impressive than before and the effect is often unflattering to the voices. Nevertheless, this inexpensive two-CD reissue makes a good sampler of a Sadler's Wells vintage period.

The Czarevitch (in English)

 Telarc CD 80395. Gustafson, Hadley, Itami, Atkinson, Carl, ECO, Bonynge

Though it lacks the really memorable melodies which make the finest Lehár operettas so winning, The Czarevitch is a delightful piece which, with Richard Bonynge as a most understanding conductor, is full of charm and sparkle, with Russian colour from balalaikas nicely touched in. Anyone wanting this in English translation will not be disappointed, with the second couple of principals readily matching up to Jerry Hadley and Nancy Gustafson.

(i) Friederike; (ii) Giuditta; (iii) Der Graf von Luxemburg; (iv) Das Land des Lächelns; (v) Die lustige Witwe; (vi) Paganini; (vii) Der Zarewitsch (all complete; in German)

ⒷⒷ (*) EMI (ADD/DDD) 585997-2 (13). (i) Kalenberg, Datz, Stadler, Fuchs, Donath, Dallapozza, Bav. R. Ch., Munich RSO, Wallberg; (ii) E. Moser, Hirte, Gedda, Baumann, Munich Conzert Ch. & R. O, Boskovsky; (iii) Gedda, Böhme, Litz, Brokmeier, Popp, Holm, Bav. State Op. Ch., Graunke SO, Mattes; (iv) Rothenberger, Gedda, Holm, Friedauer, Moeller, Bav. RSO Ch., Graunke SO, Mattes; (v) Lott, Hampson, Szmytka, Aler, Azesberger, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Welser-Möst; (vi) Rothenberger, Lenz, Gedda, Sachtleben, Dieberitz, Zednik, Bav. State Op. Ch., Bav. SO, Boskovsky; (vii) Gedda, Söhnker, Reimer, Streich, Friedauer, Relchart, Bav. State Op. Ch., Graunke SO, Mattes

This is a bumper bargain box for Lehár aficionados and, with the exception of The Merry Widow, all the performances here are recommendable. Unfortunately, for Lehár's most popular work, EMI opted to use the 1993 Welser-Möst recording, which is far from ideal for, though he has a fair idea of the idiom, his slowish speeds often diminish the sparkle, as in the March Septet in Act II. Thomas Hampson makes a handsome, swaggering Danilo, but he is not vocally at his sweetest, and the other three principals all sing with more uneven production than usual, so that their duets lose much of their appeal. Felicity Lott has both charm and dignity as the widow herself, but her voice is given an unpleasant edge at times.

There is plenty to enjoy in the lively and well-recorded (1980) version of Friederike, a delightful performance, with Helen Donath charming in the name-part, and Dallapozza, a light, heady tenor, perhaps a bit stressed by the weight in his title-role but rising to the great Tauber number O Mädchen, mein Mädchen!

Das Land des Lächelns dates from 1967, and after the rather thin-sounding overture the recording has plenty of theatrical presence. The cast is strong: Gedda is in excellent form and, besides Anneliese Rothenberger, Renate Holm makes a charming contribution as Mi. The most famous numbers, such as You are my heart's delight, are splendidly done.

In Giuditta Gedda hardly shows his years in the Tauber role, with half-tones honeyed as ever, but Edda Moser is disappointing in the name-part, rarely sounding seductive as Schwarzkopf and Gueden did in this role. Boskovsky conducts with his usual sympathy and the sound is decent.

Willy Mattes presents a bright and breezy version of Der Graf von Luxemburg, recorded in 1969. Gedda and Holm (who has many delightful numbers to sing) are once again on form, and most of the rest of the cast carry the lively spirit of the performance. Recorded around the same time, Mattes's account of Der Zarewitsch is hardly less impressive. Gedda is once again in the lead and, with such delightful artists as Rita Streich (whose singing is as charming and stylish as ever), it is impossible not to enjoy this.

Choosing the romanticized demon violinist Paganini as a subject for an operetta gave Lehár a chance to exploit a plot full of court intrigue, with the celebrated court violinist in love with the crown princess. All that is missing is a score overflowing with memorable musical ideas, though the piece is hardly tuneless. In this red-blooded performance from 1977 Boskovsky makes an excellent case for the work, especially as the singing is generally first rate, as is the recording.

The one snag for non-German speakers throughout these performances is the large amount of dialogue. Translations are not included, but there is a track-by-track outline included with the synopses, as well as the background for each opera as a guide. However, this is an inexpensive way to acquire all the composer's key works.

The Land of Smiles (in English)

🔑  Telarc CD 80419. Gustafson, Hadley, Itami, Atkinson, ECO, Bonynge

Richard Bonynge proves as warmly understanding of the Lehár idiom as he is in Bellini, while Jerry Hadley winningly takes the Tauber role of Prince Sou-Chong. He also provides a new translation, with the hit-number, You are my heart's delight, becoming My heart belongs to you, with diction commendably clear. Nancy Gustafson makes a bright heroine, and Lynton Atkinson sings with winning lightness in the second tenor role. Recommended.

The Land of Smiles (Das Land des Lächelns); The Merry Widow (Die lustige Witwe) (both complete in German)

🔑 Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 85822-2 (2). Schwarzkopf, Kunz, Gedda, Loose, Philh. Ch. & O, Ackermann

As Hanna Glawari in The Merry Widow (which she was to record again in stereo) Schwarzkopf has both sparkle and youthful vivacity, and the Viljalied – ecstatically drawn out – is unique. Some may be troubled that Kunz as Danilo sounds older than the Baron (Anton Niessner), but it is still a superbly characterful cast.

The Land of Smiles has a comparably glamorous roster, and if here Gedda does not have quite the passionate flair of Tauber in his famous Dein ist mein ganzes Herz, his thoughtful artistry matches a performance which effortlessly brings out the serious parallels without weighing the work down. Schwarzkopf and Kunz again sing delectably, and the CD transfers are lively and full of presence. Dialogue is included, but separately cued.

(i) The Land of Smiles (Das Land des Lächelns) (complete in German). Excerpts from: (ii) Eva; (iii) Frasquita; (iv) Friederike; (v) Der Fürst der Berge; (vi) Giuditta; (vii) Das Land des Lächelns; Paganini; (viii; ix) Schön ist die Welt; (viii) Der Zarewitsch

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.111016/17. (i) Schwarzkopf, Kunz, Gedda, Loose, Kraus, Philh. Ch. & O, Ackermann; (ii) Lehmann; (iii) Tauber; (iv) Aramesco; (v) Eisinger; (vi) Rosvaenge; (vii) Schwarzkopf, Glawitsch; (viii) Rethy; (ix) Wittrich

Ackermann's mono recording of The Land of Smiles is available above on EMI, coupled with The Merry Widow. Naxos offer it separately, together with a generous collection of Léhar arias sung by a galaxy of great operetta singers from the past. Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer is every bit as good as EMI's, and (praise be!) the dialogue is all separately cued. Schwarzkopf not only sings delightfully in the main work but also contributes in 1939 (alongside the stirring Rupert Glawitsch) to excerpts from Paganini and (in 1940) Das Land des Lächelns, where the voice sounds young and sweet, almost soubrettish. Other highlights are provided by heady tenor contributions from Leonardo Aramesco and Marcel Wittrich, almost trumped by Helge Rosvaenge in Giuditta and the delightful soprano Irene Eisinger in Der Fürst der Berge. Ward Marston's faithful transfers show just how good were the original masters.

The Merry Widow (complete; DVD version; in English)

🔑  Opus Arte DVD OA 0836 D. Kenny, Skovhus, Kirchschlager, Turay, San Francisco Op. Ch. & O, Kunzel (V/D: Gary Halvorson)

It would be hard to imagine a more extravagant production of The Merry Widow than Lotfi Mansouri's for the San Francisco Opera, recorded live on this DVD in December 2001. Michael Yeargan's sets faithfully echo the 1890s designs at Maxim's in Paris, Thierry Bosquet's costumes are comparably lavish, and the text is unusually full. The dialogue – with Christopher Hassall's translation expanded by Ted and Deena Puffer – is wittier and truer to the Parisian atmosphere than the original German. Yvonne Kenny as the heroine not only sings beautifully but is both vivacious and provocative. Bo Skovhus makes a handsome Danilo, determined not to be putty in her hands, and their final reconciliation to the Merry Widow Waltz could not be more moving. Angelika Kirchschlager makes a charming Valencienne, opposite the Camille of Gregory Turay, with Carlo Hartmann as Baron Mirko, Valencienne's husband, strong and characterful, relishing the humour.

The Merry Widow (Die lustige Witwe; complete; in German; CD versions)

🔑  DG 439 911-2. Studer, Skovhus, Bonney, Trost, Terfel, Monteverdi Ch., VPO, Gardiner

(BB) () Regis mono RRC 1163. Schwarzkopf, Gedda, Kunz, Loose, Philh. Ch. & O, Ackermann

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 5 20974-2 (2). Lott, Hampson, Szmytka, Aler, Bogarde (nar.), Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Welser-Möst (with Collection of JOHANN STRAUSS: Waltzes **)

John Eliot Gardiner has the bonus of the Vienna Philharmonic very much on home ground, playing not only with a natural feeling for the idiom but with unrivalled finesse and polish. As Hanna Glawari Cheryl Studer gives her most endearing performance yet and the gentle half-tone on which she opens the soaring melody of the Viljalied is ravishing. Consistently she sings with sweet, firm tone and the Danish baritone, Boje Skovhus, as Danilo makes an animated, raffish hero. The second couple, Valencienne and Camille, are delectably taken by Barbara Bonney and Rainer Trost, clear and youthful-sounding, outshining all rivals. The rest make an outstanding team, with Bryn Terfel, ripely resonant, turning Baron Mirko into more than a buffo character, while the choristers of Gardiner's Monteverdi Choir, obviously enjoying their Viennese outing, bring to Lehár the point and precision they have long devoted to the baroque repertory.

Those collectors wanting just Schwarzkopf's celebrated earlier mono recording of the Merry Widow will find the Regis transfer smooth and pleasing, with the voices truthfully caught. There is no translation but a good synopsis, and the dialogue is separately banded. A genuine bargain.

The live Welser-Möst set, recorded in the Royal Festival Hall in July 1993, proves a disappointment. Dirk Bogarde's narration, which punctuates separate numbers, is delivered with an unenticing, arch knowingness and, while Thomas Hampson is a swaggering Danilo and Felicity Lott has both charm and dignity as the Widow herself, overall the singing lacks appeal, not helped by Welser-Möst's slowish speeds, which diminish the sparkle, as in the March septet. The rather edgy recording is another minus point, and the collection of five Johann Strauss waltzes and two overtures which acts as a filler is not any real compensation.

LEIGH, Walter (1905–42)

(i) Agincourt Overture; (ii; iii) Concertino for Harpsichord & Strings; (ii) The Frogs; Overture & Dance; (i) Jolly Roger Overture; (ii) A Midsummer Night's Dream: Suite for Small Orchestra; Music for String Orchestra

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 289. (i) New Philh. O; (ii) LPO; Braithwaite; (iii) with Pinnock

Walter Leigh was a craftsman composer of the finest kind, one who aimed to make his music useful, hence his frequent essays in incidental music. His personal style remained very English, with frequent but gentle neoclassical overtones. His masterpiece remains the Harpsichord Concertino, which has been recorded three times before this Lyrita version, but never so persuasively as by Kathleen Long in the days of 78s (see below), using a piano. Pinnock's sensitive performance is among the finest using the harpsichord, though the balance places the solo instrument rather close. Otherwise the recording is excellent, as are all the performances. A most worthwhile disc.

Concertino for Harpsichord & String Orchestra

🔑 Ⓜ * BBC BBCM 5025-2. Malcolm, ASMF, Marriner – FINZI: Clarinet Concerto; Introit * (with Concert: English Music ****)

Walter Leigh's Concertino for Harpsichord and String Orchestra, with its heavenly slow movement has surely never been played more winningly than it is here by George Malcolm. The balance with Marriner and his Academy is perfectly judged, so that the appearance of so lively a performance (from 1972), expertly engineered by the late James Burnett, is most welcome. This is a highlight of a desirable bargain collection of English music, by Butterworth, Finzi, Vaughan Williams and Warlock.

Concertino for Piano & String Orchestra

(BB) () Dutton CDBP 9714. K. Long (piano), Boyd Neel String O, Boyd Neel – FAURÉ: Ballade in F sharp; MOZART: Piano Concertos 15 & 24 ()

Though this charming Concertino was primarily designed for harpsichord, the piano is given as an option, chosen here for the première recording in 1946. In subtlety and feeling Kathleen Long's reading has never been surpassed. It makes a fine tribute to a superb pianist long under-appreciated. The transfer is excellent.

Music for Strings; Air (for treble recorder & piano); 3 Movements for String Quartet; Recorder Sonatina; Reverie (for violin & piano); Romance (for 2 violins, viola, cello & piano); Trio for Flute, Oboe & Piano; Viola Sonatina

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7143. Lochrian Ens., Student String Qt

Because of his early death, Walter Leigh did not realize the full potential of the splendid String Quartet of 1929, with its sinewy, Hindemithian influences. Earlier (in 1922) he wrote the easily communicative Reverie, while the Romance is even more appealingly languorous. But by 1930 Leigh was writing his Three Movements in an expressively direct style. The Music for String Orchestra is in the same popular vein and of warm appeal. If the Viola Sonatina of 1932 returns to more astringent, Hindemithian lyricism, the Flute, Oboe and Piano Trio is unashamedly genial, while the delectably tranquil recorder Air and 1939 Recorder Sonatina finally established the pastoral English neoclassicism that is the true hallmark of Leigh's style. A most attractive and varied collection, very well played and recorded.

LEIGHTON, Kenneth (1929–88)

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Symphony 3 (Laudes musicae), Op. 80

🔑 Ⓜ  Chan. 10307X. (i) Wallfisch; (ii) Mackie; RSNO, Thomson

Though not as powerful or deeply moving as the superb Finzi Cello Concerto, this Leighton work is tautly argued and thoughtful. Raphael Wallfisch plays it as if his life depended on it. The Symphony draws the same complete dedication from its performers. The recording is very immediate and has splendid clarity and definition.

(i) Concerto for Organ, Strings & Timpani, Op. 58. Concerto for Strings, Op. 39; Symphony for Strings, Op. 3

Ⓝ  Chan. 10461. BBC Nat. O of Wales, Hickox, (i) with John Scott

Kenneth Leighton's Symphony for Strings is a work of astonishing maturity. Written when he was nineteen, its opening has a gravity and depth reminiscent of Rubbra, though even at this stage Leighton was very much his own man. After some years spent in Deal and Oxford, he was appointed professor of music in Edinburgh, where he passed the remainder of his life. His music is expressive and lyrical: 'All my days are spent trying to find a good tune', he once said; and this shines through both in the Op. 3, which Finzi first championed, its successor of 1961, and the later Organ Concerto of 1970. Here is a composer of real substance played with great dedication and conviction by the BBC National Orchestra of Wales under the late lamented Richard Hickox. The recording is in the best traditions of the house.

Veris gratia (for cello, oboe & strings), Op. 9

 Chan. 8471. Wallfisch, Caird, RLPO, Handley – FINZI: Cello Concerto ***

Finzi is the dedicatee of Kenneth Leighton's Veris gratia, and so it makes an appropriate coupling for his Cello Concerto, more particularly as its English pastoral style nods in his direction. The performance is highly sympathetic, George Caird the excellent oboist, and the naturally balanced recording is first class.

(i; iii) Elegy for Cello & Piano, Op. 5; (ii; iii) Metamorphoses for Violin & Piano, Op. 48; (ii; iii) Partita for Cello & Piano, Op. 35; (i–iii) Piano Trio, Op. 46

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7118. (i) Fuller; (ii) McAslan; (iii) Dussek

The Piano Trio (1965) is a work of real substance, which grows with repeated hearing. The Partita for Cello and Piano (1959) is another searching, thoughtful piece with an impassioned opening Elegy and an inventive Scherzo. All three works are deeply felt and serious, concentrated in utterance, and all deserve to be more widely known. These are committed and powerful performances from all three artists, who are completely inside this fine music, and the cellist, Andrew Fuller, provides the excellent and informative notes. This is a first-rate recording, and the recorded sound is in the top flight.

Piano Quartet in 1 Movement (Contrasts & Variants), Op. 63; Piano Quintet, Op. 34; Piano Trio, Op. 46

 Mer. CDE 84465. Markham, Edinburgh Qt

We have already had a fine recording of the Piano Trio of 1965, and the Piano Quartet and Quintet confirm what a strongly individual contribution Kenneth Leighton has made to mid-20th-century English chamber music. Both establish his concentrated polyphonic style and the structural unity of his conceptions, the early Piano Quintet of 1959 growing out of a four-note theme at the opening, which returns in the finale as a splendidly developed Passacaglia. The elegiac Adagio contrasts with a vibrant Scherzo to match that in the Piano Trio. The single-movement Piano Quartet of 1972 is a concentrated kaleidoscope of mood and tempo contrasts, yet ends in calm serenity, confirming the underlying lyricism of all Leighton's music. The performances are first class.

PIANO MUSIC

(i) Sonata for Piano, 4 Hands, Op. 92; (Solo Piano) 4 Romantic Pieces, Op. 95

 BMS CD 408R. Composer, (i) with Kingsley

Kenneth Leighton was a formidable pianist and wrote for the instrument with consummate mastery. Both performances were recorded at the Wigmore Hall and are expertly engineered by Mike Skeet. This is approachable music, yet challenging and thoughtful, and these performances obviously enjoy a special authority.

Conflicts, Op. 51; Fantasia contrappuntistica, Op. 24; Household Pets, Op. 86; Sonatina 1; 5 Studies, Op. 22

(*) Abacus ABA 402-2. Parkin

The Household Pets is a sensitive piece, refined in craftsmanship, and the Fantasia contrappuntistica is comparably powerful. Eric Parkin plays it with total sympathy, and the recording is eminently serviceable.

VOCAL MUSIC

3 Carols, Op. 23 (The Star Song; Lully, lulla, thou tiny child; An ode to the birth of our Saviour); The Christ Child lay on Mary's lap; Hymn of the Nativity; Of a rose is all my song

 Regent REGCD 243. Christ's College, Cambridge, Ch., Rowland – BRITTEN: Ceremony of Carols ***

A delightful collection of carols showing that Kenneth Leighton can attractively evoke the nativity scene in lyrical music of the finest English tradition. The setting of Lully, lulla, thou tiny child is particularly memorable. The performances are freshly spontaneous and the warm acoustic of the chapel adds to the atmosphere. A fine coupling for Britten's famous Ceremony of Carols.

Crucifixus pro nobis; An Easter Sequence; Evensong Services: Magnificat & Nunc Dimittis; Magnificat & Nunc Dimittis (Collegium Magdalenae Oxoniense); Give Me the Wings of Faith; Rockingham: Chorale Prelude on 'When I Survey the Wondrous Cross'; Veni, creator spiritus; What Love of this is thine?

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555795. Durrant, Oxley, Steele-Perkins, Whitton, St John's College, Cambridge, Ch., Robinson

Leighton was steeped in the Anglican tradition in his youth as a cathedral chorister, and he contributed to its repertory throughout his life. There are two settings here of the Evening Canticles, framing the sequence, one for Magdalen College, Oxford (1959), and the Second Service (1971) composed in memory of the organist Brian Runnett, who died tragically in his mid-30s. They are among the most powerful since those of Herbert Howells, vividly and thoughtfully illustrating each verse, the Second Service ending with a hushed Gloria. The Easter Sequence, with trumpet obbligato, here played superbly by Crispian Steele-Perkins, is wonderfully written for trebles, and the cantata, Crucifixus pro nobis, using 17th-century texts by Patrick Carey and Phineas Fletcher, is a movingly spare and compressed setting of the Passion story. Robinson obtains very good singing from St John's College Choir and the acoustic of St John's College Chapel is splendidly captured in this fine Naxos recording.

(i; ii) Morning Canticles; O God, enfold me in the sun; Sequence for All Saints; The World's Desire; (ii) Chorale prelude on Rockingham for organ

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA67641. (i) Wells Cathedral Ch. & School Chapel Ch., Matthew Owens, (ii) David Bednall

Kenneth Leighton's upbringing as a chorister in Wakefield Cathedral inspired him in much of his subsequent career; he composed an enormous amount for the church though he was never in fact a traditional believer. But this music has a serenity and lyricism that are unfailingly satisfying – as indeed is the singing of the Wells Cathedral Choir. The problems of recording in Wells Cathedral are solved with mastery.

Sinfonia mistica (Symphony 2); Te Deum laudamus

Ⓝ ✿ * Chan. 10495. Fox, BBC Nat. Ch. of Wales & Nat. O of Wales, Hickox

This is a hauntingly compelling recording of some of Kenneth Leighton's most inspired music. Written in the mid-1970s as a response to the death of his mother, the Sinfonia mistica is, in the composer's words, 'a requiem or a meditation on the subject of death which usually becomes so more real to us in the second half of life'; yet the music is inspiring rather than depressing. It is music of a profoundly spiritual nature, and its six movements provide music of much imagination as well as musical logic. The texts are taken from the great metaphysical poets such as John Donne and George Herbert, and they are beautifully sung by Sarah Fox. The orchestral version of his magnificent Te Deum laudamus makes a fine bonus to an outstanding CD. The orchestra and chorus were inspired to great heights in this recording, and the sound itself is of demonstration quality.

LEONCAVALLO, Ruggiero (1858–1919)

Pagliacci (complete; DVD versions)

* DG DVD 073 4389. Vickers, Kabaivanska, Glossop, Panerai, Lorenzi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan (Director: Herbert von Karajan, V/D: Ernst Wild) – MASCAGNI: Cavalleria rusticana **(*)

🔑 * Ph. DVD 070 428-9. Domingo, Stratas, Pons, Rinaldi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Prêtre (Dir: Franco Zeffirelli) – MASCAGNI: Cavalleria rusticana ****

(*) DG DVD 073 4295. Alagna, Vassileva, Mastromarino, Marrucci, Ch. & O of the Verona Arena, Sutej (Dir: Alagna, V/D: Paula Langobardo)

(*) Opus Arte DVD OA0983D. Galouzine, Bayo, Guelfi, Gandia, Ch. & O of Teatro Real, Madrid, López-Cobos (Director: Giancarlo del Monaco, V/D: Angel Luis-Ramírez) – MASCAGNI: Cavalleria rusticana **(*)

In his 1968 Pagliacci Karajan not only gave an inspired account of the opera, so imaginatively staged by Paul Hager, but also directed the performance himself. Of course he had a superb Canio in Jon Vickers, and the glamorous Bulgarian soprano Raina Kabaivanska sang and acted the part of Nedda splendidly. Peter Glossop not only introduces himself tellingly in the Prologue, singing directly to the camera, but then gives a clumsily oafish portrayal of the deformed Tonio, with sinister flashes of his determination on revenge. Rolando Panerai is a convincing Silvio and Sergio Lorenzi excellent as Peppe. But is it Jon Vickers' powerfully brooding portrayal of Canio which dominates the performance, visually as well as vocally, and his Vesti la giubba is truly memorable. With traditional sets and costumes, the production itself is spectacular, and the action never sags, undoubtedly a tribute to Karajan himself.

Each half of this Philips double bill is announced as 'A Film by Franco Zeffirelli', but where Cavalleria rusticana was recorded on location in Sicily, Pagliacci uses open sets as realistic as possible. Here, too, the singers mime to an audio recording, with Zeffirelli's camerawork generally helping to disguise any discrepancies between sound and vision. Juan Pons sings the Prologue – very powerfully – before a genuine audience including children, and that set reappears in the staging of Act II. The preliminary drama of Act I involves a more informal set, equally naturalistic, with the company of actors using an ancient van in this updating to the 1930s. Nedda's communing with the birds is introduced by offstage tweeting, as she plays with her children. Teresa Stratas sings brilliantly if with some edge at the top, and Alberto Rinaldi makes a very convincing Silvio. Yet it is Plácido Domingo who dominates, singing superbly in this 1981 recording.

Recorded live in 2006 in the open-air Arena di Verona, the alternative DG version offers a colourfully traditional production, well cast but with lamentably little background information given with the disc, not even a list of tracks. Roberto Alagna is very much the star of the show, in ringing voice, stressed only in his final No pagliaccio non son. He is well matched by the rich-toned Alberto Mastromarino as Tonio, well contrasted with the handsome Silvio of Enrico Marrucci. Svetla Vassileva as Nedda is more variable. Her basically beautiful voice grows shrill under pressure, disappointingly so when she communes with the birds. The production is strong and straightforward, and equally the conducting of Viekoslav Sutej underlines the melodramatic strength of the piece, recorded in surprisingly good sound.

In the Opus Arte coupling with Cavalleria rusticana, the opening Prologue, reliably sung by Carlo Guelfi, begins as the earlier opera ends. The travelling theatrical players arrive in a lorry, and the performance is truly verismo, with the tragic story unfolding very dramatically indeed. Maria Bayo as Nedda rather steals the show; she is dominated by Canio, who is boldly sung and strongly acted by Vladimir Galouzine, even if his voice is without the most flexible upper range. But with the whole cast on top form, including the chorus, and with gripping overall direction from Jesus López-Cobos, this is a very successful entertainment.

Pagliacci (complete; CD versions)

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 74321 50168-2. Caballé, Domingo, Milnes, John Alldis Ch., LSO, Santi

() EMI mono 5 56287-2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Gobbi, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Serafin – MASCAGNI: Cavalleria rusticana ()

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 7 63650-2 (2). Scotto, Carreras, Nurmela, Amb. Op. Ch., Philh. O, Muti – MASCAGNI: Cavalleria rusticana **(*)

For those who do not want the obvious coupling, the Caballé/Domingo RCA set is a first-rate recommendation, with fine singing from all three principals, vivid playing and recording, and one or two extra passages not normally included – as in the Nedda–Silvio duet. Milnes is superb in the Prologue.

It is thrilling to hear Pagliacci starting with the Prologue sung so vividly by Tito Gobbi. Di Stefano, too, is at his finest, but the performance inevitably centres on Callas and there are many points at which she finds extra intensity, extra meaning. Serafin's direction is strong and direct. The mono recording is greatly improved in the new transfer, with voices well forward, but this set is overpriced.

Regis provide an excellent and inexpensive transfer of the Serafin set, where the diva is all but upstaged by Gobbi. Di Stefano too is at his finest. A bargain. (RRC 1235)

Under Muti's urgent direction both Cav. and Pag. represent the music of violence. In both he has sought to use the original text, which in Pag. is often surprisingly different, with many top notes eliminated and Tonio instead of Canio delivering (singing, not speaking) the final La commedia è finita. Muti's approach represents the antithesis of smoothness. Scotto's Nedda goes raw above the stave, but the edge is in keeping with Muti's approach, with its generally brisk speeds. Carreras seems happier here than in Cav., but it is the conductor and the fresh look he brings that will prompt a choice here. The sound is extremely vivid.

I Pagliacci (in English; complete)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3003. Opie, Mannion, O'Neill, Bronder, Dazeley, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., Peter Kay Children's Ch., LPO, Parry

David Parry conducts a powerful performance in the Peter Moores Foundation's 'Opera in English' series, building the drama persuasively. The cast is one of the finest in the series yet, with Rosa Mannion a touching Nedda, and Alan Opie and William Dazeley both outstanding and well contrasted in the baritone roles. Dennis O'Neill sings very well too as Canio, but he faces greater problems with translating the tragic clown into an English-speaking hero. No longer On with the motley but Put on your costume. Warm, atmospheric sound, with voices beautifully focused.

LEONIN (c. 1163–90)

Organa: Alleluya, Epulemur Azamis; Gaude Maria; Propter veritatem; Viderunt omnes

 Lyrichord LEMS 8002. Oberlin, Bressler, Perry – PEROTINUS: Organa ***

Over eight centuries have passed since the construction of the Cathedral of Notre Dame began and Leonin, the cathedral's composer, was writing this music. It is in two parts, with the top voice moving in unison or octaves, or over a sustained or only occasionally moving second part. Sometimes both voices sing in unison. The present performances are extraordinarily convincing and take us back in time to the very beginning of written music. Excellent recording.

Organa: Alleluya, Dies sanctificatus; Alleluya, dulce lignum; Alleluya, inter natos mulierum; Alleluya, Paraclitus Spiritus Sanctus; Alleluya, Pascha nostrum; Alleluya, Spiritus Sanctus procedens; Priusquam te formarem; Viderunt omnes

 Hyp. CDA 66944. Red Byrd, Capella Amsterdam

This is a more extensive selection of Leonin's organa than the Lyrichord disc above. The recordings include compositions for the main feasts from the first part of the liturgical year. Much of the music brings elaborate, rhapsodic melodic lines which are quite haunting in these atmospheric and confidently sung performances, admirably recorded. Full texts, translations and good documentation, as we expect from Hyperion.

Viderunt omnes

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.557340. Tonus Peregrinus (with Clausulae Motet on Non nobis Domine) – PEROTIN: Beata viscera; Viderunt omnes ***

We are always fascinated by the richness of Leonin's two-part organa duplum, in which the plainchant melody is slow and the second part provides a more elaborate solo line (organum purum), or with the two parts moving together sonorously in an identical rhythm. Here, both male and female voices are used to vary the colour, and there is nothing dull whatsoever about the result; indeed, the bare consecutive intervals are magnetic. Also included is an earlier, simpler parallel organum, taken from the ninth-century treatise, 'Scolica euchiriadis', setting the Psalm, Non nobis Domine, which is equally magnetic, ending evocatively with the tolling cathedral bell. The singing of Tonus Peregrinus directed by Antony Pitts is resonantly convincing, as is the acoustic of the Abbaye de Chancelade. The superb documentation includes full texts and photographs of the original manuscripts. Coupled with the more complex organa of Perotin, this disc is an amazing bargain.

LIADOV, Anatol (1855–1914)

Baba-Yaga, Op. 56; Ballade, Op. 21b; The Enchanted Lake, Op. 62; From the Apocalypse, Op. 66; Intermezzo, Op. 8; Kikimora, Op. 63; Mazurka, Op. 19; Nénie, Op. 67; Polonaises, Opp. 49 & 55

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.555242. Slovak PO, Gunzenhauser

Baba-Yaga; Chants Populairs Russes; Kikimora

Australian Decca Eloquence 480 038 (2). SRO, Ansermet – GLAZUNOV: The Seasons; Concert Waltzes 1 & 2 (*); GLINKA: Ruslan and Ludmilla, etc. ; SCHUMANN: Carnaval **(*)

Baba-Yaga, Op. 56; The Enchanted Lake, Op. 62; From the Apocalypse, Op. 66; Kikimora, Op. 63; Mazurka: Village Scene by the Inn, Op. 19; Polonaise, Op. 49; 8 Russian Folksongs, Op. 58; Scherzo in D, Op. 16

🔑  Chan. 9911. BBC PO, Sinaisky

The Enchanted Lake and Kikimora are wonderfully atmospheric, and the performances by Vassily Sinaisky and the BBC Philharmonic are pure magic. Although they are the best known, a piece like From the Apocalypse is hardly less inspired. The performances are matched by recording of equal richness and luminosity.

These Liadov items gave both Decca and Ansermet a good opportunity to show off their prowess. Indeed, one is swept into the evil world of Baba-Yaga from the word go and Kikimora is no less intense. The eight items of Liadov's Chants Populairs Russes are very pleasing, with the Russian colours producing some wonderful sonorities. The 1960s recordings are superbly transferred.

It is good that Gunzenhauser's comprehensive Liadov collection has been transferred from full-price Marco Polo to bargain-price Naxos. They are well played and recorded versions of this colourful and imaginative music, and certainly worth the very modest cost. The new full-price Chandos version under Sinaisky, with slightly different programming, offers more sophisticated playing and outstandingly atmospheric recording and is obviously preferable, though the Naxos has the brighter focus.

PIANO MUSIC

Barcarolle in F sharp min.; Marionettes; Little Waltz in G; Musical Snuffbox; 3 Pieces, Op. 11; 2 Pieces, Op. 24; 3 Pieces, Op. 57; 4 Pieces, Op. 64; 3 Preludes; Variations on a Polish Folk Theme, Op. 51; Variations on a Theme by Glinka, Op. 35

(N) (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55309. Coombs

Framed by two more ambitious sets of variations (of equal attraction) these miniatures have much of the charm, elegance and melodic facility of Liadov's better-known orchestral vignettes based on Russian folk tunes. The composer's piano music represented the largest part of his output and, as Stephen Coombs points out in his note with this disc, though often small in scale each jewelled piece is immaculately finished. Coombs plays all of them with affectionate style and soon captures the listener's response to music of skilled melodic and gently moving craftsmanship. The recording is excellent.

LIGETI, György (1923–2006)

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Piano Concerto; (iii) Violin Concerto

🔑  DG 439 808-2. (i) Queyras; (ii) Aimard; (iii) Gawriloff; Ens. InterContemporain, Boulez

This concertante triptych won the Gramophone magazine's Contemporary Music Award in 1996. The composer's imaginative inventiveness is never in doubt, but his musical purpose is not always easy to fathom. All the performers believe that this music has an underlying profundity; all three performances are musically and technically impressive and communicate strongly.

6 Bagatelles for Wind Quintet

 Nim. NI 5728. V. Quintet – HINDEMITH: Kleine Kammermusik; NIELSEN: Wind Quintet ***

 Crystal CD 750. Westwood Wind Quintet – CARLSSON: Nightwings; MATHIAS: Quintet; BARBER: Summer Music ***

Ligeti's folk-inspired Bagatelles are highly inventive and very attractive; and on Crystal they are played with dazzling flair and unanimity of ensemble by this American group.

The Vienna Quintet give as persuasive an account of the lighthearted 1953 Bagatelles as any we have had in the past. They are subtle, witty and effervescent and a delight from first to last – and they are beautifully recorded in the Wiener Konzerthaus. Choice here will depend on couplings.

Horn Trio

 Chan. 9964. Danish Horn Trio – BRAHMS: Horn Trio ***

Ligeti entitled his Trio 'Homage to Brahms', and he follows Brahms's four-movement layout, though with a Passacaglia-Lament placed as the finale, rather than an eruption of exuberance. It would seem an obvious coupling, yet the composer said of his work that 'the only thing reminiscent of Brahms is perhaps a certain smilingly conservative comportment – with distinctly ironic distance' (whatever that implies). It is an individual and challenging work, played with extraordinary commitment and expertise, but one wonders whether many Brahms lovers will take to it!

String Quartet 2

(M)  Wigmore Hall Live WHLive 003. Arditti Qt – DUTILLEUX: Ainsi la nuit; NANCARROW: Quartet 3 ***

Ligeti's String Quartet 2 opens Allegro nervosa with a dramatic single pizzicato pluck; then, after whistly harmonics, the figuration is spontaneously impulsive and fragmentary, but not in any way melodic. The whole of the following Sostenuto, molto calmo is a variation of the fabric of the first movement, and the Presto furioso opens with repeated pizzicatos (remembering Bartók's First Quartet). The composer likens this movement to the Poème symphonique for hundred metronomes! Then follows a Presto furioso, brutale, tumultuoso, which speaks for itself. The fifth and final movement, Allegro con delicatezza, begins like the buzzing of flies, but then creates a remarkable atmosphere of mysticism, 'like a memory seen through mist', the composer tells us, 'the whole of the previous progress of the work is recapitulated but in a gentler form', even with wisps of what is almost, but not quite, a melodic fragment. This live Wigmore Hall performance builds up great tension so that even if you cannot follow the argument the finale is electrifying, and there is a distinct silence after the work's close, before the audience responds with applause.

Le Grand Macabre (complete opera)

 Sony S2K 62312 (2). Ehlert, Clark, White, Nes, Ragin, Cole, Suart, L. Sinf. Voices, Philh. O, Salonen

It is the revised version of Le Grand Macabre that is recorded here under supervision from the composer, using an English text. Set in Breughelland, this apocalyptic vision lightens its macabre theme – of the ending of the world – with humour, viciously satirical and anarchic, setting out from a witty prelude for tuned motor-horns, with tongue-in-cheek echoes of a baroque toccata. Salonen is a brilliant advocate, drawing colourful playing from the Philharmonia. Sibylle Ehlert is dazzling in the coloratura role of Gepopo, Graham Clark a characterful Piet the Pot, and Willard White aptly baleful as the grand macabre himself, the sinister Nekrotzar. This may be an offbeat piece, but as audiences have found, it has a sparkle which has one simultaneously laughing and thinking. Atmospheric sound, recorded live at the Théâtre du Chatelet.

LILBURN, Douglas (1915–2001)

Aotearoa Overture; Birthday Offering; Drysdale Overture; Festival Overture; Forest (Tone Poem); Processional Fanfare; Song of Islands

BB  Naxos 8.557697. New Zealand SO, Judd

James Judd and the New Zealand Symphony Orchestra followed up their CD of Lilburn's three symphonies (see below) with this collection of shorter works. Aotearoa is the Maori name for New Zealand and the engaging overture is worthy of its name. Forest is an early tone-poem with a brooding northern atmosphere, while the Drysdale Overture is pictorial in a more pastoral way. A Song of Islands is similarly rewarding, but perhaps the most inventive work is A Birthday Offering, written in 1956 as a tenth birthday tribute to the New Zealand orchestra, a kind of concerto for orchestra, none too predictable. The Processional Fanfare, for three trumpets and organ, is an exuberant arrangement of Gaudeamus igitur, played with real flair; but then throughout the disc the New Zealand Symphony Orchestra are on their best form, which is considerable, while the Naxos recording is first rate.

Symphonies 1–3

🔑 BB  Naxos 8.555862. New Zealand SO, Judd

Douglas Lilburn is a true symphonist: his structures are not inflated, and the orchestral colouring is an integral part of the musical argument. Inspired by the spacious landscapes and mountain ranges of his homeland, the first two are heavily influenced by Sibelius; indeed the slow movement of 1 (1949) includes a direct quotation. Vaughan Williams (under whom the composer studied in England) makes his presence felt in the slow movement of 2 and perhaps also in the folksy flavour of the Scherzos. In the Third Symphony (1961) Lilburn finds an even more individual voice. Although there are aspects of serialism here, one would hardly guess, so spontaneously appealing is the writing. Indeed, all three symphonies are splendid works, immediately drawing the listener in to their special world, and they could not have a more committed advocate. Judd's performances are vigorously alive, gripping, and splendidly played, and the Naxos recording is vividly detailed, with plenty of warmth and atmosphere.

LINDE, Bo (1933–70)

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto

🔑 ❀ BB * Naxos 8.557855. (i) Kliegel; (ii) Gomyo; Gävle SO, Sundkvist

Make no mistake this violin concerto, first performed in 1958, is a work of quite striking beauty and full of a gentle melancholy. Linde's craftsmanship is thoroughly assured, the invention warm and lyrical, and the writing for the orchestra highly imaginative and luminous. Its final touching coda is altogether magical. The young Tokyo-born, Canadian violinst Karen Gomyo is the elegant and expressive soloist and the orchestral playing is first class. The somewhat later Cello Concerto is a somewhat darker but no less intense piece, with a powerful Lento finale. This music has real nobility and a natural eloquence, and it inspires a totally committed performance from Maria Kliegel and the orchestra, from whom Petter Sundkvist draws an excellent response. The recording is of demonstration standard, lifelike and with a truthful perspective between soloist and orchestra.

A Merry Overture; Musica Concertante; Suite Variée; Suite Boulogne

 Swedish Society SACD 1132. Gävle SO, Sundkvist

This music may not be in quite the same bracket as the Violin Concerto, but it is well worth investigating all the same. A Merry Overture is an early work, written when Linde was twenty-one, and it was much performed in Sweden in the 1950s. The Musica Concertante of 1963 is a lively piece which dates from the period of the Cello Concerto. Petter Sundkvist gets good results from his players and the recording is every bit as good as it is in the concertos.

LINLEY, Thomas, Jr (1756–78)

The Song of Moses (oratorio); Let God arise (anthem)

Ⓝ (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55302. Gooding, Daneman, King, Dale Forbes, Holst Singers, Parley of Instruments, Holman

Thomas Linley, born in Bath, came from a musical family. He was an exact contemporary of Mozart, who, after Linley's early death, declared he was 'a true genius'. Both the early anthem (written for the 1773 Three Choirs Festival at Worcester) and his splendid oratorio (which triumphs over its undistinguished libretto, using the same material as Handel's Israel in Egypt) show his skill in vocal and orchestral writing and fresh melodic gifts, drawing on the styles of both Handel and J. C. Bach. Both oratorio and anthem are framed with spectacular choruses, fully scored with trumpets, and the closing Wonderful art thou from the latter is a magnificent double fugue. But it is the solo writing, and especially the airs and duets for one or two sopranos, that stands out, and it is delivered with lyrical purity, virtuosity and aplomb by both the fine soloists here, Julia Gooding and Sophie Daneman. With superb performances of both works under Peter Holman, this is a disc not to be missed – you will be surprised at the exuberant and individual lyrical qualities of the music.

LISZT, Franz (1811–86)

(i–ii) Piano Concertos 1–2; Fantasia on themes from Beethoven's 'The Ruins of Athens'; Grande fantaisie symphonique on themes from Berlioz's 'Lélio'; Hungarian fantasia for Piano & Orchestra; Malédiction; Totentanz; (i) Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne; Die Ideale; Festklänge; 2 Episodes from Lenau's 'Faust'; Héroïde funèbre; Hamlet; Hungaria; Hunnenschlacht; Mazeppa; Mephisto Waltz 2; Orpheus; Les Préludes; Prometheus; Tasso; Von der Wiege bis zum Grabe; (i; iii) Dante Symphony; (i; iv) A Faust Symphony; (i) Concert Paraphrases: SCHUBERT: Wanderer-Fantasie; WEBER: Polonaise brillante

🔑 (BB)  EMI (ADD) 5 85573-2 (7). (i) Leipzig GO, Masur, with (ii) Béroff; (iii) Leipzig Thomaner-chor; (iv) Leipzig R. Ch. male voices

Béroff has justly won acclaim for his superb technique and his refined poetic sense, and these recordings show him to be a Lisztian of flair. His accounts of the much-recorded concertos can hold their own with most of the competition: these are exhilarating performances and are given the extra attraction of fine orchestral playing and vivid (late 1970s) recording. The same comments apply to the other piano concertante works: they are all superbly done, with ample brilliance, yet are musical and stylish, with a sense of fun in the virtuosic fireworks. As for the tone-poems, Masur makes the strongest possible case for them. He proves as persuasive an advocate as any on record. The rich sonority on the lower strings, the dark, perfectly blended woodwind tone and the fine internal balance of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra hold the listener's attention throughout – for in the weaker pieces Liszt benefits from all the help his interpreters can give him. Only in Orpheus does Masur let us down: he breezes through it at record speed and misses the endearing gentleness that Beecham brought to it in the early 1960s. In the two Symphonies, Masur is again impressive, though even in the Gretchen movement of the Faust Symphony he moves things on, albeit not unacceptably, and there is no want of delicacy or ardour. The Faust Symphony can certainly hold its own, and the same may be said of the Dante Symphony. The recordings are well balanced and refined throughout, emerging more freshly than ever on CD. A very considerable achievement.

Piano Concertos 1–2; Concerto 3 (ed. Jay Rosenblatt); Concerto pathétique; De profundis; Fantasia on a Theme from Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens'; Fantasy on Hungarian Folk Tunes; Grande fantaisie symphonique on themes from Berlioz's 'Lélio'; Méditation; Polonaise brillante; Totentanz; Wandererfantaisie

Ⓜ  Chan. 10371X (3). Lortie, Hague Residentie O, Pehlivanian

Louis Lortie's accounts of the two known concertos with the Hague Residentie Orchestra under George Pehlivanian are very impressive and can hold their own with all but the very best. But these are better recorded than any of their rivals and bring poetic insights as well as virtuosity. There is less competition in the Hungarian Fantasia and Totentanz, and these Chandos versions rank with the best from the past. The so-called Third Concerto, first given in 1990, and the Concerto pathétique are reconstructions and are of interest to Lisztians rather than the wider musical public. Liszt's transcription of Schubert's Wanderer Fantasia for piano and orchestra is another matter, and Lortie's performance is second to none. The transcriptions of the Weber Polonaise brillante, the Fantasia on a Theme from Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens', and the Grande fantaisie symphonique on Berlioz's 'Lélio' are all equally desirable, and once again the fine playing of the Residentie Orchestra under Pehlivanian contributes to making this an exhilarating collection, with consistently excellent Chandos recording.

Piano Concertos 1–2

🔑 Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) 464 710-2. S. Richter, LSO, Kondrashin – BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonatas 10; 19–20 ***

Ⓜ () DG mono 474 024-2 (5). Kempff, LSO, Fistoulari – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concertos 1–5; BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 1; MOZART: Piano Concertos 9 & 15; SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto ()

Piano Concertos 1–2; Hungarian Fantasia

() BBC mono BBCL 4031-2. S. Richter, LSO, Kondrashin (with CHOPIN: Andante spianato & grande polonaise, Op. 22 ())

(i) Piano Concertos 1; 2; (ii) Malédiction; (iii) Dante Sonata (orch. Lambert)

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9742. (i) Sauer, Paris Conservatoire O, Weingartner; (ii) Osborn, Boyd Neel SO, Boyd Neel; (iii) Kentner, Sadler's Wells O, Lambert

Piano Concertos 1–2; Totentanz

🔑 ❁ * DG 423 571-2. Zimerman, Boston SO, Ozawa

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 2564 62044-2. Berezovsky, Philh. O, Wolff

* BIS SACD 1530. Cohen, São Paulo SO, Neschling

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; Sonata in B min.

Ⓜ (*) Sony SK 94746. Ax; (i) Philh. O, Salonen

Krystian Zimerman's record of the two Concertos and the Totentanz is altogether thrilling, and he has the advantage of excellent support from the Boston Orchestra under Ozawa. It has poise and classicism and, as one listens, one feels this music could not be played in any other way – surely the mark of a great performance! This record is outstanding in every way, and still remains a first choice for this repertoire.

Boris Berezovsky's extrovert yet highly musical accounts of the two Concertos and the rumbustious Totentanz make a superb alternative super-bargain issue. Berezovsky plays throughout with enormous panache and bravura, yet with melting poetic feeling. Hugh Wolff proves a splendid partner, and the Philharmonia Orchestra play with great gusto. The full-blooded, resonantly spacious recording was made at Aldeburgh in 1994.

Yet another fine triptych comes from Arnoldo Cohen with the São Paulo Symphony Orchestra and John Neschling, and they have the advantage of spectacular BIS surround sound. Superb solo contributions (especially in the thrilling bravura of the Totentanz), splendid orchestral support, and a real feeling for Liszt. Perhaps this is not an ultimate first choice but it ranks with the finest.

Emanuel Ax and Esa-Pekka Salonen also create a memorable partnership for a splendid modern coupling of the two Liszt Piano Concertos, with a spectacularly vivid recording to match performances which have all the bravura qualities one might have expected from the composer himself. Yet the lyrical interludes are played most sensitively. Ax's account of the Sonata is equally arresting, but it is a highly personal reading, impetuous and wilful. Even so, this is a remarkable disc that cannot fail to hold the listener from the first note to the last, and the sound, though forward, is in the demonstration bracket.

Sviatoslav Richter's playing is unforgettable and so is his rapport with Kondrashin and the LSO, whose playing throughout is of the very highest order. The sound is vivid and present but the acoustic is rather dry for full comfort. However, given playing of this calibre, one soon adjusts. The reissue is now available as one of Philips's '50 Great Recordings', curiously recoupled with three of Beethoven's least ambitious early piano sonatas, beautifully played and recorded.

Kempff recorded the two Liszt Concertos for Decca in 1954 in totally distinctive performances, remarkable for the diamond clarity of textures and rhythmic sparkle. The inflation so easily suggested in these works is completely avoided, so the results are uniquely fresh, helped by clean Decca sound engineered by Kenneth Wilkinson. Mono recordings too long unavailable.

This Dutton reissue is of special documentary interest. Emil Sauer and Felix Weingartner were the last surviving members of Liszt's circle so they knew his musical intentions well. Their recording affords a rare opportunity to relish the artistry of Sauer, then 76 but still a commanding, authoritative virtuoso. Franz Osborn gave us the very first recording of the Malédiction, which comes from 1945, his only appearance as a concerto soloist on records. The sound is very natural indeed for the period and the playing magisterial. So, too, is Louis Kentner'sDante Sonata* in the arrangement that Constant Lambert made of Après une lecture de Dante. Again, the 1940 recording wears its years lightly in this fine Dutton transfer. A valuable set that all Lisztians will want.

The BBC Legends CD is a memento of Richter's first major concert in London in the Royal Albert Hall in 1961. Broadly the interpretations reveal little difference between live and studio, with the important exception that the rush of adrenalin at the end of each finale brings speeds a fraction more urgent, with virtuosity even more daring. But the disc is a must for the Hungarian Fantasia. This is electrifying playing with the music presented with power rather than wit. Moreover, the BBC CD captures a real sense of occasion. The Chopin, recorded at a concert two days earlier, provides a delightful bonus.

Piano Concerto 1 in E flat

 DG 477 640-2. Yundi Li, Philh. O, A. Davis – CHOPIN: Piano Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 449 719-2. Argerich, LSO, Abbado – CHOPIN: Piano Concerto 1 ***

Ⓝ  Naïve V5053. de la Salle, Gulbenkian Foundation O, Lisbon, Foster – PROKOFIEV: Concerto 1; SHOSTAKOVICH: Concerto 1 ***

Yundi Li's Liszt concerto is pretty stunning. He won the Chopin Warsaw Competition in 2000 when he was still in his teens. Thus he is in the Pollini, Argerich, Zimerman lineage and lives up to it in this, his début concerto disc. His playing is fresh and natural, and his virtuosity is lightly worn. Sir Andrew Davis and the Philharmonia Orchestra give excellent support and the sound is first rate.

Martha Argerich (in 1968) recorded only Liszt's First Concerto and not the Second. However, there is an excellent partnership between the pianist and Abbado, and this is a performance of flair and high voltage which does not ever become vulgar. It is very well recorded, and in this reissue, coupled with Chopin, it sounds better than ever.

Lise de la Salle, accompanied with typical flair by Lawrence Foster, makes a charismatic début with this triptych of brilliant performances. Her Liszt glitters and thrills with bravura, yet she finds the full expressive range of the Adagio, and she is certainly a match for her more familiar competitors. The couplings are equally remarkable and this is a disc to look out for.

Piano Concerto 2 in A

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 91369-2. Andsnes, Bergen PO, Kitayenko – GRIEG: Piano Concerto; Lyric Pieces, Op. 65 ***

Leif Ove Andsnes is a real musician who plays with great tenderness and poetic feeling, as well as bravura. Marvellous sound too, and an excellent balance.

(i) Dante Symphony; (ii) Années de pèlerinage, Book 2: Après un lecture du Dante (Fantasia Quasi Sonata)

Ⓜ  Warner Maestro 256469368-9. (i) Women's Voices of Berlin R. Ch., BPO, Barenboim; (ii) Barenboim (piano)

(i) Dante Symphony; (ii; iii) A Faust Symphony, G.108; (ii; iv) Les Préludes; Prometheus

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca (ADD) 466 751-2 (2). (i) Voltaire College Ch., SRO, López-Cobos; (ii) Solti; (iii) Jerusalem, Chicago Ch. & SO; (iv) LPO

Barenboim really has the measure of this overextended but remarkable work and controls its rhapsodic structure admirably, holding the tension throughout the first movement and creating enormous visceral excitement at the close. He is helped by marvellous playing from the BPO, who really sound as if they believe in it all, and the radiant choral effects are superbly brought off. The resonant acoustic of Berlin's Schaulspielhaus lets everything expand with Wagnerian amplitude and the result is very impressive indeed. As an encore, Barenboim leaves the rostrum for the piano and offers the Dante Sonata, which has the same literary basis but offers a quite different musical treatment. The performance is flamboyantly arresting, but the piano recording is curiously shallow.

López-Cobos's account of the Dante Symphony comes with Liszt's alternative conclusion, a sudden loud outburst of 'Hallelujahs' from the trebles after the usual pianopianissimo ending. It is most effective, crowning a performance which is more remarkable for its refinement of sound and balance than for its dramatic thrust. Solti's Liszt is almost always successful. His performance of the Faust Symphony is spacious, yet brilliant, with superb playing from his Chicago Orchestra, though the bright recording underlines the fierce element in his reading and removes some of the warmth. The Mephistophelean finale brings the most impressive playing of all, with Solti's fierceness chiming naturally with the movement's demonic quality. The two tone-poems, recorded in the 1970s, are brilliantly played and recorded. Even with the reservations expressed, this is excellent value.

(i) Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Tunes; Malédiction; Totentanz; (ii) Arr. of Schubert: Wanderer Fantasia (all for piano and orchestra); Années de pèlerinage (complete); Ballade 2; Concert paraphrases: Bellini: Réminiscences de Norma; 12 Schubert Songs; Mozart: Réminiscences de Don Juan; Verdi: Rigoletto; 2 Concert studies (Waldesrauschen; Gnomenreigen); 3 Concert studies (Il lamento; La reggierezza; Un sospiro); Consolations 1–6; 12 Etudes d'exécution transcendante; Etudes d'exécution transcendante d'après Paganini: La campanella; Grand galop chromatique; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses: Funérailles; Hungarian Rhapsody 12; Liebesträume 1–3; Mephisto Waltz 1; Sonata; Valse impromptu

Ⓑ  Decca 467 801-2 (9). Bolet; with (i) LSO, Iván Fischer; (ii) LPO, Solti

The full range of the late Jorge Bolet's achievement for Decca in the music of Liszt is admirably surveyed in this bargain box, all splendidly recorded, and there are two other shorter surveys below. One or other should be in every representative collection.

Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Themes (for piano & orchestra)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110683. Moiseiwitsch, LPO, Lambert – GRIEG: Piano Concerto; SAINT-SAËNS: Piano Concerto 2 ()

A useful reminder of Moiseiwitsch's virtuosity and Lisztian prowess. His account with Constant Lambert still gives much pleasure.

(i) Fantasia on Hungarian Folk Tunes; Hungarian Rhapsodies 2, 4–5; Mazeppa; Mephisto Waltz 2; Les Préludes; Tasso, lamento e trionfo

🔑 Ⓑ * DG Double (ADD) 453 130-2 (2). BPO, Karajan; (i) with Cherkassky

Shura Cherkassky's glittering (1961) recording of the Hungarian Fantasia is an affectionate performance with some engaging touches from the orchestra, though the pianist is dominant and his playing is superbly assured. The rest of the programme is comparably charismatic. The cellos and basses sound marvellous in the Fifth Rhapsody and Tasso, and even the brashness of Les Préludes is a little tempered. Mazeppa is a great performance, superbly thrilling and atmospheric, with a riveting coda – worthy of a Rosette. A set showing Karajan and his Berlin Orchestra at their finest.

A Faust Symphony (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * EuroArts DVD 2072078. Riegel, Tanglewood Festival Ch., Boston SO, Bernstein (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

A Faust Symphony (CD versions)

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 449-2. Riegel, Tanglewood Festival Ch., Boston SO, Bernstein

(BB)  EMI Encore 5 090172-2. Winbergh, Westminster Choir College Male Ch., Phd. O, Muti

A Faust Symphony; Hunnenschlacht; Mephisto Walt. 1; Nocturnal Procession

Ⓝ (*) Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9992 (2). SRO, Ansermet – MAGNARD: Symphony 3 ***

Bernstein conducts this riveting (1976) Boston performance, so thrillingly captured on DVD – and one of his very finest recordings, with all the added stimulus of live music-making, and splendidly photographed under the direction of

Humphrey Burton. Fine as the CD version is, it is not its match. Bernstein seems to possess the ideal temperament for holding together grippingly the melodrama of the long first movement, taking it spaciously but building up the great excitement in the closing pages, while in the lovely Gretchen movement he draws exquisite playing from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, both the woodwind and the strings in the many chamber-music passages. The Mephistofelean finale, with its anticipations of the orchestral wildness of Berlioz and the brass sonorities of Wagner, is held together superbly, with the tension building all the time, to be capped by the magnificent entry of the chorus, and sustained to the final profound apotheosis. Kenneth Riegel's impressive tenor contribution to the CD version is again surpassed by his ardent singing in the live performance, and throughout the playing of the Boston orchestra is superb, especially the strings, helped in their sonority and radiance by the unsurpassed acoustic of Symphony Hall.

Muti shows a natural sympathy for a piece that can readily seem overlong. Some might feel that he is too overtly melodramatic in the finale, yet his pacing of the first movement is admirable, finding tenderness as well as red-blooded excitement. In the Gretchen movement, he conjures the most delicately atmospheric playing from the orchestra, the vocal contributions are sound, and throughout he is helped by the ambience of the Old Met. in Philadelphia, which seems especially suitable for this score. The early digital recording is brilliant yet full-blooded, and on EMI's super-budget Encore label this remains very competitive.

The opening of the Faust Symphony sounds especially haunting in Ansermet's hands, and although his orchestra lacks the virtuoso brilliance of rival recordings, this performance is hardly wanting in drama. Indeed, the impassioned string-writing in the opening Faust movement is surprisingly forceful, rich and full. The delicacy in the Gretchen movement is particularly striking, even if the woodwind playing is scarcely the last word in orchestral refinement. In the finale, Ansermet really tells a story through this music with excellent characterization, and it ends in a blaze of sound with a full chorus and organ included. Werner Krenn is the superb tenor soloist. The Dance of the Village Inn (Mephisto Waltz 1) is lusty enough – and again the sound is very rich and full (incidentally, Ansermet uses the pianissimo ending of this work). The Nocturnal Procession is full of brooding atmosphere. Ansermet's was the work's première recording on LP, and it stands up very well. The flamboyant Battle of the Huns was recorded earlier (in 1959) yet still sounds most vivid. Here Ansermet matches the flamboyance of the writing with a spontaneous, hell-for-leather performance which is exciting from first note to last – and Liszt's use of the organ is most effective.

(i–iv) A Faust Symphony; (i; ii) Orpheus; (i; v) Les Préludes; Tasso; (i–iii; vi) Psalm XIII

🔑 Ⓑ * EMI Gemini (ADD) 4 76927-2 (2). (i) RPO; (ii) Beecham; (iii) with Beecham Choral Soc. (iv) A. Young; (v) cond. Silvestri; (vi) W. Midgley

Beecham's classic (1958) Kingsway recording of the Faust Symphony, very well transferred to CD, shows this instinctive Lisztian at his most illuminatingly persuasive. His control of speed is masterly, spacious and eloquent in the first two movements, without dragging, and with the central portrait of Gretchen ravishingly played. The finale is brilliant and urgent, without any hint of breathlessness. The Beecham CD is unlikely to disappoint anyone wanting to enjoy a uniquely warm and understanding reading of an equivocal piece, hard to interpret. Orpheus, the original coupling for the two-disc LP set, is also played very beautifully. The performance of Psalm 13 is slightly less impressive. It is sung in English, with the legendary Walter Midgley, but is drier and more monochrome. For the additional fillers here, EMI have chosen Silvestri's highly distinguished Philharmonia accounts of Les Préludes and Tasso. Tasso is less easy to bring off and Silvestri has its full measure and gives it great intensity. Again, the recordings from 1957/8 are amazingly full and vivid.

Hungarian Rhapsodies 1–3

() Cala (mono) CACD 0545. NBC SO, Stokowski – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 6 ()

Recorded in February 1955, Stokowski's performances of the first three Liszt Hungarian Rhapsodies have the same glowing qualities as the Beethoven, with which they are coupled. This is music of a flamboyance that chimes exactly with the conductor's unique qualities.

Hungarian Rhapsodies 1–6

(*) Mercury (ADD) SACD 432 015-2. LSO, Dorati – ENESCU: Romanian Rhapsody 1 ***

Dorati's is undoubtedly the finest set of Hungarian Rhapsodies. He brings out the gypsy flavour and, with lively playing from the LSO, there is both polish and sparkle. The new SACD transfer further enhances the sound although the upper range betrays the age of the recordings.

Mephisto Waltz 1

() BBC mono BBCL 4059-2. LSO, Stokowski – GABRIELI: Sonata pian'e forte; NIELSEN: Symphony 6; TIPPETT: Concerto for Double String Orchestra ***

Stokowski's zestful and vibrant account of the first Mephisto Waltz comes with two rarities of the Stokowski discography, Nielsen's Sixth Symphony and the Tippett Double Concerto.

SYMPHONIC POEMS

Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne; Festklänge; Hunnenschlacht

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.557846. New Zealand SO, Halász

Both Chandos and Naxos are making a survey of Liszt's symphonic poems, and while in this instance Halász and his New Zealand forces don't quite equal the outstanding excellence of the Chandos recording, this collection is still impressively played and recorded, and many collectors may feel that the Naxos price is about right for these works. They are by no means top-quality Liszt but are still worth having on disc when the performances are so idiomatically committed.

Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne; Orpheus; Les Préludes; Tasso: Lamento e Trionfo (Symphonic Poems)

 Chan. 10341. BBC PO, Noseda

Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne, beginning with its murmuring violins, is most atmospheric, and Noseda generates plenty of inner tension in this somewhat episodic score. The huge dynamic range of the recording is very effective, with all departments of the orchestra responding to the vivid scoring with warm enthusiasm. Tasso brings some very beautiful playing, with Noseda coaxing ravishing sounds in the evocative passages, but also rising to the climaxes superbly.

Les Préludes is perhaps a shade too delicate, lacking the gravitas – and, indeed, electricity – of Karajan's famous DG account, but it has an alternative subtlety of nuance to make it compelling in its own way. The richly expressive writing in Orpheus is much better suited to Noseda's expansive approach. A promising start to the series.

Festklänge; Héroïde funèbre; Mazeppa; Prometheus

 Chan. 10417. BBC PO, Noseda

The highlight here is Mazeppa, one of Liszt's finest symphonic poems, alongside Orpheus and Les Préludes. While Karajan's electrifying version is not surpassed (and probably never will be), Noseda and the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra give it plenty of life and vividly recreate the evocation of the horse galloping across the countryside with the eponymous hero strapped to its back. The other works are more uneven, but Noseda is suitably exuberant in Festklänge and he catches the sombre atmosphere of the Hérodïade funèbre eloquently. The BBC orchestra is again on its toes throughout and the Chandos recording is in the demonstration bracket.

Héroïde Funèbre; Hungaria; Le triomphe funèbre

(BB)  Naxos 8.557847. New Zealand SO, Halász

Michael Halász here offers three rarities, each with a valedictory theme. Hungaria, dating from 1856, was inspired by the Hungarian uprising of 1848, with a funeral march at its heart. Héroïde funèbre of 1848 was similarly inspired by the revolution in France, also in 1848, and again with funeral music, this time set against beautiful lyrical ideas and passing quotation from the Marseillaise. Le triomphe funèbre, shorter than the other two, is tauter, with greater use of chromatic ideas, but including a patriotic march before the final, sombre funeral march. Halász draws committed performances from his orchestra, very well recorded.

Hunnenschlacht (Symphonic Poem); Hungarian March

Ⓜ  Telarc CD 80079. Cincinnati SO, Kunzel – BEETHOVEN: Wellington's Victory **

From Kunzel a direct, unsubtle performance of a rarely recorded piece, not one of Liszt's finest works in the genre. The Telarc sound, however, is highly spectacular, with the organ interpolation adding to the expansiveness of texture. The Hungarian March is Liszt's own orchestration of a piano piece written in 1843; it is rather jolly and is played with much spirit here to make a good encore.

(i) Hunnenschlacht; Mazeppa; Orpheus; (ii) Les Préludes (symphonic poems)

 Australian Decca Eloquence 466 706-2. (i) LAPO; (ii) VPO; Mehta

Zubin Mehta is in his element here. The performances are red-blooded and tremendously exciting. Liszt's vulgarity is played up in a swaggeringly extrovert way, but there is plenty of character too. The rich, vibrant recording is an audiophile's delight – the staggered entries throughout the strings in Mazeppa are thrilling. Equally praiseworthy is the pastoral atmosphere Mehta creates in Orpheus – with real sensitivity from the Los Angeles Orchestra. Those who like Liszt with all the stops out will certainly enjoy this Australian reissue, especially when the CD transfer is so vivid.

Les Préludes; Mazeppa; Prometheus; Tasso, lamento e trionfo (symphonic poems)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550487. Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Halász

Michael Halász too has the full measure of this repertoire, and this is one of the most successful collections of Liszt's symphonic poems to have emerged in recent years. He draws some remarkably fine playing from the Katowice Radio Orchestra. The brass playing is very impressive throughout, especially the trombones and tuba, who have the epic main theme of Mazeppa, but its grandiloquence is no less powerful in Les Préludes, weighty and never brash. The recording is spacious, with full, natural string-textures, but it is the resounding brass one remembers most.

Tasso, lamento e trionfo

(*) Testament mono SBT 1129. Philh. O., Silvestri – TCHAIKOVSKY: Manfred Symphony ()

Silvestri's version of Tasso was one of his best recordings (second only perhaps to his account of Elgar's In the South). It comes up well in this new transfer but the Tchaikovsky coupling does not show the Romanian maestro at his best.

Totentanz (for piano and orchestra)

Ⓑ ((*)) Australian Decca Eloquence mono 476 7671. Katin, LPO, Martinon – (with DOHNANYI: Variations on a Nursery Song (*)); LUTOSŁAWSKI: Paganini Variations ; RACHMANINOV: Paganini Variations **(*)

Katin's dashing performance of the Totentanz with Martinon is full of demonic urgency and, despite rather thin (but not unattractive) 1954 sound, this classic account remains highly enjoyable.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete piano music (57 volumes) and supplement

Hyperion. Leslie Howard

Leslie Howard's ambitious project to record all the piano music of Liszt is now complete and has been generally well received internationally, with several issues collecting a Grand Prix du Disque in Budapest. The set has great documentary interest and has been listed and discussed in several earlier editions. The performances are very capable and musicianly, and there are many moments of poetic feeling, but for the most part his playing rarely touches distinction. The kind of concentration one finds in great Liszt pianists such as Arrau, Kempff and Richter (and there are many younger artists whose names spring to mind) only surfaces occasionally. Howard's technique is formidable, but poetic imagination and the ability to grip the listener are here less evenly developed. However the coverage is remarkable and if this playing rarely takes the breath away by its virtuosity or its poetic insights, it is unfailingly intelligent and the Hyperion recordings are consistently first class.

A full listing will be found in the Hyperion Catalogue, meanwhile we would wish to draw readers' attention to some of the rarer and more outstanding issues, such as Liszt's transcription of the Bunte Reihe (originally for violin and piano) of Ferdinand David (1810–70) in Volume 16 (CDA 66506). Leslie Howard plays them beautifully, as he does the two Liszt Songbooks of early Lieder in Volume 19 (CDA 66593).

Volume 26 (CDA 66771/2) is almost entirely devoted to music which Liszt wrote as a teenager, and has obvious interest, as has Howard's pioneering recording of the 12 Grandes Etudes in Volume 34. They were pilot versions of the Etudes d'exécution transcendante, and Leslie Howard plays them with remarkably confident bravura (CDA 66973). Many of the Russian and Hungarian novelties in Volume 35 (CDA 66984) are also ear-tickling.

One of the most valuable discs of the series is Volume 47 (CDA 67187), which includes unpublished music which Liszt intended for a first cycle of Harmonies poétiques et religieuses, while Volume 51 (CDA 67233/4), which Howard calls 'Paralipomènes', has early drafts of other famous works including three different versions of the Dante Sonata. The 18 Hungarian Romances presented on Volume 52 are equally fascinating, in essence a manuscript notebook of Hungarian themes, which in Volume 57 (CDA 67418/19), in their final form, became the 19 Hungarian Rhapsodies, growing out of those early collected ideas.

Alternative versions of six of those Rhapsodies appear in the penultimate volume (56), which consists of four CDs of 'Rarities, Curiosities, and Fragments' (CDA 67414/7) plus 23 Album Leaves, simple romantic pieces, which Liszt dedicated to his friends. And if you are drawn by a collection of rare operatic Concert Paraphrases, Volume 54 admirably features some rare examples (CDA 67406/7).

Crowning the whole series are the two volumes (53a/b) of the complete music for piano and orchestra (CDA 67401/2 and 67403/5) in which Howard tackles no fewer than 15 different works, admirably accompanied by the Budapest Symphony Orchestra. He plays them all with flair and dedication and is, as usual, very well recorded. In the final Volume (57) (CDA 67418/20) he caps the series with a dazzlingly spontaneous account of the nineteen Hungarian Rhapsodies.

Supplement

'New Discoveries': Années de pèlerinage: early drafts: Aux anges gardiens; Sunt lacrymae rerum; Postludium: Nachtspiel: Sursum corda. Célèbre mélodie hongroise; From the Album of Princess Marie zu Sayn-Wittgenstein: Album-Leaf; Lilie; Hryá; Mazurek; Krakowiak; La lugubre gondola (original Venice manuscript); 11 Zigeuner-Epos

 Hyp. CDA 67346. Howard

This supplementary disc brings together two dozen items, many of them charming 'album leaves', which Liszt wrote for various admirers, including the ten-year-old Princess Marie of Sayn-Wittgenstein. Such trifles, some only a few seconds long, and a series of 11 tuneful gypsy pieces reveal Liszt at his most unpretentious, fresh and direct, and so do the newly discovered early drafts of pieces, which he later elaborated, such as La Lugubre gondola, with strikingly bald textures. Howard is here at his warmest and most persuasive, bringing out how Liszt's genius developed.

Other recordings of piano music

Années de Pèlerinage (Book 1, 1st Year: Switzerland; Book 2, 2nd Year: Italy) (DVD version)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4146. Brendel (V/D: Humphrey Burton)

Alfred Brendel is at his finest in these 1986 performances of the first two books of pieces inspired by Liszt's years of travel, and he is recorded most realistically. He introduces each of the items individually, although his comments are separately cued, so that one can enjoy the music alone. Brendel's body language is very much part of his playing and he communicates with intense feeling, though never at the expense of the evocation. Humphrey Burton's video direction is admirable and there is no doubt that Brendel's playing is afforded an added dimension when he can be closely, though not too closely, observed.

Années de pèlerinage: Book 1, 1st Year: Switzerland; 2nd & 3rd Years: Italy; Supplement: Venezia e Napoli (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ * DG (ADD) 471 447-2 (3). Berman

Berman's technique is fabulous, more than equal to the demands made by these 26 pieces. The playing is enormously authoritative and quite free of empty display or virtuoso flamboyance, even though its brilliance is never in question. Indeed Berman brings searching qualities to this music; much of the time he is thoughtful and inward-looking, while the power of the Dante Sonata is equalled by the coruscating glitter of his articulation of the Tarantella from the Supplément: Venezia e Napoli. The recording is firmly and faithfully transferred to CD and does full justice to Berman's range of colour and dynamics. Moreover this box is remarkably inexpensive and well documented.

Années de pèlerinage, 1st Year (Switzerland)

(BB) * Naxos 8.550548. Jandó

Even remembering his excellent Beethoven and Haydn recordings, Jandó's performances of the Liszt Années de pèlerinage are an impressive achievement. The solemn opening of La Chapelle de Guillaume Tell immediately shows the atmospheric feeling he can generate in this remarkable music, and its later, more grandiose rhetoric is handled with powerful conviction.

Années de pèlerinage, 2nd Year (Italy); Supplement: Venezia e Napoli

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Naxos 8.550549. Jandó

Sposalizio is superbly evoked, and the three contrasted Petrarch Sonnets bring the most imaginatively varied characterization, with No. 123 especially chimerical. But clearly Jandó sees the Dante Sonata as the climactic point of the whole series. His performance has tremendous dynamism and power. One has the sense of Liszt himself hovering over the keyboard.

Années de pèlerinage, 3rd Year (Italy) (complete)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550550. Jandó

The opening Angelus shows Jandó at his most imaginatively expansive and commanding, while Les Jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este sparkles and glitters: this is playing of great appeal. The secret of Jandó's success is that he is deeply involved in every note of Liszt's music. First class recording too.

Ballade 2; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses; Rêves d'amour; Romance oubliée; Romance: O pourquoi donc

Ⓝ  Calliope CAL 9371/2. Amoyel

An outstanding collection of little-known Liszt, including a highly individual characterization of the complete Harmonies poétiques et religieuses, music that in Pascal Amoyel's hands emerges as both romantically inspired and remarkably forward-looking. The Drei Liebesträume (only one of which is well known) are ripely romantic and yet still refined in feeling, the Romance oubliée hauntingly nostalgic; and the Second Ballade has all the Lisztian bravura you could want. The recording is most real and vivid, and this is a set for Lisztians who want to further explore the music of this unpredictable composer.

Concert Paraphrases of Beethoven's 'An die ferne Geliebte'; Mignon; Schumann Lieder: Widmung; Frühlingsnacht

 Chan. 9793. Lortie – SCHUMANN: Fantaisie in C, Op. 17 ***

Louis Lortie's Chandos recital appears under the title 'To the Distant Beloved', after Beethoven's song-cycle, An die ferne Geliebte, which he plays in Liszt's transcription (together with a pair of Schumann Lieder), and very impressively too. But collectors will want this for the Schumann Fantasy, which is the centrepiece of the recital and is given an outstanding performance.

Concert Paraphrases of Beethoven's Symphonies 2 & 5

(BB)  Naxos 8.550457. Scherbakov

It is Scherbakov's achievement that he makes Liszt's piano transcriptions of these Beethoven symphonies sound so pianistic. With wonderfully crisp articulation and fluent passage-work, textures are clarified, and the freshness and energy of the writing are strongly brought out both in the exuberantly youthful 2 and the darkly dramatic 5. He is, so to speak, more of a Weingartner than a Toscanini (as was Katsaris) but his Fifth still has that barnstorming quality that arrests your attention. At super-bargain price, well worth investigating even by those who shy away from transcriptions. Excellent, clear piano sound.

Concert paraphrases of Rossini: Soirées musicales; Overture William Tell

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553961. Geki

Liszt made his Rossini transcriptions in 1836, and they are rarely heard in the recital room or on record. The only rival is Leslie Howard's set on Hyperion, and this performance by the Yugoslav-born Kemal Geki at super-bargain price has infinitely more wit, lightness of touch and subtlety of articulation. In fact this is dazzling playing that sparkles when required and has an effortless brilliance that is quite captivating.

Concert paraphrases of Schubert Lieder: Auf dem Wasser zu singen; Erlkönig; In der Ferne; Ständchen

🔑 ✿  Sony SK 66511. Perahia – BACH/BUSONI: Chorales; MENDELSSOHN: Songs without Words ✿ ***

Murray Perahia brings to these transcriptions a poetic finesse that is very much his own. Impeccable artistry and taste are blended with a wonderful naturalness.

12 Etudes d'exécution transcendante (DVD version)

Ⓝ * Avie DVD AV 2174. Sherman

Russell Sherman, recorded live in New York City, shows his mastery of the piano and of Liszt in this for the most part assured and poetic performance of what must be one of the supreme examples of pianistic virtuosity in the whole repertoire. The venue, the Angel Orensanz Center for the Arts, is attractive and intimate; but we do not see a great deal of it, as the producer Chris Williamson rightly ensures that for the most part the camera fascinatingly focuses on the pianist's hands, and we see his amazing dexterity, mercurial suppleness, and ability to move both hands about independently with unbelievable speed and assurance – never more so than in Mazeppa, an extraordinarily descriptive odyssey. But he is equally compelling in the more delicate filigree of Chasse-neige and Feux follets. The DVD includes conversations with Craig Smith, a Boston musician, and with Christopher Lydon, a radio journalist, plus some teaching excerpts. But its Sherman's pianism that counts here. He also provides flowery programme notes, added to by Smith.

12 Etudes d'exécution transcendante (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ * Warner Elatus 2564 69369-3. Berezovsky

Boris Berezovsky shows astonishing flair and technical assurance, yet in Feux follets he plays with the utmost delicacy, and the ruminative poetry of Ricordanza is melting. The piano is recorded boldly and brilliantly, not as full and sonorous as with Arrau, but there is no lack of pianistic colour in the gentler lyrical writing. The colour portrait of Liszt on the back of the accompanying booklet demonstrates why so many women succumbed to his physical charms!

(i) 12 Etudes d'exécution transcendante; (ii) 6 Etudes d'exécution transcendante d'après Paganini; (i) 3 Etudes de concert (Il lamento; La leggierezza; Un sospiro); 2 Etudes de concert (Waldesrauschen; Gnomenreigen)

Ⓑ (*) Ph. (ADD) Duo 456 339-2 (2). (i) Arrau; (ii) Magaloff

Arrau always played with great panache and musical insight, which more than compensates for the occasional smudginess in the recorded sound. He produced a wonderfully distinctive tone, and his enormous range of keyboard colour was splendidly captured by the Philips engineers of the day. Arrau's playing is most masterly and poetic, and the recording, if too reverberant, is admirably truthful and rich in timbre. However, his bravura in Gnomenreigen is riveting. So too is Nikita Magaloff's virtuosity in the Paganini Studies, and here the bright, less sumptuous piano-tone projects his digital dexterity with fine glitter. Overall this is most impressive and can be recommended enthusiastically.

Collection: 12 Etudes d'exécution transcendante; Hungarian Rhapsodies 1–19; Rapsodie espagnole; Sonata in B min. Recital: Années de pèlerinage: Les Jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este; Ballade 2; Etudes de concert: 1, Ronde des lutins; 2, Danse le bois; Grand études après Paganini: La campanella; La Chasse; Grand galop chromatique; Harmonies poètiques et religieuse: Funérailles; 2 Légendes; Liebestraum 3; Mephisto Waltz; Polonaise 1; Valse-impromptu; Valse oubliée 1

Ⓑ () EMI mono/stereo 5 74512-2 (5). Cziffra

12 Etudes d'exécution transcendante; Mephisto Waltz 1

Ⓜ () EMI mono 5 62799-2. Cziffra

This five-disc set gathers together the recordings made by the celebrated virtuoso, Georges Cziffra, over three decades between the mid-1950s and the mid-1980s. He began with a chimerically brilliant set of the Etudes d'exécution transcendante and the equally legendary Hungarian Rhapsodies. Both were made in faithful if slightly restricted mono sound in the Hungaroton studio in Budapest in 1956. The result is strikingly fresh and the easy technical dexterity is astonishing. Much of the rest of the repertoire appears here for the first time. Cziffra remained at the height of his powers throughout, and the shorter bravura pieces, most recorded in stereo, display the same enormous technical command and delectably clean, light articulation as the earlier sessions, the playing volatile and charismatic, the recordings clear and forward. The recordings have been effectively remastered, the sound variable, often good, very good in the Sonata. But the panache of the playing triumphs over the early technology.

Hungarian Rhapsodies 1–19; Rapsodie espagnole

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 034-2 (2). Szidon

Roberto Szidon offers Liszt playing of the highest order. He has flair and panache, genuine keyboard command and, when required, great delicacy of tone. He is well recorded too, and this DG Double is not only inexpensive but also provides (as does Cziffra on EMI) an excellent version of the Rapsodie espagnole. Cziffra's performances are from an artist of an even more volatile personality, but Szidon is by no means upstaged: his style is equally valid and his approach is always imaginatively illuminating.

Hungarian Rhapsodies 2, 6, 8 (Capriccio), 9 (Carnival in Pest), 10 (Préludio), 12–15 (Rákoczy March)

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67554-2. Cziffra

As can be heard in the most famous C sharp minor Rhapsody (2), Cziffra's reckless impulsiveness is matched by his breathtaking bravura in the closing section, and it was an excellent idea to issue a selection from his deleted complete set as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. The remastered recordings from the early 1970s have fine realism and presence.

Piano Sonata in B min.; Concert Paraphrase on Verdi's 'Rigoletto'

 DG DVD 073 4079. Yundi Li – CHOPIN: Piano Concerto 1: Rondo, etc. ***

Yundi Li's playing has delicacy and finesse, and a pretty flawless technique. He has an appealing personality that puts the listener very much on his side, and he gives a very fine account of the B minor Sonata. Nor does his version of the Rigoletto Paraphrase lack virtuosity or panache. Perhaps the Sonata has yet to exhibit the command and personality of a great pianist, but this recital certainly indicates that his is a formidable talent with enormous potential whose future will blossom.

Piano Sonata; Années de pèlerinage, 2nd Year: Après une lecture du Dante (Fantasia Quasi Sonata); Concert Study: Gnomenreigen; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses: Funérailles

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 457 6292. Pletnev

Piano Sonata; 3 Concert Studies

🔑  Chan. 8548. Lortie

Piano Sonata in B min.; Consolation 3; 6 Etudes d'exécution transcendente d'après Paganini; Mephisto Waltz

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Encore (ADD) 2 35733-2. Anievas

Piano Sonata in B min.; En rêve; 4 Little Piano Pieces; La lugubre gondola; Nuages gris; Richard Wagner – Venezia; Schlaflos! Frage und Antwort; Sinistre, disastro; Trübe Wolken; Unstern!

🔑 * HM HMC 901845. Lewis

Piano Sonata; 2 Legends (St Francis of Assisi Preaching to the Birds; St Francis of Paola Walking on the Waves); Scherzo & March

🔑 Ⓑⓑ * Hyp. Helios CDH 55184. Demidenko

Pletnev's earlier account of the B minor Sonata, made when he was in his 20s and briefly available on Olympia, had dazzling virtuosity and brilliance. This newcomer has even greater tonal finesse, articulation and control of keyboard colour; there is a tremendous grip, depth and majesty, and the breadth of the Sonata is deeply impressive. A performance of stature among the very best that this great pianist has yet given us. The remainder of the programme is hardly less gripping; reservations concerning the close balance do not obscure the artistry and distinction of this recital.

Paul Lewis's version of the Liszt Sonata stands out, even among the many dozens of rival recordings, for its power and clarity, enhanced by full, immediate sound. Lewis with masterly control brings out the structural strength. For coupling he has an illuminating group of late pieces, including two written as elegies for Wagner, not just La lugubre gondola (in the second and more extended version) but RW – Venezia, building up powerfully over the briefest span. Also two pieces, Nuages gris and Unstern!, which find the composer at his most adventurous.

Nikolai Demidenko's is a keenly dramatic and powerfully projected account of the Sonata that has the listener on the edge of his or her seat. It must be numbered among the finest performances he has given us. The excitement and virtuosity are second to none and almost call to mind Horowitz. He has the advantage of exceptionally vivid recorded sound, and the remainder of the recital goes equally well.

Anievas gives a fine and memorable performance of the Sonata, notable for its thoughtfulness and its subtlety in the control of tension. The lyrical impulse is finely balanced to bring out the music's poetry as well as its fire and strength. There may be more flamboyant interpretations available which more readily project the music's bravura, but only a few recorded performances are as satisfying as this, or more successful in revealing the work's stature. The recording too is very good, although the reverberation prevents absolute clarity in the bass in florid passages.

Louis Lortie gives almost as commanding a performance of the Liszt Sonata as any in the catalogue; its virtuosity can be taken for granted and, though he does not have the extraordinary intensity and feeling for drama of Pletnev, he has a keen awareness of its structure and a Chopinesque finesse that win one over. The Chandos recording, though a shade too reverberant, is altogether natural.

Piano Sonata; Années de pèlerinage, 1st Year: Au bord d'une source; 2nd Year: Sonetto 104 del Petrarca; 3rd Year: Les Jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este; Concert Paraphrases: Die Forelle; Erlkönig (Schubert); Réminiscences de Don Juan (Mozart); Rigoletto (Verdi); Consolation 3; Etudes d'exécution transcendante d'après Paganini: La campanella; Etudes de concert: Gnomenreigen; Un sospiro; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses: Funérailles; Hungarian Rhapsody 12 in C sharp min.; Liebestraum 3 in A flat; Mephisto Waltz 1

🔑 Ⓑ * Double Decca 444 851-2 (2). Bolet

The full range of Jorge Bolet's achievement for Decca in the music of Liszt is admirably surveyed here, ending with his commanding account of the Sonata, a performance combining power, imagination and concentration. He can be romantic without sentimentality, as in the Consolation, Un sospiro or the most famous Liebestraum, yet can dazzle the ear with bravura or beguile the listener with his delicacy of colouring, as in the Années de pèlerinage. All the recordings here, save the Mozart Concert Paraphrase, are digital and are as clear and present as one could wish.

Miscellaneous recitals

Années de pèlerinage, 1st Year: Vallée d'Obermann; 2nd Year: Sposalizio; Il penseroso; Bagatelle without tonality; En rêve; Funérailles; Hungarian Rhapsody 13 (arr. Volodos); Legend: St Frances of Assisi Preaching to the Birds; La lugubre gondola; Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen (Prelude after Bach)

🔑 * Sony SACD 88697 06500-2. Volodos

Arcadi Volodos's playing must be the nearest we can get to hearing Liszt himself give a recital. And indeed a splendidly programmed recital too, with everything from the Années de pèlerinage (played with enormous flair) to the weird Bagatelle without tonality. There is excitement in plenty (as in the Vallée d'Obermann and the Hungarian Rhapsody), magical evocation and colour of St Francis and his birds, and much poetry everywhere. He is splendidly recorded. A recital not to be missed.

Années de pèlerinage, 2nd Year: 3 Sonetti di Petrarca (47, 104 & 123); Dante Sonata; Concert Paraphrases on Verdi: Aida: Danza sacra e duetto finale; Quartet from Rigoletto; Miserere from Trovatore; Legend: St Francis of Assisi Preaching to the Birds

(*) EuroArts DVD 2056748. Barenboim

Daniel Barenboim communicates readily, especially in live performance as here (in May 2007), and he is always a pleasure to watch and listen to in Liszt. He is particularly evocative in the portrait of St Francis Preaching to the Birds, but plays impressively throughout. However, the acoustic of La Scala is a little dry and does not flatter his piano tone; although this does not prevent enjoyment, the DG recital below is even more rewarding.

Années de pèlerinage, 2nd Year: 3 Sonetti di Petrarca (47, 104 & 123); Concert Paraphrase on the Quartet from Verdi's 'Rigoletto'; Consolations 1–5; Liebesträume 1–3

🔑 Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 435 591-2. Barenboim

Daniel Barenboim proves an ideal advocate for the Consolations and Liebesträume, and he is highly poetic in the Petrarch Sonnets. His playing has an unaffected simplicity that is impressive and throughout there is a welcome understatement and naturalness, until he arrives at the Rigoletto

Paraphrase, which is played with plenty of flair and glitter. The quality of the recorded sound is excellent.

Recital I: Années de pèlerinage, 3rd Year: Tarantella; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses: Pensées des morts; Bénédiction de Dieu dans le solitude; Legend: St Francis of Assisi Preaching to the Birds; Mephisto Waltz 1; Rapsodie Espagnole

Recital II: Années de pèlerinage, 2nd Year: Après une lecture du Dante (Dante Sonata); 3rd Year: Aux cyprès de la Villa d'Este I & II; Les Jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este; Ave Maria; Ave Maria (Die Glocken von Rom); La lugubre gondola (2 versions); Recueillement

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Virgin 2x1 Double 5 61439-2. Hough

Few pianists of the younger generation have quite such a magic touch as Stephen Hough, and this budget-priced Virgin Double rescues two of his finest recitals. The performances are all magnetic. On the first disc, he brings sparkle and wit to the fireworks of the Mephisto Waltz and the Tarantella from the third year of the Années de pèlerinage with phenomenal articulation, and he plays the extended slow movement of the Bénédiction with velvety warmth. The second collection is mainly of rarer music and is imaginatively chosen to include two different versions of both Aux cyprès de la Villa d'Este and the darkly original La lugubre gondola, in each case with the second version longer and more elaborate than the first. The cascades of Les Jeux d'eau à la Villa d'Este make a glittering centrepiece. The recording is excellent, but the documentation is abysmal. Nevertheless the concentration of the playing here is unforgettable.

Ave Marias in D flat; G; E; d'Arcadelt; 6 Consolations; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses, 7–10; Ungarns Gott (left-hand)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553516. Thomson

Concert paraphrases of sacred music: Alleluja; Ave maris stella; 11 Chorales; Hungarian Coronation Mass: Benedictus; Offertorium; L'Hymne du pape; In festo transfigurationis; O Roma nobilis; Sancta Dorothea; Stabat Mater; Urbi et orbi; Weihnachtslied; Zum Haus des Herrn ziehen wir

(BB)  Naxos 8.553659. Thomson

Harmonies poétiques et religieuses 1–6; Les morts; Resignazione; Ungarns Gott (two-hand)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553073. Thomson

Philip Thomson is a Canadian pianist who has specialized in Liszt. He exhibits considerable artistry in the three discs listed above and commands not only the virtuosity which this repertoire calls for in abundance but also great poetic feeling. He commands a wide range of keyboard colour and refinement of pianissimo tone and has the benefit of very good recorded sound as well. All of his Liszt recitals are touched by distinction and are a real bargain.

Ballade 2; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses: Bénédiction de Dieu dans la solitude; Mephisto Waltz 1; Sposalizio; En rêve; Schlaflos!; Unstern!

Ⓜ  Oehms OCD 228. Perl

In his rapt concentration Perl brings weight to Liszt's sequential arguments, underlining the link between the magnificent Ballade over its 15-minute span and Liszt's sonata in the same key. Even more expansive is the surgingly lyrical Bénédiction, with the first Mephisto Waltz bringing virtuoso fireworks at the end. Excellent, well-balanced sound.

Concert paraphrase of Wagner's Tannhäuser Overture; Etudes de concert, 1st Set, 3: Un sospiro; 2nd set, 1: Waldesrauschen; 2: Gnomenreigen; Etudes d'exécution transcendante d'après Paganini, 3: La campanella; Grand galop chromatique; Harmonies poétiques et religieuses: Funérailles; Liebestraum 3; ;spagnole

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 63310-2. Bolet

Here is a real find, a recital recorded by Jorge Bolet in the early 1970s, when he was at the very peak of his form, a decade before he made his series of digital recordings for Decca, and just before his Carnegie Hall début in 1974. The playing in Gnomenreigen and the exuberant Grand galop chromatique is dazzling, while La campanella is articulated with crystal clarity, and there is more glittering fingerwork in the Rapsodie espagnole.

The famous Liebestraum and Un sospiro are romantically charged, without a hint of sentimentality, while the darker atmosphere of Funérailles is powerfully caught. Even the almost unplayable finale of Liszt's arrangement of Wagner's Tannhäuser Overture is made coherent by the clear separation of the chorale from the decorative cascades – a tour de force of pianism. The analogue recording is excellent and the CD transfer faithful (perhaps a fraction hard) and gives him a most realistic presence.

ORGAN MUSIC

Concertstück in A; Fantasia and Fugue on 'Ad nos salutarem, undam'; Orpheus (Symphonic Poem); Prelude on 'Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen'; Trauerode (Les Morts: Oraison)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554544. Rothkopf (Sauer organ, Evangelische Stadtkirche, Bad Homberg)

Consolations in D flat; E (Tröstung); & E (Andantino); Evocation à la Chapelle Sistine; Prelude and Fugue on the name 'BACH'; Legend: St Francis of Assisi Preaching to the Birds; Variations on 'Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen'

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555079. Rothkopf (Sauer organ, St Petri Dom, Bremen)

The key Liszt works which were originally written for organ include the Prelude and Variations on 'Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen', the Prelude and Fugue on the name 'BACH' and Fantasia and Fugue on 'Ad nos salutarem, undam'. Andreas Rothkopf opens the first disc with the last-named piece, and gives a magnificent account: the delayed entry of the pedals is a thrilling moment and the climactic fugue no less exciting. The Prelude and Fugue on 'BACH' and the 'Weinen, Klagen' Variations are similarly spectacular and demand great virtuosity, which is fully forthcoming here. The other pieces are transcriptions, some made by the composer, some by others. But they all take full advantage of the rich palette of these two magnificent organs, from the dark-hued Trauerode, to the romantic Consolations. But the most surprisingly effective transcription here is of the Legend of St Francis Preaching to the Birds, where the organ effects are more exotically descriptive than in the piano version, while the chorale sounds richly expansive on the organ. Throughout both CDs the performances are very fine indeed and the recording in the demonstration bracket. The back-up documentation, too, is excellent.

VOCAL MUSIC

Christus (oratorio)

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 61167-2 (3). Valente, Lipovšek, Lindroos, Krause, Slovak Philharmonic Ch., Rotterdam PO, Conlon

Liszt's Christus is less an oratorio than an episodic sequence of contrasted pieces, many of them very beautiful, inspired by the person of Christ. It is not part of the scheme to personify Christ in the way that Bach does in the Passions, but to intersperse devotional hymns – such as The Three Kings or the carol-like O filii et filiae – between atmospheric scene-paintings such as The Beatitudes or The Miracle Depicting Christ Walking on the Waters. James Conlon and his Rotterdam forces give a dedicated reading, full of warmth and understanding. The liveliness of the acoustic and the distancing of the sound may obscure some detail, but this is an account, recorded at a live concert, that brings out the beauties and expressiveness of the writing to the full. Tiny mishaps, inevitable in a live performance, are not likely to undermine enjoyment, and the reissue is very reasonably priced.

LITOLFF, Henri (1818–91)

Concerti symphoniques 2 in B min., Op. 22; 4 in D min., Op. 102

 Hyp. CDA 66889. Donohoe, Bournemouth SO, Litton

The Fourth Concerto Symphonique is the source of the famous Litolff Scherzo, so often heard in the days of 78s. The first movement is rhetorical but opens with endearing flamboyance under the baton of Andrew Litton, while the passage-work scintillates in the hands of Peter Donohoe. The secondary material has both delicacy and charm. The famous Scherzo which follows is taken a fraction too fast and loses some of its poise, the articulation not always absolutely clean; but one adjusts to the breathless virtuosity, and it remains the work's finest inspiration. The Adagio religioso opens with some lovely horn-playing, its solemn mood nicely offset later by the pianistic decoration. The finale, marked Allegro impetuoso, is certainly all of that, with more twinkling bravura from Donohoe.

The Second Concerto is also well worth while. True, its opening Maestoso is hopelessly inflated, but in the Chopinesque secondary material Donohoe finds an engaging charm as well as brilliance. The second movement is another scintillating Scherzo and, if not quite as memorable as its more famous companion, it has a tripping centrepiece worthy of Saint-Saëns, especially as presented here. With a warm, naturally balanced recording, this entertaining Hyperion CD is very much worth having.

Concerti symphoniques 3 in E flat (National hollandais), Op. 45; 5 in C min., Op. 123

 Hyp. CDA 67210. Donohoe, BBC Scottish SO, Litton

Overall, this pair of engaging works are much more consistently inspired than the more famous 4. Litolff incorporates two old Dutch tunes into 3 (hence the work's subtitle). After an opening movement with a zestful military flavour, the rollicking Scherzo includes one of these; the following nocturnal Andante makes a touching, songful interlude before the dazzling finale, which is to introduce the second in the form of a patriotic chorale. The brilliant dénouement is fully worthy of Liszt.

The opening mood of the Fifth Concerto seems darker, dispelled by another jauntily memorable Scherzo. The finale opens with a whiff of Beethoven and has unexpected weight, with the contrasting lyrical material moving into a world somewhere between Liszt and Mendelssohn. Both performances have great flair, with Donohoe playing brilliantly throughout, and Litton and his Scottish players giving splendid support. The recording is first class. A most enjoyable and recommendable coupling, notable for its ready fund of memorable melody.

Concerto symphonique 4: Scherzo

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 466 376-2. Curzon, LPO, Boult – BRAHMS: Piano Concerto; FRANCK: Symphonic Variations ***

Curzon provides all the sparkle Litolff's infectious Scherzo requires, and the 1958 Walthamstow Town Hall recording makes a delightful encore for the Brahms Concerto and the Franck Symphonic Variations in this reissue in Decca's 'Classic Sound' series. The fine qualities of the original sound, freshness and clarity, remain impressive.

LLOYD, George (1913–98)

(i) Cello Concerto; The Serf (opera): Orchestral Suite 1

🔑  Albany TROY 458. (i) Ross; Albany SO, Miller

Like the comparable work of Elgar, George Lloyd's poignant Cello Concerto was a late composition. It was completed in July 1997, a year before his death at the age of 85, and its ethos clearly reflects the composer's frustration at the rejection of his work by the musical establishment. The work is in seven continuing sections, all based on the opening lyrical theme.

Anthony Ross is clearly very committed to this highly emotional work and, with strong support from the Albany Symphony Orchestra under David Miller, he gives a performance of moving eloquence.

The Serf is a colourful score, but its touches of melodrama are not wholly convincing, and the extended Love Duet is without a sufficiently memorable melodic line for its purpose. First-class recording throughout.

(i) Piano Concerto 4; The Lily-Leaf and the Grasshopper; The Transformation of That Naked Ape

 Albany AR 004. Stott; (i) LSO, composer

The Fourth Piano Concerto is a romantic, light-hearted piece with a memorable 'long singing tune' (the composer's words), somewhat Rachmaninovian in its spacious lyricism contrasting with a 'jerky' rhythmic idea. The performance by Kathryn Stott and the LSO under the composer is ardently spontaneous from the first bar to the last. The solo pieces are eclectic but still somehow Lloydian. The recording is first rate.

Concerto for Violin & Strings; Concerto for Violin & Winds

🔑 * Albany TROY 316. Anghelescu, Philh. O, Parry

George Lloyd's Concerto for Violin and Strings is very much in the great English tradition of writing for string orchestra, with or without a soloist. Its plaintive opening develops a plangent melancholy in the first movement. The rhythmically quirky Scherzo which follows is more cheerful, but the clouds do not lift entirely and it is left to the dancing finale to round off the work, but the closing bars are curiously equivocal. The Concerto for Violin and Winds is more robustly extrovert, neoclassical, acerbic, and brilliantly and originally scored. Its slow movement is bitter-sweet, very touching, but again producing an ambivalence of feeling, which strays into the initially light-hearted, dancing finale. In both works the Romanian soloist Cristina Anghelescu has just the right temperament for the music's quixotic changes of mood. David Parry directs, in partnership with his soloist, definitive recorded performances. The recording too is first class and most realistically balanced.

Symphonies 1 in A; 12

🔑 * Albany TROY 032-2. Albany SO, composer

The pairing of George Lloyd's first and last symphonies is particularly appropriate, as they share a theme-and-variations format. The First is relatively lightweight. The mature Twelfth uses the same basic layout but ends calmly with a ravishingly sustained pianissimo, semi-Mahlerian in intensity, that is among the composer's most beautiful inspirations. At the beginning of the work, the listener is soon aware of the noble lyrical theme which is the very heart of the Symphony. The Albany Symphony Orchestra gave the work its première and they play it with enormous conviction and eloquence, helped by the superb acoustics of the Troy Savings Bank Music Hall, which produces sound of demonstration quality.

Symphonies 2; 9

 Albany TROY 055. BBC PO, composer

Lloyd's Second Symphony is a lightweight, extrovert piece, conventional in form and construction, though in the finale the composer flirts briefly with polytonality, an experiment he did not repeat. The Ninth (1969) is similarly easy-going; the Largo is rather fine, but its expressive weight is in scale, and the finale, 'a merry-go-round that keeps going round and round', has an appropriately energetic brilliance. Throughout both works the invention is attractive, and in these definitive performances, extremely well recorded, the composer's advocacy is very persuasive.

Symphony 3 in F; Charade (suite)

 Albany TROY 90. BBC PO, composer

The Third Symphony clearly subdivides into three sections, and it is the central Lento which has the tune, a winding, nostalgic theme that persists in the memory. It is atmospherically prepared and eventually blossoms sumptuously. Charade dates from the 1960s and attempts to portray the London scene of the time, from aggressive Student Power and LSD to Flying Saucers and Pop Song. The ironic final movement, Party Politics, is amiable rather than wittily abrasive. The composer is good at bringing his music vividly to life, and he is very well recorded indeed.

Symphony 4

🔑 * Albany AR 002. Albany SO, composer

George Lloyd's Fourth Symphony was composed during his convalescence after being badly shell-shocked while serving in the Arctic convoys of 1941/2. The first movement is directly related to this period of his life, and the listener may be surprised at the relative absence of sharp dissonance. After a brilliant Scherzo, the infectious finale is amiable, offering a series of quick, 'march-like tunes', which the composer explains by suggesting that 'when the funeral is over the band plays quick cheerful tunes to go home'. Under Lloyd's direction, the Albany Symphony Orchestra play with great commitment and a natural, spontaneous feeling. The recording is superb.

Symphonies 4; 5; 8

Ⓜ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 2258 (3). Philh. O, Downes

Here are three of George Lloyd's most representative symphonies, including the five-movement Fifth, opening with a deceptively simple Pastorale, but with two intensely expressive slow movements, a Chorale and Lamento; and the Eighth, the first to be heard in public after the composer's recovery from his wartime experiences. The performances are excellent and the Lyrita recording is in every way first class, making this set a very generous sampler for this repertoire.

Symphony 5 in B flat

🔑  Albany TROY 022-2. BBC PO, composer

The Fifth Symphony is a large canvas, with five strong and contrasted movements, adding up to nearly an hour of music. It was written during a happy period spent living simply on the shore of Lac Neuchâtel, during the very hot summer of 1947. In the finale, the composer tells us, 'everything is brought in to make as exhilarating a sound as possible – strong rhythms, vigorous counterpoints, energetic brass and percussion'. The symphony is played with much commitment by the BBC Philharmonic under the composer, who creates a feeling of spontaneously live music-making throughout. The recording is first class.

Symphonies (i) 6; (ii) 10 (November Journeys); (i) Overture: John Socman

(*) Albany TROY 15-2. (i) BBC PO; (ii) BBC PO Brass; composer

The bitter-sweet lyricism of the first movement of November Journeys is most attractive, but the linear writing is more complex than usual in a work for brass. In the finale a glowing cantando melody warms the spirit, to contrast with the basic Energico. The Calma slow movement is quite haunting, no doubt reflecting the composer's series of visits to English cathedrals, the reason for the subtitle. The Sixth Symphony is amiable and lightweight; it is more like a suite than a symphony. Lloyd's performances are attractively spontaneous and well played, and the equally agreeable John Socman Overture also comes off well, although it is rather inconsequential.

Symphony 7

🔑 * Albany TROY 057. BBC PO, composer

The Seventh Symphony is a programme symphony, using the ancient Greek legend of Proserpine. The slow movement is particularly fine, an extended soliloquy of considerable expressive power. The last and longest movement is concerned with 'the desperate side of our lives – "Dead dreams that the snows have shaken, Wild leaves that the winds have taken" – ' yet, as is characteristic with Lloyd, the darkness is muted; nevertheless the resolution at the end is curiously satisfying. Again he proves an admirable exponent of his own music. The recording is splendid.

Symphony 8

 Albany TROY 230. Philh. O, composer

After his severe depression and nervous breakdown, Lloyd gave up composing entirely for many years, earning his living instead as a mushroom farmer, only gradually turning back to composition. The Eighth Symphony, written in 1961 – the first to be heard in public – is a product of that long recuperative period, and in the openness of inspiration (passionately English) it both belies earlier depression and testifies to the success of composition as therapy. Linked by a six-note leitmotif, the work holds well together. Even if the scherzando finale is arguably a little too long for its material, the elliptical first movement (opening and closing atmospherically and with a richly memorable secondary theme) and the eloquently sustained Largo both show the composer at his finest. The recording, made in the spacious acoustics of Watford Town Hall, is first class.

Symphony 11

 Albany TROY 060. Albany SO, composer

The urgently dynamic first movement of the Eleventh Symphony is described by the composer as being 'all fire and violence', but any anger in the music quickly evaporates, and it conveys rather a mood of exuberance, with very full orchestral forces unleashed. With the orchestra for which the work was commissioned, Lloyd conducts a powerful performance, very well played. The recording, made in the Music Hall of Troy Savings Bank near Albany, is spectacularly sumptuous and wide-ranging.

PIANO MUSIC

Aubade (fantasy suite); Eventide; The Road through Samarkand

🔑  Albany Troy 248. Goldstone and Clemmow (piano duet)

Aubade, written in 1971, is a substantial suite of some 38 minutes' length, a dream-like fantasy, with pictures flitting through his mind at dawn. Its evocations are impressionistic, its flavour distinctly Gallic. It is all brilliantly imagined and its colourful imagery is vividly realized in a bravura performance by Anthony Goldstone and Caroline Clemmow. Eventide is a touching re-presentation and elaboration of a carol from the composer's youth – a simple melody which is charmingly ingenuous and not sentimentalized. The Road through Samarkand is a virtuoso toccata dominated by a simple motto theme. It is full of rhythmic interest, often syncopated, and the players clearly relish the virtuosity it demands. In short these are first-rate performances of highly communicative music which shows the composer at his most successfully spontaneous. The recording is vivid but somewhat over-reverberant.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Requiem; Psalm 130

🔑 ✿ * Albany TROY 450. (i) Wallace; Exon Singers, Owens

The Requiem was George Lloyd's final work and it represents the composer's infinitely touching farewell to life, which he always celebrated with vigour in spite of his many disappointments. It is written for counter-tenor and small chorus, although the choral writing is as rich in melody and harmony as anything in the Symphonic Mass. Indeed at 50 minutes the Requiem is hardly less ambitious, and one does not sense a smaller scale. Because of his realization that he would not have enough time to complete a large orchestral score, Lloyd turned to the organ, and that proved one of the work's principal strengths, for the organ writing is often thrilling and always imaginatively resourceful. The work is splendidly sung and played (the organist, Jeffry Makinson, deserves his own Rosette). It is inspirational in feeling, with that special quality that almost always comes with a first recording. The simple a cappella setting of Psalm 130, written in 1995, makes an apt coupling. The recording itself, made in the Church of St Alban the Martyr, Holborn, is first class, but black marks for the documentation, which provides no translation of the Latin text of the Requiem and omits the words of the Psalm altogether.

A Symphonic Mass

🔑 ✿ * Albany TROY 100. Brighton Festival Ch., Bournemouth SO, composer

George Lloyd's Symphonic Mass is his masterpiece. Written for chorus and orchestra (but no soloists) on the largest scale, the work is linked by a recurring main theme, a real tune which soon lodges insistently in the listener's memory, even though it is modified at each reappearance. It first appears as a quiet setting of the words Christe eleison, nearly four minutes into the Kyrie. The climax of the whole work is the combined Sanctus and Benedictus, with the latter framed centrally. To the words, Dominus Deus, the great melody finds its apotheosis in a passage marked largamente con fervore. Then the Sanctus reasserts itself dramatically and, after a cry of despair from the violins, the movement reaches its overwhelmingly powerful and dissonant dénouement. Peace is then restored in the Agnus Dei, where the composer tells us the words Dona nobis pacem became almost unbearably poignant for him. The performance is magnificent and the recording is fully worthy, spaciously balanced within the generous acoustic of the Guildhall, Southampton, and overwhelmingly realistic, even in the huge climax of the Sanctus with its shattering percussion.

Iernin (opera; complete)

 Albany TROY 121/3 (3). Hill Smith, Pogson, Herford, Rivers, Powell, BBC Singers & Concert O, composer

George Lloyd was only 21 when in the early 1930s he wrote this ambitious opera, and there is an open innocence in the warmly atmospheric, lyrical score. The piece was inspired by an ancient Cornish legend about ten maidens turned into a circle of stones, one of whom, Iernin (pronounced Ee-ernin), returns in human form. Though this is ostensibly an old-fashioned opera, it deserves revival, and on the recording – taken from a BBC Radio 3 presentation in 1988 – the composer conducts a red-blooded, warmly expressive reading. Though some of the ensemble writing is less distinguished, the offstage choruses of faery folk are most effective. As to the soloists, Marilyn Hill Smith sings brightly in the title-role with all the agility needed, and the tenor, Geoffrey Pogson, copes well with the hero's role, if with rather coarse tone. The most distinguished singing comes from the rich-toned contralto, Claire Powell, as Cunaide. The third disc includes a half-hour interview with the composer, which makes up in part for the absence of background notes in the booklet with the libretto. Excellent, well-balanced BBC sound.

LLOYD WEBBER, Andrew (born 1948)

Requiem

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca 478054-2. Brightman, Domingo, Winchester Cathedral Ch., ECO, Maazel

This Requiem may be derivative at many points, with echoes of Carl Orff – not to mention the Requiems of both Verdi and Fauré – but with Maazel conducting a performance of characteristic intensity, it certainly has a life of its own. The Pie Jesu is a model of bridge-building, a melody beautiful and individual by any standard, which yet has all the catchiness of one of Lloyd Webber's tunes in a musical. Plainly the high, bright voice of Sarah Brightman was the direct inspiration, and the beauty of her singing certainly earns her her place alongside Plácido Domingo, contributing in a rather less prominent role. Radiant sounds from the Winchester Cathedral Choir, not least the principal treble, Paul Miles-Kingston. Above all, this is music to which one returns with increasing appreciation and pleasure. The sound is excellent, with good presence.

LÔBO, Alonso (c. 1555–1617)

Motets: Audivi vocem de coelo; Pater peccavi

(BB)  Naxos 8.553310. Ars Nova, Holten (with Concert of Portuguese Polyphony ) – CARDOSO: Motets; MAGALHAES: Missa O Soberana luz, etc. ***

Lôbo's two beautiful motets, Audivi vocem de coelo ('I heard a voice from heaven') and Pater peccavi ('Father, I have sinned'), confirm the individuality of his writing. They are part of an outstandingly sung collection which is among the most desirable records of its kind in the catalogue.

Motets: Ave Maria; Credo quod redemptor; Versa est in Luctum; Vivo ego, dicit Dominus

Ⓑ  Gimell CDGIM 205 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips – CARDOSO: Requiem; Duarte LÔBO: Requiem; VICTORIA Requiem ***

These four motets by Alonso Lôbo (not related to Duarte) include a striking setting of Versa est in Luctum, also set by Victoria in connection with his Requiem, although Lôbo's piece is not associated with a Missa pro defunctis. But Credo quod redemptor is also memorable, and so is the beautiful Ave Maria, which is complex in structure but sounds richly serene, with a lovely final Amen.

LÔBO, Duarte (c. 1565–1646)

Missa pro defunctis

🔑 Ⓑ  Gimell CDGIM 205 (2). Tallis Scholars, Phillips – CARDOSO: Requiem; Alonso LÔBO: Motets; VICTORIA Requiem ***

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550682. Oxford Schola Cantorum, Summerly – CARDOSO: Missa pro defunctis ***

Missa pro defunctis (Requiem); Audivi vocem de coelo

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55138. William Byrd Ch., G. Turner – Filip de MAGALHÁES; Missa Dilecus meus ***

Duarte Lôbo's Requiem for double choir (eight voices) is an exceptionally rich and firmly harmonized work. The general effect is homophonic, but there is some simple polyphonic interplay in the Gradual and the Offertory. This is a work of dignity and deep feeling, and it is superbly sung by the William Byrd Choir, who also offer the celestial motet, Audivi vocem de coelo. Their coupling is music by Lôbo's Portuguese contemporary, Filip de Magalháes, which is hardly less beautiful.

Undoubtedly the Tallis Scholars are also completely at home in this music, and the smaller scale of their performances brings added clarity without too much loss of atmosphere. The singing itself is radiantly pure and beautiful. If you want the Victoria Requiem also, this Gimell Double is the version to go for.

Lôbo's Missa pro defunctis for double choir is a work of beautiful flowing lines (following directly on from Palestrina), bold dramatic contrasts and ardent depth of feeling. The Agnus Dei is particularly beautiful. A solo treble briefly introduces each section except the Kyrie, which adds to the effect of the presentation. This is another triumph from Jeremy Summerly and his excellent Oxford group (38 singers), who catch both the Latin fervour and the underlying serenity of a work which has a memorably individual voice.

LOCATELLI, Pietro (1695–1764)

L'Arte del violino (12 Violin Concertos), Op. 3

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66721/3. E. Wallfisch, Raglan Bar. Players, Kraemer

12 Concerti grossi, Op. 1

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553445/6. Capella Istropolitana

Concerti grossi, Op. 1/2, 4, 7, 8 (Christmas Concerto), 9 & 10

🔑 * HM HMC 90 1889. Freiburg Bar. O, von der Goltz

Pietro Locatelli was a younger contemporary of Handel and Vivaldi. It was in 1733 that he wrote L'Arte del violino. In its outer movements each of the twelve concertos includes an extended Capriccio of enormous technical difficulty, with fast, complicated, sometimes stratospheric, upper tessitura. The slow movements, by contrast, produce a series of flowing ideas that have an inherent Handelian grace. Elizabeth Wallfisch not only throws off the fireworks with ease but produces an appealingly gleaming lyrical line. With excellent, vital and stylish support from Kraemer and his Raglan Baroque Players, this may be counted a stimulating authentic re-creation of a set of concertos which had a profound influence on the violin technique of the time.

Locatelli's set of Opus 1 Concerti grossi, although indebted to Corelli (with the Eighth of the set ending with a Christmas Pastorale), similarly has a style and personality all its own. The invention is vigorous, the expressive range appealing. The Capella Istropolitana play with crisp attack, plenty of sparkle and resilient rhythms, while slow movements reveal a keen identity with the lessons of period performance, even though modern instruments are used. The Naxos recording is admirable.

Alternatively, the superb period-instrument group, the Freiburg Baroque Ensemble, give us what they consider are the six best of the concertos on a single disc. Their superb playing makes this CD a clear first choice among Locatelli issues, even finer than the Naxos complete Opus 1, which offers twice as much music for less cost.

LOCKE, Matthew (c. 1621–77)

Consort of Fower Parts: Suites 1 in D min.; 2 in D min./maj.; 3 & 4 in F; 5 in G min.; 6 in G

 Astrée ES 9921. Hespèrion XX

Consort of Fower Parts: Suites 1–6; Flatt Consort a 3 'for my cousin Kemble'

 Global Music Network GMNC 0109. Phantasm

Matthew Locke, born in Devon, was a choirboy at Exeter Cathedral, but when Charles II was restored to the throne of England, Locke became Master of the King's Music at the royal court; but he probably wrote the Consort of Fower Parts earlier, in the 1650s. If they are not ambitious in instrumentation, they are much more so in musical achievement. Each suite opens with a Fantazie and then follows a standard sequence of Courante, Ayre and Saraband. Locke's suites were regarded at the time as being composed, 'after the old style', but the music itself is forward-looking and by no means predictable. It seems likely that they would have been performed with continuo, a practice followed sparingly in the Hespèrion performance, using a double harp and organ.

Both sets of performances are highly musical, scholarly and well recorded, but there is a first choice. In the dance movements there is an extra rhythmic vigour and buoyancy with Hespèrion, and in the Ayres of the First and Second Suites, for instance, there is extra expressive warmth.

However, Phantasm also play this music delightfully. Their approach is intimate yet also reveals the music's expressive qualities as being considerable, while the dance movements are very sprightly. They are admirably recorded and they also include the ambitious suite of six movements which the composer wrote for his cousin which includes no fewer than three Fantazies.

Anthems: Be thou exalted Lord; How doth the city sit solitary; Lord let me know mine end; O be joyful in the Lord, all ye lands. Oxford Ode: Descende caelo cincta sororibus. Latin Motets: Audi, Domine, clamantes ad te; Jesu, auctor clementie

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55250. New College, Oxford, Ch., Parley of Instruments, Higginbottom

Like others of his era Matthew Locke (although he was a Catholic himself) wrote Anglican music, including some fine anthems, as well as concerted Latin works. Apart from demands on his time at the court, he had a strong connection with Oxford and he wrote the so-called Oxford Ode for an academic celebration. There is plenty of variety here. Super flumina Babylon, a setting of Psalm 136, opens with a solemn two-movement Sinfonia. O be joyful in the Lord is as good-tempered as it sounds, with an attractive string accompaniment. Yet How doth the city (with an almost orchestral organ accompaniment) is a melancholy setting of verses from the Lamentations of Jeremiah. Lord let me know mine end has a diminuendo at the close. But the collection ends on a triumphant note, with full choir and orchestra in Be thou exalted Lord. Male voices are used throughout, as women began to sing in English choirs only in the 1770s. A most worthwhile collection, well sung throughout, and recorded in a comparatively dry acoustic to match the sound the composer would have expected both in Oxford and in London.

LOEWE, Carl (1796–1869)

9 Ballads

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 91990-2 (2). Fischer-Dieskau, Moore – MENDELSSOHN: Lieder ***

Loewe, born the year before Schubert, lived on into the age of Wagner. This excellent collection, recorded in 1967, shows why his reputation stood so high, and could readily do so again. Last century there were many who preferred Loewe's setting of the Erlking to Schubert's, and here Fischer-Dieskau uses all his tonal virtuosity to underline the contrasted characterization, bringing the hair-raising story vividly to life. The ballad Edward too is most memorably done, and other items like Der Schatzgrüber ('The Treasure-Seeker') and Tom der Reimer are also memorable. Throughout, Gerald Moore uses all his art in the accompaniments, and full texts and translations are included.

LOEWE, Frederick (1901–88)

with LERNER, Alan Jay (1918–86)

My Fair Lady (Musical)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ () Sony mono SMK 89997. Andrews, Harrison, Holloway, King and original cast, Ch. & O, Allers (with Post-Recording Conversations and Playback)

There are many who count My Fair Lady as the greatest musical of all, with a script by George Bernard Shaw and brilliantly apt lyrics by Alan Jay Lerner, and who can argue with them, for Frederick Loewe's score was no less inspired. There are sixteen numbers here, and not a dud among them, when most modern musicals manage with one or two hits, endlessly reprised.

This is not the later, stereo recording (which is far inferior) but the original mono LP, recorded in 1956 and vividly transferred to CD; moreover it includes the witty original orchestrations by Robert Russell Bennett and Phil Lang, which apparently are no longer in use today in the interests of theatrical economy and a smaller orchestra.

LOMBARDINI, Maddelena Laura see Sirmen, Maddelena

LORTZING, Albert (1801–51)

Der Wildschütz (operetta) complete

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 3 81837-2. Rothenburger, Litz, Wunderlich, Prey, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, Heger

Der Wildschütz ('The Poacher') is an engaging piece that aims merely to charm and delight in an idiom that echoes Mendelssohn and Weber. The tangle of plot is improbable, a storm in a rustic teapot, but the characters are sharply and endearingly delineated, and one can readily understand why the operetta has never been out of the repertory in Germany and remains a firm favourite. The key recording of the work under Bernard Klee on DG is at present withdrawn, but Robert Heger's EMI/Electrola set, dating from 1963, is most enjoyable too, and is well cast, though the performance sparkles less and the recording is more limited. But it is still worth considering (now reissued with a good keyed synopsis) for the singing of the late Fritz Wunderlich in the role of the hero, even finer than Peter Schreier on DG.

Zar und Zimmermann (DVD version)

 Arthaus DVD 101 269. Wolansky, Haage, Sotin, Popp, Fliether, Hamburg State Ballet, Ch., Hamburg Philharmonic State O, Mackerras (Dir: Rolf Liebermann, V/D: Joachim Hess)

Zar und Zimmermann ('The Tsar and the Carpenter') is a frothy, comic romp of mistaken identities, centring around Tsar Peter the Great who is working in the shipyards of Saardam under an assumed name. All sorts of complications ensue but, of course, all ends happily. Written in 1837, it was the work which marked Lortzing's maturing in terms of sophistication and musical personality. There is plenty of characterization and variety in the parts, and the construction of the finales is especially impressive (they have been likened to those of Mozart). The opera brims with good tunes. This DVD is an early colour television production, dating from 1969, and both the picture and sound-quality are very good for the period. The cast is excellent, featuring such a starry name as Lucia Popp, and the conducting under Mackerras has tremendous zing. Indeed, the sense of fun is conveyed splendidly. The sets and costumes are attractive and unpretentious, rare commodities in many of today's opera productions.

LÜBECK, Vincent (1654–1740)

Chorales: Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ; Nun Last uns Gott den Herren; Preludes: in C; D min.; E; G; G min.; Preludes & Fugues in C min. & F min.

Ⓜ  Oehms SACD Surround Sound OC 507. Kelemen (Huss-Schnitger organ of St Cosmae et Damiani zu Stade)

The magnificent organ of St Cosmae et Damiani is the star of this disc, magnificently recorded, which in surround sound makes one think one is sitting in the church itslf. Joseph Keleman contributes, of course, for he brings all this music fully to life, revelling in the bravura, and especially in using the pedals. This is the perfect instrument for this repertoire, for Vincent Lübeck was appointed organist at St Cosmae in 1674, although he would not have known the sound of the present instrument. The music included here has only recently come to light and it all sounds pretty marvellous in Kelemen's hands, with the registration consistently imaginative. The opening Preludium in C minor has a thundering pedal solo, with three fugues following, and there are more spectacular pedal solos in the Preludes in D, G minor and D minor. Contrast is provided by the Choral Prelude, Nun Last uns Gott den Herren, in which Kelemen invests the variations with piquant colouring. He is equally imaginative in the Choral fantasia, Ich ruf zu dir, Herr Jesu Christ, using echo effects in the reeds, while the closing D minor Prelude, which has one of the longest fugues in North German organ writing, ends with a virtuoso toccata. All in all, a pretty stimulating recital.

LUDFORD, Nicholas (1485–1557)

Masses; Magnificat benedicta & Motets (as listed below)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Gaudeamus CDGAX 426 (4). Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Missa Benedicta et venerabilis; Magnificat benedicta

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 132. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Missa Christi Virgo dilectissima; Motet: Domine Ihesu Christie

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 133. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Missa Lapidaverunt Stephanum; Ave Maria ancilla trinitatis

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 140. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

Missa Videte miraculum; Motet: Ave cuius conceptio

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 131. Cardinall's Musick, Carwood

This four-CD box gathers together the four splendid discs of Ludford's music performed by Andrew Carwood and his excellent group of singers, who are individually as impressive as in the blended whole. This is music of remarkably passionate feeling, and it brings to life a composer who spent much of his working life in St Stephen's Chapel at St Margaret's, Westminster. He was an ardent Catholic and was very happily married – he paid for his wife to have her own pew and gave her an elaborate ceremonial burial. He then married again, and his second wife was instructed to prepare something more modest for his interment alongside his beloved first spouse. His music is little short of extraordinary, and we hope our Rosette will tempt collectors to explore it, either through this comprehensive box, or by trying one of the individual issues.

LUIGINI, Alexandre (1850–1906)

Ballet Egyptien, Op. 12 (suite)

Ⓑ  CfP (ADD) 352399-2. RPO, Fistoulari – KETÈLBEY: Collection ***

Because of its bandstand popularity, Luigini's amiable and tuneful Ballet Egyptien has never been taken very seriously. However, the four-movement suite is highly engaging (both the two central sections have good tunes), especially when played as affectionately and stylishly as here under that master conductor of ballet, Anatole Fistoulari. The 1958 recording has come up remarkably freshly, and this makes an excellent bonus for an outstanding Ketèlbey concert.

LULLY, Jean-Baptiste (1632–87)

Lés Comédies Ballets: excerpts from: (i) Les Amants magnifiques; L'Amour Médecin; Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme; Georges Dandin (Le Grand Divertissement royal de Versailles); Monsieur de Pourceaugnac (Le Divertissement de Chambourd); Pastoral comique; Les Plaisirs de l'île enchantée; (ii) Phaéton (tragédie en musique; complete)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 2564 62184-2 (2). (i) Poulenard, Mellon, Ragon, Laplénie, Verschaeve, Delétré, Cantor; (ii) Crook, Yakar, J. Smith, Gens, Thereul, Sagittarius Vocal Ens.; Musiciens du Louve, Minkowski

The series of comédies-ballets represented here were written between 1663 and 1670, and their tuneful and often outrageous burlesque represents an unparalleled comic partnership between composer and playwright – French insouciance combined with witty bucolique music which obviously reflects the influence of Italian comic opera, yet never loses its Gallic character, especially in the charming and often beautiful pastoral airs.

The ensemble of 'Ironic salutation to Men of Medicine' (Lully despised doctors) in L'Amour médecin is matched by the robust male interchanges while wallowing in the hedonistic pleasures of L'île enchantée, and there are similar comically boisterous ensembles in the divertissement, Georges Dandin, although they are perhaps capped by the extraordinary excerpt from Monsieur de Pourceaugnac, which makes fun of polygamy. The two longest selections come from Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, and, finally, the masterly third intermède of Les Amants magnifiques, which combines a gentler humour with graceful lyricism. The team of soloists clearly relishes every humorous situation, and the presentation has consistent sparkle and spontaneity, while the lyrical music is most persuasively phrased by singers and orchestra alike.

Phaéton tells the famous story of the attempt of the son of Jupiter to drive across the heavens in his father's chariot. The horses bolt and Jupiter strikes him dead, to the apparent rejoicing of everyone. When Lybye can then be partnered by her beloved Epaphus, it is hardly a tragedy at all, with their love celebrated earlier in two brief but intensely beautiful duets. The cast is strong – Véronique Gens is most affecting as Lybye, with Rachael Yakar and Jennifer

Smith impressive too, and Howard Crook clean-focused and stylish in the name-part. Throughout the two discs, Marc Minkowski's direction is compellingly fresh and resilient. Both recordings are co-productions between Erato and Radio France and are strikingly vivid and immediate. One laments the appalling documentation, or lack of it, but this set is not to be missed.

Motets: Benedictus; Exaudi Deus; O dulcissime; Notus in Judaea Deus

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554389. Concert Spirituel, Nicquet

Master of the King's Music in the golden age of Louis XIV, Lully dominated French music for over 30 years, carefully keeping such composers as Charpentier in the background. Though in depth he may not quite match Charpentier, let alone Purcell, he was consistently lively and inventive. This excellent Naxos issue offers three of the larger-scale, multi-movement motets with choir and soloists, set against two of the best-known 'little' motets for soloists alone, including the beautiful O dulcissime. First-rate French performances, with no singers individually named.

OPERA

Atys (opera; complete)

 HM HMC 901257/9 (3). de Mey, Mellon, Laurens, Gardeil, Semellaz, Rime, Les Arts Florissants Ch. & O, Christie

Christie and his excellent team give life and dramatic speed consistently to the performance of Atys, and there are many memorable numbers, not least those in the sleep interlude of Act III. Outstanding in the cast are the high tenor, Guy de Mey, in the name-part and Agnès Mellon as the nymph, Sangaride, with whom he falls in love.

Persée (DVD version; complete)

 EuroArts DVD 2054178. Auvity, Lenormand, Novacek, Whicher, Laquerre, Coulombe, Ainsworth, Tafelmusik Chamber Ch. & Bar. O, Niquet (V/D: Marc Stone)

Set in the historic Elgin Theatre in Toronto, Marshall Pynkoski's production for Tafelmusik under its lively music-director, Hervé Niquet, offers a staging as close as possible to the original (1682) presentation of the opera in the Palace of Versailles. Costumes are sumptuously baroque, and the sort of stage effects popular at the time, with gods coming down from the flies, add to the effectiveness. The work itself is a traditional tragédie lyrique in five acts, lasting just over two hours, with arioso taking the place of set numbers, punctuated in each act by dances – cue for ballet from the Atelier Company. The plot involves the linking of two classical legends, taken from Ovid's Metamorphoses: Perseus's slaying of Medusa, and his rescue of Andromeda, daughter of the King of Ethiopia. The title-role of Persée – who appears for the first time only in Act III – is very well taken by the high tenor, Cyril Auvity, and though the other principals are variable the piece moves swiftly. The role of Medusa is taken by a bearded baritone, Olivier Laquerre, rather roughish for this repertory, if characterful, particularly in the solo of lamentation for loss of his/her beauty.

LUMBYE, Hans Christian

(1810–74)

Amelie Waltz; Britta Polka; Champagne Galop; Columbine Polka Mazurka; Concert Polka (for 2 violins and orchestra); Copenhagen Steam Railway Galop; Dream Pictures (fantasy); The Lady of St Petersburg (polka); The Guards of Amager: Final Galop; My Salute to St Petersburg (march); Napoli (ballet): Final Galop; Polonaise with Cornet Solo; Queen Louise's Waltz; Salute to August Bournonville; St Petersburg Champagne Galop

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1155. Odense SO, Guth

The superb Regis collection (originally on Unicorn) offers 75 minutes of the composer's best music, with wonderfully spontaneous performances demonstrating above all its elegance and gentle grace. It opens with a vigorous Salute to August Bournonville and closes with a Champagne Galop to rival Johann junior's polka. In between comes much to enchant, not least the delightful Amelie Waltz and the haunting Dream Pictures Fantasia with its diaphanous opening texture and lilting main theme. But Lumbye's masterpiece is the unforgettable Copenhagen Steam Railway Galop. This whimsical yet vivid portrayal of a local Puffing Billy begins with the gathering of passengers at the station – obviously dressed for the occasion in a more elegant age than ours. The little engine then wheezingly starts up and proceeds on its short journey, finally drawing to a dignified halt against interpolated cries from the station staff. Because of the style and refinement of its imagery, it is much the most endearing of musical railway evocations, and the high-spirited lyricism of the little train racing through the countryside, its whistle peeping, is enchanting. This is a superbly entertaining disc, showing the Odense Symphony Orchestra and its conductor Peter Guth as naturally suited to this repertoire as was the VPO under Boskovsky in the music of the Strauss family. The recording has a warm and sympathetic ambience which gives a lovely bloom to the whole concert. This reissue is a bargain if ever there was one.

LUTOSŁAWSKI, Witold

(1913–94)

Cello Concerto

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 67867-2. Rostropovich, O de Paris, composer – DUTILLEUX: Cello Concerto ****

The Cello Concerto was written in response to a commission by Rostropovich. As in some other Lutosławski pieces, there are aleatory elements in the score, though these are carefully controlled. The sonorities are fascinating and are heard to good advantage on the EMI CD. The soloist is rather forward, but in every other respect the recording is extremely realistic. Rostropovich is in his element and gives a superb account of the solo role, and the composer's direction of the accompaniment is grippingly authoritative.

(i; ii; iii) Cello Concerto; (i; ii; iv) Concerto for Oboe, Harp & Chamber Orchestra; (v) Concerto for

Orchestra; (i; ii; ix) Dance Preludes; (i; vi; vii) Les Espaces du sommeil; (v) Funeral Music; (i; vii) Symphony 3; (viii) Variations on a Theme by Paganini; (v) Venetian Games

Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD) 464 043-2 (2). (i) composer; (ii) Bav. RSO; (iii) Schiff; (iv) H. and U. Holliger; (v) Nat. SO of Warsaw, Rowicki; (vi) Fischer-Dieskau; (vii) BPO; (viii) Argerich, Freire; (ix) Brunner

This is an excellent bargain-price introduction to Lutosławski which includes many of his most important works. The Third Symphony is given an authoritative performance under the direction of the composer, while Les Espaces du sommeil is performed by its dedicatee, Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, and more definitive versions could hardly be imagined. Recorded around the same time in equally impressive performances was the Cello Concerto with Heinrich Schiff, a fine work, while the Concerto for Oboe, Harp and Chamber Orchestra was written for the Holligers, who perform it here; it mingles charm, irony and intelligence in equal measures. The Dance Preludes date from 1953 and were later scored for clarinet and orchestra, as recorded here. They are more folk-like in idiom and are attractively presented by Eduard Brunner (clarinet). The Paganini Variations, a piano duo dating from 1941, is exhilarating and is played with great virtuosity by Martha Argerich and Nelson Freire. The Funeral Music is an angular work which makes some impression, but is rather empty. Venetian Games is music of wider appeal, while the famous Concerto for Orchestra – a brilliant and highly attractive work – is thoroughly idiomatic. All the Rowicki performances are excellently recorded and have transferred very well to CD. A bargain set in every way.

(i; ii) Cello Concerto; (ii) ;(iii) 7 Preludes & Fugue for 13 Solo Strings; (iv) String Quartet; (v; ii) Paroles tissées; (ii; vi) 3 Poèmes d'Henri Michaux; (vii; ii) 5 Songs for Soprano & Orchestra (The Sea; Storm; Winter; Knights; Church Bells)

🔑 Ⓑ  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 85773-2 (2). (i) Jablonski; (ii) Polish R. Nat. SO; (iii) Polish CO; all cond. composer; (iv) Alban Berg Qt; (v) Louis Devos; (vi) Kraków R. Ch.; (vii) Lukomska

This valuable collection was recorded under the auspices of the composer in the Polish Radio Studios in Kraków in 1976–7, with the String Quartet added much later, in 1995. Roman Jablonski's account of the Cello Concerto still stands up well against the competition, though it is not a first choice. The searching Seven Preludes and Fugue for Strings (1970–2) show the mature Lutosławski and are vividly played by the Polish orchestra, as is the short, elliptical Postlude (1958). The choral Poèmes d'Henri Michaux date from the early 1960s. With their variety of effects, including whispering and syllabic monotones, the writing readily contrasts with the atmospheric Paroles tissées ('Woven Words') with its mystical feeling and remarkable word-imagery. The equally atmospheric Five Songs (written in 1957 and orchestrated the following year) find a highly sympathetic and idiomatic soloist in Halina Lukomska, with the texturally intriguing accompaniments catching the ear quite as much as the vocal line.

In his two-movement String Quartet Lutosławski tells us that he uses 'chance elements to enrich the rhythmic and expressive character of the music without in any way limiting the authority of the composer over the final shape of the piece'. Altogether this inexpensive survey offers a well-conceived demonstration of the composer's breadth of achievement. As might be expected, performances are of a generally high standard and the analogue recordings have been transferred very well to CD.

Concerto for Orchestra; Mi-parti; Overture for Strings; (i) 3 Poems by Henri Michaux

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553779. (i) Camerata Silesia Ch., Szostak; Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

The settings of the surrealist poet, Henri Michaux, dating from the early 1960s, are highly original in their use of choral textures, and Mi-parti in a single span, slow then fast, points forward in the brilliance and originality of its interplay of instruments to the later symphonies. Strong and purposeful performances, vividly recorded in full, immediate sound.

(i) Piano Concerto; Little Suite; Symphonic Variations; Symphony 2

(BB)  Naxos 8.553169. (i) Paleczny; Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

The early, tonal Symphonic Variations make an attractive introduction to the second of Naxos's discs in what aims to cover his complete orchestral music. The Little Suite is an approachable work too, before the much tougher and more substantial symphony and concerto, which make up the greater part of the disc. In two massive movements, Hesitant and Direct, Symphony 2 is an uncompromising piece, and here it is helped by a purposeful, very well-rehearsed performance. The Piano Concerto is even more elusive, often fragmentary, but again the performance is magnetic: Paleczny plays with a clarity and brilliance that sound totally idiomatic. Excellent sound, with good presence.

Dance Preludes (for clarinet & orchestra)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55068. King, ECO, Litton – BLAKE: Clarinet Concerto; SEIBER: Concertino ***

 Chan. 8618. Hilton, SNO, Bamert – COPLAND; NIELSEN: Concertos ***

Lutosławski's five folk-based vignettes are a delight in the hands of Thea King and Andrew Litton, who give sharply characterized performances, thrown into bold relief by the bright, clear recording. An excellent bargain reissue.

Janet Hilton also emphasizes their contrasts with her expressive lyricism and crisp articulation in the lively numbers. Excellent recording.

Paganini Variations for Piano & Orchestra

 Australian Decca Eloquence (mono/stereo/DDD) 476 7671. Jablonski, RPO, Ashkenazy – DOHNANYI: Variations on a Nursery Song (*) ; LISZT: Totentanz ((*)) ; RACHMANINOV: Paganini Variations **(*)

The Paganini Variations for two pianos, one of Lutosławski's earliest works (1941), is heard here in the much later orchestral transcription, with evident pleasure and delight.

Symphony 3; (i) Variations on a Theme of Paganini; (ii) Les Espaces du sommeil; (iii) Paroles tissées

(BB)  Naxos 8.553423. (i) Glemser; (ii) Kruszewski; (iii) Kusiewicz; Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

The earliest piece on Naxos, the Paganini Variations for two pianos, comes from 1941, but in 1978 the composer rearranged the piece for piano and orchestra. This and the Third Symphony from 1982 are well played and recorded. Less persuasive, perhaps, is Les Espaces du sommeil (the soloist is a bit forward, though he sings well). In the Paroles tissées the singer is less at ease both with the musical idiom and with the French language. All the same, this well-filled CD is recommendable in every other respect.

Symphony 4; (i) Chain II; Interlude; Partita; Musique funèbre

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553202. (i) Bakowski; Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

Symphony 4 is Lutosławski's culminating masterpiece which, in its concentration over two linked movements, seems to echo Sibelius's Seventh. The darkly intense Funeral Music in memory of Bartók is another beautiful and concentrated work, while the two violin concertante works, Chain II and Partita, here come with the separating Interlude, similarly thoughtful, which Lutosławski wrote as a link. In almost every way, not least in the playing of the violinist, Krzysztow Bakowski, these Polish performances match and even outshine earlier recordings conducted by the composer, helped by full, brilliant sound.

Variations on a Theme of Paganini

Ⓜ  Ph. 475 8520. Argerich & Freire – RACHMANINOV: Suite 2, Op. 17; RAVEL: La valse ***

Lutosławski's Variations for piano duo are exhilarating and are played here with great virtuosity. The recording is very natural, but makes obvious the rather reverberant acoustic of the recording location.

Paganini Variations (arr. Ptasazynska)

 Chan. 9398. Safri Duo & Slovak Piano Duo – BARTÓK: Sonata for 2 Pianos & Percussion  ; HELWEG: American Fantasy **

A slight piece from Lutosławski's youth, dressed up by Marta Ptasazynska for the same forces as the Bartók Sonata. It is brilliantly played and no less remarkably recorded at a Danish Radio concert. There is enthusiastic applause, which is understandable, and whistling, which is unfortunate.

LUTYENS, Elisabeth (1906–83)

(i; ii) And Suddenly it's Evening; (iii) Quincunx

Ⓝ Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 265. (i) Handt; (ii) BBC SO (members); (iii) Nendick, Shirley-Quirk, BBC SO, Del Mar; (iv) Manning, Carewe (with (ii; iv) BEDFORD: Music for Albion Moonlight ***)

Quincunx is a hauntingly original work. The setting of lines by Sir Thomas Browne forms only a central vocal oasis (unaccompanied) in the middle of a complex series of instrumental pieces, until the music grows slower and stiller at the end, and one is reminded in the brass solos of the more direct Stravinsky. Generally with twelve-note serialism thoroughly absorbed, Elisabeth Lutyens's idiom comes closer to that of Berg in flavour, though any parallel is misleading with a work that is original in its own right. And Suddenly it's Evening is not quite so successful. There are many interesting touches in this score, but the impact of this setting of words by the poet Salvatore Quasimodo (translated by Jack Bevan) is blunted when the music is so unrelievedly slow. Like Quincunx, the performances and recording are as brilliant as can be imagined. Her music is coupled with David Bedford's the (in many ways) extraordinary Music for Albion Moonlight. With words by Kenneth Patchen, it is rather like a development of Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire that goes way beyond anything the Second Viennese School ever conceived of, and listeners should be warned of excruciating semi-tone glissandos on an instrument known as the alto-melodica. There are also sudden shrieks on the words 'Hell!' and 'Mad!' which are not recommended to those of a nervous disposition. Beautifully performed and recorded and, like the Lutyens, originally released on Argo.

MCCABE, John (born 1939)

Arthur Pendragon (ballet): Suite 1; (i) Piano Concerto 1. Pilgrim for Double String Orchestra

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7179. BBC Scottish SO, Austin, (i) with composer

Arthur Pendragon is a colourful ballet score, premièred in 2000, from which the composer compiled this four-movement Suite. The music is lively and inventive, using a battery of percussion instruments, and the composer offers a new take on the Arthurian legend. In 1998, as a result of a commission from the Brunel Ensemble, McCabe rearranged his music for The Pilgrim's Progress for double string orchestra and dedicated it to the conductor on this recording. It is an imaginative piece, written in the English string-music tradition, generally slow in pulse, but with enough variation in texture to keep the listener interested. The Piano Concerto, commissioned for the 1967 Southport Centenary Festival, is written in four movements, the first slow and brooding, which builds up to an impressive climax then launches into a brilliant but short vivo second movement. The long third movement is divided into several sections, ranging from slow and atmospheric to angrily dramatic, while the finale is generally the lightest in spirit. Elements of Vaughan Williams and Tippett run though this work (and the others on this CD) as well as Stravinsky; but McCabe does possess a distinctive voice.

(i) Flute Concerto; Symphony 4 (Of Time and the River)

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67089. BBC SO, Handley; (i) with Beynon

Completed in 1994, his Fourth Symphony, entitled Of Time and the River after Thomas Wolfe's novel, is a magnificent work in two substantial movements – fast to slow, then slow to fast. The idiom is warmer and more approachable than in McCabe's earlier music, echoing in its atmospheric orchestration and some of the melodic lines Britten on the one hand and Sibelius on the other, while remaining distinctive and new. Superb performances and vivid recording, not just of the Symphony but of the large-scale Flute Concerto McCabe wrote for James Galway. Ideal notes as well.

Edward II (ballet; complete)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67135/6 (2). Royal Ballet Sinfonia, Wordsworth

McCabe's score is at once colourfully atmospheric as well as symphonic in its thinking, vividly telling the story in mood and action, drawing on medieval sources for themes and for the 'tuckets and alarums' which add point to such a plot. Having abandoned the more severely serial stance of his earlier music. There have been few full-length ballet scores as impressive as this since Prokofiev and Britten, inspiring Barry Wordsworth and the Royal Ballet Sinfonia to a strong and colourful performance, vividly recorded.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Concerto for Piano & Wind Quintet; Fauvel's Rondeaux; Musica notturna; Postcards for Wind Quintet

Ⓜ  Dutton CDLX 7125. Fibonacci Sequence

This fresh and alert piece in four linked sections dates from 1969, early in McCabe's career, a concerto, he explains in his own illuminating note, as much for the members of the wind quintet as for the virtuoso piano soloist. The Musica notturna, dating from even earlier (1964), has a comparable sharpness in exploiting the changing moods and aspects of a great city at night, while the third of these works in linked sections dates from much more recently, Fauvel's Rondeaux of 1995. Postcards, dating from 1991, is a set of eight striking miniatures, including a bossa nova and a fugato, reworked for wind quintet from Eight Bagatelles for two clarinets, originally written in 1965. The bite and brilliance of the performances by the Fibonacci Sequence are ideal for this music, helped by full, immediate sound.

Maze Dances; (i) Star Preludes

 Metier MSV CD 92029. Sheppard Skaerved; (i) with Honma – RAWSTHORNE: Violin Sonata, etc. ***

These two substantial works by McCabe make an ideal coupling for the two fine violin pieces by Rawsthorne, a fellow composer he has long championed. Maze Dances is a brilliant and varied fantasia for unaccompanied violin, inventive and ingenious in exploiting this limited medium, while Star Preludes for violin and piano, just as varied in expression, equally reveals the composer's deep understanding of string technique. Flawless performances, beautifully recorded.

String Quartets 3, 4 & 5

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67078. Vanbrugh Qt

Few 20th-century string quartets have such a haunting opening as John McCabe's masterly Third, and the work ends with a Passacaglia which 'derives its overall shape and flow from the concept of a lakeland stream', tumbling down in irregular patterns until the return of that memorable opening motif leads to a wonderful sense of calm. The single-movement Fourth Quartet (1982) is hardly less compelling. Once again the close is comparatively peaceful, with an expressive cello soliloquy. The Fifth Quartet (1989) is programmatic and, as the very beginning makes plain, was inspired by a series of Graham Sutherland's aquatints called The Bees. These three remarkable works could hardly be presented with greater concentration or more commitment, and the recording is first class.

5 Bagatelles; Haydn Variations; Studies 3 (Gaudi); 4 (Aubade); 6 (Mosaic); Variations, Op. 22

 British Music Society BMS 424DC. Composer

The British Music Society have here published a major survey of McCabe's piano music, from the early Variations (1963) to the much more complex Haydn Variations of 1983, while the pianistically exploratory Studies span the decade between 1970 and 1980. The Bagatelles, five brief vignettes, in the words of the composer 'were written to a request for not-too-difficult 12-notes pieces', but the third and sixth Studies are extended works, architecturally inspired. McCabe is a formidable pianist and is obviously an ideal exponent of his own music. Excellent recording.

3 Folk Songs, Op. 19: Johnny was gone for a soldier; Hush-a-by Birdie; John Peel (for tenor, clarinet & piano)

 Campion Cameo 2001. Hindmarsh, Turner, Cuckson – BUSH: Prison Cycle; RAWSTHORNE: Songs **(*)

The Three Folk Songs, by John McCabe, very well sung by Martin Hindmarsh, have a neatly tailored clarinet obbligato, and the recital closes with a droll arrangement of John Peel, with its witty hornpipe pay-off.

MACCUNN, Hamish (1868–1916)

Concert overture: The Land of the Mountain and the Flood; The Dowie Dens o'Yarrow; The Ship o' the Fiend; Cantata; (i) The Lay of the Last Minstrel: Breathes There the Man; O Caledonia!; Jeannie Deans (opera; excerpts) 🔑  Hyp. CDA 66815. BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins; (i) with Watson, Milne, MacDougal, Sidholm, Gadd, Danby, Scottish Opera Ch.

The Land of the Mountain and the Flood is a very well-constructed piece, with a memorable tune. Martyn Brabbins and the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, in a brilliant new performance, give it fresh life, and the Hyperion recording has range and sparkle. The Dowie Dens o'Yarrow is a very similar piece, with comparable rhythmic impetus and another attractive secondary theme, given to the oboe. The even more atmospheric Ship o' the Fiend introduces another endearing lyrical cello theme reminiscent of The Land of the Mountain and the Flood.

MacCunn's opera Jeannie Deans is a tuneful and colourful piece with plenty of musical vitality. Effie's aria, Oh that I again could see (she is imprisoned in the Tolbooth), and the following Lullaby are touchingly sung here by Janice Watson, and the choral contribution is very spirited. The excerpt from the cantata The Lay of the Last Minstrel brings a suitably vigorous closing chorus, O Caledonia!

Piano music: 6 Scottish Dances; Valse

 Divine Art 2-5003. McLachlan – MCEWEN: La Côte d'Argent, etc.  ; MACKENZIE: Chasse aux papillons, etc. **(*)

The subtitle of this Scottish collection is 'Impressionistic piano works', but that hardly applies to these simple miniatures by Hamish MacCunn, engaging though they are. They include one real lollipop: the Plaid Dance (track 5) which, with its gentle Scottish snaps, haunts the memory beguilingly. Murray McLachlan plays most sympathetically and is well recorded.

MACDOWELL, Edward

(1860–1908)

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; Second Modern Suite, Op. 14

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67165. Tanyel; (i) with BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

Seta Tanyel gives sparkling performances of these attractive works, relishing the pianistic fireworks typical of this lyrical American composer. The fill-up, involving piano alone, offers a sequence of six colourful and unpretentious genre pieces. Tanyel's characterful playing, full of sparkle and imagination, is well matched by the playing of the BBC Scottish Orchestra under Martyn Brabbins, helped by full-bodied, well-balanced recording.

2 Fragments after the Song of Roland, Op. 30: The Saracens; The Lovely Aldä; Hamlet/Ophelia, Op. 22; Lancelot and Elaine, Op. 25; Lamia, Op. 29

 Bridge 9089. RPO, Krueger

The two Fragments after the Song of Roland are the middle movements of what was intended as a programme-symphony, and The Lovely Aldä is a gentle portrait which has something in common with MacDowell's Wild Rose, if not as melodically memorable. The portraits of Hamlet and Ophelia are highly romantic and, like both the symphonic poems, the lyrical writing is very appealing. Lancelot and Elaine (drawing on Tennyson's Idylls of the King) is particularly evocative. Lamia is based on a poem by Keats. MacDowell's music resourcefully varies the theme representing Lamia to indicate the events of the narrative, which ends badly for both characters. The performances here are very persuasive. Karl Krueger is a splendid and dedicated advocate and the RPO playing is warmly seductive and beautifully recorded.

Suites 1, Op. 42; 2 (Indian); Hamlet and Ophelia (tone-poem), Op. 22

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.559075. Ulster O, Yuasa

The Indian Suite opens with a dramatic horn call and its first movement (Legend) is a grandiose evocation of the 'once-great past of a dying race' and draws on folk themes from the Iowas and Kiowas. The closing Village Festival expands energetically in the brass, finally returning to the mood of the opening movement. The First Suite (actually the second in order of composition) is a comparable series of genre evocations, and the suite ends with a winning dance from the Forest Spirits. The performances here are outstanding in every way, full of colour, warmth and vitality, and the recording is state-of-the-art.

PIANO MUSIC

Fireside Tales, Op. 61; New England Idylls, Op. 62; Sea Pieces, Op. 55; Woodland Sketches, Op. 51

(*) Marco Polo 8.223631. Baragallo

MacDowell's most famous piano piece opens this recital: To a Wild Rose (named by his wife) is the first of the 10 Woodland Sketches. They are all pleasant if not distinctive vignettes, most lasting a little over a minute. The other three suites are very similar. Not a CD to listen to all at once but to be dipped into; one can appreciate that James Baragallo is a thoroughly sympathetic exponent, and he is well recorded.

MCEWEN, John Blackwood

(1868–1948)

A Solway Symphony; (i) Hills o'Heather; Where the Wild Thyme Blows

🔑 * Chan. 9345. (i) Welsh; LPO, Mitchell

McEwen's highly evocative Solway Symphony is a triptych of seascapes marked by magically transparent orchestration and crisply controlled argument. Above all, this is warm-hearted music. Hills o'Heather is a charming movement for cello and orchestra, while Where the Wild Thyme Blows uses slow pedal points to sustain harmonically adventurous arguments. The performances, conducted by Alasdair Mitchell, who edited the scores, are outstanding, a well-deserved tribute to a neglected composer who was far more than an academic. The recording is sumptuously atmospheric.

CHAMBER MUSIC

String Quartets 4; 7 (Threnody); 16 (Quartette provençale); 'Fantasia' for String Quartet, 17

 Chan. 9926. Chilingirian Qt

McEwen remained true to his Scottish roots. The Fourth

Quartet in its chromatic writing yet brings in a Scottish flavour, while 7 is a moving response to the tragedy of the First World War. 16 is openly evocative in its often Debussian response to the countryside of Provence, and the Fantasia Quartet, 17, his last, written the year before he died, in a single substantial movement of five linked sections, reaffirms his romantic allegiances with echoes of Dvořák in the meditative central section. Superb, warmly expressive performances and full, warm Chandos sound.

Violin Sonatas 2; 5 (Sonata-Fantasia); 6; Prince Charlie – A Scottish Rhapsody

🔑  Chan. 9880. Charlier, Tozer

McEwen's Second Violin Sonata (1913–14) shows the influence of both Debussy and Chausson. All the works recorded here show him to be a polished craftsman and a composer of real culture. The Fifth Sonata (1921), written for Albert Sammons, said to be his finest in this genre, recalls John Ireland and, like everything on this disc, holds the listener. Very good playing from Olivier Charlier and Geoffrey Tozer, excellent and vivid sound from Chandos and informative notes by Bernard Benoliel.

PIANO MUSIC

La Côte d'Argent: 5 Vignette; 3 'Keats' Preludes; On Southern Hills; 4 Sketches; Sonatina

 Divine Art 2-5003. McLachlan – MACKENZIE: Chasse aux papillons, etc. (*); MACCUNN: 6 Scottish Dances ***

John Blackwood McEwen shows distinct French influences in his piano music. Not so much in the Four Sketches, which includes a brief 5/4 'Minuet', and a dazzling closing Humoresque, or the Sonatina which, with its Celtic flavours, is very much his own – especially the charming central Andante semplice – but in the Three 'Keats' Preludes (each prefaced by a fragment of the poet's verse) and even more in the atmospheric triptych, On Southern Hills, the influences of Debussy and Ravel are clear. The Five Vignettes, are lighter, but still evocative. Excellent performances from Murray McLachlan and good recording.

MACHAUT, Guillaume de
(c. 1300–1377)

Ballades, rondeaux, virelais

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66087. Kirkby, Gothic Voices, Page

The ballades and virelais included here are written imploringly, and in elaborate admiration, to ladies of great beauty and of all other virtues, except apparently a willingness to respond. The fluid part-writing of the ensemble pieces is unique, but the solo pieces are very appealing, especially when sung, as two of them are here, by an artist of the calibre of Emma Kirkby. One wishes she had played a larger part in the programme, but Rogers Covey-Crump, Colin Scott-Mason, Emily van Evera and Margaret Philpot all make sympathetic individual contributions. As a group the Gothic Voices certainly know how to shape the melancholy melismas of the concerted items: they blend beautifully together, giving effective, unexaggerated tweaks to the passing moments of dissonance. The closing four-part motet, a Triplum, celebrates the Virgin Mary and is perhaps the most beautiful work on the disc. Excellent recording.

Ballades; Chansons; Rondeaux; Virelais

Ⓜ (*) DG 477 6731. Orlando Cons.

The Orlando Consort blend beautifully together, led by Robert Harre-Jones, whose richly coloured alto line is most appealing. But the snag is the basic sameness of colour inevitable with two, three or four unaccompanied male voices, however expressively they sing and however pleasingly recorded. In that respect the Hyperion disc above is much more appealing, and the DG issue has no texts and translations.

Un Lay de consolation; Le lay de la fonteigne

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca 478 8026. L. Medieval Ens., Peter & Timothy Davies

The lai emerged at the end of the twelfth century and differs from the rondeau and ballade in that it has many stanzas; indeed, all but two of the 19 lais of Machaut have 12 stanzas, including the two recorded here. In Le lay de la fonteigne, written during the period 1349–63, each of the even-numbered stanzas is a canon in three parts at the unison. Un lay de consolation is a work of the last decade of Machaut's life and survives only as a monophonic piece. However, the American scholar Richard Hoppin discovered that two halves of each stanza fit to produce two-part polyphony, and it is performed like this, the second part being assigned to instruments. Le lay de la fonteigne is the longer of the two, lasting nearly half an hour, and it is sung by three singers, only one of whom has the text in the canonic sections; the others vocalise. Music of specialist appeal but undoubted beauty. The recording and presentation are altogether exemplary.

Motets

 Signum SIGCD 011. Clerks' Group, Wickham

This collection is doubly valuable, as it includes not only three-part motets from early in Machaut's career (1320–50), which he composed over French love-song melodies, but also a group of Latin motets which are later (1360) and are set in four parts to religious and more serious secular texts and are written over a plainchant melody. They use an isorhythmic style, that is regularly repeating combinations of rhythm and harmony, after each voice has entered singly. Moreover, Edward Wickham has also included five anonymous independent Mass movements, simple and beautiful in their austerity, taken from the Ivrea Codex. The performances are exemplary.

Messe de Nostre Dame; Le Livre dou Voir dit (excerpts): Plourez dames; Nes qu'on porroit (ballades); Sans cuer dolens (rondeau); Le Lay de bonne esperance; Puis qu'en oubli (rondeau); Dix et sept cinq (rondeau)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553833. Oxford Camerata, Summerly

With his Messe de Nostre Dame (dedicated to the Virgin Mary), Guillaume de Machaut wrote the first known complete setting of the Ordinary of the Mass: Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus and Agnus Dei. He chose to finish with his own simple interpolation: Ite missa est, which very briefly tells us, 'The Mass is ended; thanks be to God.' Machaut's writing is full of extraordinary, dissonant clashes and sudden harmonic twists which are immediately resolved, so the music is both serene and plangently stimulating: here is an epoch-making work of great originality.

Jeremy Summerly's account is undoubtedly eloquently serene; it is beautifully controlled and modulated, rather after the fashion of the famous Willcocks/King's College accounts of the Byrd Masses.

On Naxos the chansons were recorded, equally effectively, at the BBC's Maida Vale studio; they celebrate Machaut as poet/lover as well as composer and, at its modest price, the disc is worth having for these alone. The solo singing in the extra items on the Hyperion disc is very impressive indeed. Le Lai de la Fonteinne is another elaborate poem of 12 stanzas in praise of the Virgin, six polyphonic, six monodic, beautifully sung by Rogers Covey-Crump and John Potter, while the shorter rondeau, an expressive piece if restlessly so, is ingeniously constructed, and is a 'crab' canon by inversion, in that the imitating part, instead of being presented straightforwardly, is written backwards and upside down – appropriately so, to fit the text: 'My End is my Beginning.'

MACKENZIE, Alexander
(1847–1935)

Benedictus, Op. 37/3; Burns – 2nd Scottish Rhapsody, Op. 24; Coriolanus (incidental music): Suite, Op. 61; The Cricket on the Hearth: Overture, Op. 62; Twelfth Night (incidental music): Overture/Suite, Op. 40

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66764. BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins

Mackenzie, in the Burns Rhapsody uses three Scottish folk tunes quite felicitously, notably 'Scots! wha hae', which is very emphatic. The second movement has charm, and indeed Mackenzie's own lyrical gift is quite striking in the jolly, at times Sullivanesque Cricket on the Hearth Overture (which also shows his deft orchestral skill), and of course the Benedictus with a melody typical of its time. The incidental music for Twelfth Night is in the form of an overture, subdivided into six sections, with a Shakespeare quotation for each to identify its mood. The whole programme is presented with commitment and polish by the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra and makes a very agreeable 75 minutes of not too demanding listening. The recording is excellent.

Scottish Concerto, Op. 55

 Hyp. CDA 67023. Osborne, BBC Scottish SO, Brabbins – TOVEY: Piano Concerto in A ***

Built on Scottish themes, Mackenzie's Concerto, premièred by Paderewski, centres round its lyrical slow movement, framed by a rhapsodic first movement and a dance finale based on Green Grow the Rushes O. The young Scottish pianist Steven Osborne is a brilliant advocate, Brabbins a natural partner.

Piano music: Chasse aux papillons; Harvest Home; Odds and Ends: High Spirits; Refrain 3 Morçeaux

(*) Divine Art 2-5003. McLachlan – MACCUNN: 6 Scottish Dances; MCEWEN: La Côte d'Argent, etc. *

Mackenzie's genre piano vignettes are derivative but hardly draw on the French impressionist school, as their inclusion in this collection might imply. It is the music of the other two composers on this enterprising collection that makes it worth exploring.

MACMILLAN, James
(born 1959)

(i) Clarinet Concerto (Ninian); (ii) Trumpet Concerto (Epiclesis)

🔑 * BIS CD 1069. RSNO, Lazarev, with (i) Cushing; (ii) Wallace

The Clarinet Concerto is a celebration of the early Scottish St Ninian, with three of his miracles each inspiring a movement. The third and last, much the longest, brings another depiction of the Eucharist, with a joyful brassy chorale as a final climax. The soloist has a virtuoso role, but many of the most memorable moments come in hushed lyrical passages, with the clarinet bringing a resolution after orchestral violence. Epiclesis, the Trumpet Concerto, meaning prayer or invocation, leads the composer to attempt a musical equivalent to the Eucharist, the act of communion, in what he describes as 'the transformation of musical substances'. The free-flowing, almost improvisatory writing for the solo trumpet, with much fluttering figuration, is punctuated by big orchestral outbursts, leading at the most moving moment to a simple chorale, played pianissimo on the trumpet as though in purification. After that the jazzy syncopations of the final section sound almost like Charles Ives in brash contrast, leading finally to the most powerful climax and a fading away as the soloist departs. The performances of both works are not just brilliant but totally committed in bringing out the drama of this music, with BIS recording of demonstration quality.

Cumnock Fair; Sinfonietta; Symphony 2

 BIS CD 1119. SCO, composer

MacMillan's Second Symphony, written in 1999, builds on ideas from an early piano sonata. A massive central movement is flanked by an evocative prelude, with bird-twittering ostinatos, a slow chorale and a reflective postlude, in which the chorale returns. The Sinfonietta starts mysteriously with a hypnotic slow section, which is brutally interrupted by violent fortissimo chords. It is almost Ives-like in its terracing of contrasted ideas, while Cumnock Fair is even more so in its kaleidoscopic quotations of dances with a Scottish flavour, wilder and wilder. Strong, intense performances, flawlessly balanced.

The Confession of Isobel Gowdie; The Exorcism of Rio Sumpul; Tuireadh

🔑 * BIS CD 1169. BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

The Confession of Isobel Gowdie, and two other substantial works of the same period, were similarly inspired by events which moved the composer deeply. Tuireadh is a lament inspired by the Piper Alpha oil-rig disaster. The writing, originally for clarinet and string quartet, is here reassigned to orchestral strings, with the clarinet vividly conveying the agony of the bereaved. The Exorcism of Rio Sumpul was inspired by an atrocity in El Salvador in 1986, with the music illustrating the violence as well as the menace, and unexpectedly erupting into a final dance of joy and thanksgiving when it was revealed that by some miracle no one was killed. MacMillan's direct, intensely communicative style is well illustrated in all three works, with Osmo Vänskä drawing powerful performances from the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, very well recorded.

The Confession of Isobel Gowdie; Symphony 3

 Chan. 10275. BBC PO, composer

As the composer describes it, The Confession of Isobel Gowdie is the Requiem that Isobel Gowdie, a Catholic martyr accused of witchcraft, never had. In a single 25-minute span it begins in deep meditation, then the central section, by far the longest, brings a violence reflecting the brutality with which the martyr was treated. The beauty of the final section, in which she seems to find peace, with its references to plainsong is all the more affecting here in the composer's own performance.

Symphony 3 (2002) follows a comparable pattern of slow, inexorable build-up over a massive span, this time far bigger still. The work's paradoxical subtitle, 'Silence', was inspired by the work of the Japanese author Shusaku Endo, whose novel with that title has had a profound influence on the composer. The concentration of the playing of the BBC Philharmonic under MacMillan adds to the tautness in both works, and the performances are brilliant in every way and superbly recorded.

Triduum, an Easter Triptych, Part 1: (i) The World's Ransoming (for cor anglais and orchestra); Part 2: (ii) Cello Concerto

 BIS CD 989. (i) Pendrill; (ii) R. Wallfisch; BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

The World's Ransoming and the Cello Concerto, each self-contained, are the first two in a sequence of three related works representing MacMillan's response to Christ's Passion and the Easter story. The World's Ransoming, with its poignant writing for cor anglais set against violent interruptions, provides the emotional prelude and is intensely involving music, often wild in its expressionism. Christine Pendrill is the superb soloist, and though Raphael Wallfisch is just as expressive as the soloist in the Cello Concerto, conveying Christ's agony, sadly the balance sets him at a distance. This three-movement work, is even more violent, the embodiment of earthquake and storm, both physical and spiritual. Brilliant performances, spaciously recorded.

Triduum, an Easter Triptych, Part 3: Symphony (Vigil)

 BIS CD 900. Fine Arts Brass Ens., BBC Scottish SO, Vänskä

The Symphony (Vigil) in three movements – Light, Tuba insonet salutaris and Water – forms the climax of the Triduum triptych, longer than either of the preceding works. Predictably it moves from darkness to light, with violence at the start of the first movement echoing the music of the Cello Concerto. The second movement brings fanfares spread spaciously, the last trump graphically portrayed, while the resolution of the final movement, longer than the other two put together, brings no easy salvation. Vänskä draws brilliant, warmly committed playing from the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, vividly recorded.

Veni, veni, Emmanuel; Tryst

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.554167. Currie, Ulster O, Yuasa

With Colin Currie, the young prizewinning percussionist, matching his compatriot predecessor, Evelyn Glennie, in flair and panache, the Naxos version of the brilliant and dramatic percussion concerto, Veni, veni, Emmanuel, cannot be recommended too highly. Takuo Yuasa is a strong and persuasive conductor, not just in Veni, veni, Emmanuel, but in the earlier work, Tryst, an extended and colourful fantasy in five sections built on a setting of a Scottish song. Recorded in the helpful acoustic of the Ulster Hall, Belfast, the sound is exceptionally full and vivid, matching the excellent playing of the orchestra.

(i) Piano Sonata; Barncleupedie; Birthday Present; For Ian; (ii) Raising Sparks (cantata)

 Black Box BBM 1067. (i) York; (ii) Rigby, Nash Ens., Brabbins

The Piano Sonata of 1985 in three movements is much the most demanding work here, far grittier than the rest, inspired by the extreme winter of that year and later the source of the Second Symphony. For Ian then brings total release into pure tonality and lyricism, a strathspey full of Scottish-snap rhythms. Birthday Present seems a very sombre gift, musically striking nonetheless, and the final Barncleupedie (1990) rounds things off light-heartedly with a piece which in slow barcarolle rhythm supports the melody, Will Ye No Come Back Again.

Like so much of MacMillan's music, Raising Sparks has a profoundly religious base, this time from a Jewish inspiration. The opening incantation by the mezzo-soprano soloist, low and sustained in the chest register with occasional ornamentation, immediately makes the Jewish associations clear enough, leading to a sequence of five songs setting poems by Michael Symmons Roberts on the theme of creation and redemption. The vocal line, though taxing, is more lyrical than in many new works, superbly sung by Jane Rigby, while the instrumental accompaniment is endlessly inventive, with the piano (the masterly Ian Brown) generally the central instrument in the ensemble.

VOCAL MUSIC

Cantos Sagrados; Christus vincit; Child's Prayer; Divo Aloysio Sacrum; The Gallant Weaver; Seinte Mari moder milde; So Deep; Tremunt vidente angeli

 Signum SIGCD 507. L. Elysian Singers, Laughton; Jackson

A fascinating pot-pourri of James MacMillan's choral music called Santos Sagrados ('Sacred Songs'), which ranges from Latin motets to Scottish traditional settings or arrangements, including a pair of Robert Burns songs. The two major pieces offer a striking contrast, with the title number for choir and organ (the excellent Carl Jackson) in which MacMillan brings moments of intimidating darkness to the radiantly celestial Tremunt vidente angeli. Fine singing throughout from the excellent Elysian Singers (appropriately named for some of these dedicated religious settings) under their persuasive conductor, Sam Laughton.

Christus vincit; . . . here in hiding . . .; Nemo te condemnavit; Seven last Words from the Cross

Ⓝ ⒷⒷ  Naxos 8.570719. Dmitri Ens., Ross

James MacMillan originally wrote his Seven Last Words from the Cross for BBC Television for 8-part chorus and strings, with each section shown on a separate night. That device failed to recognize that the impact of these pieces gains enormously from being heard in sequence with a powerful build-up, starting with Christ's words to the robber being crucified with him, through Eli, eli lama sabachtani and ending with Father, into thy hands. MacMillan's dedicated writing can also be most dramatic if often pauseful in a way most effective in a live performance. The three extra items – two of them in first recordings – make a valuable supplement. Christus vincit is a motet for double chorus, written for St Paul's Cathedral. The Dmitri Ensemble under Graham Ross gives immaculate performances, with the young voices of the choir well supported by the strings.

Mass; A Child's Prayer; Changed; Christus vincit; A New Song; Seinte Mari moder milde; (i) Gaudeamus

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67219. Westminster Cathedral Ch, Baker; (i) Reid

It would be hard to think of any recent music that so intensely conveys religious ecstasy as James MacMillan's Mass. MacMillan is yet distinctive in his brilliant use of choral effects, with surging crescendos up to glowing fortissimos to stir the blood. Two of the extra sections, taken from the Eucharistic Liturgy, largely involve solo chanting, but the fervour of MacMillan's inspiration as a devout Catholic himself makes for music of high voltage from first to last. Equally the shorter choral works on the disc, all written in the 1990s, have a rare freshness and concentration, often involving powerful slabs of sound.

The singing of the Westminster Cathedral Choir is electrifying, with Martin Baker directing his first recording as choirmaster. The solo singing, too, deserves special mention, with a solo treble negotiating a spectacular upward leap at the close of Christus vincit. Gaudeamus is a brief organ solo involving bird-noises, rather different from Messiaen's, beautifully played by Andrew Reid.

O bone Jesu, Mairi

Ⓝ  Hänssler SACD 93.250. SW R. Vocal Ens., Creed – VAUGHAN WILLIAMS: Mass in G min.; Silence and Music

The Stuttgart choir gives strong and precise performances of English works for mixed choir by MacMillan and Vaughan Williams, defying the idea that they do not understand the idiom. The Mass is particularly successful. O bone Jesu is a motet inspired by the 15th-century Scottish composer, Robert Carver, setting a Gaelic poem, featuring bold choral effects with clashing intervals. The SACD gives superb, spacious sound.

Missa brevis; Strathclyde Motets; Tenebrae responsories; Introit: Give me Justice

 Linn CKD 301. Cappella Nova, Tavener

The Missa brevis is early, composed when MacMillan was just seventeen and already showing an original musical personality. But the key work here is the set of seven comparatively straightforward but distinctly expressive Strathclyde Motets, unaccompanied except for a trumpet obbligato in the second, intended (as the composer has told us) for church use, by non-professional choirs, rather than for concert performance. The Tenebrae responsories understandably are darker and more plangent as sung by a small group from the Cappella Nova, whose singing under Alan Tavener throughout in an ideal kirk acoustic is very fine indeed.

MACMILLAN, Kenneth

(1929–92)

Mayerling (complete ballet; DVD version)

* Opus Arte OA R3101D. Royal Ballet (members), ROHCG O, Wordsworth

This was MacMillan's last full-length ballet, and arguably his masterpiece. It has long been in circulation on video and LaserDisc, but this DVD scores even over the latter, excellent though it was. The plot concerns the events that led up to the joint suicide of Crown Prince Rudolf of Austria-Hungary (Irek Mukhamedov) and the 17-year-old Mary Vetsera (Viviane Durante) at Mayerling and evokes the claustrophobic and oppressive atmosphere at the Court of the Emperor Franz Joseph to vivid and compelling effect. MacMillan's superb choreography is well served by the recording team and the main dancers, with Darcy Bussell as Mitzi Caspar, the Prince's regular mistress and Matthew Hart as Bratfisch, his private cab-driver, and the rest of the cast, are (as so often nowadays with the Royal Ballet) flawless. There is no weakness anywhere in the company. The score draws on Liszt, in particular the Faust Symphony, and the compilation with various piano pieces was made and expertly orchestrated by John Lanchbery. We have returned to this 1994 recording (and various revivals at Covent Garden) with undiminished and ongoing admiration and pleasure.

MACONCHY, Elizabeth

(1907–94)

Clarinet Concertinos 1 (1945); 2 (1984)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55060. King, ECO, Wordsworth – ARNOLD: Clarinet Concertos 1–2; Scherzetto; BRITTEN: Clarinet Concerto Movement ***

The two Maconchy Concertinos, each in three movements and under ten minutes long, have a characteristic terseness, sharp and intense, that runs no risk whatever of seeming short-winded. Not only Thea King but the ECO under Barry Wordsworth bring out the warmth as well as the rhythmic drive, as in the other attractive works on this disc.

(i) Music for Strings; (ii) Overture, Proud Thames; (iii) Serenata concertante for Violin & Orchestra; (iv) Symphony for Double String Orchestra

 Lyrita (DDD/ADD) SRCD 288. (i–ii) LPO; (iii–iv) LSO; (iii) with Parikian; (i) Wordsworth; (ii–iv) Handley

These works all testify to the strength of Elizabeth Maconchy's imagination, the Overture, in the words of the composer, inspired by the river itself 'from its trickling source among green fields to the full tide of life in London'; the Music for Strings has the widest variety of tempo and texture in its four movements, with the finale 'an extrovert happy-go-lucky movement'. The Symphony for Double String Orchestra is very much in the tradition of British string music, with a flavour not too distant from Tippett's concerto for a similar ensemble. The Serenata concertante – a violin concerto in all but name – is grittier and less lyrical, at least until you come to the slow third movement, which builds up in simple lyricism to a grinding climax like that of Walton's First Symphony. Handley directs superb, committed performances, vividly recorded, and Barry Wordsworth is equally impressive in the Music for Strings.

Clarinet Quintet

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55105. King, Britten Qt – COOKE; FRANKEL: Clarinet Quintets; HOWELLS: Rhapsodic Quintet; HOLBROOKE: Eilean Shona ***

Elizabeth Maconchy's Clarinet Quintet, with its bright, acerbic wit, makes a perfect foil for the other works in Thea King's fine anthology, its dancing, racy finale contrasting with her special brand of poignant lyricism in the slow movement. King's sprightly playing is admirably supported by the Britten Quartet, and the recording is outstandingly vivid.

String Quartets 1–13

🔑 Ⓜ  Regis Forum FRC 9301 (3). Hanson, Bingham or Mistry Qts

The first four Quartets were recorded by the Hanson Quartet and the Bingham Quartet seem equally at home in this repertoire. The third CD includes the final Quartetto Corto, a miniature piece, dating from 1984, all persuasively played by the Mistry Quartet. All these works testify to the quality of Maconchy's mind and her inventive powers. She speaks of the quartet as 'an impassioned argument', and there is no lack of either in these finely wrought and compelling pieces. Though the playing may occasionally be wanting in tonal finesse, each group plays with total commitment and is well recorded.

(i) The Sofa; (ii) The Departure

Ⓝ  Chan. 10508. Independent Opera, Wheeler; with (i) Sharratt, Tynan, Thorpe, von Borden; Orr, Kozari, Leese; (ii) Poole, Vramsmo

Elizabeth Maconchy's two one-act operas make up an excellent disc, the works nicely contrasted. The Sofa starts very much in comic-opera mode with amiably chattering music, but the story turns sour with the arrival of the sinister grandmother of the central character, Prince Dominic, an unapologetic hedonist who is seeking to seduce the heroine, Monique. The grandmother controls Dominic's money, and she disapproves of his philandering. With her magic powers, she decides to turn him into a sofa: he will be released only if a couple seek to make love while sitting on the sofa.Everyone wonders where Dominic has gone to, but in the end Edward makes love to Monique on the sofa, and Dominic is restored, a wiser man. With Maconchy's deft scoring, the impossible story works well, even if one would welcome a few more obvious tunes.

The Departure involves only two main characters, Julia, a mezzo-soprano, and Mark, a tenor. The point of the story is that Julia has been killed in a car crash, and she sees in her imagination her own funeral. The role of Julia is superbly taken by Louise Poole, an outstanding young artist whose pinpoint accuracy is a delight to the ear. Much of the score is devoted to a monologue for the dead Julia, but the climax to the opera comes in a long and sensuous duet between Julia and Mark, with that tenor role very well taken by Håkan Vramsmo. They obviously cannot meet and finally have to say goodbye, with offstage voices adding to the atmosphere of poignancy. The tenderness of the emotions contrasts well with the high spirits of The Sofa. Dominic Wheeler is the understanding conductor, by turns lively and sensitive, with the company of Independent Opera at Sadler's Wells.

MADETOJA, Leevi (1887–1947)

Symphonies 1 in F, Op. 29; 2, Op. 35; 3 in A, Op. 55; Comedy Overture, Op. 53; Okon Fuoko, Op. 58; Pohjalaisia Suite, Op. 52

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 7097 (2). Iceland SO, Sakari

Apart from Sibelius himself, with whom Madetoja briefly studied, there are many influences to be discerned in the First Symphony (1915) – figures like Strauss, the Russian post-nationalists, Reger and above all the French, for whom Madetoja had a lifelong admiration. The Second Symphony (1917–18), composed at about the same time as Sibelius was working on the definitive version of his Fifth, is expertly fashioned and despite the obvious debts there is some individuality too. The Third was written in the mid-1920s while Madetoja was living in Houilles, just outside Paris. Gallic elements surface most strongly in this piece. The Comedy Overture (1923) is an absolute delight, and both the suite from the opera Pohjalaisia (The Ostrobothnians) and the ballet–pantomime Okon Fuoko show an exemplary feeling for colour and atmosphere. Both the performances and the spacious natural recordings are exemplary.

OPERA

The Ostrobothnians (Pohjalaisia) (complete); Suite from the opera, Op. 52a

🔑 Ⓜ  Finlandia 3984 21440-2 (2). Hynninen, Sirkiä, Groop, Auvinen, Finnish R. Ch.; Finnish RSO, Saraste

Madetoja's opera dates from the early 1920s and is set in the western Finnish plains of Ostrobothnia which Madetoja knew well, and its central theme is the Bothnian farmer's love of personal liberty and his abhorrence of authoritarian restraints. Against this background of tension, there is a simple love story. The opera is also interspersed with humorous elements that lighten the mood and lend the work variety. Madetoja's language springs from much the same soil as most Scandinavian post-nationalists. However, the score makes often imaginative use of folk material and Madetoja's sense of theatre and his lyrical gift are in good evidence. Pohjalaisia is effective theatre and this recording completely supersedes the 1975 set under Jorma Panula – also with Hynninen as the hero – both artistically and technically. Like its predecessor it offers excellent teamwork from the soloists, and keen, responsive playing from the Finnish Radio forces under Saraste. The work lasts barely two hours, and the fill-up derives from a 1993 recording.

MAGALHÃES, Filipe de (1571–1652)

Missa Dilecus meus; Commissa mea pavesco

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55138. William Byrd Ch., Gavin Turner – D. LÔBO: Missa pro defunctis ***

Most of Magalhães's surviving works are found in two books dated 1636, including the present beautiful Mass for five voices. The music flows richly but with rather more impetus than in the coupled Lôbo Requiem, until the simple Benedictus and double Agnus Dei which has an additional voice, with the altos divided. The following funeral motet, Commissa mea pavesco, is similarly serene and also richly harmonized in six parts. A splendid coupling, beautifully sung and recorded.

Missa O Soberana luz; Motets: Commissa mea pavesco; Vidi aquam

(BB)  Naxos 8.553310. Ars Nova, Holten – CARDOSO; LÔBO: Motets ***

Filipe de Magalhães was the youngest of the three great Portuguese composers who all became pupils of Manuel Mendes (c. 1547–1605) at Evora in eastern Portugal. The others, Cardoso and Lôbo, are also represented in this outstanding concert, but Magalhães was reputedly the favourite pupil. One can see why, listening to his highly individual writing in both the Mass O Soberana luz and the two hardly less memorable motets, Vidi aquam ('I beheld the water') and Commissa mea pavesco ('I tremble at my sins') with its instantly poignant opening. In the Mass the Sanctus soars radiantly and the lovely Benedictus is equally affecting, only to be capped by the Agnus Dei. The Danish performances are wonderfully eloquent and the recording, made at Kasterskirken, Copenhagen, has an ideal ambience and is beautifully clear.

MAGNARD, Albéric (1865–1914)

Symphonies 1 in C min., Op. 4; 2 in E, Op. 6; Symphonies 3 in B flat min., Op. 11; 4 in C sharp min., Op. 21

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22068 (2). BBC Scottish SO, Ossonce

Symphonies 1–4; Chant funèbre; Hymne à la justice; Ouverture

Ⓑ  EMI (ADD) 5 72364-2 (3). Capitole Toulouse O, Plasson

The First Symphony (1889–90) was composed in the shadow of Magnard's friend and mentor, Vincent d'Indy, and follows more strictly cyclical principles. Yet its ideas still show individuality of character and, despite the debt to Wagner and Franck, the last two symphonies have distinct personalities; they are separated by 17 years. The Fourth has an impressive intellectual power and is well crafted, with no shortage of ideas. For all the appearance of academicism, there is a quiet and distinctive personality here, and dignity too. The Chant funèbre is an earlier work that has a vein of genuine eloquence.

The superb Hyperion set of his four symphonies, neatly fitted on two inexpensive CDs, easily outshines earlier rivals, with warm, cleanly focused sound.

The Toulouse Capitole Orchestra under Michel Plasson also play this music as if they believe every note, as indeed they should, and the recording is sonorous and well defined. Plasson spreads to three CDs but offers extra items, and the EMI set is at bargain price and is excellent value.

Symphony 3, Op. 11

Ⓝ  Australian Decca Eloquence 442 9992 (2). SRO, Ansermet – LISZT: Faust Symphony, etc. **(*)

Magnard's Third Symphony, perhaps the best of his four, doesn't have the memorability of, for example, Chausson's, but it is very accomplished and has few longueurs. It was one of Ansermet's last recordings (September 1968) and is extremely well recorded. Its rather imposing introduction is well controlled by Ansermet and the ensuing Allegro is given plenty of vigour. The second movement, Danses, is full of vitality, with the strings impressively articulated; the slow movement is a rather uneasy pastorale, and the finale has great forward momentum. This work is used as a fill-up to Ansermet's 1967 Liszt recordings.

Cello Sonata in A, Op. 20

 Hyp. CDA 67244. Lidström, Forsberg – KOECHLIN: Chansons Bretonnes; WIDOR: Sonata

Magnard's music has an unfailing nobility as well as a distinction in terms of line and form. The Cello Sonata, which dates from 1910–11, is a big work lasting half an hour. Mats Lidström and Bengt Forsberg play it with eloquence and feeling, and are very well recorded.

String Quartet, Op. 16

 HM Aeon AECD 0426. Ysaÿe Qt – FAURÉ: String Quartet in E min. ***

Magnard was a highly self-critical composer, and his Quartet, a long work of some 40 minutes, shows an original mind at work. Its chromaticism encouraged one critic to place him closer to Reger than any of his Gallic contemporaries. His is an individual voice and an interesting one. The present performance and recording do the work full justice.

MAHLER, Gustav (1860–1911)

Symphonies 1–10; Das Lied von der Erde (DVD versions)

(*) DG DVD 73 4088 (9). J. Baker, Armstrong, Ludwig, Kollo, VPO, LSO or Israel PO, Bernstein

As David Gutman points out in the perceptive essay which comes with each of these boxes of DVDs, the cycle here which Bernstein recorded for video in the early 1970s comes neatly between his early CBS cycle with the New York Philharmonic from the 1960s and the late cycle he recorded for DG with the Vienna Philharmonic in the 1980s, which is discussed further below. If the one was sharp and intense in its approach to Mahler, the later cycle represented a more reflective Bernstein. Arguably this midway view on video is the finest of the three, and certainly the addition of video to the formula adds another layer of intensity, when here is a conductor who, almost Christ-like, physically seemed to suffer as he conducted, so dedicated was he.

The four double-disc boxes contain the sequence of the symphonies, with an extra disc devoted to rehearsals with the Vienna Philharmonic in the Fifth and the Ninth and two feature films, Four ways to say farewell, a study of the Ninth Symphony, and a personal introduction to Das Lied von der Erde, which Bernstein regards as Mahler's greatest symphony. Those last two are wonderfully revealing of Bernstein the man, and of his intellectual brilliance, but the rehearsal sequences will be disappointing to non-German speakers, as his comments to the Vienna Philharmonic in German completely defeat the writer of subtitles, and he omits them.

Symphonies: 1 in D; (i) 2 (Resurrection)

🔑  Ph. DVD 074 3131. BPO, Haitink; (i) with McNair, Van Nes, Ernst Senff Ch. (Director: Barrie Gavin)

Symphony 3 in D min.

🔑  Ph. DVD 074 3132. Quivar, Tölz Boys' Ch., Women of Ernst-Senff Ch., BPO, Haitink (Director: Barrie Gavin)

Symphonies: (i) 4 in G.; 7 in E min.

 Ph. DVD 074 3133. BPO, Haitink; (i) with McNair

Haitink made these, his third set of recordings of the Mahler symphonies, between 1991 and 1993, live in the Berlin Philharmonie. The Berlin Philharmonic plays superbly for him while the recording itself is very much in the demonstration bracket on CD (especially with the optional 5.1 DTS surround sound), and there is no doubt that the visual element adds enormously to their impact and communication. In the First Symphony Haitink builds the first-movement climax slowly, with increasing tension; and at its peak the camera focuses directly on him, and the sheer intensity of that moment is quite remarkable. There is greater gravity in his view than in earlier recordings, to bring out the full weight of this ambitious early work, and a greater freedom of expression, although Haitink was never one to wear his heart on his sleeve.

The Resurrection Symphony also brings one of his very finest Mahler recordings, weighty and bitingly powerful. The sound of the Berlin Philharmonic is again caught with a vividness and presence rarely matched. The equivalent CDs were studio recordings, but here all the tensions of a live performance are conveyed, leading up to a glorious apotheosis in the Judgement Day finale. The soloists are outstanding, and the chorus immaculately expands from the rapt, hushed singing of their magical first entry to incandescent splendour.

The Third Symphony is no less powerful and spacious, with the Berlin Philharmonic again producing glorious sounds. Once again, the finale is a superb culmination, glowing and concentrated, and Haitink gives the work a visionary strength often lacking. The mysery of Urlicht is then beautifully caught by the mezzo soloist, Jard van Nes.

The key to Haitink's Mahler 4 is simplicity, and here he conducts a warm, polished reading that can hardly be faulted, except that it does not quite catch the innocent freshness lying behind this of all Mahler's symphonies. The slow movement is poised and gentle, not quite as rapt as some versions but still very beautiful. The child-heaven finale, too, at a comparatively slow tempo is smoother than usual, with Sylvia McNair a light, boyish soloist.

Haitink's reading of the Seventh is not as evocative as others in his cycle, even the Nachtmusiks are less magical than they might be. The Berlin Orchestra play well but there is not the conviction and concentration of the other symphonies in the cycle.

Symphonies 1–9

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca (DDD/ADD) 430 804-2 (10). Buchanan, Zakai, Chicago Ch. (in 2); Dernesch, Ellyn Children's Ch., Chicago Ch. (in 3); Te Kanawa (in 4); Harper, Popp, Augér, Minton, Watts, Kollo, Shirley-Quirk, Talvela, V. Boys' Ch., V. State Op. Ch. & Singverein (in 8); Chicago SO, Solti

(i) Symphonies 1–9; (ii) Kindertotenlieder; (iii) Kindertotenlieder; 3 Rückert Lieder; Das irdische Leben

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) SX12K 89499 (12). Spoorenberg, Annear, Procter, Mitchinson, McIntyre, Venora, Tourel, Lipton, Israel PO, LSO or NYPO, Bernstein; (ii) J. Baker; (iii) J. Tourel

(i) Symphonies 1–10; 6 Early Songs; Kindertotenlieder; (ii) Das Lied von der Erde; (i) Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; Das Klagende Lied

(BB) (*) DG 471 451-2 (15). Studer, Meier, Goldberg, Allen, Fassbaender, Plowright, Schwartz, Keikl, Gruberová, Terfel, Vermillion, Lewis; (i) Philh. O; (ii) Dresden Staatskapelle; all cond. Sinopoli

Solti's achievement in Mahler has been consistent and impressive, and this reissue is a formidable bargain that will be hard to beat. 1–4 and 9 are digital recordings, 5–8 are digitally remastered analogue. Solti draws stunning playing from the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, often pressed to great virtuosity, which adds to the electricity of the music-making; if his rather extrovert approach to Mahler means that deeper emotions are sometimes understated, there is no lack of involvement; and his fiery energy and commitment often carry shock-waves in their trail. All in all, an impressive achievement.

The 12-disc Sony compilation includes not only Bernstein's historic pioneering cycle of the Mahler symphonies for CBS but a number of valuable supplements. With the nine completed symphonies recorded between 1960 and 1967 and the Adagio from 10 added in 1975, the cycle has never sounded fresher or clearer, with sound less coarse than originally. Though Bernstein's later cycle (459 080–2) for DG brings more refined sound, these earlier interpretations, all but 8 with the New York Philharmonic, are generally more thrustful and dramatic. The reading of No. 9 is far less expansive in the last movement but is still deeply meditative, so that the whole symphony can be fitted on to a single disc. The valuable supplements include a live recording of the Adagietto of 5 played at the funeral of Robert Kennedy and two versions of Kindertotenlieder, not just the one recorded in Israel in 1974 with Dame Janet Baker, but the earlier studio recording of 1960 with Jenny Tourel, a favourite singer with Bernstein, brisker, less reflective, as well as Tourel in three of the Rückert Lieder and Das irdische Leben from Des Knaben Wunderhorn.

Giuseppe Sinopoli's individual, sometimes wilful readings of Mahler, but ones which with full-blooded recording bring out the warmth as well as the power. One is never in doubt as to the greatness of the music, or the dedication with which the conductor approaches each work. Just occasionally Sinopoli chooses a tempo that is not just wilful but perverse – as in the snail-pace for the second Nachtmusik of 7, and he generally favours speeds on the broad side, but magnetism is a consistent quality, and so it is in the other Mahler works which make up this 15-disc set. Das Klagende Lied – with a starry quartet of soloists – is taken from a live concert which the Philharmonia gave in Tokyo in November 1990, while the song-cycles were recorded as adjuncts to the symphonies. Das Lied von der Erde is the odd one out, recorded in Dresden with the Staatskapelle five years after the rest had been completed, but just as persuasive in its Mahlerian manners, with Iris Vermillion and Keith Lewis strong and reliable soloists, if not as characterful as some.

Symphonies 1–9; 10 (Revised Performing Edition by Deryck Cooke)

🔑 Ⓑ  Decca 475 6686 (12). Concg. O (Berlin RSO in 10), Chailly; with Diener, Lang, Prague Philharmonic Ch. in 3; Bonney in 4; Eaglen, Fulgoni, Schwanewilms, Siezak, Larrson, Heppner, Mattei, Rootering, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Netherlands R. Ch., Children of Kathedrale Ch. St Bavo & Breda in 8

Chailly's strong, satisfying overall approach to Mahler, without eccentricity, is supported by the superb playing of the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra throughout and the demonstration quality of the Decca sound, never more remarkable than in the dedicated account of the Resurrection Symphony. The Third also has comparably weighty intensity, but the spacious account of 4 has rather less depth of inner feeling. The Fifth more than compensates and is perhaps the highlight of the cycle, although the Sixth also conveys great concentration and is marvellously played. In the spectacular Symphony of a Thousand the Decca engineers more than rise to the challenge, as they do again in the Ninth. Chailly is lucky in his soloists, all of whom sing beautifully, and the choral contributions are of the highest quality too. Overall, this box is strongly recommendable, particularly if demonstration recording quality is a priority. It comes with full texts and translations.

Symphony 1 in D (Titan)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 458 622-2. LSO, Solti

Ⓜ  Decca 475 8230. Chicago SO, Solti

(BB)  Sony SBK 89783. VPO, Maazel

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) LSO Live SACD LSO0663. LSO, Gergiev

The London Symphony Orchestra play Mahler's First like no other orchestra. They catch the magical opening, with its bird sounds and evocatively distanced brass, with a singular ambience, at least partly related to the orchestra's characteristic blend of wind timbres. Throughout there is wonderfully warm string-playing and the most atmospheric response from the horns. Solti's tendency to drive hard is felt only in the second movement, which is pressed a little too much, although he relaxes beautifully in the central section. Especially memorable are the poignancy of the introduction of the Frère Jacques theme in the slow movement and the exultant brilliance of the closing pages, helped by the wide range of dynamic and the wonderfully clear inner detail of the newly remastered, 1964 Kingsway Hall recording.

Because of the excellence of the 1964 LSO version, which has been a prime choice for many years and still is, it was hard for Solti and the Decca engineers to match his earlier achievement, even with exceptionally high-powered playing from the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and brilliant, crystal-clear digital recording. On CD, that very clarity takes away some of the atmospheric magic – the feeling of mists dispersing in the slow introduction, for example – but charm and playfulness in this Wunderhorn work emerge delightfully; one of the happiest of Solti's records, tinglingly fresh, with perfectly chosen speeds.

With superb playing and refined recording, Maazel's account of the First has an authentic Viennese glow. Though there are other versions which point detail more sharply, this performance has a ripeness and an easy lyricism that place it among the most sympathetic bargain versions. The sound too is full and atmospheric as well as brilliant. A fine bargain alternative to Solti.

Gergiev's live account of Mahler's First Symphony is extrovert and flamboyant, with plenty of drama, particularly in the outer movements. At times it almost feels aggressive (the Ländler movement could do with a bit more charm), underlined by the rather dry but certainly vivid acoustic of the Barbican, where it was recorded in January 2008, faithfully caught on SACD. Yet, by the same token, there is some superbly hushed playing too, and the LSO play magnificently throughout. Not everyone will respond to Gergiev's way with Mahler but this is certainly a distinctive version.

(i) Symphony 1 in D (Original (1893) version with Blumine); (ii) Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen

🔑 Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 76233-2. (i) Phd. O, Ormandy; (ii) von Stade, LPO, A. Davis

The score of the early version of Mahler's First Symphony contained the Blumine movement. Ormandy's was its first recording (in 1968) and the arrival of the Blumine section at the close of the first movement, with its appealing trumpet melody so beautifully played, is a frisson-creating moment and, while its inclusion alters the character and scale of the work overall, any true Mahlerian should enjoy it in a performance as warm-hearted as this. Ormandy is rather relaxed at the very opening of the symphony and his tempi are very flexible elsewhere, notably in the Scherzo and finale. But the glorious playing of the Philadelphia strings is very seductive indeed, and the remastered recording has splendid richness and bloom.

The coupling (which comes from the CBS/Sony archive) is a highly enjoyable account of the Wayfaring Lad cycle from Frederica von Stade and Andrew Davis, recorded a decade later with a refreshing hint of youthful ardour, which contrasts with most other performances. The recording is close but has a most attractive ambience and is very well transferred.

Symphonies 1; (i) 2 (Resurrection)

🔑 Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD) 448 921-2 (2). (i) Harper, Watts, L. Symphony Ch.; LSO, Solti

Ⓑ  Ph. Duo 475 6222 (2). BPO, Haitink; (i) with McNair, Van Nes, Ernst-Senff Ch.

Solti's 1964 LSO account of 2 remains a demonstration of the outstanding results Decca were securing with analogue techniques at that time, although on CD the brilliance of the fortissimos may not suit all ears. Helen Watts is wonderfully expressive, while the chorus has a rapt intensity that is the more telling when the recording perspectives are so clearly delineated. Coupled with his outstanding version of 1, it makes a genuine bargain at Double Decca price.

There is greater gravity in Haitink's view now, to bring out the full weight of this ambitious early work and a greater freedom of expression. The Resurrection Symphony dates from six years later and brings another of Haitink's finest Mahler recordings. Above all, Haitink conveys the tensions of a live occasion. Outstanding in every way, this can be placed alongside Rattle's superb CBSO set.

Symphonies (i) 1; (ii) 3

Ⓝ *() Australian Decca Eloquence 480 1133 (2). Mehta, with (i) Israel PO; (ii) Forrester, Los Angeles Master Chorale, LAPO

Mehta's version of the First Symphony is brilliantly recorded (in 1974) but the hard-driving, frenetic quality of the outer movements will not appeal to everyone, though the warmth of the slow movement does offer some compensations. Mehta in his years in Los Angeles, however, rarely recorded a performance so authentically Viennese as this Decca account of the Third Symphony (1978). The crisp spring of the first movement leads to a fruitily Viennese view of the second and a carefree account of the third in which the Wunderhorn overtones come out vigorously. The singing is excellent, and the sharpness of focus of the reading as a whole is impressive, underlined by brilliant (if a bit too close) recording. However, it must be admitted that the performance leaves a certain feeling of aggressiveness which detracts from the warmer side of the reading.

Symphony 2 in C min. (Resurrection)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI 3 45794-2 (2). Augér, J. Baker, CBSO Ch., CBSO, Rattle

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ (*) BBC Legends (mono) BBCL 4136-2. Woodland, Baker, BBC Ch. & Choral Soc., LSO, Stokowski

🔑 Ⓜ () Testament mono SBT2 1320 (2). Stader, J. Baker, St Hedwig's Cathedral Ch., BPO, Barbirolli

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67235-2. Schwarzkopf, Rössl-Majdan, Philh. Ch. & O, Klemperer

Ⓜ  Chan. 6595/6. Lott, Hamari, Latvian State Ac. Ch., Oslo Philharmonic Ch., Oslo PO, Jansons

 DG 477 5082 (2). Gvazava, Larsson, Orfeon Donostiarra, Lucerne Festival O, Abbado – DEBUSSY: La Mer()

Sir Simon Rattle's reading of Mahler's Second Symphony is among his very finest records, superlative in its breadth and the vividness of its sound. The inspired orchestral playing and beautifully balanced choral singing are matched by the heartfelt response of the soloists, Arleen Augér and Dame Janet Baker. EMI have now understandably chosen the set for inclusion in their 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

For the first ever Prom performance of the Resurrection Symphony Leopold Stokowski had a triumph, for here was a larger-than-life reading of an apocalyptic work. The response of the audience at the end was so prolonged and so enthusiastic that, against the strict Prom rule of the time, Stokowski gave an encore, repeating the final visionary choral sequence. Now at last on disc in this BBC Legends recording of the broadcast, we have the legend vividly confirmed, for though the sound is in mono the immediacy and sense of presence, as well as the atmosphere of the hall, are vividly caught: full, bright and clear, giving the illusion of stereo. Janet Baker, the dedicated mezzo soloist, is joined by the fresh-toned Rae Woodland. Stokowski is more urgent than Barbirolli, lighter in the second-movement Andante, more sinister in the Scherzo, leading to a shattering rendering of the Judgement Day finale, with the BBC Chorus, Choral Society and attendant choirs as intense in their dedicatedly hushed singing as in the extrovert power of the climaxes. It makes an overwhelming experience, marred only slightly by inevitable audience noises.

Barbirolli's long-buried radio recording from Berlin will be a revelation even to the many admirers of this great Mahlerian, and the result is electrifying from beginning to end. Helped by full, vividly immediate sound, this is an impassioned, freely volatile performance, massively powerful in the outer movements while setting in contrast the 'Wunderhorn' playfulness of the third movement against the darkness of the Urlicht slow movement, sung by Dame Janet Baker with heartfelt intensity. The vision of Judgement Day in the long choral finale is then cataclysmic, so shattering that one readily forgives the out-of-time chimes at the very end. Just too long for a single CD, this issue is offered on two discs for the price of one.

Klemperer's performance – one of his most compelling on record – comes back to the catalogue on a single CD as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', sounding better than ever. The remastering of the Kingsway Hall recording is impressively full and clear, with a real feeling of spectacle in the closing pages. The first movement, taken at a fairly fast tempo, is intense and earth-shaking; though in the last movement (which incidentally is generously cued) some of Klemperer's speeds are designedly slow, he conveys supremely well the mood of transcendent, heavenly happiness in the culminating passage, with the Philharmonia Chorus and soloists themselves singing like angels.

The crisp attack at the start of the opening funeral march sets the pattern for an exceptionally refined and alert reading of the Resurrection Symphony from Jansons and his Oslo Orchestra. During the first four movements, this may seem a lightweight reading, but at the finale the whole performance erupts in an overwhelming outburst for the vision of Resurrection. That transformation is intensified by the breathtakingly rapt and intense account of the song, Urlicht, which precedes it. The choral singing is heartfelt, to crown a version which finds a special place even among the many distinguished readings on a long list.

Abbado's 2004 version of the Resurrection Symphony was recorded live at the Lucerne Festival, using an orchestra of specially chosen players. The thrust and tautness of the performance are established from the very start, with speeds faster than usual and generally faster than those which Abbado adopted in his two previous recordings of the work. The exception is the third-movement Ländler, where at a relatively relaxed speed he brings out the Des Knaben Wunderhorn associations. The mezzo soloist, Anna Larsson, gives a satisfyingly weighty performance, with warm contralto timbre in the chest register, and though the microphone brings out the vibrato of the soprano, Eteri Gvazava, she is a first-rate soloist too, while the choral singing is focused with exceptional clarity. The closeness of the well-detailed recording adds to the impact.

Symphony 3 in D min.

 Decca SACD 470 652-2; CD 475 514-2. Lang, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Netherlands Children's Ch., Concg. O, Chailly

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) LSO Live SACD LSO 0660 (2). Larsson, Tiffin Boys' Ch., L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Gergiev

(i) Symphony 3 in D min.; (ii) Kindertotenlieder

Ⓝ () Testament mono SBT2 1422. Ferrier, with (i) BBC SO, Boult; (ii) Concg. O, Klemperer

(i) Symphony 3; (ii) Des Knaben Wunderhorn: 8 Lieder

🔑 * EMI 5 56657-2 (2). (i) Remmert, CBSO Women's Ch.; (ii) Keenlyside; CBSO, Rattle

Rattle conducts an outstanding version of 3, magnetic from the very start, rich, bold and opulent, and very well recorded with an exceptionally full bass. The subtlety of Rattle's phrasing and rubato not only brings out the work's deeper qualities, with the visionary intensity of the long finale superbly caught, but – far more than most – the joy and humour of the lighter movements. Simon Keenlyside's beautiful, finely detailed readings of the Knaben Wunderhorn songs make a very welcome bonus, with an extra song, Ablösung im Sommer (which is quoted in the third movement of the Symphony) aptly included in an arrangement by Berio.

Characteristically strongly characterized and brilliantly played, with the second and fourth movements even more sharply rhythmic than with Abbado, Chailly's account is among the finest. He has a warmly sensitive mezzo soloist in Petra Lang, and the reading is heightened by his dedicated account of the finale with its easy flowing tempo. The Decca SACD recording is among the finest this symphony has yet received.

In the first days of the Third Programme after the war, the BBC programmed its first complete cycle of Mahler symphonies. Sir Adrian Boult conducted the Third with Kathleen Ferrier as soloist in 1947. This was its first performance in England, and it was not given again until 1960. These acetates show that Sir Adrian was an echt-Mahlerian and completely inside the idiom. Older listeners will be delighted with this (RL remembers hearing the broadcast), in spite of the imperfections of the recorded sound. The Kindertotenlieder come from a Dutch broadcast made in 1951: Ferrier recorded the cycle with Bruno Walter, who perhaps evinces greater warmth and poetry than Klemperer but no less control. An important document for both Mahlerians and Ferrier aficionados.

Gergiev is intensely theatrical in Mahler's Third Symphony – a work which has always been quite elusive in the recording studio. The sharp dynamic contrasts were well brought out in the first movement, with all the colourful woodwind writing well highlighted and pointed. The slow movement is sensitively done, if without the sublime heights of the best versions available, though the rather dry acoustic doesn't always help, even if it allows plenty of detail to emerge. The following Scherzando doesn't have the proper lightness of touch, and if Anna Larsson, the alto soloist, has a bit of a wobble in the next movement, she is very expressive and is beautifully supported by the orchestra. The chorus and boys' choir are both excellent. The long finale is beautifully played and moulded, even if, again, it fails to reach the tension of the finest versions available. The audience from this live performance in 2007 are unbelievably quiet.

Symphony 4 in G

Ⓜ  RCA (ADD) 82876 59413-2. Blegen, Chicago SO, Levine

 EMI 5 56563-2. Roocroft, CBSO, Rattle

Ⓜ  RCA SACD 82876 67901-2. della Casa, Chicago SO, Reiner

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63277-2. Murray, RPO, Litton

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 419 863-2. Mathis, BPO, Karajan

Ⓝ  RCA 16852-2. Orgonášová, Tonhalle O, Zürich, Zinman

(BB)  Naxos 8.550527. Russell, Polish Nat. RSO, Wit

Ⓝ  BBCL (ADD) 4248-2. Lott, BBC N. SO, Sanderling (with Don Giovanni Overture)

(i) Symphony 4; (ii) Lieder eines Fahrenden Gesellen

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ  Sony SBK 46535 (i) Raskin, Cleveland O, Szell; (ii) von Stade LPO, A. Davis

George Szell's 1966 record of Mahler's Fourth represented his partnership with the Cleveland Orchestra at its highest peak, and the digital remastering for CD brings out the very best of the original recording. The performance remains uniquely satisfying: the music blossoms, partly because of the marvellous attention to detail (and the immaculate ensemble), but more positively because of the committed and radiantly luminous orchestral response to the music itself. In the finale Szell found the ideal soprano to match his conception. An outstanding choice, generously coupled. In contrast with most other recorded performances, Frederica von Stade insinuates a hint of youthful ardour into her highly enjoyable account of the Wayfaring Lad cycle.

James Levine draws a superlative performance from the Chicago orchestra, one which bears comparison with the finest versions, bringing out not merely the charm but also the deeper emotions. The subtlety of his control of tempo, so vital in Mahler, is superbly demonstrated and, though he may not quite match the nobility of Szell's famous analogue Sony version in the great slow movement, he has the advantage of a more modern (1975) recording. Judith Blegen makes a fresh, attractive soloist.

Simon Rattle's performance begins with an idiosyncratic but valid reading of the opening bars, at first very slow then brisk for the main Allegro. It reflects the thoughtfulness on detail of his approach to Mahler, reflected in an unusually refreshing account, youthfully urgent, which rises to a spacious, songful reading of the long slow movement. Amanda Roocroft sings with warm, creamy tone in the finale. Refined recording to match. This also stands high among modern recordings of this beautiful symphony.

On RCA the SACD remastering has brought a glowing warmth to the 1958 Chicago recording. Reiner's performances is wayward, but lovingly so; and everything he does sounds spontaneous. There is a mercurial quality in the first movement and plenty of drama too; the second is engagingly pointed but with a balancing warmth, the Viennese element strong. The slow movement has striking intensity, and in its rapt closing pages leads on gently to the finale in which Lisa della Casa, in ravishing voice, matches Reiner's mood.

Recorded in 1990, Virgin's captivatingly fresh account from Andrew Litton and the RPO has lain forgotten in the EMI vaults until now. It is a consistently flexible, highly spontaneous, vibrant account with lovely warm playing, rich in colour and full of individual touches, and drama too, especially in the slow movement which has one of the most spectacular climaxes on disc. Ann Murray then puts the seal on the performance with the touching simplicity of her contribution to the finale. Demonstration sound adds to the many pleasures this CD offers. Finer than many more famous versions, it comes very high on the list of recommendations.

Karajan's refined and poised, yet undoubtedly affectionate account remains among the finest versions of this lovely symphony, and Edith Mathis's sensitively composed contribution to the finale matches the conductor's meditative feeling. With glowing sound, this makes another outstanding mid-priced recommendation.

Zinman offers a bracing and fresh version of Mahler's Fourth Symphony in first-class sound. The orchestra play superbly, and if they are not quite in the league of the BPO in terms of having this repertoire under their skin, many will respond to their sensitively direct approach. Indeed, the slow movement in very beautifully done indeed, and the soprano soloist Luba Orgonášvá is superb in the finale, which Zinman conducts supremely well.

Antoni Wit conducts a fresh, spontaneous-sounding reading, beautifully played and recorded, that can be warmly recommended at Naxos's bargain price. Lynda Russell is a pure-toned soprano soloist in the finale, both fresh and warm, with Wit giving a good lilt to the rhythm. Excellent sound, which gives a good bite and focus to the woodwind, so important in Mahler.

Good though it is to hear Sanderling's level-headed approach to this work, and Felicity Lott's fine contribution in the finale, neither the 1978 recording nor the orchestral playing are good enough to make it a top choice.

Symphonies: (i) 4; (ii) 8 (Symphony of 1000)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 61572-2 [3 61580-2] (2). (i) Popp; (ii) Connell, Wiens, Lott, Schmitt, Denize, Versalle, Hynninen, Sotin, Tiffin School Boys' Ch., LPO Ch.; LPO, Tennstedt

Tennstedt conducts a strong, spacious reading of the Fourth Symphony which yet conveys an innocence entirely in keeping with this most endearing of the Mahler symphonies. He makes the argument seamless in his easy transition of speed, yet he never deliberately adopts a coaxing, charming manner; in that he is followed most beautifully by Lucia Popp, the soloist in the finale. For its reissue among EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' this is aptly coupled with Tennstedt's magnificent recording of the Eighth, the finest of his whole Mahler cycle. His soloists are a strong and characterful team. The great glory of the set is the singing of the London Philharmonic Choir, assisted by the Tiffin School Boys' Choir. With the extra range and richness of the 1986 Walthamstow recording coping superbly with even the heaviest passages, it will for many listeners be even more satisfying than the Decca version.

Symphony 5 in C sharp min. (DVD version)

🔑  EMI DVD 490325-2. BPO, Rattle – ADÈS: Asyla (V/D: Bob Coles)

Rattle's fine version of Mahler's Fifth was recorded in November 2002 at his inaugural concert as music director of the Berlin Philharmonic. The video fully captures the atmospheric excitement of that occasion in a reading which brings out the work's lyrical qualities. It is also a version which demonstrates the joyfulness of much of the writing, notably in the finale. The DVD has a clear advantage over the CD issue in that it also contains the other work in the concert, Thomas Adès's brilliant showpiece, Asyla. The package also contains a second disc with an extended interview with Rattle by Nicholas Kenyon, his biographer and a former Controller of Music at the BBC.

Symphony 5 in C sharp min.

🔑 * Decca 458 860-2. Concg. O, Chailly

* EMI 5 57385-2. BPO, Rattle

 DG 437 789-2 BPO, Abbado

✿ Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66910-2. New Philh. O, Barbirolli

Ⓝ (*) RCA SACD 31450-2. Tonhalle O, Zürich, Zinman

Ⓝ Ⓑ LPO 0033. LPO, Zweden

Chailly excels himself in his strong, clear-sighted, but deeply felt reading of 5, with his concentration reflected in superlative playing from the Concertgebouw, caught with exceptional clarity in the full and brilliant Decca recording. The beauty of Mahler's orchestration has rarely been conveyed so vividly, with the hushed intensity of the Adagio the more moving for its reticence, and with the joyful finale dazzling in its crisp detail. Other, more personal readings may be more distinctive, but none is more widely recommendable.

One element which Rattle brings out more than his rivals is the exuberance of Mahler's writing. In this live recording one vividly registers the excitement of the occasion. The emotional climax of the performance comes, as it should, in the great Adagietto. Yet Rattle, looking at the evidence, treats it differently from most latter-day interpreters who make it expansively elegiac. By contrast he responds to it with the music emerging tenderly, as though from another world. This above all is a songful vision full of tenderness, with phrasing affectionately moulded in spontaneous warmth.

Abbado's is another outstanding version, recorded live in the Philharmonie, Berlin, with the dramatic tensions of a concert performance vividly captured. The great Adagio is raptly done, wistful rather than openly romantic, and the Wunderhorn finale is at once refined and exuberant. With excellent sound this is Abbado at his peak.

Barbirolli's famous analogue 1969 recording (made in Watford Town Hall) has now been splendidly remastered for EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century' series and sounds fuller, clearer, more atmospheric than ever. On any count this is one of the greatest, most warmly affecting accounts ever committed to disc, expansive, yet concentrated in feeling: the Adagietto is very moving indeed. A classic version which many will prefer even to Abbado's newer digital account.

With very fine playing from the Tonhalle Orchestra and state-of the art SACD recording, Zinman offers a direct approach to Mahler to which many will respond. It has to be admitted, though, that in the last analysis it is a little undercharacterized and classic accounts from the VPO, Berlin Symphony Orchestra, et al., offer the greater Mahlerian experience.

Zinman's performance, however, is far preferable to another new version on LPO, which is given a somewhat superficial performance with the conductor failing to galvanize the LPO to meet the demands of this symphony. The orchestra play well, of course, in the Adagietto especially so, but neither as a performance nor as a recording is this a viable choice.

Symphony 6 (DVD version)

* EuroArts DVD 2055648. Lucerne Festival O, Claudio Abbado

Abbado's electrifying account of the Sixth Symphony was recorded on 10 August 2006 with the Lucerne Festival Orchestra: this is composed primarily of the Mahler Chamber Orchestra, to which were added leading players from the Berlin and Vienna Philharmonic, members of the Alban Berg and Hagen Quartets and the Sabine Meyer Ensemble – quite a line-up! The playing is of the highest order of virtuosity and, for all his apparent frailty, Abbado conducts like a man possessed. The camerawork is discreet and always places the eye where the ear wants it directed. This must be to the DVD catalogue what Karajan's account with the Berlin Philharmonic was to the CD lists. Powerful and gripping, and vividly recorded.

Symphony 6 in A min.

🔑  DG 445 835-2. VPO, Boulez

(BB)  Naxos 8.550529 (2). Polish Nat. RSO (Katowice), Wit

Ⓑ  Double Decca (IMS) (ADD) 444 871-2 (2). Concg. O, Chailly – ZEMLINSKY: Maeterlinck Lieder ***

Ⓝ Ⓜ  LSO Live LSO 0661. LSO, Gergiev

With superlative playing from the Berlin Philharmonic, Karajan's reading of the Sixth is a revelation, above all in the slow movement, which emerges as one of the greatest of Mahler's slow movements. Though the outer movements firmly stamp this as one of the darkest of the Mahler symphonies, in Karajan's reading their sharp focus makes them both compelling and refreshing. The fine, mid-1970s DG recording, with its wide dynamic, adds enormously to the impact. Christa Ludwig's moving account of the Kindertotenlieder has been added to the previously coupled Rückert Lieder: fine, positive performances with comparative distinction and refinement in the orchestral playing.

Boulez conducts a performance of the most enigmatic symphony which in its power and sharpness of focus transcends almost any rival. Boulez's control of speeds is masterful, never rushed, even though this is a performance squeezed on to a single disc, and the slow movement brings hushed, ravishingly beautiful playing of a refinement it would be hard to match. The finale is rugged and weighty, with crisp pointing of rhythms, making this an outstanding recommendation.

The excellent quality of the Katowice Orchestra of Polish Radio is impressively demonstrated in all four movements of this difficult symphony. The ensemble can hardly be faulted, and the full, atmospheric recording enhances that quality with string-sound that is fresh and radiant. Wit conducts a spacious performance, clean and well sprung, with the varying moods sharply contrasted. On two full discs it becomes less of a super-bargain than some Naxos issues, but it stands comparison with any rival.

Chailly's version with the Concertgebouw offers brilliant playing and spectacular sound in a reading remarkable for its broad, rugged approach in the outer movements. There is relentlessness in the slow speed for the first movement, with expressive warmth giving way to a square purposefulness, tense and effective. The third movement brings a comparably simple, direct approach at a genuine flowing Andante. In its open songfulness it rouses Wunderhorn echoes. Anyone fancying the unexpected but attractive Zemlinsky coupling need not hesitate.

Gergiev places the Scherzo after the slow movement as Mahler did at the work's première, though it was originally placed second (Gergiev's way is now becoming more common). Gergiev's approach to Mahler's Sixth is bold and dramatic and his performance has a total conviction not always apparent in his controversial cycle. Even in the slow movement, the climax is driven, but relaxes beautifully in all the key moments. He goes for an almost brutish energy in this dark symphony of Mahler, and the results are compelling. The sound is bold and vivid, if lacking somewhat in space around the instruments. The audience are quiet as can be.

Symphony 7 in E min. (DVD version)

 DG DVD 2054629. Lucerne Festival O, Abbado

An impressive and well-presented account from Abbado in a most persuasive reading, originally televised in August 2005. However, those who remember Abbado in his days with the LSO or the Berlin Philharmonic should be warned that, although his spirit is untamed, his failing health has left him looking a shadow of his former self, gaunt and haggard.

Symphony 7 in E min. (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 445 513-2. Chicago SO, Abbado

 RCA 09026 63510-2 (2). LSO, Tilson Thomas

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550531. Polish Nat. RSO, Halász

Abbado's command of Mahlerian characterization has never been more tellingly displayed than in this most problematic of the symphonies; even in the loosely bound finale Abbado unerringly draws the threads together. The precision and polish of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra go with total commitment, and the recording is one of the finest DG has made with this orchestra.

Michael Tilson Thomas conducts a strong, purposeful reading of the Seventh, with polished and refined playing from the LSO and recording to match. His terracing of textures and dynamics is perfectly judged. The result may be less atmospheric and evocative than in some readings, but the relative coolness of the second Nachtmusik, for example, makes one appreciate the work the more keenly for its symphonic qualities. Although the fragmentary structure of the finale is in no way disguised, the pointedness of the playing holds it firmly together. A strong contender in a hotly competitive field.

Symphony 8 (Symphony of 1000)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 7521. Harper, Popp, Augér, Minton, Watts, Kollo, Shirley-Quirk, Talvela, V. Boys' Ch., V. State Op. Ch. & Singverein, Chicago SO, Solti

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 2 28529-2. Brewer, Isokoski, Banse, Rammert, Henschel, Villars, Wilson-Johnson, Relyea, L. Symphony Ch., CBSO Ch., Youth Ch. & O, Rattle

Ⓝ Ⓜ  LSO Live LSO 0669. Yastrebova, Tynan, Dudinova, Passikivi, Bulycheva, Semishkur, Markov, Nikitin, Etham College Ch., Chora Arts Society of Washington, LSO Ch., LSO, Gergiev

(*) PentaTone SACD Surround Sound PTC 5186 166. Cotrubas, Harper, Van Bork, Finnilä, Dielman, Cochran, Prey, Soltin, Amsterdam Choruses, Concg. O, Haitink

 Decca 467 314-2. Eaglen, Schwarnewilms, Ziezak, Fulgoni, Larsson, Heppner, Mattri, Rootering, St Bavo's Cathedral Boys' Ch., Breda Sacraments Ch., Prague Philharmonic Ch., Netherlands R. Ch., Concg. O, Chailly

In interpretation, Solti's famous (1971) Mahler Eighth is outstanding in every way, extrovert in display but full of dark implications, and this is one of his finest Mahler records. It now comes on a single mid-priced CD as one of Decca's new series of Originals.

Recorded live in Symphony Hall, Birmingham, in June 2004, Rattle completes his Mahler symphony cycle with a powerful, urgent reading of the Symphony of a Thousand. The performance gains enormously from the liveness of the occasion, with high-voltage electricity generated from first to last. Added to that, his relatively fast tempi for the long expanses of the second movement, setting Goethe, mean that, as with Solti, the whole work is on a single disc, an obvious advantage. The soloists are an excellent team, headed by the superb American soprano Christine Brewer, and the massed choruses match the orchestra in the bite and power of their singing, leading up to a thrilling account of the final sequence. The recording is not quite as full or open in atmosphere as some rivals, but that never masks the power of the performance.

This LSO Live version is at once the most ambitious and the most impressive in Gergiev's variable Mahler series. This so-called Symphony of a Thousand was recorded live in St Paul's Cathedral and, thanks to clever microphone placing, the sound is admirably clear, if with a reverberant background. The atmosphere of a great occasion is caught admirably, with the timpani and organ very impressive, even if the soloists are placed rather backwardly. The dynamic range is most impressive too. The climactic chorus on Alle vergangliche in this setting of the final section of Goethe's Faust makes a thrilling conclusion. The soloists are good, with the bright high soprano of Viktoria Yastrebova sounding ethereal. A most competitive version.

Haitink's 1971 recording of Mahler's Eighth Symphony was recorded in four channels for quadraphonic issue, and on this SACD using four speakers the performance is revealed in its full glory, and Haitink's spacious and certainly powerfully sustained interpretation is heard as never before within the superb acoustics of the Concertgebouw, whose ambience is ideal for Mahler's music. The dynamic range is remarkable, and there are few recordings of any music more spectacularly compelling than the work's closing 'Hymnenartig', with the words 'Alles Vergängliche' of the final section tremendously expressive and moving, proceeding to an overwhelming climax as the brass and timpani cap the last words of the chorus. The only snag to this reissue is the lack of text and translation.

Though it features multiple choirs and spectacular recording, Chailly's version is distinctive for underplaying the grandeur of the opening movement, Veni creator spiritus. He has deliberately sought to make the long second movement with its Faust setting – a sequence of dramatic scenes culminating in the chorus, Alles vergängliche – the true climax of the work. The team of soloists is outstanding, with the recording vividly catching the detail and perspectives of the massive ensemble.

Symphony 9 in D min.

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 439 024-2. BPO, Karajan

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 67925-2 [567926]. BPO, Barbirolli

 Decca SACD 475 6191. Concg. O, Chailly

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 3 8008-2 (2). New Philh. O, Klemperer + R. STRAUSS: Death and Transfiguration; Metamorphosen

Symphony 9; (i) Kindertotenlieder; 5 Rückert Lieder

🔑 Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 040-2 (2). BPO, Karajan; (i) with Ludwig

Fine as Karajan's other Mahler recordings have been, his two accounts of the Ninth transcend them. In the earlier, analogue version (453 040-2) it is the combination of richness and concentration in the outer movements that makes for a reading of the deepest intensity, while in the middle two movements there is point and humour as well as refinement and polish. Helped by full, spacious recording, the sudden pianissimos that mark both movements have an ear-pricking realism such as one rarely experiences on record, and the unusually broad tempi are superbly controlled. In the finale Karajan is not just noble and stoic; he finds the bite of passion as well, sharply set against stillness and repose.

Within two years Karajan went on to record the work even more compulsively at live performances in Berlin. The major difference in that later recording (439 024-2) is that there is a new, glowing optimism in the finale, rejecting any Mahlerian death-wish and making it a supreme achievement. Yet the earlier (1980) analogue performance makes a remarkable alternative, reissued as a DG Double. Moreover the performances of the Kindertotenlieder and Rückert Lieder have a distinction and refinement of playing which stand out above all.

Barbirolli greatly impressed the Berliners with his Mahler performances live, and this recording reflects the players' warmth of response. He opted to record the slow and intense finale before the rest, and the beauty of the playing makes it a fitting culmination. The other movements are strong and alert too, and the sound remains full and atmospheric, though now even more clearly defined in its current remastering for reissue as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. An unquestionable bargain.

The great glory of the Chailly version is the spectacular SACD recording, which is very full-bodied and almost larger than life, with the widest dynamic range. The playing of the Royal Concertgebouw is spectacular too, with details clearly in place and rhythms crisp and sharp in the middle two movements. If, next to the finest live recordings, this studio account sounds a degree too metrical in the massive outer movements, the power of the work has never come over with greater impact.

Klemperer's refusal to languish pays tribute to his spiritual defiance, and the physical power is underlined when the sound is full-bodied and firmly focused. The sublimity of the finale comes out the more intensely, with overt expressiveness held in check and deep emotion implied rather than made explicit. Now recoupled both with the Strauss Metamorphosen and with Death and Transfiguration, this is one of the more important reissues in EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Symphony 10 in F sharp (Unfinished) (revised performing edition by Deryck Cooke)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 034220-2. BPO, Rattle

Ⓑ (*) CfP 585 901-2. Bournemouth SO, Rattle

In 1980, at the beginning of his recording career, Simon Rattle recorded this inspired realization of Mahler's five-movement concept. With the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, that remains an electrifying account, weightily recorded now on CfP, but his new version with the Berlin Philharmonic, recorded live, transcends it in almost every way. It is not only the extra refinement of the Berliners but also the extra detail that Rattle brings out in almost every phrase that goes with an even greater concentration.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i) Kindertotenlieder; (ii) Des Knaben Wunderhorn (excerpts); (i) Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen

Ⓝ (*) Phoenix 105. Köln RSO, Bertini; with (i) Quasthoff; (ii) Hagegård

These performances date from the early 1990s, with the Kindertotenlieder recorded live in 1993. As in the Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, Thomas Quasthoff is predictably impressive at this early stage of his career, before he became famous. His is a young man's portrayal of these works, but by no means an undeveloped one: he brings out plenty of subtle nuance in his phrasing and is compelling throughout. Håkan Hagegård gives an impassioned account of the Des Knaben Wunderhorn excerpts, which are most enjoyable. The recorded sound is excellent throughout, though Bertini delivers not the most inspired of accompaniments. Alas, no texts provided.

(i) Kindertotenlieder; (ii) Des Knaben Wunderhorn; (i) Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; Rückert-Lieder

 DG DVD 073 4167. (i) Hampson, VPO; (ii) Popp, Grönroos, Israel PO; Bernstein

Thomas Hampson gives us a beautifully controlled account of the Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen which find Bernstein and the Vienna Philharmonic at their finest – subtle, delicate colourings and strong atmosphere; indeed, quite glorious orchestral playing throughout. No quarrels either with Kindertotenlieder or the Rückert songs. Lucia Popp and the Finnish baritone, Walton Grönroos, are also given excellent support by Bernstein and the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra (even if it is no Vienna Philharmonic) in the 12 Wunderhorn songs. The performances come from the late 1980s and the video direction is refreshingly natural, even if the picture is not as fresh in colouring or as fine in focus as more modern recordings.

(i) Kindertotenlieder; Des Knaben Wunderhorn: Des Antonius von Padua Fischpredigt; Das irdische Leben; Urlicht; (ii) Das klagende Lied; (i) Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; 5 Rückert Lieder

Ⓑ  Double Decca 473 725-2 (2). (i) Fassbaender, Berlin Deutsche SO; (ii) Dunn, Baur, Hollweg, Schmidt, Düsseldorf State Musikverein, Berlin RSO; Chailly

Fassbaender gives fearless, vividly characterized performances of Kindertotenlieder, the Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, the Five Rückert Lieder, and three songs from Des Knaben Wunderhorn. The strength of Chailly's Das klagende Lied lies with the splendid singing of the Düsseldorf choir and the demonstration-worthy Decca recording, full of presence. While not quite upstaging Rattle in revealing the music's imaginative detail, Chailly pulls one special trick out of the hat in Waldmärchen by using a boy alto (Markus Baur) to represent the voice from the grave, a tellingly sepulchral effect. Full texts and translations are provided, and this makes an impressive and generous Double Decca anthology.

Kindertotenlieder; Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; Lieder und Gesänge: 1, 3, 5, 10–13; 5 Rückert Lieder

 Hyp. CDA 67392. Genz, Vignoles

Stephan Genz gives sensitive, finely detailed readings of Mahler's three most popular cycles in their piano versions, adding for good measure seven of Mahler's Youth songs, Lieder und Gesänge. It says much for Roger Vignoles's accompaniments that he finds such fantasy in the piano writing, with the sparer textures of the accompaniments for Kindertotenlieder made to reflect the pain of bereavement in their bareness.

(i) Kindertotenlieder; Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; (ii) 5 Rückert Lieder

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * EMI (ADD) 5 66981-2. Baker, Hallé or New Philh. O, Barbirolli

(*) Australian Decca Eloquence 442 8287. Horne, with (i) RPO, Lewis; (ii) LAPO, Mehta

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554156. Greevy, Nat. SO of Ireland, with (i) Fürst; (ii) Decker

Dame Janet Baker's collaboration with Barbirolli represents the affectionate approach to Mahler at its warmest: intensely beautiful, full of breathtaking moments. The spontaneous feeling of soloist and conductor for this music comes over as in a live performance and brings out the tenderness to a unique degree. An indispensable CD.

Horne is not ideally recorded: the microphones are too close in the Mehta items, accentuating the impression of a lack of subtlety. But her wonderfully rich mezzo is a joy to hear in its own right, and the sheer power of her voice can be very exciting, as in the climax of Um Mitternacht. In Kindertotenlieder, Horne has a statuesque quality which does not ideally suit Mahler's intensely personal inspiration. But there is much to admire, much that is beautiful.

Bernadette Greevy may lack a degree of vitality in such a song as the second of the Wayfaring Lad cycle, the song that gave Mahler his first theme in his First Symphony, but her poise in such a great song as the Rückert setting, Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen, is most satisfying, readily compensating for any lack of emotional weight compared with the finest interpretations. The Irish National Symphony Orchestra play with rich, velvety tone in every section, helped by the warmly atmospheric recording, made in the National Concert Hall in Dublin.

Kindertotenlieder; 3 Rückert Lieder: Ich atmet' einen linden Duft; Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen; Um Mitternacht

🔑 ✿ (BB) () Regis mono RRC 1153. Ferrier, VPO, Walter – BRAHMS: Vier ernste Gesang, etc. ()

Kathleen Ferrier's radiant Kindertotenlieder (from 1949) are wonderfully moving, and the three Rückert Lieder from 1952, heartfelt and monumental, are magically intense, with Bruno Walter and the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra adding a special affectionate glow to the music-making. Indeed, the orchestra sounds far better here than on the original Decca LPs. These two artists worked wonderfully well together and this Regis coupling, transferred warmly and smoothly, is a very real bargain.

Das klagende Lied (complete: Part 1, Waldmärchen; Part 2, Der Spielmann; Part 3, Hochzeitsstücke)

🔑  EMI 5 66406-2. Döse, Hodgson, Tear, Rea, CBSO Ch., CBSO, Rattle

Rattle brings out the astonishing originality of Mahler's cycle, but adds urgency, colour and warmth, not to mention deeper, more meditative qualities. So the final section, Wedding Piece, after starting with superb swagger in the celebration music, is gripping in the minstrel's sinister narration and ends in the darkest concentration on a mezzo-soprano solo, beautifully sung by Alfreda Hodgson. This is one of Rattle's earliest Mahler recordings, but it sounds excellent in what appears to be a new transfer.

Des Knaben Wunderhorn

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 5 67236-2. Schwarzkopf, Fischer-Dieskau, LSO, Szell

Des Knaben Wunderhorn; Das himmlische Leben; Urlicht

 Decca 467 348-2. Bonney, Fulgoni, Winbergh, Goerne, Concg. O, Chailly

Szell's 1968 Kingsway Hall recording of Des Knaben Wunderhorn rightly joins EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'. The superb singing of Schwarzkopf and Fischer-Dieskau is underpinned by wonderfully sensitive playing from the LSO under Szell.

Strongly characterized, Chailly's disc of the Des Knaben Wunderhorn songs is also among the most distinctive versions available. The soloists are an outstanding team, with Matthias Goerne exceptionally perceptive, Barbara Bonney equally individual in characterization. Fresh and girlish, she also sings one of the two extra songs added to the usual 12, the child–heaven finale to the Fourth Symphony. The other extra song is the meditative Urlicht from the Resurrection Symphony, with the rich-toned Sara Fulgoni as mezzo soloist. The late Gösta Winbergh is also brought in as tenor soloist, when Chailly opts for having the military song, Revelge, in a higher key than usual.

Des Knaben Wunderhorn: 12 Lieder; Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; Lieder und Gesänge 1–14; 5 Rückert Lieder

(BB)  EMI 4 76780-2 (2). Fischer-Dieskau, Barenboim

The piano versions of Mahler's songs may not match in colour his orchestral versions, but with Daniel Barenboim imaginatively accompanying Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau the subtlety of Mahler's word-setting and of his piano writing is most compelling. This two-disc compilation at bargain price brings together a series of recordings they made in Berlin in 1978, classic performances, even if Fischer-Dieskau's baritone is not quite as fresh as it was earlier. Texts and translations are provided, though in minuscule type.

Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen

Ⓜ  Orfeo C 522 991B. Ludwig, VPO, Boehm – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 4; SCHUMANN: Symphony 4 ***

As the chosen soloist in an electrifying concert conducted by Karl Boehm in August 1969, Christa Ludwig excels herself in a deeply moving, strongly characterized reading of the Wayfaring Lad songs. The spontaneity of the performance makes up for any incidental flaws of the moment, with the voice gloriously firm and rich. No texts or translations of the songs are given, but every word is clear in this helpfully balanced radio recording.

Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; Lieder und Gesänge (aus der Jugendzeit); Im Lenz; Winterlied

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55160. J. Baker, Parsons

Janet Baker presents a superb collection of Mahler's early songs with piano, including two written in 1880 and never recorded before, Im Lenz and Winterlied; also the piano version of the Wayfaring Lad songs in a text prepared by Colin Matthews from Mahler's final thoughts, as contained in the orchestral version. The performances are radiant and deeply understanding from both singer and pianist, well caught in atmospheric recording. A heart-warming record.

(i) Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; (ii) 3 Rückert Lieder: Ich atmet' einem linden Duft; Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen; Um Mitternacht

() BBC mono/stereo BBCL 4107-2. Christa Ludwig, with (i) Philh. O, Cluytens; (ii) Parsons (with: BRAHMS: Ständchen; Wiegenlied ) – R. STRAUSS: Four Last Songs ***

The mono recording for Ludwig's 1957 account of the Mahler Wayfaring Lad cycle captures the richness of the voice vividly, with changing emotions clearly conveyed. The other songs, with Geoffrey Parsons at the piano, come from a Wigmore Hall recital given 21 years later, with the glorious voice still flawless in poised legato.

Das Lied von der Erde

🔑 Ⓜ  BBC (ADD) BBCM 5012-2. Baker, Mitchinson, BBC N. SO, Leppard

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66892-2. Ludwig, Wunderlich, Philh. & New Philh. O, Klemperer

Ⓜ (*) Sony (ADD) 82876 78752-2. Miller, Haefliger, NYPO, Walter

(*) RCA SACD 88697 08281-2. Forrester, Lewis, Chicago SO, Reiner

(i) Das Lied von der Erde; 3 Rückert Lieder

Ⓜ () Decca mono 466 576-2. Ferrier; (i) Patzak; VPO, Walter

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110871. Ferrier; (i) Patzak; VPO, Walter

Taken from a performance for radio in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, the Leppard version offers Baker in 1977, giving another of her moving and richly varied readings of the contralto songs. The final Abschied has a depth and intensity, a poignancy that sets it alongside Dame Janet's earlier recordings. John Mitchinson may not have the most beautiful tenor, but his voice focuses ever more securely through the work, with many cleanly ringing top notes. Raymond Leppard draws fine playing from the orchestra, now renamed the BBC Philharmonic, though the body of strings is thin for Mahler. Acceptable BBC sound, with the voices naturally placed, not spotlit.

The latest Decca remastering of the famous (1952) Ferrier–Patzak version of Das Lied is a revelation. At the very opening the orchestral strings are not ideally focused, but Ferrier's voice is warmly and vividly caught, as is the characterful Patzak. Even more remarkable is the transfer of the three Rückert songs recorded at the same time (Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen, Ich atmet' einen linden Duft and Um Mitternacht).

Mark Obert-Thorn's transfers on Naxos are also admirable, slightly less open than the Decca in Das Lied, but somewhat smoother in focus. The Rückert Lieder, which come first, sound particularly beautiful. However, the Naxos disc, though it is less expensive than the Decca, unusually for this label does not include texts or translations.

Though Bruno Walter's 1960 New York version does not have the tear-laden quality in the final Abschied that made his earlier Decca Vienna account (in mono) with Kathleen Ferrier unique, that is its only serious shortcoming. The performances are bursting with vitality, Ernst Haefliger sparkles with imagination and Mildred Miller is a warm and appealing mezzo soloist, lacking only the ultimate depth of feeling you find in a Ferrier; while Walter himself has rarely sounded so happy on record. The recording, made in New York's Manhattan Center, is spacious and lively, although it has an element of coarseness.

Klemperer's way with Mahler is at its most individual in Das Lied von der Erde – and that will enthral some, as it must infuriate others. With slower speeds, the three tenor songs seem initially to lose some of their sparkle and humour; however, thanks to superb, expressive singing by the late Fritz Wunderlich – one of the most memorable examples of his artistry on record – and thanks also to pointing of rhythm by Klemperer himself, subtle but always clear, the comparative slowness will hardly worry anyone intent on hearing the music afresh. As for the mezzo songs, Christa Ludwig sings them with a remarkable depth of expressiveness; in particular, the final Abschied has the intensity of a great occasion. Excellent digitally remastered recording.

Reiner's approach too has delicacy, drama and feeling. He follows the letter of the score exactly. For instance, at the climactic point of the closing 'Abschied' he and Maureen Forrester create tension with their gentle tenderness. The whispered murmurs of 'Ewig' at the end have not quite the heart-searching intensity one remembers with Ferrier or Baker, but their touching understatement may be nearer to the meaning of the poem and thus to Mahler's intention. Forrester is on top form throughout, and Richard Lewis sings passionately and is both imaginative and musicianly: the whole performance is full of spontaneity. An SACD reissue worth seeking out.

5 Rückert Lieder

Ⓜ  Wigmore Hall WH Live 0013. Hunt Lieberson, Vignoles – HANDEL: Arias from Ariodante; Theodora; LIEBERSON: O ihr Zatlichen, etc. ***

The untimely death from cancer of Lorraine Hunt Lieberson makes one value the relatively few recordings she made, including this live recording taken at a Wigmore Hall recital in 1998. Here is a mezzo who more than any of her generation bade fair to rival Janet Baker in the warmth, beauty and intensity of her singing, most strikingly in these songs with which Baker was so closely associated. They are the more poignant when the very texts have death as a theme.

MALIPIERO, Gian Francesco (1882–1973)

Violin Concerto

 Sup. (ADD) SU 3904-2. Gertler, Prague SO, Smetáček – CASELLA: Violin Concerto ***

Malipiero and Casella were born within a year of each other and their Violin Concertos were composed at roughly the same period in their careers. The Malipiero has fallen out of the repertory, so it is good to have André Gertler's 1971 recording back in circulation. It is a finely wrought piece, at times almost reminiscent of the pastoral quality of Vaughan Williams. An enterprising and welcome reissue.

Symphonies 3 (Delle Campane); 4 (In Memoriam); Sinfonia del mare

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos 8.570878. Moscow SO, Almeida

It is good to have Malipiero symphonies available at bargain price. 3 and 4 were composed during the Second World War, the former inspired by the tolling of bells of St Mark's Basilica to signify the German invasion of Italy in 1943; and stylized bell evocations run throughout this work. The Fourth Symphony is dedicated to Koussevitzky and contains a particularly beautiful slow movement. His Sinfonia del mare ('Sea Symphony') is very evocative and displays the composer's gift for orchestral colour. It is a great pity that neither the performances (which sound somewhat scrappy) nor the sound are first rate.

MANFREDINI, Francesco (1684–1762)

Concerti grossi, Op. 3/1–12

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Naxos 8.553891. Capella Istropolitana, Krček

This splendid set of 12 concertos, published in Bologna in 1718, was dedicated to Prince Antoine I of Monaco, with whose court orchestra Manfredini was associated. The most famous of them is 12, a Christmas Concerto in the style of Torelli and Corelli, opening with a delightful Pastorale in siciliano rhythm. And if there are other influences here too, of Vivaldi in particular, and even anticipations of Handel, the music has its own individuality and is endlessly inventive. Allegros are vital and buoyant, slow movements tenderly touching, often featuring one or two solo violins. The Naxos performances here are both fresh and penetrating, with bouncing outer movements and expressive Adagios. Moreover the playing is perfectly in style, demonstrating how using modern instruments can be just as authentic as period manners in baroque music. The recording is absolutely natural, very much in the demonstration bracket.

MANKELL, Henning
(1868–1930)

Piano Music: Ballad 7, Op. 77; 3 Preludes, Op. 54; 3 Legends, Op. 59; 4 Pieces (Barcarolle; Evening Mood; Tempest Mood; Slow Waves), Op. 60; Valse mesto, Op. 58; Fantasy Sonatas: 1, Op. 69, 3, Op. 72; 6, Op. 76

Ⓝ  Phoenix 184 (2). Christensson

Henning Mankell was born into a musical family in northern Sweden and, after a period teaching the piano in the provinces, in 1917 was elected a fellow of the Royal Swedish Academy of Music, where he continued to teach and also began composing. The works represented in this recording are from his later period (1922–30) and, with increasing familiarity, it is being recognized that some of the finest Swedish piano music derives from his hand.

The sets of Preludes and Legends are all impressionistic and have something of the atmosphere of Debussy, although Mankell's treatment of harmony was individual. Evocations like Waves (from the Preludes) and the Legend, Atlantis, are particularly evocative, although most striking of all are the Four Pieces, with the penultimate Tempest Mood and closing Slow Waves showing Mankell at his most imaginative. The three Fantasy Sonatas are essentially rhapsodical, with the third especially successful; but the closing Ballade is a remarkable work, with something of the variety of a Chopin Ballade, only twice as extended. Anna Christensson is thoroughly at home in this repertoire and plays with great confidence and poetic feeling. She is very well recorded, and anyone who is looking for a new composer in the field of early twentieth-century piano music and who has flatly refused to indulge in atonalism, should find this collection very rewarding.

MARAIS, Marin (1656–1728)

Pièces a deux viole, Book I (1686): Chaconne in G; Suites in D min. & G

 Astrée Naïve ES 9963. Savall, Coin, Koopman, Hopkinson Smith

Pièces de viole, Book II (1701)

 Astrée Naïve ES 9978. Savall, Gallet, Hopkinson Smith

Pièces de viole, Book II: Couplets de folies; Fantaisie pièces in D min.; E; Suite in E; Tombeau de Monsieur Ste Colombe

🔑 * BIS CD 909. Luolajan-Mikkola, Haavisto, Palviaininen

Pièces de viole, Book II: Suite in D min.; Couplets de folies; Book III: Suites in G & A min.

 Glossa GCD 920406. Pandolfo, Balestracci, Boysen, Costoyas, Meyerson

Marais wrote his five books of Pièces de viole over four decades – between 1686 and 1725 – and as time went by he moved onward from the standard dance pattern of allemande, courante, sarabande, gigue, gavotte and minuet. The First Book introduces a fine Chaconne, an Echo fantaisie, and ends with a deeply expressive Tombeau. The Second Book is mainly famous for its Follie d'espagne, 32 bravura variations on an Iberian dance we know as La folia. But it also includes La Voix humaine and another Tombeau, remembering Lully. The Third Book includes a Gigue à l'anglais, a Muzette, a Grand ballet and another Chaconne.

There is no questioning Jordi Savall's authority in these pieces, and he leads a dedicated team. But his manner is somewhat austere, the colouring is comparatively dark, and some may well prefer the lighter touch and textures of Paolo Pandolfo and his colleagues. The Glossa issue is particularly well documented, and it includes Folies d'espagne separately on a bonus disc.

However, our favourite among these issues is the BIS CD, which is particularly attractively recorded. Markku Luolajan-Mikkola's full timbre is warmly caught, and he plays with plenty of expressive feeling and flexibility and a wide range of dynamic. In essence, this is very friendly playing which wins the ear without abrasiveness, and his continuo group is just as excellent.

Pièces de viole, Book II (1701): Les Folies d'Espagne; Suite in E min.; Book IV (1717): La Labyrinthe

🔑 * HM Zig-Zag Territoires ZZT 060801. Ens. Spirale, Muller

This Zig-Zag collection from the excellent Ensemble Spirale is particularly attractive in including Les Folies d'Espagne, and the similarly celebrated virtuoso piece, La Labyrinthe. But the centrepiece is the complete Suite in E minor from Book II, with its 13 varied movements, ending with the Tombeau pour M. de Sainte-Colombe, which is played very touchingly. Indeed, the gamba playing of Marianne Muller, the group's director, and of her colleague Sylvia Abramowicz and of their excellent continuo of harpsichord, baroque guitar and theorbo is first class, with sensitive phrasing and warm tone. Moreover the recording too is state-of-the-art: the viola da gamba sound is particularly firm and well focused.

Pièces de viole; 4 Suites from Books II & III

Ⓝ (BB)  Virgin 69321320. Jerome & Pierre Hantai, Verzier

This is another particularly attractive collection, inexpensive, very well played and vividly and smoothly recorded.

Pièces de viole, Book IV (1717): Suite d'un goût étranger (complete)

🔑 * Alia Vox AVSA 9854l (2). Savall, Hantaï, Pierlot, Lislevand, Diaz-Latorre, Lawrence-King, Estevan

Jordi Savall now gives us a complete coverage of Marais's Book IV, including the Suite d'un goût étranger, using a varied continuo. He is a complete master of this repertoire, and famous virtuoso items like Le Tourbillon and the Labyrinth are superbly played. The recording balance too is excellent, and the pair of discs is very handsomely packaged and presented.

Pièces en Trio: Sonnerie de Sainte-Geneviève du Mont de Paris (for Violin, Bass Viol &

Harpsichord (1723); Suites: 1 in C (for Flute, Violin, Bass Viol & Harpsichord) (1692); Pièces de Viole, Book II (1711): 4 in D (for Bass Viol & Harpsichord)

Ⓑ  HM Musique d'Abord HMA 195414. Alice & Nikolaus Harnoncourt, Stastny, Tachezi

The Trio Sonata here in which the flute dominates has great charm and above all delicate and elegant in feeling rather than effervescent. The D major Viola da Gamba Suite, played with aplomb by Nikolaus Harnoncourt (in 1973), has a dozen movements, with half of them given names. But they are not as striking as the Sonnerie de Sainte-Geneviève du Mont de Paris, composed much later. This is a set of variations in the style of a chaconne, and led by a violin rather than a treble viol. It simulates church bells and also supposedly evokes city life around the church, although it is the bells which dominate. First-class performances and recording.

Pièces de violes: L'Arabesque; Le Badinage; Le Labyrinthe; Prélude in G; La Rêveuse; Sonnerie de Sainte-Geneviève du Mont de Paris; Suite in G; Tombeau pour Monsieur de Sainte-Colombe

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550750. Spectre de la Rose – SAINTE-COLOMBE: Le Retour, etc. ***

Naxos have stepped in enterprisingly and chosen a programme that is not only most attractive in its own right, but which also includes the key items used in the fascinating film about the conjectural relationship between Marin Marais and his reclusive mentor, Sainte-Colombe (Tous les matins du monde). Spectre de la Rose consists of a first-rate group of young players, led by Alison Crum, who plays in a dignified but austere style which at first seems cool but which is very effective in this repertoire. Le Badinage is perhaps a little stiff and unsmiling, but the key item, Marais's eloquent lament for his teacher, Tombeau pour Monsieur de Sainte-Colombe, is restrained and touching. Good, bright, forward recording, vividly declaiming the plangent viola da gamba timbre. But be careful not to play this record at too high a volume setting.

Pièces de violes: Book I (1686): Tombeau de M. Meliton. Book II (1701): Couplets de folies; Les Voix humaines. Book III (1711): Suite in D. La Gamme et autres Morceaux de Simphonie (1723): Sonate à la Marésienne

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553081. Spectre de la Rose

The second Naxos collection from Spectre de la Rose even includes a rare work in which the violin takes the lead (the Sonate à la Marésienne), although the embroidering gamba partner takes the lion's share of bravura. It is a most attractive work and is played here with real sparkle, while the following Suite in D also shows Marais at his most attractively inventive. Les Voix humaines is deeply pitched, and even the Couplets de folies is far from light-hearted. Spectre de la Rose are experts in this field and play most persuasively throughout.

Sémélé (Tragédie lyrique; complete)

Ⓝ * Glossa GCD 921614 (2). Mercer, Dolié, Thébault, Dahlin, Labonette, Azzaretti, Tauran, Abadie, Le Concert Spirituel, Niquet

Marais's 1709 setting of Sémélé used a libretto by Houdar de la Motte in which the basic classical storyline and nature of the characterization are often different from Handel's Semele. The drama of Jupiter's unfaithfulness to his angry wife Juno is common to both settings, but the principal alternative twist of the plot comes at the end: Prince Adraste (whom Semele was originally to marry, to please her father Cadmus, King of Thebes) fails to survive the final earthquake and conflagration. Instead of being consumed by Jupiter's fire, Semele is restored to life by the god, who installs her in heaven as his mistress instead!

Houdar de la Motte's portrait of Semele is nowhere near as self-admiring and resourceful as Handel's character, but she is obviously gently desirable, and is given two beautiful, expressive arias: Amour régnez en paix in Act III, and Descendes cher amant in Act IV, both delicately accompanied by flutes. Alongside the arias for the other principal characters there also numerous brief duos. However, the real glory of Marais's setting lies in his fine choruses and his delightful writing for the orchestra, often with enchanting textures. This is immediately apparent in the opening extended prologue, a Bacchanalia, with Apollo appearing to announce the opera's storyline. The instrumental writing reaches a climax in the great Chaconne in Act II, the most ambitious ever composed in France; but the accompaniment throughout lights up the dialogue in the most colourful way. The singing cast here is excellent, but the playing of Le Concert Spirituel is even more so, making this a most rewarding listening experience. Full texts and translations are included.

MARCELLO, Alessandro
(1669–1747)

6 Oboe Concertos (La Cetra)

Ⓜ  Chan. 0744X. Robson, Latham, R. Brown, Coll. Mus. 90, Standage

The six concertos of La Cetra reveal a pleasing mixture of originality and convention; often one is surprised by a genuinely alive and refreshing individuality. Standage's set with Collegium Musicum 90 makes the most of Marcellos's solo scoring, finding plenty of colour and nuance in these highly inventive works, not only for one or two oboes (or flutes) but for solo violin (Standage himself). Slow movements often possess real poignancy and the fast movements bubble and sparkle. Moreover he includes an additional Concerto con l'Eco that is well worth having. Performances are appealingly stylish and beautifully recorded.

Oboe Concerto in C min. (arr. Rothwell)

🔑 Ⓜ  Dutton Lab./Barbirolli Soc. CDSJB 1016. Rothwell, Hallé O, Barbirolli – CORELLI; HAYDN: Oboe Concertos  (with Recital: C. P. E. BACH; LOEILLET; TELEMANN: Sonatas, etc. **

Sir John's subtlety in matters of light and shade within an orchestral phrase brings this music immediately alive, and at the same time prevents the rather jolly opening tune from sounding square. The exquisitely beautiful Adagio is followed by a gay finale, both showing the soloist at her finest, and the well-balanced (1969) recording and excellent transfer add to one's pleasure.

Oboe Concerto in D min.

Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.550556. Kiss, Erkel CO – C. P. E. BACH: Concertos **(*)

This enjoyable concerto, once attributed (in a different key) to Benedetto Marcello, is given a good performance here by József Kiss and is very well recorded. One might have preferred more dynamic contrast from the soloist, but his timbre is right for baroque music and he plays with plenty of spirit. This disc is well worth its modest cost for the C. P. E. Bach couplings.

10 Keyboard Sonatas, Op. 3; Labarinto sopra il clavicembalo; La stravaganza in C (ciaccona con variazione)

 Chan. 0671 (2). Loreggian (harpsichord)

Marcello's invention is usually common to all the movements of each sonata, and though infinitely varied in treatment the basic ideas remain intact and attractively recognizable throughout. The Labarinto (in two sections) is a free, fantasy-like piece, with the bold rhythms and repeated notes of the closing section catchily bizarre. The C major ciaccona, La stravaganza, was Marcello's most famous harpsichord piece, and its 38 variations produce an expansive 15-minute work which rather outstays its welcome. Not the fault of the performance, one hastens to say, for the playing here is full of life and sparkle. The instrument itself is a reconstruction of a late-17th-century Italian harpsichord, and it is vividly recorded.

MARCELLO, Benedetto (1686–1739)

Oboe Concerto in C min. (trans. BONELLI)

Australian Decca Eloquence mono 480 0833. Reversy, SRO, Ansermet – VIVALDI: Bassoon Concertos (*); HANDEL: Organ Concertos ***

The lovely C minor Oboe Concerto of Marcello was recorded in 1951, and although the oboe, played by Roger Reversy, is rather startlingly upfront, it doesn't distract too much from the poised music-making. The finale is a toe-tapping delight.

MARENZIO, Luca (1553–99)

Madrigals (1580): Excerpts from Book I; Book II; Book IV; Book V; Book VI; Book VII; Book IX. (with PHILIPS: Tirsi morir vola; TERZI: Intavolatura di liuto, libro primo: Liquide perle Amor, da gl'occhi sparse)

🔑  Naïve OP 30245. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Rinaldo Alessandrini here demonstrates the claims as a madrigalist of Luca Marenzio, born 14 years before Monteverdi, concentrating in his choice on the madrigals Marenzio wrote early in his life in a fresh, open style that attracted listeners with its sweetness. A good selection from those written later in the composer's brief career complete the picture. Very well paced, with structures clearly presented, they make a superb sequence in these beautifully recorded, finely detailed performances. Adding to the variety, Alessandrini adds discreet instrumental continuo to many of the items.

MARINI, Biagio (1594–1663)

Sinfonias for Strings 2 & 5; Sonatas for Strings 1–4; Balletto primo; (i) La lagrimo d'Erminia

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca O/L 478 0020. Consorte of Musicke, Rooley or Trevor Jones; (i) with Kirkby and Rogers

Marini was a younger contemporary of Monteverdi, his life spanning the first half of the seventeenth century. The prize discoveries here are the String Sonatas, lively and imaginative; the other instrumental items too are far from routine. The songs are less interesting, but with fresh, characterful singing from Emma Kirkby and Nigel Rogers, they help to fill out the picture of an interesting historical figure, long neglected. Performances and recording are typical of the excellent Florilegium series which Decca/Oiseau-Lyre have resurrected for this welcome reissue.

MARKEVITCH, Igor (1912–83)

(i) Partita; (ii) Le Paradis Perdu

Ⓝ Ⓑ (*) Naxos 8.570773. Arnhem PO, Lyndon-Gee; with (i) Hoek; (ii) Shelton, Walker, Garrison, Netherlands Concert Ch.

A fascinating disc, beginning with Markevitch's early Partita of 1931, where one is swept immediately into a vigorous Allegro risoluto, full of fascinating rhythms and harmonies, and tremendous forward impulse. It is in effect a piano concerto with a brilliant part for the soloist, not least the brilliantly fast finale which follows from a mysterious and memorable slow movement. The oratorio Le Paradis Perdu is even more ambitious; based on Milton's Paradise Lost, it was completed in 1935, and this, like the Partita, is its first recording. From the very opening, Markevitch creates a gripping atmosphere, often other-worldly, especially with the chorus halfway though Part I. The soloists are good, even if they all have a bit of a wobble, and the orchestra, though not always totally immaculate, plays with enthusiasm. The chorus is excellent, and their often heady passages are particularly exciting. The sound is generally very acceptable, even if in the loud, massed passages it feels a little compressed. There are copious notes, but it is a pity the texts were not included. At bargain price, well worth acquiring.

MARSH, John (1752–1828)

Symphonies 1, 3, 4 & 6; Conversation Symphonie for 2 Orchestras

Ⓝ (BB)  Regis Alto ALC 1017. Chichester Concert, Graham-Jones

John Marsh was innovative: because of the continuing influence of Handel, the symphony format was not fashionable in England at his time; for the most part they each consisted of three short movements and, while the tunes sometimes have a whiff of Handel, there is a strong element of the English village green. The Conversation Symphony does not divide into two separate ensembles but makes contrasts between higher and lower instrumental groupings. Five of Marsh's works are presented here by an aptly sized authentic baroque group: they play well and the (originally Olympia) recording is effectively balanced. Well worth exploring at budget price.

Symphonies 2, 6, 7 (La Chasse), 8, Conversation Symphony for 2 Orchestras

 Chan. 10458. LMP, Bamert

John Marsh was self-taught, and was sometimes dismissed by his contemporaries as an amateur. Yet these lively and inventive works demonstrate his imaginative qualities, well brought out in these excellent performances from Matthias Bamert and the London Mozart Players. The most colourful of the symphonies is 7 entitled La Chasse, with its big horn solo at the start, followed by two movements in a galloping triple time. The Conversation Symphony is original in dividing the orchestras not into two equal groups but by pitch, a device that works surprisingly well. An outstanding disc in the Contemporaries of Mozart series.

MARTIN, Frank (1890–1974)

Ballades for: (i) Cello & Small Orchestra; (ii) Flute, Strings & Piano; (iii) Piano & Orchestra; (iv) Saxophone & Small Orchestra; (v) Viola, Wind, Harpsichord, Timpani & Percussion; (vi) Trombone & Piano

 Chan. 9380. (i) Dixon; (ii) Chambers; (ii–iii; v–vi) Elms; (iv) Robertson; (v) Dukes, Masters; (vi) Bousfield; LPO, Bamert

The Ballades are among Martin's most personal utterances, so the present issue is a most valuable addition to the Martin discography, particularly in view of the excellence and commitment of the performances. Subtle, state-of-the-art recording with no false 'hi-fi' brightness, but a natural and unobtrusive presence. An indispensable disc for admirers of this subtle and rewarding master.

(i) Ballade for Piano & Orchestra; Piano Concertos 1; (ii) 2; (i; ii) Danse de la peur for 2 Pianos & Small Orchestra

🔑 ✿ * ASV CDDCA 1082. (i) Sebastian Benda; (ii) Badura-Skoda; O della Svizzera Italiana, Christian Benda

The First Piano Concerto of 1933–4 anticipates many of the characteristic fingerprints of the Petite symphonie concertante and the Concerto for Seven Wind Instruments. The pale, haunting instrumental colourings of the slow movement evoke Martin's own special world. The ASV CD brings the Danse de la peur, also from the 1930s, a highly imaginative, dramatic and above all atmospheric score which is new to the Martin discography. Good performances and decently balanced recordings, which are recommended with the strongest enthusiasm.

(i) Ballade for Piano & Orchestra; (ii) Ballade for Trombone & Orchestra; (iii) Concerto for Harpsichord & Small Orchestra

(*) Jecklin-Disco (ADD) JD 529-2. (i) Benda; (ii) Rosin; (iii) Jaccottet; Lausanne CO, composer

(i; ii) Ballade for Cello & Piano; (i; iii) Ballade for Flute & Piano; (i) 8 Préludes pour le piano; (i; iv) Drey Minnelieder; (i; iv) 6 Monologues from Jedermann; (ii; v) 3 Chants de Nöel

Ⓜ (*) Jecklin (ADD) 563-2. (i) Composer; (ii) Honegger; (iii) Willoughby; (iv) Rehfuss; (v) Ameling, Odé

JD 529-2 brings the Harpsichord Concerto with Christiane Jaccottet, who took part in the première recording of the Petite Symphonie Concertante in the early 1950s. Like the companion works, it derives from the Swiss Radio Archives and comes from 1971. Sebastian Benda gives just as powerful and imaginative account of the Ballade for Piano and Orchestra. This is quintessential Martin: music from another world.

JD 563-2 restores to circulation a memorable (1955) recording of the Jedermann Monologues with Heinz Rehfuss and the composer, originally made for Decca, as well as a 1952 broadcast with Henri Honegger for the Süddeutscher Rundfunk, Stuttgart. Martin is the pianist throughout this disc, and just how formidable a player he is emerges in the eight Préludes he wrote for Lipatti. An essential acquisition for all admirers of the composer.

(i; ii) Cello Concerto; (i; iii) Ballade for Cello & Piano; (iii) 8 Preludes for Piano

🔑 ✿ * BIS CD 1637. (i) Poltéra; (ii) Malmö SO, Ollila-Hannikainen (iii) Stott

Christian Poltéra's superb recorded account of Frank Martin's glorious Cello Concerto with the Malmö Symphony Orchestra under Tuomas Ollila-Hannikainen has an inspirational intensity to compare with the famous du Pré/Barbirolli account of the Elgar Concerto. The works share a deep, meditative, expressive feeling, although Martin's concerto also has a poignant valedictory character to suggest personal loss. Then follows the much earlier Ballade which is a fantasia-like interplay between cello and piano, in which Kathryn Stott proves a natural partner. Martin produced little piano music, yet the Eight Preludes are masterly, dallying with Schoenberg's 12-note formula, but never dispensing with tonality. The result is a highly rewarding set of pieces, resourcefully pianistic and richly inventive, compellingly played by Stott. With state-of-the art recording throughout, this disc makes a perfect introduction to Martin's music and cannot be recommended too highly.

(i) Harpsichord Concerto. Passacaglia; (ii) Polyptyque (for violin & 2 string orchestras)

Ⓝ * MDG 901 1539-6. (i) Rudolf Scheidegger; (ii) Zimmermann, Musikkollegium Winterthur, van Steen

The Harpsichord Concerto is played marvellously and it has great breadth; it feels wonderfully natural and unhurried. The rarity here is the Polyptyque for violin and two string orchestras, which comes from the penultimate year of Martin's life. It was inspired by a polyptych, a set of very small panels he saw in Siena depicting the Passion story, from Christ's entry into Jerusalem through to his final resurrection, but missing out the crucifixion. The pattern of an active movement followed by a reflective one is followed throughout. It is played with consummate artistry by Willi Zimmermann and the Winterthur ensemble under Jac van Steen. Martin's own transcription for strings of the noble organ Passacaille completes an outstanding addition to his discography.

Concerto for 7 Wind Instruments, Percussion & Strings; (i) Erasmi monumentum (for organ and orchestra); Etudes for Strings

 Chan. 9283. (i) Pearson; LPO, Bamert

Erasmi monumentum is a substantial piece of some 25 minutes. The first movement, Homo pro se ('The Independent Man'), alludes to the name given to Erasmus by his contemporaries; the second is Stulticiae Laus ('In Praise of Folly'), and the third is Querela Pacis ('A Plea for Peace'). The outer movements are pensive and atmospheric; the middle movement is less convincing. Matthias Bamert's account of the Concerto for Seven Wind Instruments is very assured, relaxed and animated; although thoroughly persuasive, he makes rather heavy weather of the Etudes.

Concerto for 7 Wind Instruments, Timpani, Percussion and Strings; (i) Petite symphonie concertante; (ii) 6 Monologues from Jedermann

🔑 Ⓑ * Warner Apex 0927 48687-2. (i) Guibentif, Jaccottet, Riuttimann; (ii) Cachemaille; SRO, Jordan

In Petite symphonie concertante, Armin Jordan has atmosphere and an unhurried sense of pace, and the soloists and orchestra are very well balanced. It is excellently played (with Christiane Jaccottet, who took part in the first performance). The account of the Concerto for Seven Wind Instruments is also a fine one. The Six Monologues from Hofmannsthal's Everyman, written at the height of the Second World War, are subtle and profound. Their concentration of mood is well conveyed by Gilles Cachemaille, and the orchestral detail is well captured. Eminently recommendable and an inexpensive entry into Martin's world.

The Four Elements; (i) In terra Pax

🔑 * Chan. 9465. (i) Howarth, Jones, Hill, Williams, Roberts, Brighton Festival Ch.; LPO, Bamert

Les Quatre Eléments, written for Ansermet's 80th birthday in 1967, is a highly imaginative work which exhibits to striking effect Martin's feeling for the orchestra and his subtle mastery of texture. In terra Pax is a noble work, and this makes a distinguished addition to the growing Martin discography. The singers are not perhaps quite as impressive as in the deleted Ansermet set, but in every other respect the new recording is superior.

Passacaglia; (i; ii) Maria-Triptychon; (i) Polyptyque

Ⓝ 🔑 * ECM 173 3930. (i) Cantoreggi; (ii) Banse; German R. PO, Poppen

These three key Martin works make an alternative indispensable triptych in performances as fine as these. The Passacaglia was written for organ and orchestrated in 1962, with grippingly powerful results. The pictorial Polyptyque for violin and double string orchestra comes from a decade later and is a work of powerful vision and spirituality. The Maria-Triptychon for solo soprano, violin and orchestra, combining the Ave Maria, Magnificat and Stabat mater dolorosa, culminates powerfully with the Magnificat. First-class recording makes this another very enticing example of Frank Martin's charismatic genius.

Symphonie concertante (arr. of Petite symphonie concertante for full orchestra); Symphony; Passacaglia

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9312. LPO, Bamert

The Symphony is a haunting and at times quite magical piece. The two pianos are effectively used and although, as in the Petite symphonie concertante, lip service is paid to the 12-note system, the overall effect is far from serial. Its main companion here is the transcription Martin made for full orchestra of the Petite symphonie concertante the year after its first performance. Harp and piano are used for colouristic effects but completely relinquish any hint of soloist ambitions. The Passacaglia is Martin's 1962 transcription for full orchestra of his organ piece. Sensitive playing from the LPO under Matthias Bamert and exemplary Chandos recording.

CHAMBER MUSIC

(i) Ballade for Cello & Piano; (ii) Ballade for Flute & Piano; Piano Quintet; (iii) Violin Sonata; (iv) 4 Sonnets à Cassandre

 ASV CDDCA 1010. Burnside, Pears-Britten Ens.; (i) Watkins; (ii) K. Jones; (iii) Jackson; (iv) Rearick

This rewarding issue brings us the rarely heard Piano Quintet, in which Martin's debts to Ravel and Fauré are clearly evident. The Violin Sonata is a three-movement piece, much indebted to the Debussy G minor Sonata. All these pieces, save for the Ballades for flute and cello, pre-date the period in which Martin found his true idiom – in such works as Le Vin herbé and Der Cornet. The performances are as alert and sensitive as one could wish, and the recordings are very good too.

Piano Trio on Irish Folktunes

 Simax PSC 1147. Grieg Trio – BLOCH: 3 Nocturnes; SHOSTAKOVICH: Piano Trios ***

The Piano Trio is expertly played here and the interest of the couplings further enhances the value of this issue, arguably the best the Grieg Trio has given us. The Simax recording is first rate.

PIANO MUSIC

(i) Music for Piano Duet: Études pour 2 pianos: Ouverture et foxtrot; Pavane couleur du temps (à 4 mains); 2 pièces faciles (à 2 pianos). Piano music: Au Clair de lune; Étude rythmique; Esquisse; Guitare; Fantaisie sur des rythmes flamenco; 8 Préludes

 ABC Classics 476 2601 (2). Adam, (i) with Logan

This enterprising issue brings his complete piano music, including the transcription for two pianos of the well-known Études pour cordes that Martin composed for Paul Sacher in the mid-1950s. Julie Adam proves a capable and convinced advocate of this music. On the second CD she is admirably partnered by Christine Logan. They sensitively convey the Ravel-like delicacy of the Pavane couleur du temps and the robust rhythms of the Études. The delightful wit of Les Grenouilles, le Rossignol et la Pluie makes one regret that, despite his distinction as a pianist, Martin did not write more for the instrument. The recording is eminently truthful and well balanced. A rewarding issue in every respect.

VOCAL MUSIC

Der Cornet

🔑 * Orfeo S 164881A. Lipovšek, Austrian RSO, Zagrosek

Der Cornet or, to give it its full title, Die Weise von Liebe und Tod des Cornets Christoph Rilke ('The Lay Song of the Love and Death of Cornet Christoph Rilke'), is one of Martin's most profound and searching works. Martin's setting for contralto and small chamber orchestra was written at the height of the war and in the immediate wake of Le Vin herbé, his oratorio on the Tristan legend. The shadowy, half-real atmosphere often reminds one of the world of Pelléas; and the restrained, pale colourings provide an effective backcloth to the vivid and poignant outbursts which mark some of the settings. The performance by Marjana Lipovšek is remarkable. Sensitive orchestral playing and faithfully balanced, well-recorded sound. This music casts a powerful spell and is strongly atmospheric.

Golgotha (oratorio; complete)

🔑 * Cascavelle VEL 3004. Locher, Graf, Dami, Fink, Brodard, Baghdassarian, Antoniotti, Ens. Voc. de Lausanne & Sinf., Corboz

(i) Golgotha; (ii) Mass for Double Choir

(BB)  Warner Apex (ADD/DDD) 2564 64398-2 (2). (i) Staempfli, De Montmollin, Tappy, Mollet, Huttenlocher, Faller Ch. & SO, Faller; (ii) Choeur de Chambre du Midi, Martin

The Cascavelle performance is magnificent, admirably paced by Michel Corboz, and with some fine solo singing. Elisabeth Graf in the Méditation that opens the second half sings with much feeling though it is almost invidious to single out any of the fine soloists. The recording, made in Lausanne Cathedral in 1994, has greater presence and depth than its Erato predecessor, and there is plenty of space around the aural image. Full documentation is provided.

The eloquence, power and dignity of this music are also well conveyed by the conviction of Faller's performance, and this makes a good budget alternative to the Corboz version. The Mass is a digital recording, and the singing of the Choeur de Chambre du Midi under Denis Martin is very good indeed. While the Cascavelle version of Golgotha is undoubtedly superior, this Apex coupling remains very good value, with the text and translation of Golgotha available on www.warnerclassics.com/sungtexts.php.

Mass for Double Choir; Passacaille for Organ

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 67017. Westminster Cathedral Ch., O'Donnell – PIZZETTI: Messa di requiem; De profundis ✿ ****

The Mass for Double Choir is one of Martin's purest and most sublime utterances. The latest version from the Westminster Cathedral Choir under James O'Donnell is the most outstanding. The boys produce marvellously focused tone of great purity and expressive power, and the tonal blend that O'Donnell achieves throughout is little short of miraculous. This won Gramophone magazine's 'Record of the Year' award in 1998, and deservedly so. As a fill-up O'Donnell offers the Passacaille for organ, together with two magnificent Pizzetti works.

6 Monologues from 'Jedermann' (Everyman)

Ⓜ  Virgin 3 63310-2. van Dam, Lyon Nat. Op. O, Nagano – IBERT: 4 Chansons de Don Quichotte; POULENC: Le Bal masqué; RAVEL: Don Quichotte à Dulcinée ***

(i) 6 Monologues from Everyman; (ii) Maria Triptychon; (i) The Tempest (3 excerpts)

 Chan. 9411. (i) Wilson-Johnson; (ii) Russell; LPO, Bamert

Kent Nagano directs powerfully sustained accompaniments for what is perhaps the most enterprising item in this imaginatively chosen quartet of French song groupings, all written around the third decade of the 20th century. Van Dam's singing, like Nagano's orchestral backcloth, is impressively felt, and his darkness of colour in the penultimate monologue prepares the way movingly for the ardently sombre closing prayer. A full text and translation is provided, and this collection can be strongly recommended.

Chandos couples the excerpts from The Tempest with the Everyman Monologues; David Wilson-Johnson sings with intense – but not excessive – dramatic feeling and total commitment and conviction. The extra rarity on this disc is the Maria Triptychon. Linda Russell and the violinist Duncan Riddell give a totally dedicated account of it. Bamert and the LPO generate a keen sense of atmosphere, and the Chandos recording is every bit as good as the other issues in this splendid series.

Requiem

🔑 * Jecklin-Disco (ADD) JD 631-2. Speiser, Bollen, Tappy, Lagger, Lausanne Women's Ch., Union Ch., SRO, composer

This is arguably the most beautiful Requiem to have been written since Fauré's and, were the public to have ready access to it, would be as popular. The recording, made at a public performance that the (then 83-year-old) composer conducted in Lausanne Cathedral, is very special. The analogue recording is not in the demonstration class, but this music and performance must have three stars.

Le Vin herbé (oratorio)

🔑 * HM HMC 901035-2. Piau, Davislim, Böhnert, RIAS Chamber Ch., Scharoun Ens., Reuss

Daniel Reuss has shown his sympathies with the Swiss master in earlier recordings. His singers and instrumentalists show themselves to be both completely attuned to this exalted score and sensitive to its luminous textures and powerful sense of mystery. The work casts a strong spell; its colours are delicate in shade, pastel and half-lit. Its debt to Debussy's Pelléas is obvious enough in its strong atmosphere and dramatic understatement as well as in its sensitivity to language, yet its world is quite unlike anything else. The choir has perfect intonation and tonal blend. Expertly balanced recording, too. In all, a wonderful issue.

MARTINI, Johannes
(c. 1440–97/8)

Ave maris stella; Magnificat terti toni; O beate Sebastiane; Salve regina

 Gaudeamus CDGAU 171. Clerks' Group, Wickham – OBRECHT: Laudes Christo; Missa Malheur me bat ***

Though Martini cannot compare with Obrecht in imagination, the motets recorded here have a simple beauty, made the more compelling by the dedicated performances of the Clerks' Group, atmospherically recorded.

MARTINŮ, Bohuslav (1890–1959)

The Amazing Flight (Podivuhodný Let); On tourne! (Natáči se!); La Revue de cuisine (Kuchynska Revue)

🔑  Sup. SU 3749-2. Czech PO, Hogwood

La Revue de cuisine stands up rather well against La Création du monde or any other of Milhaud's jazz-inspired pieces, and the present performance is second to none. The Czech Philharmonic play every note with great zest. Natáči se! is quite irresistible in its freshness and innocence, and its seventh movement, once played, is difficult if not impossible to get out of one's head. And what harmonic subtlety there is elsewhere in this wonderfully inventive and imaginative score. This is music which infectiously communicates its love of life and high spirits – and leaves you feeling better! Very good and well-detailed recorded sound.

La Bagarre; Half-Time; Intermezzo; The Rock; Thunderbolt

 Sup. (ADD) 001669. Brno State O, Vronsky

La Bagarre and Half-Time are early evocations, the latter a Honeggerian depiction of a roisterous half-time at a football match that musically doesn't amount to a great deal. The three later works are much more interesting – Intermezzo is linked to the Fourth Symphony – and the collection as a whole will be of great interest to Martinů addicts, if perhaps not essential for other collectors. All the performances are alive and full of character, and the recording is vividly immediate.

(i) Concertino in C min. for Cello, Wind Instruments & Piano; (ii) Harpsichord Concerto; (iii) Oboe Concerto

🔑 * Sup. 11 0107-2 031. (i) Večtomov, Topinka, members of Czech PO; (ii) Růžičková, Rehák; (iii) Krejči; (ii; iii) Czech Philharmonic Chamber O; (i, iii) Skvor; (ii) Neumann

Zuzana Růžičková has made a number of recordings of the Harpsichord Concerto but this is her most successful. The sound is agreeably spacious, though the balance is synthetic and the piano has equal prominence with the solo harpsichord. However, the playing is spirited and sympathetic; and the Oboe Concerto is heard to excellent advantage too, with very good playing and a well-laid-out sound-picture. The early Concertino for Cello with Piano, Wind and Percussion is more than acceptably played and recorded.

Cello Concertos 1–2; Concertino in C min. for Cello, Wind Instruments, Piano & Percussion

 Chan. 9015. Wallfisch, Czech PO, Bělohlávek

Cello Concerto 1 was composed in 1930 but has been revised twice. Cello Concerto 2 is the bigger of the two. It opens with a very characteristic and infectiously memorable B flat tune, and there is much of the luminous orchestral writing one associates with the Fourth and Fifth Symphonies. It is a warm-hearted, lyrical score with a Dvořák-like radiance.

(i) Concerto da camera (for violin & orchestra with piano & percussion), H285; Concerto for violin, piano & orchestra, H342; Czech Rhapsody, H307A (arr. for violin & orchestra by Jirí Temí)

 Hyp. CDA67672. Matoušek, Czech PO, Hogwood; (i) with Košárek

The Concerto da camera is inventive and radiates vitality, but it is the later Concerto for Violin, Piano and Orchestra which is the more captivating. It strides out in the manner of the celebrated pre-war Double Concerto and maintains a striking momentum. The Czech Rhapsody is a slighter piece, dedicated to Kreisler, though he never played it.

Concerto for Double String Orchestra, Piano & Timpani; Symphony 1

🔑 * Chan. 8950. Czech PO, Bělohlávek

The Double Concerto is one of the most powerful works of the present century, and its intensity is well conveyed in Bělohlávek's vital, deeply felt performance. His dedicated and imaginative account of the First Symphony is very good indeed. Bělohlávek is totally inside this music, and the recording, made in the agreeably resonant Spanish Hall of Prague Castle, is very natural. Strongly recommended for both works.

(i) Double Concerto for Flute, Violin & Orchestra, H252; (ii) Duo concertante for two violins & orchestra, H264; (iii) Double Violin Concerto in D, H329

 Hyp. CDA67671. Matoušek, with (i) Thomsen; (ii) Pasquier, (iii) Koh; Czech PO, Hogwood

The delightful Concerto for Flute, Violin and Orchestra must be numbered among the most inventive and rewarding of Martinů's concerto grosso conceptions. Nor is the Duo concertante, composed the following year, less inventive. The D major Concerto is vintage Martinů and well worth having on disc. Strongly recommendable performances and good, if reverberant, sound.

Concerto grosso; Overture for Orchestra; The Parables; Rhapsody for Large Orchestra; Sinfonia concertante for 2 Orchestras

 Sup. SU 3743-2. Czech PO, Bělohlávek

The set of Parables is among the composer's last works and is vintage Martinů. The Rhapsody of 1928 was written for Koussevitzky, but the Sinfonia concertante and the Concerto grosso are both from the 1930s and are good examples of Martinů's neo-baroque style. The Overture is something of a rarity, and this is the only recording currently available. The resonant acoustic of the Dvořák Hall of the Rudolfinum, Prague, slightly muddies detail, but this will not put off admirers of the composer, for the performances by the Czech Philharmonic under Jirí Bělohlávek are exhilarating and idiomatic. The artwork (including the CD label itself) has a childlike, paintbox quality that is highly attractive.

Oboe Concerto

🔑  Nim. NI 5330. Anderson, Philh. O, Wright – FRANÇAIX: L'Horloge de flore; R. STRAUSS: Concerto ***

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Sup. (ADD) SU 3955. Hanták, Brno PO, Turnovsky (with MOZART: Oboe Concerto) – R. STRAUSS: Oboe Concerto **

Martinů's Oboe Concerto is a splendid addition to the modern repertory for the oboe. While the writing is not as florid as that in the coupled Richard Strauss Concerto, it still needs considerable flexibility of technique on the part of the soloist if the work's essential lyricism is to flow through the decoration. The basic quality of the music is high-spirited and confident. The soloist here, František Hanták, meets the music's needs well, but the recording is somewhat close and the Nimbus collection is far preferable.

The account by John Anderson, principal of the Philharmonia, is outstanding in every way, with the Andante quite ravishing when the soloist's timbre is so rich. The recording is first class and the couplings particularly attractive.

(i) Piano Concertos 2, 3 & 4 (Incantation). Piano music: Etudes and Polkas; Fantasy and Toccata; Julietta, Act II: Moderato; Les Ritournelles; Piano Sonata 1

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * RCA 2 CD 74321 88682-2 (2). Firkušný; (i) with Czech PO, Pešek

Rudolf Firkušný premièred all three Concertos here and was the dedicatee of 3; and his recordings are very special. The finest of them is 4 (Incantation), which here receives a performance that is unlikely to be surpassed. Its exotic colourings and luminous, other-worldly landscape, with its bird cries and extraordinary textures, have never been heard to better advantage. It is a work of strong atmosphere and mystery. Firkušný is its ideal advocate. In the Fourth Concerto nothing is hurried and every phrase is allowed to breathe – and the same goes for its two companions. The 1988 recording is very good indeed.

Firkušný also gave the first performances of many of these solo piano pieces and his playing could not be more delicate in its keyboard colouring, more authoritative or refined. The recording is not made in a large enough acoustic but is otherwise truthful, and this set is not to be missed, even though the presentation and documentation leave much to be desired.

(i) Piano Concerto 3; (ii) Bouquet of Flowers

Ⓜ  Sup. stereo/mono SU 3672-2 901. (i) Páleniček; (ii) Domanínská, Cervená, Havlák, Mráz, Prague Philharmonic Ch., Kühn Children's Ch.; Czech PO, Ančerl

Martinů's highly eclectic Third Piano Concerto displays an infectious and lively facility, but (the slow movement especially) is rather too long for its content. The 1961 stereo recording has transferred well to CD. But what makes this disc special is the inclusion of the exuberant Bouquet of Flowers (1937). The text is taken entirely from Czech folk poetry, the music echoes the wild speech-rhythms, and the orchestration (with prominent parts for two pianos) is most colourful. The performance here is magnificent. No apologies whatsoever need to be made for a 1955 mono recording which is very good indeed: atmospheric, yet with incisive choral tone.

(i) Piano Concerto 4 (Incantations); (ii) Symphony 4; Tre Ricercari

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 49822-2. (i) Páleniček, Brno State PO, Pinkas; (ii) Czech PO, Turnovsky

The Fourth Piano Concerto, written in the mid-1950s for Firkušný, is a highly imaginative and original score, presented most persuasively here. The Fourth Symphony dates from 1945 and is written in a readily accessible style, and throughout the work one feels a strong thematic unity. The Three Ricercari are less substantial but attractive enough; the outer movements rattle along with characteristic toccata-like brilliance, the piano strongly featured in the rhythmically beguiling finale. The performances of both works, but especially the symphony, are first rate and the recording, one of Supraphon's best, has transferred vividly to CD with only slight loss of body.

Rhapsody-Concerto for Viola & Orchestra; Suite concertante for Violin & Orchestra (2 versions)

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67673. Matoušek, Czech PO, Hogwood

Matoušek, changing from his usual violin to viola, gives a first-class account of the Rhapsody-Concerto, one of the composer's most rewarding and characteristic scores, and, with Hogwood and the Czech Philharmonic accompanying, this can be recommended alongside Suk. But the couplings make the Hyperion disc even more enticing: two almost completely different versions of the Suite concertante (commissioned by Dushkin) with only the first movement of each sharing much music in common. Both versions are rewarding in different ways, and to have them together, so well played and recorded by a soloist who was closely involved with both of them, is bounty indeed.

Violin Concertos 1 & 2

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDA 67674. Matoušek, Czech PO, Hogwood

Violin Concertos 1–2; Rhapsody-Concerto for Viola & Orchestra

Ⓜ (*) Sup. (ADD) 11 1969-2 Suk, Czech PO, Neumann

The First Concerto comes from 1931 and was intended for Samuel Dushkin. However, the performance never came off. The Second was written for Mischa Elman in 1943 and was first given in Boston under Koussevitzky. They are both delightful works and Bohuslav Matoušek plays them with much style and virtuosity. As in earlier issues in the series, Christopher Hogwood reveals a total sympathy with the composer's sensibility. By far the most poignant and eloquent of these works is the Rhapsody-Concerto for viola and orchestra, in which Suk is also the soloist and which dates from the period of the Fantaisies symphoniques. Suk is a masterly player, of course, and the Czech Philharmonic play with obvious pleasure. The recordings are analogue and inner detail is not quite as sharply focused as in the very best discs from the 1970s.

Violin Concerto 1; Suite concertante for Violin and Orchestra (2nd version; 1945)

(*) Sup. SU 3653-2-031. Matoušek, Czech PO, Hogwood

The Suite concertante is characteristic Martinů, neoclassical, fresh and vital. Its second movement is one of his most inspired and radiant pieces, and is as luminous as Dvořák. The third movement, too, is infectiously high-spirited. The disc runs to just under 48 minutes, so room could have been found for the Second Violin Concerto. Characterful performances from Bohuslav Matoušek and the Czech Philharmonic, and Christopher Hogwood has shown himself a committed advocate of this composer. The recorded sound is a little glassy and reverberant, in the Supraphon manner, but very serviceable.

(i) Violin Concerto 2; (ii) Toccata e due Canzoni. Serenade 2

Ⓝ  HM HMC 90 1951. (i) Faust; (ii) Tiberghien; Prague Philh., Bělohlávek

The Second Violin Concerto is an appealing and inventive score of much greater substance than its predecessor from the 1930s, and it finds Martinů very much in concerto grosso mode. It is splendidly played by Isabelle Faust, idiomatically compelling, with fine support from Bělohlávek. The Toccata e due Canzoni is also a kind of concerto grosso, with an obbligato piano part (played here by Cedric Tiberghien). The Second Serenade (for strings) is lightweight and folksy and the Prague Philharmonia have its full measure. Well worth investigating.

Rhapsody-Concerto for Viola and Orchestra

 Call. CAL 9364. Bukac, Czech RSO, Válek – BARTÓK: Viola Concerto; HINDEMITH: Trauermusik ***

The Rhapsody-Concerto was written for the violist of the Cleveland Orchestra and was premièred under Szell in 1953. It is one of Martinů's most rewarding pieces, written in the vintage years which saw the creation of the Fantaisies symphoniques and the Sixth Symphony. Eloquent playing from all concerned, and fine recording.

Spalíček (ballet; complete); Dandelion (Romance); 5 Duets on Moravian Folksongs

 Sup. 11 0752-2 (2). Soloists, Kantilena Children's Ch., Kühn Mixed Ch., Brno State PO, Jílek

The original of Martinů's engaging ballet Spalíček dates from 1931–2. The dances, familiar from the suites, are interspersed with vocal episodes, both solo and choral. For the most part this music is quite captivating, particularly given the charm of this performance. Two shorter works complete the set: Dandelion Romance for mixed chorus and soprano, and Five Duets on Moravian Folksong Texts for female voices, violin and piano, both of which come from his last years. All in all, a delightful addition to the Martinů discography.

Symphonies 1–6

🔑 Ⓜ * BIS CD 1371/2. Bamberg SO, N. Järvi

Martinů always draws a highly individual sound from his orchestra. On hearing the First Symphony, Virgil Thomson wrote, 'the shining sounds of it sing as well as shine', and there is no doubt this music is luminous and life-loving. The BIS recording is in the demonstration class yet sounds completely natural, and the performances under Neeme Järvi are totally persuasive and have a spontaneous feel for the music's pulse. BIS have Järvi's set of the six Symphonies in a box, with the three CDs offered for the price of two, making a clear first choice for modern recordings of this repertoire.

Symphony 2

🔑 * Telarc CD 80616. Cincinnati SO, Paavo Järvi – DVOŘÁK: Symphony 9 ***

Like Dvořák's New World Symphony, Martinů's Second was written when the composer was in the United States, making it an apt if unusual coupling for that much-recorded work. The refinement and clarity of the Telarc recording enhance an outstanding performance, with Paavo Järvi even outshining his father's excellent version of this same work, thanks to the excellence of the Cincinnati orchestra's playing. The Czech flavour in all four movements is enhanced by the genial warmth of phrasing and the rhythmic lift.

Symphony 4; Memorial to Lidice; (i) Field Mass

🔑  Chan. 9138. (i) Kusjner, Czech Ph. Ch.; Czech PO, Bělohlávek

There is a radiance about this work that is quite special, and Bělohlávek's account of it is quite the best that has appeared in recent years. The Memorial to Lidice, composed in response to a Nazi massacre, is a powerful and haunting piece, and so is the Field Mass, which receives its best performance until now – by far.

Symphonies 5; 6; Memorial to Lidice

(M) () Sup. mono SU 3694-2. Czech PO, Ančerl

Ančerl's are classic accounts from the era of mono LP. The Fifth is the work's première recording, made in 1955, while the Sixth was recorded in the following year. The Memorial to Lidice (1943), was recorded in 1957. These performances have an authenticity of feeling that still remains special, even though there are many fine new versions. The sound is better than ever.

Symphony 6 (Fantaisies symphoniques)

🔑  Chan. 8897. Czech PO, Bělohlávek – JANÁČEK: Sinfonietta; SUK: Scherzo ***

This Chandos version of 6 has great dramatic strength and is fully characterized; undoubtedly these players believe in every note. It is an outstanding performance that does full justice to the composer's extraordinarily imaginative vision and is very well recorded.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonatas 1 (1939); 2 (1942); 3 (1952)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55185. Isserlis, Evans

Martinů's three Cello Sonatas span the period 1939–52 and are full of rewarding musical invention. Steven Isserlis and Peter Evans offer very good playing and very acceptable recording, and this can be strongly recommended, especially at Helios price.

Cello Sonata 1; Variations on a Theme of Rossini; Variations on a Slovak Theme

 Simax PSC 1146. Birkeland, Gimse – KABALEVSKY: Cello Sonata 2 ***

Diverting though they are, the two sets of Variations are not top-drawer Martinů even if they do sound at their freshest and most charming in the hands of this Norwegian partnership. The powerful Cello Sonata 1, however, is another matter and Oystein Birkeland and Håvard Gimse play it wonderfully, with splendid rhythmic vitality, lyrical fervour and abundant imagination. The recorded sound is exceptionally truthful and lifelike, sonorous and marvellously balanced. A most rewarding issue in every way.

(i) Madrigal Sonata for Flute, Violin & Piano; (ii) 5 Madrigal Stanzas for Violin & Piano; (i) Promenades for Flute, Violin & Harpsichord; (iii) Scherzo for Flute & Piano; Sonata for Flute & Piano; (i) Sonata for Flute, Violin & Piano

🔑 * Fleurs de Lys FL 2 3031. (i–ii) Dubeau; (i–iii) Hamelin; (i; iii) Marion

The performances are as fresh and exhilarating as the music itself, delightfully inventive and vital. All three artists play with imagination and virtuosity, and the recording has exemplary clarity and presence. The jazz-like Scherzo from the late 1920s comes off particularly well.

4 Madrigals for Oboe, Clarinet & Bassoon; 3 Madrigals for Violin & Viola; Madrigal Sonata for Piano, Flute & Violin; 5 Madrigal Stanzas for Violin & Piano

 Hyp. CDA 66133. Dartington Ens.

These delightful pieces exhibit all the intelligence and fertility of invention we associate with Martinů's music. The playing of the Dartington Ensemble is accomplished and expert, and the recording, though resonant, is faithful.

Nonet; Trio in F for Flute, Cello & Piano; La Revue de cuisine

* Hyp. (ADD) CDA 66084. Dartington Ens.

Only one of these pieces is otherwise available on CD and all of them receive first-class performances and superb recording. The sound has space, warmth, perspective and definition. An indispensable issue for lovers of Martinů's music.

Oboe Quartet (for oboe, violin, cello & piano); Piano Quartet; String Quintet; Viola Sonata

(BB)  Naxos 8.553916. Artists of 1994 Australian Festival of Chamber Music

The best thing here is the captivating Oboe Quartet, which is quite a discovery. Like the fine Viola Sonata and the early String Quintet, whose slow movement is crossed by the shadow of Martinů's master, Roussel, its appearance at budget price is doubly welcome in that the performances are lively and spirited and the recording eminently natural.

Piano Quintets 1 & 2; Sonata for Two Violins & Piano

(BB)  Naxos 8.557861. Kosárek, Martinů Qt

The First Quintet and the Sonata for Two Violins and Piano both come from the early 1930s, when Martinů was living in Paris, and they are slight pieces. The weightiest and most substantial work is the Second Quintet, composed in 1944 in America. Very fine playing from these artists, and good recorded sound.

Piano Quintet 2

🔑 * ASV CDDCA 889. Frankl, Lindsay Qt – DVOŘÁK: Piano Quintet ***

Martinů's Second Piano Quintet is a remarkably successful piece, characteristically original in its content and rhythmic style. The Lindsays with Peter Frankl have its full measure. The recording is lively and present, with the piano well integrated, although there is just a touch of thinness on the strings. An outstanding coupling.

Piano Trio 2 in D min.

 Sup. SU 3927-2. Smetana Trio – DVOŘÁK: Piano Trio in B flat; FIBICH: Piano Trio ***

The Martinů Trio dates from the composer's last years after the Second World War, when his style had mellowed and become more traditional once more. Again the layout is fast–slow–fast, urgently purposeful in the first movement and with a moto perpetuo main theme in the finale. The central slow movement has some gritty writing in the middle, with one weird, hushed passage in which the violin plays in an ethereal pianissimo. But overall this is a very stimulating work and the performance and recording cannot be faulted.

String Quartets 1–7

Ⓜ (*) Sup. (ADD) SU3917-2 (3). Panocha Qt

The First of the quartets is both the longest and the most derivative; it is heavily indebted to the world of Debussy and Ravel. The Third is by far the shortest (it takes barely 12 minutes) and has the nervous energy and rhythmic vitality characteristic of the mature composer. The Fourth and Fifth are close to the Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani. The Fifth is the darkest of the quartets and in its emotional intensity is close in spirit to Janáček's Intimate Letters. The Sixth – and in particular its first movement – is a powerful and disturbing piece, and there is a sense of scale and a vision that raise it above its immediate successor. The Panocha set is eminently recommendable, even though the recordings are a bit two-dimensional.

String Quartets 1–2; Tri jezdci (Three Horsemen)

(BB) (*) Naxos 553782. Martinů Qt

The First Quartet lasts almost 40 minutes and is known as the 'French' (the nickname was Martinů's own) and what it lacks in individuality it makes up for in craftsmanship. The Second Quartet (1925) is more concentrated and more complex, and its greater density of incident reflects the influence of Roussel, with whom Martinů was studying. The fill-up is a remarkably accomplished first recording of Tri jezdci, which was written when the composer was twelve. The Martinů Quartet play with spirit and the recording is decent: fresh and lifelike without being outstanding.

String Quartets 3, 4 & 5

🔑  BIS CD 1389. Emperor Qt

Using new, critically revised scores, the Emperor String Quartet present their refreshing interpretations of three works that give a fascinating picture of an exciting era in 20th-century music. Fine recording too.

String Quartets 4–5; 7 (Concerto da camera)

(BB)  Naxos 8.553784. Martinů Qt

The Fourth and Fifth Quartets come from the period 1937–8. The Seventh, subtitled Concerto da camera, is less concentrated in feeling. It is finely crafted and very much in Martinů's neoclassical vein, if less memorable and spontaneous. Anyway, they are all well played and recorded and can be confidently recommended.

String Sextet; 3 Madrigals for violin & viola

Ⓝ  Hyp. CDH 55321. Raphael Ens. – SCHULHOFF: String Sextet ***

The Sextet for two each of violins, violas and cellos was for many years, during the 1950s and '60s, Martinů's calling card in the concert hall but is now rather a rarity. It comes from 1932 and was written rather quickly – in the course of one week. It is a strikingly assured piece in which the musical argument unfolds with a natural sense of organic growth. Rather to his surprise, it earned Martinů the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Medal, winning first prize out of 145 entries. The Madrigals are post-war, very typical Martinů, and are despatched with great virtuosity. The Raphael Ensemble give a masterly account of it, and the 1991 recording is truthful and lifelike.

String Trio 2

 Hyp. CDA 67429. Leopold String Trio – DOHNÁNYI: Serenade in C; SCHOENBERG: Trio

Martinů's Second String Trio comes from his Paris years, 1934 in fact, by which time he had made a name for himself in the musical world. Much of the writing is in the composer's neoclassical manner, and the Leopold String Trio make a strong case for the piece. Exemplary recorded sound.

Violin Sonata 1, H182; Sonatas in C, H120; D min., H152; Concerto, H13; Elegy, H3; Impromptu, H166; 5 Short pieces, H184

🔑 Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3410-2 (2). Matoušek, Adamec

Violin Sonatas 2, H308; 3, H303; Sonatina in G, H262; 7 Arabesques, H201A; Arietta, H188A; Czech Rhapsody, H307; Intermezzo, H261; 5 Madrigal Stanzas, H297; Rhythmic Etudes, H202

🔑 Ⓜ  Sup. SU 3412-2 (2). Matoušek, Adamec

Martinů's output for violin and piano is fairly extensive. The two handsomely produced and well-recorded double-CD sets cover his whole output, through to his mid-fifties and Sonata 3 (1944) and the Czech Rhapsody written for Kreisler (1945). The Third Sonata in particular is very impressive. Bohuslav Matoušek and Petr Adamec are completely inside the idiom, having played Martinů virtually from the cradle.

Violin Sonata 3 in G, Op. 100

 Praga PRD 250 153. Remés, Kayahara – DVOŘÁK: Sonatina; JANÁČEK, SMETANA: Violin Sonatas ***

Václav Remés and Sachito Kayahara combine to give a superb account of Martinů's passionate Third Sonata, fiery and intense, yet relaxing warmly for the composer's moments of gentler lyricism: the opening of the Finale has a lovely rapt serenity.

Sonata for 2 Violins & Piano

(*) Hyp. CDA 66473. Osostowicz, Kovacic, Tomes – MILHAUD: Violin Duo, etc. (*); PROKOFIEV: Violin Sonata *

Martinů's Sonata for Two Violins and Piano finds him full of invention and vitality. Krysia Osostowicz, Ernst Kovacic and Susan Tomes play it with all the finesse and sensitivity you could wish for, and they are excellently recorded. The disc would be even more recommendable if it had a longer playing time than 46 minutes.

PIANO MUSIC

Les bouquinistes du Quai Malaquais; Butterflies and Birds of Paradise; The Fifth Day of the Fifth Moon; Film en miniature; Puppets; Spring in the Garden

(BB)  Naxos 8.557918. Koukl

This is part of a new Naxos survey of the composer's 'complete piano music'. Much of it is early, but no one could say that the three sets of Puppets (written between 1912 and 1924) are not both engaging and original; and the same could be said of the suite for children, Spring in the Garden (1920). The highlights of the programme, however, are Butterflies and Birds of Paradise, written in the same year, and Les bouquinistes (booksellers) du Quai Malaquais. Giorgio Koukl might at times have produced a lighter touch, but he is very well recorded and this looks to be an indispensable new series. Three other volumes in the Naxos survey are now available (8.557914; 8.557919 and 8.570215) which can also be recommended to the composer's admirers.

Dumka; 3 Esquisses; Fantaisie et Toccata; Fenêtre sur le jardin; Sonata 1

 Tudor 7054. Kaspar

Études and Polkas (Books 1–3); Borová (7 Czech Dances); Butterflies and Birds of Paradise

 Tudor 7125. Kaspar

Paul Kaspar is a Czech pianist, born in Ostrava, who is completely inside the idiom and plays with persuasiveness and exuberance throughout. Martinů's piano music always impresses with its freshness, energy, and abundant intelligence. Kaspar serves it with dedication, and in turn he is well served by the Bavarian recording team; if the balance is a shade close, the present set still serves us well. It is far preferable to the selection recorded by Eleonora Bekova (on Chandos 9655), whose playing is serviceable without being really distinguished.

VOCAL MUSIC

The Epic of Gilgamesh (oratorio)

 Marco Polo 8.223316. Depoltová, Margita, Kusnjer, Vele, Karpíšek, Slovak Philh. Ch. & O, Košler

 Sup. SU 3918-2. Machotková, Zahradníček, Zítek, Průša, Brousek, Czech Philh. Ch., Prague SO, Bělohlávek

The Epic of Gilgamesh comes from Martinů's last years and is arguably his masterpiece. It evokes a remote and distant world, full of colour and mystery. Gilgamesh is the oldest poem known to mankind. The work abounds with invention of the highest quality and of consistently sustained inspiration. The Marco Polo performance is committed and sympathetic and the recording very natural in its balance.

Bělohlávek's version can hold its own artistically with the excellent Marco Polo account. It does not displace it but can certainly be recommended alongside it and now has a price advantage.

OPERA

Ariane (complete; in French)

 Sup. SU 3524-2 6312. Lindsley, Phillips, Doležal, Burun, Novák (bass), Czech PO & Ch., Neumann

As with his earlier operatic masterpiece, Julietta, Martinů based his one-act opera Ariane on a play, Le Voyage de Thésée, by his friend Georges Neveux. In making his adaptation Martinů treats it as baroque monody, interspersed with three sinfonias, three self-contained dramatic sequences and a closing aria. The pastiche elements have great lightness of touch; it seems that the bravura of Ariane herself, sung excellently by the American soprano Celina Lindsley, was inspired by Callas. Richard Novák's vibrato may be too wide for some, but generally speaking the performance is sung well (in French), and Václav Neumann gets alert and sensitive playing from the Czech Philharmonic. The recording (from 1987) is eminently serviceable. The opera has both freshness and charm and devotees of Martinů need not hesitate.

The Greek Passion (DVD version)

(*) Sup. DVD SU 7014-9. Mitchinson, Field, Tomlinson, Savory, Kühn Children's Ch., Czech PO Ch., Brno PO, Mackerras

With a few small cuts, this derives from a CD recording of the complete work made in Brno in 1981. It tells in an innocent, direct way of a village where a Passion play is to be presented; the individuals – tragically, as it proves – take on qualities of the New Testament figures they represent. Mackerras made an ideal advocate and the recording was excellent. Now it has been turned into a filmed video by Czech TV, set around a real village and church. The Czech cast act out the story, miming to the English words (often not very closely) and there is no doubt that the result is both musically and dramatically compelling. The sound is still excellent, so this undoubtedly adds an extra dimension to the music.

Julietta (complete)

🔑  Sup. (ADD) 3626-2 612 (2). Tauberová, Zídek, Zlesák, Otava, Bednář, Mixová, Jedenáctík, Procházková, Hanzalíková, Soukupová, Jindrák, Veverka, Svehla, Zlesák, Lemariová, Berman, Prague Nat. Theatre Ch. & O, Krombholc

Described by the composer as a Dreambook, Julietta was given first in Prague in March 1938. This vintage Supraphon recording, made in 1964, captures that surreal quality vividly, for the ear is mesmerized from the very start, when the howling of a high bassoon introduces the astonishingly original prelude. The voices as well as the orchestra are then presented with a bright immediacy which reinforces the power and incisiveness of Krombholc's performance. The sharpness of focus adds to the atmospheric intensity, as when in the first Act The Man in the Window plays his accordion. Ivo Zídek gives a vivid portrait of the central character, Michel, perplexed by his dream-like search, and there is no weak link in the rest of the cast. The three CDs of the 1993 transfer are now reduced to two (the break coming at scene V of Act II) and the sound is brighter and more firmly focused, with a very marginal loss of the gentler sonority that distinguished the LP set. Informative notes and libretto come with multiple translations.

Les Larmes du couteau; The Voice of the Forest

 Sup. SU 3386-3 631. Jonášová, Smidová, Janál, Prague Philharmonia, Bělohlávek

The two one-Act operas recorded here are both short, roughly half an hour each. With the Dadaist Les Larmes du couteau (or The Knife's Tears) we are close to the world of L'Histoire du soldat, Les Six and Kurt Weill. It is entertaining if insubstantial and diverts the listener. Good soloists and recording, with the musical and speech elements well balanced. The Voice of the Forest offers a more familiar Martinů. It is far more individual in style and, like the ballet Spalíček, draws on Czech folklore and melody. In it, Martinů's invention is unfailingly fresh and although one can see why it has never made waves it has much to offer. The set is packaged as one disc in a box for two, so as to accommodate the copious and handsomely produced documentation.

MARTUCCI, Giuseppe
(1856–1909)

Symphony 1 in D min., Op. 75; Andante, Op. 69/2 (arr. cello and orchestra); Giga, Op. 61/3; Canzonetta, Op. 65/2; Notturno, Op. 70/1 (all arr. For orchestra)

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570929. Roma SO, La Vecchia

Symphony 2 in F, Op. 81; (i) Theme & Variations for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 58. Gavotta, Op. 55/2; Tarantella, Op. 44/6

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570930. Roma SO, La Vecchia, (i) with Lya De Barberiis

Martucci was a contemporary of Elgar and gained distinction both as a pianist (appearing in London, Paris and other European centres) and a conductor. In his later years he was a great champion of Wagner and gave the first Italian performance of Götterdämmerung. His own music is finely wrought and, though conservative in outlook, its fine craftsmanship and quiet individuality exert a certain spell. The Roma Symphony Orchestra under La Vecchia obviously believe in this music and serve it well. Well worth investigating.

MASCAGNI, Pietro (1863–1945)

L'amico Fritz (complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 67376-2 (2). Pavarotti, Freni, Sardinero, ROHCG Ch. & O, Gavazzeni

The haunting Cherry Duet from this opera whets the appetite for more, and it is good to hear so rare and delightful a piece, one that is unlikely to enter the repertory of our British opera houses. The performance could not be more refined, and Freni and Pavarotti were both at their freshest in 1969 when it was recorded. While the dramatic conception is at the opposite end of the scale from Cavalleria rusticana, one is easily beguiled by the music's charm. The Covent Garden Orchestra responds loyally; the recording is clear, warm and atmospheric and has transferred beautifully to CD. Though perhaps not a 'Great Recording of the Century', this mid-priced reissue is very winning. The documentation includes a full libretto and attractive sessions photographs.

Cavalleria rusticana (complete; DVD versions)

🔑 * Ph. DVD 070 428-9. Obraztsova, Domingo, Bruson, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Prêtre (Dir: Franco Zeffirelli) – LEONCAVALLO: *Pagliacci**

Ⓝ  TDK DVD DVWW-OPCAV. Komlosi, Sung Kyu Park, De Mola, Di Felice, Di Castri, San Carlo Ch. & O, Zhang Jiemin

(*) DG DVD 073 4389. Cossotto, Cecchele, Guelfi, Martino, La Scala, Milan, Ch. & O, Karajan (Director: Giorgio Strehler, V/D: Ernst Wild) – LEONCAVALLO: Pagliacci ****

(*) Opus Arte DVD OA0983D (2). Urmana, La Scola, Jugovic, Ch. & SO of Teatro Real, Madrid, López Cobos (Director: Giancarlo del Monaco, V/D: Angel Luis Ramirez) – LEONCAVALLO: Pagliacci **(*)

Franco Zeffirelli has here (in 1981) opted to film Cavalleria rusticana on location in Sicily, with wonderfully evocative results. The camerawork brilliantly heightens the drama too, with long shots used for such key moments as the final fight between Turiddù and Alfio, which in the theatre always takes place offstage. He also uses close-ups very effectively to bring out the conflicting emotions of Santuzza and Turiddù in their big duet. Authentic costumes augment the local colour, and the handling of the chorus adds to the realism. As in Pagliacci, Zeffirelli regularly conceals any problem of coordination between sound and vision as the singers mime their words. Plácido Domingo is in superb voice as Turiddù, singing and acting with total command, and Renato Bruson makes a strong, characterful Alfio. As Santuzza, Elena Obraztsova sings warmly, with a rich and fruity mezzo, if with too insistent a vibrato. Stealing the scene in the far smaller role of Mamma Lucia, the veteran mezzo Fedora Barbieri is superb, wonderfully characterful and still in fine voice.

A truly verismo performance from San Carlo on TDK, conducted with great vitality and warm expressive feeling by the excellent female conductor, Zhang Jiemin. The background is the spectacular castellated Antiche Terme Romane, near Naples, an open-air theatre (once associated with the Roman emperor Nero). With high walls, the (visible) orchestra becomes a centrepiece beneath the action, which is on several levels. Indeed, at the end of her big scene with Turiddù, Santuzza rushes right down past the orchestra almost into the audience. The only miscalculation is Turiddù's opening 'Siciliana', which is too distantly placed. But when the opera gets under way the cameras move in to give the viewer plenty of close-ups. Ildiko Komlosi uses her big, rich voice powerfully, and the superbly passionate interchanges with Turridù are as thrilling as the Easter Hymn with the chorus. The acoustic is slightly dry so the orchestral sound has splendid projection and clarity (and the best cymbals in Italy!) and the set certainly adds to the atmospheric feeling of the performance.

Karajan recorded Cavalleria Rusticana in video in 1968, with three of these artists, Cossotto, Martino and Guelfi, but Turiddù (Gianfranco Cecchele), although lusty enough, was not their equal. Moreover, Fiorenza Cossotto, who sang the part of Santuzza superbly, proved much less successful as an actress, and her melodramatic portrayal is not kindly observed by the camera in close-up, especially as the singers have to mime their parts to a prerecording. The production, staged by Giorgio Strehler, was filmed spectacularly – seemingly in the open air – on a large set, back to back with Pagliacci. The action is comparatively static, although musically impressive. Karajan at the helm conducts spaciously and with rich romantic feeling (especially in the Prelude and Intermezzo). The video direction by Ernst Wild is competent but, despite Cossotto's glorious singing, as an overall production this does not match the coupled Pagliacci, completely overseen by Karajan himself.

There are no starry names in the Madrid production, but it is well sung and convincingly acted against a bare but realistic set. Violeta Urmana and Vincenzo La Scola are a very convincing Santuzza and Turiddù, and the Lola of Dragana Jugovic is pretty enough to seduce the most resistant lover. The climax, with the fight between Alfio and Turiddù, is presented on stage, and at Turiddù's death the production moves without a break into the Prologue of Pagliacci. The opera is strongly directed by Jesús López-Cobos and its very directness gives it a strong appeal.

Cavalleria rusticana (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 74321 39500-2. Scotto, Domingo, Elvira, Amb. Op. Ch., Nat. PO, Levine

🔑 () EMI mono 5 56287-2 (2). Callas, Di Stefano, Panerai, Ch. & O of La Scala, Milan, Serafin – LEONCAVALLO: I Pagliacci ()

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 7 63967-2 (2). de los Angeles, Corelli, Sereni, Rome Op. Ch. & O, Santini – LEONCAVALLO: I Pagliacci ***

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 7 63650-2 (2). Caballé, Carreras, Hamari, Manuguerra, Varnay, Amb. Op. Ch., Southend Boys' Ch., Philh. O, Muti – LEONCAVALLO: I Pagliacci **(*)

Now reissued at mid-price (pleasingly presented in a slipcase with libretto), the Scotto–Domingo set now stands as a first recommendation for Mascagni's red-blooded opera, with Domingo giving a heroic account of the role of Turiddù, full of defiance. Scotto is strongly characterful too, and James Levine directs with a splendid sense of pacing, by no means faster than his rivals (except the leisurely Karajan) and drawing red-blooded playing from the National Philharmonic. The recording is vivid and strikingly present in its CD transfer.

Dating from the mid-1950s, Callas's performance as Santuzza reveals the diva in her finest form, with edginess and unevenness of production at a minimum and with vocal colouring at its most characterful. The singing of the other principals is hardly less dramatic and Panerai is in firm, well-projected voice.

Though not as vibrant as von Matači 's Pagliacci coupling, this beautifully sung, essentially lyrical Santini performance could give considerable satisfaction, provided the bitterness of Mascagni's drama is not a first consideration. Like the coupling, it shows Corelli in good form; both he and de los Angeles are given scope by Santini to produce soaring, Italianate singing of Mascagni's richly memorable melodies. The recording is suitably atmospheric.

Muti's EMI Cav. is comparably biting and violent, brushing away the idea that this is a sentimental score. The result is certainly refreshing, with Caballé – pushed faster than usual, even in her big moments – collaborating warmly. So Voi lo sapete is geared from the start to the final cry of Io son dannata, and she manages a fine snarl on A te la mala Pasqua. Carreras does not sound quite so much at home, though the rest of the cast is memorable, including the resonant Manuguerra as Alfio and the veteran Astrid Varnay as Mamma Lucia, wobble as she does. The recording is forward and vivid.

MASSENET, Jules (1842–1912)

Le Carillon (ballet; complete)

Ⓑ  Double Decca 444 836-2 (2). SRO, Bonynge – DELIBES: Coppélia ***

Le Carillon was written in the same year as Werther. The villains of the story who try to destroy the bells of the title are punished by being miraculously transformed into bronze jaquemarts, fated to continue striking them for ever! The music of this one-Act ballet makes a delightful offering – not always as lightweight as one would expect. With his keen rhythmic sense and feeling for colour, Bonynge is outstanding in this repertory, and the 1984 Decca recording is brilliant and colourful. A fine bonus (37 minutes) for a desirable version of Delibes' Coppélia, at the cheapest possible price.

Le Cid: ballet suite

🔑 ✿  Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2742. Israel PO, Martinon – DVOŘÁK: Slavonic Dances; MEYERBEER: Les Patineurs ✿ ***

In Martinon's hands, Massenet's tunes fizz and effervesce like the best champagne, while the more reflective numbers have colourful, picture-postcard atmosphere. Equally remarkable is the astonishingly vivid Decca recording, the sort of brilliant yet warm sound for which the company became famous, and it is superbly transferred to CD.

Piano Concerto in E flat

 Hyp. CDA 66897. Coombs, BBC Scottish SO, Ossonce – HAHN: Piano Concerto in E ***

 Alpha 104. Biret, Bilkent SO, Páris – FRANCK: Symphonic Variations; Les Djinns ***

Massenet unexpectedly completed this substantial concerto at the age of 60. It regularly reveals his love of the keyboard, and in a performance like Stephen Coombs's the result is a delight, the writing full of attractive ideas. Jean-Yves Ossonce is a most sympathetic accompanist, drawing idiomatic playing from the BBC Scottish Symphony, helped by warm, well-balanced sound.

Idil Biret strikes the right degree of flamboyance. But it is the romantic delicacy of her playing that one remembers, and the finale gambols along infectiously and spiritedly. In short, this engaging work is played with great imagination and flair, and is very well recorded.

Fantaisie (for Cello & Orchestra)

 ASV CDDCA 867. Rolland, BBC PO, Varga – LALO: Cello Concerto; SAINT-SAËNS: Cello Concerto 1 ***

Massenet's Fantaisie for Cello and Orchestra is music for the sweet-toothed. The Canadian cellist, Sophie Rolland, and the BBC forces under Gilbert Varga play it with total commitment and fervour as if they believe every note. Excellent recording.

Hérodiade (ballet) Suite; Orchestral Suites 1; 2 (Scènes hongroises); 3 (Scènes dramatiques)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.553124. New Zealand SO, Ossonce

The ballet suite from Hérodiade comes in the final scene of the opera and the five movements are nicely scored. The other orchestral suites offer Massenet's ready store of tunes and his charmingly French orchestral palette. The playing of the New Zealand Orchestra is first class, polished and vivid, though it is a pity that the microphones are somewhat close.

Scènes alsaciennes

 Talent SACD DOM 2929. Nice PO, Guidarini (with Gustav CHARPENTIER: Impressions d'Italie ) – SAINT-SAËNS: Suite algérienne ***

The Scènes alsaciennes are full of charm in this most engaging performance from Marco Guidarini and his excellent Nice Orchestra. The opening picture of a leisurely Sunday morning after Matins is evoked most atmospherically, and the vibrant horns in Au cabaret really catch the ear. In the finale, Dimanche soir, the soldiers' evening retreat is vividly caught, especially if you have back speakers to create the surround sound which this SACD provides so naturally. Gustav Charpentier was a pupil of Massenet and his Impressions d'Italie follow in his master's footsteps, if rather more impressionistically, particularly in the graceful second movement, A la fontaine. But the lively closing picture of Napoli brings a colourful kaleidoscope of folk melodies.

Scènes alsaciennes; Scènes de féerie; Scènes napolitaines; Scènes pittoresques

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553125. New Zealand SO, Ossonce

Best known are the somewhat ingenuous Scènes pittoresques and the Scènes alsaciennes. The most touching movement is the beautiful Sous les tilleuls ('Under the Lime Trees'), with its wilting dialogue between cello and clarinet, played here with an affectionate finesse worthy of a Beecham. With full, sparkling, yet warmly atmospheric recording, this is a first-class disc in every way.

La Vierge: Le Dernier sommeil de la vierge (The Last Sleep of the Virgin)

Ⓜ ((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4113. RPO, Beecham (with spoken introduction) – BERLIOZ: The Trojans: Royal Hunt and Storm; CHABRIER: España; Gwendoline Overture; DEBUSSY: L'Enfant prodigue: Cortège et Air de danse; DELIUS: Brigg Fair; SAINT-SAËNS: Le Rouet d'Omphale; (with MOZART: Divertimento in D, K. 131: excerpts) ((*))

This was one of Sir Thomas's most celebrated 'lollipops' and it comes from a live broadcast concert of 1956, complete with a characteristic spoken introduction. It is beautifully played but the recording, although warm and pleasing, is rather restricted.

OPERA

Esclarmonde (complete)

🔑 Ⓑ * Decca 475 7914 (3). Sutherland, Aragall, Tourangeau, Davies, Grant, Alldis Ch., Nat PO, Bonynge

Joan Sutherland's performance of the central role of Esclarmonde is in its way as powerful as it is in Puccini's last opera. Aragall proves an excellent tenor, sweet of tone and intelligent, and the other parts are well taken too. Richard Bonynge draws passionate singing and playing from chorus and orchestra, and the recording has both atmosphere and spectacle to match the story, based on a medieval romance involving song-contests and necromancy. This makes a fine bargain for those wanting to explore Massenet's lesser-known operas.

(i) Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame; (ii) La Navarraise (also includes excerpts from 1933 recording of Le Jongleur with Vezzani, O cond. Dumazert)

Ⓜ  Gala (ADD; stereo/mono) GL 100.747 (2). (i) Vanzo, Massard, Bastin, Dupouy, Ch. & O de l'ORTF, Dervaux; (ii) Moizan, Vanzo, Mars, Lovano, Vigneron, Lyrique Ch. & O de la RTF, Hartemann

Alain Vanzo makes these radio recordings especially valuable, even though La Navarraise, recorded in 1963, is in mono only. Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame, written in 1900, is one of Massenet's most charming pieces. As a single-sex piece in a religious setting with the Virgin intervening, it evidently influenced Puccini's Suor Angelica. Vanzo dominates this broadcast recording, but the others in the cast (as well as the mixed chorus) all sing well, with the 1973 sound nicely atmospheric. In La Navarraise the performances (not just of Vanzo but of Geneviève Moizan in the title-role as well as of Jean Peyron as the second tenor) make it well worth hearing.

Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame (complete)

Ⓑ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 75297-2 (2). Vanzo, Bastin, Vento, Raffali, Frémeau, Monte-Carlo Op. Ch. & O, Boutry

Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame, written in 1900, was composed entirely for male voices (with the exception of the chorus of angels). The images of rustic village and abbey life are colourfully contrasted. Alain Vanzo as the juggler, Jean, is at his stylish best – his drinking song (an 'Alleluia' to wine!) with its rustic violin obbligato is a highlight. The rest of the French cast is idiomatic and convincing. In the comic role of the Abbey's cook, Bonaface, the robust humour is brought out well by Jules Bastin. Roger Boutry provides sympathetic support with his Monte Carlo forces, and the 1978 sound is warmly atmospheric. There are no texts to help non-French speakers, but the set is inexpensive and has undoubted period charm.

Manon (complete; DVD versions)

Ⓝ 🔑 * DG DVD 073 4431. Netrebko, Villazón, Fischesser, Daza, Corazza, Kataja, Berlin State Op. Ch. & O, Barenboim (Producer: Bernhard Fleischer; V/D: Andreas Morell)

* TDK DVD DVOPMANON (2). Fleming, Alvarez, Chaignaud, Sénéchal, Paris Nat. Op. Ch. and O, López-Cobos (Dir: Deflo, DVD Dir: François Roussillon)

* Virgin DVD 50999 50506897 (2). Dessay, Villazón, Ramey, Lanza, Vas, Henry, Gran Teatre del Liceu Ch. & SO, Pérez (Director: David McVicar, V/D: François Roussillon) (with documetary on rehearsals for the opera)

 DG DVD 073 4207. Gruberová, Araiza, Thau, Helm, Gahmlich, Tichy, V. State Op. Ch. & O, A. Fischer (Dir: Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, V/D: Brian Large)

We are particularly well served with outstanding versions of Manon. Apart from Renée Fleming's memorable assumption of the role on TDK, Natalie Dessay is wonderfully characterful in her partnership with Villazón on Virgin. But now Villazón (at his finest) is re-partnered with Anna Netrebko, singing gloriously on DG, in a passionate liaison that proves most moving of all. Moreover, whereas David McVicar's production on Virgin from the very beginning underlines the seamy side of the world into which the young Manon enters, the producer of the Berlin version, Bernhard Fleisher, emphasizes its glamour, underpinned by luscious costuming (from Susan Hilferty) in 1950s style. But Manon herself is totally charismatic as she moves from innocent ingénue on a bench waiting for a train, to a glamorous blonde of Marilyn Monroe vintage in the Hôtel de Transylvanie. The spectacle of the Cours-la-Reine scene is dazzling, but what one remembers most is the tenderly sensuous love scenes between the two principals, notably the delightful aria when Manon nostalgically serenades her little table, and the great emotional climax when she seduces her lover to abandon his plan to enter the church. With Alfredo Daza a fine, dignified Lescaut and Rémy Corazza most convincing as the villain, Guillot, the close of the opera is handled most movingly. Throughout, Barenboim (who stepped in at the last moment to conduct) achieves first-class orchestral playing and keeps the tension high, and overall the performance is quite unforgettable.

Gilbert Deflo's production for the National Opera in Paris is refreshingly direct in its presentation of the story over the five acts, using apt in-period costumes set in contrast with the simple stylized sets, both designed by William Orlandi. Renée Fleming not only sings superbly, she acts with total conviction, brilliantly making the transition from the vivacious seventeen-year-old of Act I, inexperienced yet wilful, to the mature, even more wilful figure of the later acts, making one understand her dilemma over her love for Des Grieux. It is well matched by the upstanding, slightly awkward Des Grieux of Marcelo Alvarez, also singing splendidly with a wide tonal range down to a fine head-voice in Ah fuyez douce image. Equally fine is the magnificent singing of the baritone Jean-Luc Chaignaud readily commanding the stage. With Jésus López-Cobos drawing idiomatic playing and singing from chorus and orchestra, it makes a splendid addition to the DVD catalogue.

This live recording of an outstanding production by David McVicar at the Liceu Theatre in Lisbon featured an exceptionally strong leading duo in Natalie Dessay as Manon and Rolando Villazón as Des Grieux. The rest of the cast is comparably characterful, though Samuel Ramey as the Count Des Grieux is not very steady. No matter, the performance is altogether gripping. Victor Pablo Pérez conducts strongly and the stylized production, using traditional costumes, works exceptionally well, not least in creating the scene of corruption into which the young Manon, so simply dressed, makes her initial entry. Villazón is an ardent lover and creates a perfect partnership with Dessay. The ballet scenes, too, are splendidly danced and visually delightful, to make a neat foil for the narrative. The camerawork is admirable, the sound is excellent, and in every way this is an intensely satisfying DVD version of a memorable production.

Adam Fischer conducts a 1983 performance from the Vienna State Opera, with sets and costumes by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle – and what gorgeous sets and costumes they are: the period detail is superb and the performance is a joy to watch. It is a joy to hear also, with an excellent cast, the leads giving characterful and intelligent portrayals. Gruberová is suitably sparkling in her showy numbers and equally successful in conveying Manon's less than cheerful fate at the end. Fischer conducts his Vienna forces urgently but not insensitively. If not as fine as the TDK set with Renée Fleming, this makes an enjoyable alternative choice – what a wonderful score it is!

Manon (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 81842-2 (2). Gheorghiu, Alagna, Patriarco, van Dam, La Monnaie Op. Ch. & O, Pappano

🔑 () Testament mono SBT 3203 (3). de los Angeles, Legay, Dens, Paris Opéra-Comique O, Monteux – BERLIOZ: Les Nuits d'été; DEBUSSY: La Demoiselle élue ()

(*) EMI 7 49610-2 (2). Cotrubas, Kraus, Quilico, van Dam, Toulouse Capitole Ch. & O, Plasson

(BB) () Naxos mono 111268/70. de los Angeles; cond Monteux (as above, with DEBUSSY: La demoiselle élue & BERLIOZ: Les nuites d'été ())

In Act I Gheorghiu instantly establishes the heroine as a vivacious, wilful character with a great sense of fun, and her singing is both imaginative and technically flawless. The aria, Adieu, notre petite table, is tenderly affecting, shaded down to a breathtaking pianissimo at the end. A fine actress, she develops the character too, while Alagna, always at his happiest in French-language opera, portrays Des Grieux as full of eager innocence as well as passion. The other La Monnaie soloists make a splendid team under Antonio Pappano, with José van Dam impressively cast as Des Grieux's father. Pappano himself is as understanding an interpreter of Massenet as he is of Puccini, drawing warmly committed playing and singing from the whole company. Available also at mid-price.

No one has recorded the role of Manon in Massenet's opera quite so bewitchingly as Victoria de los Angeles in this historic EMI recording of 1955, girlishly provocative at the start, conveying tragic depth later. The voice is at its most golden, and this vivid new transfer from Testament gives the mono sound extra warmth and immediacy. Henri Legay as Des Grieux also sings with honeyed tones, a believable young lover ensnared, and Pierre Monteux in one of his rare opera recordings is masterly in his timing and phrasing. As a splendid bonus you also have RCA recordings of Berlioz and Debussy, similarly persuasive, recorded in Boston, also in 1955.

The Plasson Toulouse set is a stylish performance, well characterized and well sung. Ileana Cotrubas is a charming Manon, more tender and vulnerable than de los Angeles but not so golden-toned and with a more limited development of character, from the girlish chatterbox to the dying victim. Alfredo Kraus betrays some signs of age, but his is a finely detailed and subtle reading. Louis Quilico has a delightfully light touch as Lescaut, José van Dam is a superb Comte Des Grieux, and, although Plasson is rougher with the score than Monteux was, his feeling for French idiom is very good.

The Naxos set has a considerable price advantage, although the transfer (while projecting the voices vividly) is thinner in the orchestra. However, its trump card is a brief spoken introduction by Pierre Monteux, recalling Massenet himself directing all aspects of an early performance, from which he learned a good deal.

Thaïs (complete)

🔑 * Decca 466 7662 (2). Fleming, Hampson, Sabbatini, Bordeaux Op. Ch. & O, Abel

The character of Thaïs in Massenet's opera finds an ideal interpreter in Renée Fleming. After making the heroine's unlikely conversion to virtue totally convincing, she crowns her performance with a deeply affecting account of her death scene, ending with a ravishing pianissimo top A. Thomas Hampson as Athanaël, a character working just as improbably in the opposite direction, cannot quite equal her in such total conviction but he is vocally ideal. The others are well cast too, notably Giuseppe Sabbatini as Nicias, and though the Bordeaux Opera Orchestra is not quite as refined as some, Yves Abel draws warmly sympathetic playing from them throughout, with the young French virtuoso, Renaud Capuchon, luxuriously cast in the big violin solo of the Méditation. Excellent sound. A clear first choice.

Thaïs: Méditation

Ⓝ  Chan. 10510. Rimonda, Canziana – DANCLA: Petite Ecole de la mélodie; SAINT-SAËNS: Violin Sonata 1 in D min. ***

The popular Méditation from Massenet's Thaïs comes in a beautifully judged performance, not too slow, and with magical half-tones from Rimonda's violin. It makes a welcome filler to two exceptionally attractive works for violin and piano.

Werther (complete; DVD version)

Ⓝ  Arthaus DVD 101 317. Purdy-Ikaia, Hablowetz, Kolarczyk, Schlingensiepen, Badische Staatskapelle Karlsruhe, Children's Ch., Carlberg (Director: Robert Tannenbaum; V/D: Brooks Riley)

With the several star-studded CD versions of Werther available, not many collectors are likely to be attracted to this sombre video production from Arthaus. Keith Purdy-Ikaia's portrayal of Werther is certainly true to the character created in Goethe's novel, with his obsession with the idea that 'except for ourselves, nothing else exists, everything is void', and he sings strongly, if with an intrusive vibrato. Silvia Hablowetz is a sympathetic Charlotte, singing well but with little seductive charisma, and Ina Schlingensiepen is a charming Sophie, although she too is shown as an unfortunate, crippled girl in the hands of fate. Armin Kolarczyk's Albert is certainly convincing, again appropriately, with no sex appeal. The set is contrived, but the scenes with the children do at least bring contrasting light relief. Much of Massenet's vocal score is projected well and Daniel Carlberg creates considerable intensity in the orchestra. But this is not an uplifting operatic experience.

Werther (complete; CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * EMI 3 81849-2 (2). Alagna, Gheorghiu, Hampson, Petibon, Tiffin School Children's Ch., LSO, Pappano

🔑  RCA 74321 58224-2 (2). Vargas, Kasarova, Schaldenbrand, Kotoski, Berlin Knabenchor & Deutsche SO, Jurowski

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 477 5652 (2). Domingo, Obraztsova, Augér, Grundheber, Moll, Cologne Children's Ch. & RSO, Chailly

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 5 62627-2 (2). Gedda, de los Angeles, Soyer, Benoit, Grigoriou, Mallabrera, Mesplé, ORTF Children's Ch., O de Paris, Prêtre

Though Alagna with his French background is an ideal choice for Werther himself, Gheorghiu with her bright soprano is a less obvious one for the role of the heroine, Charlotte, normally given to a mezzo. But as a magnetic actress she conveys an extra tenderness and vulnerability, with no lack of weight in such a solo as Laisse couler mes larmes in Act III. Thomas Hampson is outstanding as Albert and Patricia Petibon a sweet-toned Sophie. As in Puccini, Pappano is subtle as well as powerful, using rubato idiomatically and with refinement to heighten the drama and point the moments of climax. Good warm sound.

The RCA set makes the perfect alternative to the EMI version. Here is casting of the two principals that in every way is centrally satisfying. With her vibrant mezzo, Vesselina Kasarova is a natural choice for Charlotte, full and intense at the big moments, even if the vibrancy, as caught by the microphone, turns into unevenness under pressure. Ramon Vargas with his clear, precise tenor is the perfect hero here. He may not be as distinctive as Alagna, but he sings such a solo as Pourquoi me reveiller with greater purity, shading the voice down most sensitively. The other principals are not so strongly cast, with Dawn Kotoski rather shrill as Sophie, but Jurowski's conducting is warm and dramatic, even if it lacks the distinctive subtleties of Pappano. The sound is brilliant and clear.

Chailly proves a sharply characterful conductor, one who knows how to thrust home an important climax as well as to create evocative textures, varying intensity positively. Plácido Domingo in the name-part sings with sweetness and purity as well as strength, coping superbly with the legato line of the aria, Pourquoi me réveiller. Elena Obraztsova is richer and firmer than she usually is on record, but it is a generalized portrait, particularly beside the charming Sophie of Arleen Augér. The others make up a very convincing team, and this inexpensive reissue is well worth considering, even though the documentation has only a track-by-track synopsis.

Victoria de los Angeles's golden tones, which convey pathos so beautifully, are ideally suited to Massenet's gentle melodies and, although she is recorded too closely (closer than the other soloists), she makes an appealing heroine. Gedda, too, makes an intelligent romantic hero, though Prêtre's direction could be more subtle. This set now reappears, excellently remastered, as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

Werther (complete; in English)

Ⓜ  Chan. 3033 (2). Brecknock, Baker, Wheatley, Blackburn, Roberts, Tomlinson, ENO Ch. & O, Mackerras

Mackerras's version offers an exceptionally warm reading in English which is strong in dramatic thrust. The cast too is exceptionally strong, with John Brecknock clear, fresh and firm in the title-role. Yet it is the performance of Janet Baker as Charlotte that provides the linchpin, rising to great heights in the tragedy of Act IV. Joy Roberts is a bright, agile Sophie, and the other male singers can hardly be faulted. Remarkably, this was taken from a single performance, not edited from a series. Voices are close enough for every word of Norman Tucker's excellent translation to be heard.

MATHIAS, William (1934–92)

(i) Clarinet concerto; (ii) Harp concerto; (iii) Piano concerto 3

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 325. (i) de Peyer; (ii) Ellis; (iii) Katin; LSO or New Philh. O, Atherton

Helped by vividly immediate recording, the Clarinet Concerto with its clean-cut, memorable themes sparks off an inspired performance from Gervase de Peyer, not just in the lively outer movements but also in the poignant Lento espressivo in the middle. The Harp Concerto (1970) is less outward-going, but it prompts Mathias to create evocative, shimmering textures, very characteristic of him. The harp, superbly played by the dedicatee, Osian Ellis, is set alongside exotic percussion, with the finale a snappy jig that delightfully keeps tripping over its own feet. In Piano Concerto 3 of 1968 the outer movements bring jazzily syncopated writing, like Walton with a difference, here incisively played by Peter Katin. They frame an atmospheric central Adagio with echoes of Bartókian 'night music', like Bartók with a difference.

(i; ii) Dance Overture, Op. 16; (iii; ii) Divertimento for String Orchestra, Op. 7; (i; ii) Invocation & Dance, Op. 17; (iv; ii) 'Landscapes of the mind': Laudi, Op. 62; Vistas, Op. 69; (iii; ii) Prelude, Aria & Finale for String Orchestra, Op. 25; (v) Sinfonietta, Op. 34

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 328 [id.]. (i) LSO; (ii) Atherton; (iii) ECO; (iv) New Philh. O; (v) Nat. Youth O of Wales, Davison

The joyful Dance Overture is vividly scored, rather after the manner of Malcolm Arnold, and the Invocation and Dance has genuine spontaneity. The Divertimento and Prelude, Aria and Finale have a family likeness in presenting workmanlike Hindemithian arguments in fast movements and warm lyricism in slow ones, although the Aria is restrained and ethereal. The colourful, extrovert Sinfonietta has a Lento with a delectable blues flavour, and the finale too is popularly based rhythmically, with its lively and sometimes pungent syncopations. Undoubtedly the two most remarkable works here are the two pieces described by their composer as 'Landscapes of the mind'. Laudi, written in 1973, somewhat after the manner of Messiaen. The even more mystically evocative Vistas was inspired by the composer's visit to the USA in 1975. Here an Ivesian influence is unmistakable. Performances throughout are of the highest calibre, with David Atherton at his most perceptive, and the recordings (engineered by Decca for the most part) are outstanding.

String Quartets 1–3

🔑  Metier MSVCD 92005. Medea Qt

Spanning the years 1967–86, Mathias's three string quartets make a fine sequence, illuminating his whole achievement. The Third Quartet brings together elements of both the earlier works, with the first of its three movements developing from a deceptively light opening into a taut, large-scale structure comparable with Quartet 1. All three quartets, very well recorded, are outstandingly well performed by the young Medea Quartet.

Wind Quintet

 Crystal CD 750. Westwood Wind Quintet – CARLSSON:

Nightwings; LIGETI: Bagatelles; BARBER: Summer Music ***

Of the five movements of this spirited Quintet the Scherzo is particularly felicitous and there is a rather beautiful Elegy. The playing of the Westwood Wind Quintet is highly expert and committed, and the recording is very good indeed.

VOCAL MUSIC

(i–iii) Ave Rex, A Carol Sequence, Op. 45; (iv; v; iii) Elegy for a Prince, Op. 59; (v; vi) This Worlde's Joie, Op. 67

🔑 * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 324. (i) Welsh Nat. Op. Ch.; (ii) LSO; (iii) Atherton; (iv) G. Evans; (v) New Philh. O; (vi) J. Price, Bowen, Rippon, Bach Ch., St George's Ch., Willcocks

Ave Rex, Mathias's fine Carol Sequence (quoting the medieval Alleluya, a new work is come on hand, and Sir Christemas) has the robust inspiration of Britten's Ceremony of Carols, with which it has much in common, while This Worlde's Joie is Mathias's interpretation of the 'Four Seasons' and is in four comparatively short, lyrical sections, lightweight in style, but with the composer's usual direct appeal 'intended to be enjoyed by both listeners and performers', says the composer. And enjoyable it is, from the very opening bars, with their felicitous orchestration. In between the major works comes Mathias's setting – in English translation – of the medieval Welsh Elegy for a Prince (Llywelyn, the last native Prince of Wales, killed by the soldiers of Edward I in 1282), eloquently sung by Geraint Evans. The performances throughout are first class and the recordings, made by Decca engineers, are very fine (spectacularly vivid and wide-ranging in the choral works).

Ave verum corpus; A babe is born; All wisdom is from the Lord; Festival Te Deum; In excelsis gloria; Let the people praise thee; Lift up your heads; Magnificat & Nunc dimittis; Missa brevis; O be joyful in the Lord; O Nata lux. Organ: Carillon; Processional

Ⓝ * Hyp. CDA 67740. Wells Cathedral Ch., Matthew Owens; J. Vaughn (organ)

Both the opening anthem on this disc, Let the people praise thee, O God, and the Magnificat (from the 'Jesus College Service') are exuberantly thrilling. But Mathias can be equally moving in his gentle writing as the Nunc dimittis, which follows, shows so readily. The spirited carol, the gently syncopated A babe is born, has a Rutterish flavour; the Missa brevis, more plangent in its harmony, is all Mathias's own, and its moving Agnus Dei opens pianopianissimo. But the organ unleashes its full glory in the Festival Te Deum and sets the dancing mood of the last item here, O be joyful in the Lord. The Wells Cathedral Choir sings superbly throughout this 76-minute collection which lifts the listener's spirits throughout. The recording, made in the Cathedral Church of St Andrew, is outstanding too, and this CD collection is an ideal way to enjoy the full range of the composer's vocal writing.

Missa brevis; Rex gloriae; Anthems: Ad majorem Dei gloriam; Angelus; Alleluia; Doctrine of Wisdom; Except the Lord build the house; Hodie Christus natus est; The Lord is my Shepherd; Veni sancte spiritus

❀ * Paraclete Press GDCD 026. Gloriæ Dei Cantores, Patterson

This splendidly sung programme comes from Gloriæ Dei Cantores, a 44-voice choir from Cape Cod, Massachusetts, directed by Elizabeth Patterson. The thrilling opening of Sanctus establishes this as the emotional kernel of the work, with the organ then creating darker woodwind colours to introduce the very touching Agnus Dei. The anthems are hardly less individual and inspired. The Lord is my Shepherd is very Welsh in feeling, a passionate declaration of faith; The Doctrine of Wisdom again uses the organ very atmospherically, and its melodic simplicity is telling. With singing of such commitment and intensity, yet exploiting the widest range of dynamics, every piece here is memorable. Mathias could hardly have hoped for more persuasive advocacy or finer recording. If you have difficulty in getting this disc, the Choir's website address is: www.paracletepress.com.

MATTHEWS, Colin (born 1946)

(i) Horn Concerto; (ii) Alphabicycle Order

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Hallé CDHLL 7515. (i) Watkins; (ii) Goodman (narrator); Hallé O, (i) Elder; (ii) Gardner

We know Colin Matthews mainly from his brilliant orchestrations of Debussy's piano Préludes. Now he shows his paces with a highly original Horn Concerto which is mostly gently expressive, but also momentarily boldly forceful. It has a superbly confident soloist in Richard Watkins. Now for something entirely different. Alphabicycle Order is an engagingly friendly but never bland setting, spiced with wit, of Christopher Reid's encapsulation of the alphabet. Narrator Henry Goodman, the Hallé Children's Chorus and the Orchestra, under Edward Gardner, clearly enjoy themselves, and so do we.

MAUNDER, John (1858–1920)

Olivet to Calvary (cantata)

Ⓑ (*) CfP (ADD) 575 779-2 (2). Mitchinson, Harvey, Guildford Cathedral Ch., Rose; Morse (organ) – STAINER: The Crucifixion ***

It is easy to be patronizing about music like this but, provided one accepts the conventions of style in which it is composed, the music is effective and often moving. The performance has an attractive simplicity and genuine eloquence. Frederick Harvey is particularly moving at the actual moment of Christ's death; in a passage that, insensitively handled, could be positively embarrassing, he creates a magical, hushed intensity. The choir sing beautifully, and in the gentler, lyrical writing (the semi-chorus O Thou whose sweet compassion, for example) sentimentality is skilfully avoided.

The 1964 recording is first class in every way, and it has been admirably transferred to CD. This now comes aptly paired with Stainer's Crucifixion.

MAW, Nicholas (1935–2009)

Violin Concerto (1993)

🔑  Sony SK 62856. Bell, LPO, Norrington

Maw here excels himself in a work specifically written for Joshua Bell, who responds superbly with playing of heartfelt warmth as well as brilliance. The opening Moderato movement has something of the fervour of the Walton Violin Concerto, with Maw firmly establishing his personal approach to tonality in seamless lyricism, leading up to a grinding climax. Coming second, the Scherzo is the longest movement, with Walton again brought to mind in the spiky brilliance, set against a central section with a ripe horn solo. The third movement, Romanza, is then a calm interlude before the carefree surging thrust of the finale, leading to a bravura conclusion, not the slow fade so often favoured latterly by concerto composers. Roger Norrington and the LPO are strong and sympathetic partners, with warm, full recording to match.

(i) Dance Scenes; (ii) Odyssey

🔑 Ⓜ  EMI 5 85145-2 (2). (i) Philh. O, Harding; (ii) CBSO, Rattle

Spanning 90 minutes, Nicholas Maw's Odyssey has been counted the biggest continuous orchestral pieces ever written. The slow movement alone lasts for over half an hour, while the allegros bring a genuine sense of speed, thrusting and energetic. The result is astonishingly fine, with the engineers totally disguising the problems of recording in Birmingham Town Hall. For its mid-priced reissue, EMI have added his brilliantly orchestrated and virtuosic Dance Scenes (which at times remind one of Respighi's orchestrations), superbly played and recorded.

Sinfonia

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 307. ECO, Del Mar (with ADDISON: Divertimento for Brass Qt; J. GARDNER: Theme and Variations for Brass Qt; DODGSON: Sonata for Brass Quintet ***)

Nicholas Maw's Sinfonia is by far the longest work on this CD, lasting half an hour. Norman Del Mar has a remarkable sense of colour in his textures, but this work is not a bath of self-indulgence. Indeed, in some ways it is a tough work and its argument is certainly closely wrought. But an unprejudiced listener would find an immediate and lasting enjoyment. It was written in the mid-1960s and has echoes of Britten and late Strauss, but still presents an individual idiom in its extended three-movement structure. A superb, committed performance from 1971 is coupled with three brilliantly played and recorded works for brass ensemble, generally lighter in spirit, especially John Addison's delightful Divertimento.

(i) Flute Quartet; (ii) Piano Trio

 ASV CDDCA 920. Monticello Trio, with (i) Pearce; (ii) Coletti

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, the Piano Trio was written in 1991 for the Monticello Trio, who here record it in a warmly expressive performance, fiery where necessary. The Flute Quartet of 1981 was written for Judith Pearce of the Nash Ensemble, who plays it most beautifully here; it is another fine example of Maw's broad romanticism, powerful and lyrical, often sensuous, approachable yet clearly contemporary. Though the central slow movement opens as a fugue, it develops emotionally to become an atmospheric nocturne, leading to a scurrying finale. Excellent performances and sound.

Scenes and Arias

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 267. Manning, Howells, Proctor, BBC SO, Del Mar – MILNER: Roman Spring; Salutatio Angelica ***

Scenes and Arias is a setting of medieval love-letters that unexpectedly explodes into soaring, passionate music of a richness such as you would expect in a Richard Strauss opera. The parallel with Strauss is inevitable when Maw uses women's voices with an intertwining mellifluousness one associates above all with Rosenkavalier. Maw has a habit of setting elaborately decorated figures to long-sustained chords, but he avoids the charge of writing in too static a way with vigorous allegros full of jagged syncopations. Lovely singing from the soloists, passionately committed conducting from Norman Del Mar and first-rate recording.

MAXWELL DAVIES, Peter (born 1934)

(i) Antechrist; (i; ii) Missa super 'L'Homme armé'; (iii) Second Fantasia on John Taverner's 'In nomine'; (iv) Seven In Nomine; (v) Lullaby for Ilian Rainbow; (i; vi) From Stone to Thorn; Hymn to St Magnus; (vi) O magnum mysterium

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 475 6166 (2). (i) Fires of London, composer; (ii) V. Redgrave (speaker); (iii) New Philh. O, Groves; (iv) London Sin., Atherton; (v) Walker (guitar); (vi) Thomas (soprano); Cirencester Grammar School Ch. & O, composer

Antechrist is a sort of exuberant overture. L'Homme armé, a more extended but comparable work, similarly working on a medieval motif, is also most approachable, while From Stone to Thorn, a work much thornier in argument, directly displays the formidable talents of – among others – the soprano Mary Thomas. Two years later, the Fires of London recorded the Hymn to St Magnus, a powerful and uncompromising piece lasting over 36 minutes, one of the finest works inspired by the composer's flight to Orkney. Mary Thomas, helps to build the concentration, particularly in the hypnotic repetitions of the plea, St Magnus, pray for us (in Latin), which punctuate the long third movement.

Groves's 1972 performance of The Second Fantasia on John

Taverner's 'In nomine', in good sound, is not ideally incisive or polished; but anyone willing to accept a challenge will find this work very rewarding. O magnum mysterium was written for the Cirencester Grammar School, where the composer once taught, and his pupils sing this brilliantly.

Seven in Nomine is an early work, full of the composer's fascinating experiments in textures and form, often reflecting and using music from the 16th and 17th centuries. The 1979 performance under David Atherton is excellent. All in all, this is an ideal introduction to Maxwell Davies's music, and represents superb value for money.

Sinfonia; Sinfonia concertante

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1148. SCO, composer [illegible]

A welcome bargain reissue. In his Sinfonia of 1962 Peter Maxwell Davies took as his inspiration Monteverdi's Vespers of 1610, and the dedication in this music, beautifully played by the Scottish Chamber Orchestra, is plain from first to last. The Sinfonia concertante is a much more extrovert piece for strings plus solo wind quintet and timpani. In idiom this is hardly at all neoclassical and, more than usual, the composer evokes romantic images, as in the lovely close of the first movement. Virtuoso playing from the Scottish principals, not least the horn. Well-balanced recording too.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Ave maris stella; Dove, Star-Folded; Economies of Scale; Psalm 24

(*) Divine Art/ Metier MSV 28503. Gemini, Ian Mitchell

Of these four chamber works the most immediately approachable is the first on the disc, Psalm 24 (a Motet for Instrumental Ensemble), hauntingly dominated by a medieval cantus firmus. The valedictory Dove, Star-Folded, for string trio, is similarly based on a Greek Byzantine hymn and combines 'inward-looking slow music' with 'dance-like quick music' with considerable intensity. Economies of Scale, for clarinet, piano, violin and cello, has a parallel with Messiaen's Quartet for the End of Time, and although the writing is far wilder and more complex than anything Messiaen wrote,it has a 'beautifully poised ending'. Ave maris stella (loosely based on the plainsong) is a virtuoso sextet with much the same instrumentation as the Psalm. The work opens and closes in a contemplative fashion, but in between the writing is kaleidoscopically fragmentary and intensely complex; it is certainly not easy listening, although it is remarkably stimulating when played with such assurance and very clearly recorded.

Naxos Quartets 1 & 2 (Naxos 8.557396)

Naxos Quartets 3 & 4 (Naxos 8.557397)

Naxos Quartets 5 (Lighthouses of Orkney and Shetland); 6 (Naxos 8.557398)

Naxos Quartets 7 (Metafore sul Borromini); 8 (Naxos 8.557399)

(BB)  Maggini Qt

Naxos Quartets 9 & 10

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.557400. Maggini Qt

Maxwell Davies's projected series of 10 Quartets on Naxos starts impressively in 1, with movements that combine structural and thematic ingenuity, typical of the composer, with emotional weight. The first of the four movements in Quartet No. 2 opens with an impressive slow introduction, leading to an energetic Allegro. The middle two movements are linked as a pair, with the recitative in the first echoing ideas in Quartet 1, while the finale is slow and deeply meditative, a movingly serene conclusion.

The very opening of the third of Maxwell Davies's Quartets on Naxos may be dauntingly thorny, but that leads quickly to meditative music which is plainly from the heart. The second movement, In Nomine, the longest of the four, is even more deeply intense, with plainsong an underlying element, leading to a sharply rhythmic Scherzo, and a Fugue which starts in echo of late Beethoven. 4, lighter in tone and more direct, was inspired by Brueghel's picture of children's games. In a single massive movement of 25 minutes it switches between passages of manic energy and dark meditation, with quirky twists and turns.

The Fifth Quartet's title refers to the sweep of the beam of the North Ronaldsay light, which moves from the beginning to the end of the two-movement work, and also to the different flashing 'calls' of lighthouses (so that mariners can identify any particular one). 6 is more ambitious in its six movements, the second and fifth of which draw on Advent and Christmas chant, and the first of a pair of Scherzos is a pizzicato. The Adagio turns into recitative towards the close.

The Seventh Quartet, intended to celebrate the work of the 17th-century architect Francesco Borromini, is a sequence of seven slow movements connected with seven of Borromini's most impressive buildings. The Eighth Quartet is in one movement and draws on Dowland's Queen Elizabeth's Galliard; it is described by the composer as an 'Intermezzo' in the cycle. Obviously the Maggini players have fully grasped all this writing and there is no doubting their identification and concentration. The Naxos recording is well up to the usual high standard on both discs.

The Ninth Quartet is cast in six movements, in two groups, the first pair (allegro and slow movement concentratedly joined in content) then three less formidable to follow, and a powerful finale. 10 has five movements with an Adagio at the centre, hardly less probing and not providing a conclusive end. 'I needed to leave the door open,' suggests the composer, curiously as it is the close of this highly demanding cycle. The Maggini performances are as concentrated as ever and very well recorded.

(i; ii) Mass; (i) Missa parvula; Dum complerentur; Veni Sancta Spiritus. Organ pieces: (i) Reliquit domum meum; Veni Creator Spiritus

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67454. Westminster Cathedral Ch., Baker; with (i) Quinney; (ii) Houssart (organ)

Where the Missa parvula is a setting for boys' voices in unison with organ accompaniment, the Mass is for full choir and with organ accompaniment involving a second instrument in two of the sections. The lyrical directness of the Missa parvula, with the final Agnus Dei sounding almost like a carol, is immediately attractive, touching in its simplicity. Maxwell Davies, with roots in medieval music, tends to avoid making the liturgy dramatic, so that even the setting of Et resurrexit in the Credo hardly stands out from the lyrical flow. Similarly, in the Mass for full choir, using a much more elaborate idiom, the composer even more strikingly draws on medieval techniques, basing it on two Whitsun plainsong chants. Complementing the two settings of the Mass come two motets, Veni Sancta Spiritus, slow and devotional, and Dum complerentur, a Pentecostal piece involving triumphant 'Alleluias', and two organ pieces, the valedictory Reliquit domum and the penitential Veni Creator Spiritus. Martin Baker draws radiant singing from his fine choir, atmospherically recorded.

MAYERL, Billy (1902–50)

Piano Miscellany

Ⓝ Ⓜ * Dutton CDLX 7211. De'ath

Billy Mayerl was the most popular English composer/performer of light music in the syncopated style in the 1920s and '30s. It is indeed a very English style; he never went to America, not sure if he would be welcome there, with Gershwin reigning. But that only makes his music the more individual. Marigold was his most famous piece and that, alas, is not included here, but much else is, and Leslie De'ath knows just how to play it, with crisp fingers, a swinging rhythm and a light touch. There are two-dozen delectable pieces to choose from and the collection is of such a quality that you can play it right through, or pick and choose. Try the opening and closing Irishry, the charming Meadowsweet and Alpine Bluebell from 'In my Garden' or the deliciously frivolous Milkman's Scherzo and Clowning, and the two 'Insect oddities', Ladybird Lullaby and Praying Mantis. For gentle poetry, sample The Forgotten Forest and you will surely be hooked. The recording is excellent.

MAYR, Simon (1763–1845)

L'amor coniugale (Farsa sentimenal)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.660198/9. Rizzone, Bille, Charalgina, Machej, Bellavia, Trammell, Württemberg PO, Franklin

The farsa sentimental, an amalgamation of opera buffa and opera seria into what might be described as opera semiseria, arrived in the 1790s, and it is into this category that Mayr's L'amor coniugale slips neatly. More remarkable is its plot, derived from the same source as Beethoven's Fidelio, which it pre-dates, arriving in Dresden in 1804, shortly before Beethoven's Leonora. However, Mayr's libretto places the action in 17th-century Poland. The characters are much the same as in Beethoven's opera, only with different names. The soprano role of Leonora is exchanged for Zeliska; her imprisoned husband Florestan becomes the tenor role, Amorveno. Rocco the gaoler is now Peters; his daughter is now Floreska and the governor is Moroski. The narrative however is sentimentalized. Amorveno is in prison and left to starve to death, as the governor wants to seduce his wife who, although in disguise, is no longer the heroic rescuer, and the plot is resolved (after a modest brass fanfare) by the appearance of Ardelao (the hero's brother) who arrives after neither gaoler nor governor is willing to kill their prisoner. However weak the plot, the music itself has much charm, and it is most enjoyably sung by all concerned, with Cinzia Rizzone a delightful Zeliska. Christopher Franklin directs the piece with plenty of life and sparkle, and the Württemberg Philharmonic Orchestra play stylishly. The recording is excellent and the only reservation (and it is a big one) is that the accompanying notes give just over half a page to a synopsis which is not cued to the individual numbers. Even so, this is easy to enjoy.

David in spelunca Engaddi (David in the Cave of Engedi): Oratorio

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570366/67. Ostermann, Horak, Ichihara, Duffe, Schneider, Simon Mayr Ch. & Ens., Hauk

Johann Simon Mayr's oratorio was written in 1795 and was first performed in Venice at the Ospedale dei Mendicanti, where there were plenty of female singers available. Here David is sung by a mezzo-soprano, and the other four members of the cast are also sopranos, which makes following the action a little difficult! However, there is a good synopsis, the music is lyrically appealing, and the singing is uniformly of a high standard (as is the chorus and orchestra). So this makes entertaining listening, even if it would have been far more enjoyable with a libretto and translation. However, one can get this from www.naxos.com/libretti/570366.htm

MEDTNER, Nikolai (1880–1951)

(i) Piano Concertos 1 in C min., Op. 33; 2 in C min., Op. 50; 3 in E min. (Ballade), Op. 60; (Piano) Sonata-ballade in F sharp, Op. 27

 Chan. 9040 (2). Tozer; (i) LPO, Järvi

Piano Concerto 1 in C min. Op. 33; Liebliches Kind (arr. Sudbin)

 BIS SACD 1588. Sudbin, São Paulo SO, Neschling – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 ***

(i) Piano Concerto 1; Sonata-ballade

 Chan. 9038. Tozer, (i) LPO, Järvi

Piano Concertos 1; 3

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553359. Scherbakov, Moscow SO, Ziva

(i) Piano Concerto 2; (ii) Piano Quintet in C

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553390. Scherbakov, with (i) Moscow SO, Golovschin; (ii) Danel, Tedla, Bourová, Pudhoransk

Piano Concertos 2–3

 Hyp. CDA 66580. Demidenko, BBC Scottish SO, Maksymiuk

 Chan. 9039. Tozer, LPO, Järvi

Piano Concertos 2–3; Arabesque in A min., Op. 7/2; Tale in F min., Op. 26/3

() Testament mono SBT 1027. Composer, Philh. O, Dobrowen

Konstantin Scherbakov is highly sympathetic and offers very musical playing. He strikes us as more imaginative and subtle in both his range of dynamics and diversity of colour than any of his rivals. True, Geoffrey Tozer (Chandos) has the finer recording, but taken all round Scherbakov would make an eminently satisfactory first choice: artistically it is impeccable, as a recording it is very natural and well balanced and, not least, the price is right.

Yevgeny Sudbin takes on the recondite one-movement Medtner Concerto, coupling it with the Tchaikovsky B flat minor. This is commanding playing and inspires only the most exalted comparisons. It is good to see Medtner enjoy such youthful and brilliant advocacy, and with such impressive SACD sound too.

Tozer has obvious feeling for this composer and his playing has no lack of warmth and virtuosity. Demidenko has the greater fire and dramatic flair, and his performance with the BBC Scottish Orchestra under Jerzy Maksymiuk has one very much on the edge of one's chair. He is by no means as well recorded as Tozer: the sound of the piano is shallow and the orchestra lacks real transparency and is a bit two-dimensional in terms of front-to-back perspective.

On Testament we have two of the celebrated set of Medtner's own concerto recordings which the Maharajah of Mysore funded in the late 1940s. Medtner was then in his sixties but his playing is still pretty magisterial. These concertos and the early miniatures still possess an aristocratic allure and a musical finesse that it is difficult to resist. The performances were never reissued in the UK in the days of LP, and their reappearance at long last is as welcome as it is overdue. Good transfers.

Violin Sonatas 1 in B min., Op. 21; 2 in G, Op. 44

 Chan. 9293. Mordkovitch, Tozer

The first two of Medtner's three Violin Sonatas come on a well-recorded Chandos release. Lydia Mordkovitch proves a most imaginative and thoughtful advocate of the sonata, betraying an effortless expressive freedom. Both she and her partner are well recorded.

Violin Sonata 3 (Sonata Epica), Op. 57

 Erato 0630 15110-2. Repin, Berezovsky – RAVEL: Violin Sonata ***

Vadim Repin and Boris Berezovsky make a formidable partnership, and they give what is arguably the most sensitive and certainly the most persuasive account of the Sonata Epica since David Oistrakh and Alexander Goldweiser's celebrated Melodiya LP. They bring to it a wide range of colour and dynamics and infuse every phrase with life. Very natural recording-balance adds to the pleasure this CD gives.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano duet: Russian Round Dance; Knight Errant, Op. 58/1–2

 Hyp. CDA 66654. Demidenko, Alexeev – RACHMANINOV: Suite, etc. ***

The Russian round-dance or khorovod was written in 1946 and Medtner and Moiseiwitsch recorded it the same year for EMI. Here it is given with great lightness of touch, though this partnership loses beauty of tone-production above fortissimo.

Dithyrambe, Op. 10/2; Elegy, Op. 59/2; Skazki (Fairy Tales): 1 (1915); in E min., Op. 14/2; in G, Op. 9/3; in D min. (Ophelia's Song); in C sharp min., Op. 35/4; Forgotten Melodies, 2nd Cycle, 1: Meditation; Primavera, Op. 39/3; 3 Hymns in Praise of Toil, Op. 49; Piano Sonata in E min. (The Night Wind), Op. 25/2; Sonata Triad, Op. 11/1–3 (CRD (ADD) CRD 3338/9)

Improvisation 2 (in Variation Form), Op. 47; Piano Sonata in F min., Op. 5 (CRD (ADD) CRD 3461)

3 Novelles, Op. 17; Romantic Sketches for the Young, Op. 54; Piano Sonatas in G min., Op. 22; A min., Op. 30; 2 Skazki, Op. 8 (CRD (ADD) CRD 3460)

Forgotten Melodies, Op. 39; 2 Skazki, Op. 48; Etude in C min.; I Loved Thee, Op. 32/4; Sonata minacciosa, Op. 53/2 (CRD (ADD) CRD 3509)

4 Skazki, Op. 34; Sonata-Ballade in F sharp, Op. 27; Sonata romantica in B flat min., Op. 53/1 (CRD (ADD) CRD 3498)

🔑 Ⓜ  Milne

Medtner's art is subtle and elusive. He shows an aristocratic disdain for the obvious, a feeling for balance and proportion and a quiet harmonic refinement that offer consistent rewards. There is hardly a weak piece here, and Milne is a poetic advocate whose technical prowess is matched by first-rate artistry. Such is the quality of his playing that one is never tempted to think of this music as pale Rachmaninov. Milne has lived with Medtner for the best part of a lifetime, and this tells. His playing has refinement and authority, and the transcription he has made of the Pushkin setting, I Loved Thee, is quite magical. In the Sonata minacciosa, though Milne's playing might be more mercurial and incandescent, he brings valuable insights of his own. The Sonata-Ballade and Sonata romantica are also finely and perceptively played. Very good recording.

Skazki (Fairy Tales), Opp. 8, 9, 14, 20, 26, 31/3, 34, 35, 42, 48, 51; Skazka (1915); Romantic Sketches for the Young, Op. 54

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67491/2 (2). Milne

The present issue collects the numerous Skazki, or 'Fairy Tales', which Milne has already recorded for CRD. Milne makes out the strongest case for these imaginative pieces, both at the keyboard and in his excellent notes.

Forgotten Melodies, Opp. 38–9; 3 Marches, Op. 8; Sonata-Ballade in F sharp, Op. 27; Sonata Idylle in G, Op. 56; Sonata Skazka in C min., Op. 25/1; Sonata Triad, Op. 11; Sonatas in A min., Op. 30; in B flat min. (Sonata romantica), Op. 53/1; in E min. (Night Wind), Op. 25/2; in F min., Op. 5; in F min. (Sonata minacciosa), Op. 53/2; in G min., Op. 22

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67221-4 (4). Hamelin

Marc-André Hamelin's artistry is to be found at its most consummate in this four-CD set of the sonatas and miscellaneous piano music. If you find Medtner just a little bland or predictable, then try this set, for in Hamelin's hands it is neither. Playing touched by distinction.

Forgotten Melodies, Cycles I & II Opp. 38–9; 2 Marches, Op. 8

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67578. Hamelin

This is a reissue from Marc-André Hamelin's outstanding four-disc boxed set of Medtner's piano music (above) which was a Gramophone 'Critics' Choice', and also won a Diapason d'Or. If you have not yet tried this repertoire, this is a good sampler.

Sonata-Reminiscenza in A min., Op. 38/1

(*) RCA 82876 65390-2. Kissin – SCRIABIN: 5 Preludes, etc.; STRAVINSKY: 3 Movements from Petrushka **(*)

Kissin is a wonderful pianist, of that there is no question. However, those who recall the celebrated Gilels account of this score will find a certain self-awareness here that inhibits him from finding the same depth. He is better in the virtuoso shallows of Petrushka.

MENDELSSOHN, Fanny
(1805–47)

Piano Trio in D, Op. 11

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55078. Dartington Piano Trio – Clara SCHUMANN: Trio in G min ***

Like Clara Schumann's G minor Trio with which it is coupled, the Piano Trio has impeccable craftsmanship and great facility. Its ideas are pleasing, though not strongly individual. The Dartington Piano Trio play most persuasively and give much pleasure. Excellent recording.

Lieder

 Hyp. CDA 67110. Gritton, Asti

Fanny Mendelssohn's response to German poets from Goethe to Heine is at least the equal of her brother's, at once memorably tuneful and subtle in her illumination of the texts, adding distinctively to the Lieder tradition. Her writing is not just poetic but often vigorous, with fine accompaniments to match. Susan Gritton, sweet if just a little unvaried in tone, and Eugene Asti are refreshing, consistently sympathetic interpreters. They provide their own perceptive notes: Fanny's caustic comments on the poet Heine bring the man vividly to life.

MENDELSSOHN, Felix
(1809–47)

(i) Capriccio brillant, Op. 22; (i; ii) Double Concerto for Violin & Piano; (i) Rondo brillant, Op. 29; Serenade & Allegro giocoso, Op. 43 (BIS CD 713); Piano Concertos 1 in G min., Op. 25; 2 in D min., Op. 40; Piano Concerto in A min. (BIS CD 718); (iii) Double Piano Concertos: in A flat; E (BIS CD 688); (ii) Violin Concerto in D min.; Violin Concerto in E min., Op. 64 (1844 version); Octet, Op. 20: Scherzo (orchestral version) (BIS CD 935)

Ⓑ  BIS CD 966/68. (i) Brautigam; (ii) van Keulen; (iii) Derwinger, Pöntinen, Amsterdam New Sinf., Markiz

Ⓑ  BIS SACD 1766 (equivalent to 4 CDs) (artists as above)

These are exemplary recordings of exemplary performances. Indeed it is difficult to flaw them. They are available separately (the individual catalogue numbers are listed within the titles above), but there is a price advantage in purchasing them all together. The interesting account of the E minor Violin Concerto in its original form (beautifully played by Isabelle van Keulen) is of particular interest. Mendelssohn spent seven years (1838–45) working over what is perhaps his most successful concertante work and this is its earlier draft. Its gestation is discussed in greater detail in the accompanying notes for the individual disc, but the notes here are still pretty copious.

This extraordinary alternative 'single layer' SACD – obviously the shape of things to come, plays normally on any SACD player (but not on a CD deck). The quality is comparable with the normal CDs but there are 4 hours, 16 minutes playing time on this single disc, with cues for all the individual movements of the concertos incorporated.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min. (for piano and strings); (iv) Piano Concertos 1 in G min; 2 in D min.

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 8573 89088-2. Katsaris; (i) Franz Liszt CO, Rolla; (ii) Leipzig G. O, Masur

It was a happy idea to couple the early A minor Concerto at budget price with the two major works in this form. It is impossible not to respond to Katsaris's vitality, even if at times there is a feeling of rushing his fences. He plays with enormous vigour in the outer movements of the later works and receives strong support from Masur. There is nothing heavy, yet the music is given more substance than usual, while the central slow movements bring a relaxed lyrical espresso which provides admirable contrast. The full, well-balanced recording has attractive ambience and sparkle.

(i) Piano Concerto in A min. (for piano & strings); String Symphonies 9 in C min.; 10 in B min.; 12 in G min.

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 8460. ASMF, Marriner, (i) with Ogdon

The remarkable and ambitious A minor Concerto is played with great verve and spirit by John Ogdon. The String Symphonies, written around the same time, are no less remarkable. All the music is splendidly brought to life by committed, vivacious playing and excellent, vintage 1960s (Argo/Decca) sound.

Piano Concerto 1 in G min., Op. 25

 DG 474 291-2. Lang Lang, Chicago SO, Barenboim – TCHAIKOVSKY: Piano Concerto 1 **(*)

Piano Concerto 1, Op. 25; Capriccio brillant, Op. 22

(BB)  Warner Apex 0927 99842-2. Huang, NYPO, Masur – MOZART: Piano Concerto 21 ***

The close balance of the piano establishes this as a big-scale performance, with the minor-key bite of the opening strongly presented. In the slow movement Lang Lang opts for a tempo on the broad side, lessening its role as a song without words. With sparkling playing, the performance erupts into a winningly joyful account of the finale. A rare and attractive coupling for the distinctive account of the Tchaikovsky.

A fresh and pleasing account of 1 plus a sparkling Capriccio from Helen Huang, and the Mozart coupling is enjoyable, too. Excellent value.

(i) Piano Concerto 1 in G min.; Symphonies (ii) 4 (Italian); (iii) 5 (Reformation)

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP9780. (i) Dorfman, LSO, Goehr; (ii) Hallé O, Harty; (iii) Paris Conservatoire O, Munch

Good to have the opportunity of hearing Sir Hamilton Harty's account of the Italian Symphony with the Hallé Orchestra, recorded in the early 1930s, when he was its permanent conductor. RL has long treasured Charles Munch's 78-r.p.m. set of the Reformation and has never quite understood why it was never transferred to LP. It is a vibrant and sensitive performance and it finds the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra in top form. Exemplary transfers.

Piano Concertos 1–2; Capriccio brillant

🔑 ✿ * Chan. 9215. Shelley, LMP

Piano Concertos 1–2; Capriccio brillant; Rondo brillant

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.550681-2. Frith, Slovak State PO (Košice), Stankovsky

Piano Concertos Nos 1–2; Capriccio brillant; Rondo brillant; Serenade & Allegro Giocoso in B min., Op. 43

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66969. Hough, CBSO, Foster

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2; Prelude & Fugue, Op. 35/1; Sonata in E, Op 6

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony (ADD) 88697 00818-2. Perahia; (i) ASMF, Marriner

(i) Piano Concertos 1–2, Songs without Words, Op. 19/1, 2, & 6 (Venetian Gondola Song); Op. 30/4 & 6; Op. 38/6; Op. 53/1; Op. 62/1 & 6 (Spring Song); Op. 67/4 (Spinning Song) & 6; Op. 85/6; Op. 102/5

Ⓜ  Decca 466 425-2. Schiff, (i) with Bav. RSO, Dutoit

Stephen Hough treats these compact minor-key works with a biting intensity. Yet with freer expressiveness and bigger contrasts he also brings out extra poetry, and in the finales a sparkling wit. He also has the advantage of the most generous and very apt couplings, three other, rare, concertante piano works by Mendelssohn. The point and delicacy of Hough's passage-work are a constant delight.

Howard Shelley offers marvellous playing in every respect: fresh, sparkling and dashing in the fast movements, poetic and touching in the slower ones. The London Mozart Players are a group of exactly the right size for these works and they point rhythms nicely and provide the necessary lift. Shelley dispatches the Capriccio brillant with similar aplomb, and the recording-balance is admirably judged, with rich, truthful recorded sound.

Benjamin Frith on Naxos is a hardly less personable and nimble soloist: he is sensitively touching in the slow movements. The Slovak Orchestra accompany with vigour and enthusiasm, and if the effect is at times less sharply rhythmic this is partly the effect of a somewhat more reverberant acoustic. What makes the Naxos disc very competitive is the inclusion of the Rondo brillant, which Frith dispatches with admirable vigour and sparkle. This disc is very good value indeed.

András Schiff also plays both concertos marvellously, with poetry, great delicacy and fluency, while his virtuosity is effortless. He is given excellent acccompaniments by Dutoit and the Bavarian players, and the Decca recording is first class. His simplicity of style suits the Songs without Words, although some might find his approach a little cool. Yet the famous Spring Song shows him at his best. The recording is again most natural and realistic.

Murray Perahia's playing catches the Mendelssohnian spirit with admirable perception. There is sensibility and sparkle, the slow movements are shaped most beautifully and the partnership with Marriner is very successful, for the Academy give a most sensitive backing. The recording could be more transparent but it does not lack body, and the piano timbre is fully acceptable. At mid-price, a very recommendable issue.

Double Piano Concertos: in A flat; in E

🔑  Hyp. CDA 66567. Coombs, Munro, BBC Scottish SO, Maksymiuk

(BB)  Naxos 8.553416. Frith, Tinney, Dublin RTE Sinf., O'Duinn

Mendelssohn's Double Concerto in A flat is the most ambitious of all his concertante works, and the work in E brings an expansive first movement too; they provide formidable evidence of the teenage composer's fluency and technical finesse. Stephen Coombs and Ian Munro prove ideal advocates, playing with delectable point and imagination, finding a wit and poetry in the writing that might easily lie hidden, with even the incidental passage-work magnetizing the ear. The recording of the pianos is on the shallow side, and the string-tone is thin too, but that is not inappropriate for the music.

The Naxos disc challenges the outstanding Hyperion issue coupling these same two charming double concertos. If the Irish players are not quite as persuasive as their Scottish counterparts on Hyperion, their playing is just as refined, and Frith and Tinney are a fair match for Coombs and Munro, less powerful but just as magnetic and even more poetic. The transparent recording helps, very appropriate for such youthful music.

Double Piano Concerto in E.

 Chan. 9711. Güher and Süther Pekinel, Philh. O, Marriner – BRUCH; MOZART: Double Concertos ***

Mendelssohn wrote his Double Piano Concerto when he was only fourteen, yet it contains many ideas that are entirely characteristic of his mature style. In such a performance as this its freshness justifies the length, for it brings an accompaniment from Marriner and the Academy, finely pointed, which does not inflate the piece. The Pekinel sisters, as in the other two works, give a fresh, alert performance with pinpoint ensemble. Warm, full sound.

Violin Concerto in D min.; (i) Double Concerto in D min. for Violin, Piano & Strings; Violin Concerto in E min., Op. 64

(BB)  Naxos 8.553844. Bisengaliev, N. Sinfonia, Penney; (i) with Frith

Two juvenilia are here dispatched with zest and freshness by these excellent musicians, even if in the D minor Violin Concerto Bisengaliev's finale is a bit headlong. Spirited playing from the Northern Sinfonia under Andrew Penney and a predictably stylish contribution from Benjamin Frith.

Violin Concerto in E min., Op. 64 (DVD version)

(*) EMI DVD 490445-9. Grumiaux, O. Nat. de l'ORTF, Rosenthal (with BACH: Violin Partita 2, BWV 1004: Sarabande & Chaconne; BLOCH: Baal Shem: Il Nigun (with André Chometon)) – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto **(*)

The Grumiaux DVD account of the Mendelssohn Concerto was made in the Palais de la Méditerranée in Nice in January 1961. In his day Grumiaux was an aristocrat of violinists, and his tonal refinement and selfless artistry made his achievement quite special. The sound is somewhat wanting in bloom and climaxes are wanting in transparency, but the essential qualities of this great violinist emerge in this work and in the various shorter pieces listed above. The Paganini was an encore at the Mendelssohn concert, while the Bach and Bloch pieces were recorded variously at the ORTF studios and in the Netherlands.

(i) Violin Concerto in E min. Op. 64 (Original Version); (ii) Octet in E flat, Op. 20 (Revised Version); (iii) 3 Lieder

 DG 477 6634. Hope, with (i) COE, Hengelbrock; (ii) COE soloists; (iii) Knauer

This is Daniel Hope's début recording for DG, and very good it is too. He plays the Violin Concerto in its original (1844) form, which DG claim as a 'world première recording': it was in fact recorded in 1998 by Isabella van Keulen on the BIS label (see the collection of concertos, above). The playing both of Hope and of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe under Thomas Hengelbrock is first class and the Octet, heard in its critically revised 1832 version (which is a première recording), has great lightness of touch and character.

Violin Concerto in E min., Op. 64 (CD versions)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 460 976-2. Chung, Montreal SO, Dutoit – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1; Scottish Fantasy ****

🔑  EMI 5 56418-2. Chang, BPO, Jansons – SIBELIUS: Violin Concerto ***

🔑  Telarc CD 80507. McDuffie, SCO, Swensen – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1 ✿ ***

 Teldec 2564 69366-8. Perlman, Chicago SO, Barenboim – BRAHMS: Double Concerto ***

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62591-2. Perlman, LSO, Previn – TCHAIKOVSKY: Concerto **(*)

 Virgin 545663-2. Capuçon, Mahler CO, Harding – SCHUMANN: Violin Concerto in D min.

Ⓑ  DG Double (ADD) 453 142-2 (2). Milstein, VPO, Abbado – BEETHOVEN: Concerto  ; BRAHMS: Concerto (*) ; TCHAIKOVSKY: Concerto ***

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110977. Milstein, Philharmonic-Symphony O, New York, Barbirolli – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1; TCHAIKOVSKY: Violin Concerto ()

(BB)  Naxos 8.550153. Nishizaki, Slovak PO, Jean – TCHAIKOVSKY: Concerto ***

Ⓜ  CRD (ADD) CRD 3369, R. Thomas, Bournemouth SO – BEETHOVEN: Romances 1–2; SCHUBERT: Konzertstück ***

Ⓜ  DG 445 515-2. Mutter, BPO, Karajan – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto ***

Ⓜ  DG 463 641-2. Mutter, BPO, Karajan – BRUCH: Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ  EMI 5 18173-2. Kennedy, ECO, Tate – BRUCH: Concerto 1; SCHUBERT: Rondo ***

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 66906-2. Menuhin, Philh. O, Kurtz – BRUCH: Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ  EMI Legend (ADD) 5 57766 (with bonus DVD: MOZART: Violin Concerto 3, K. 216). Menuhin, Philh. O, Kurtz – BRUCH: Violin Concerto

Ⓜ  RCA SACD (ADD) 82876 61391-2. Heifetz, Boston SO, Munch – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto

Ⓜ (*) DG (ADD) 477 6349. Mintz, Chicago SO, Abbado (with KREISLER: Caprice Viennoise; Liebeslied; Liebesfreud, with Benson, piano) – BRUCH: Violin Concerto 1 ***

Ⓜ (*) RCA 09026 61743-2. Heifetz, Boston SO, Munch – TCHAIKOVSKY: Concerto, etc. **(*)

Kyung Wha Chung favours speeds faster than usual in all three movements, and the result is sparkling, with the lovely slow movement fresh and songful, not at all sentimental. With warmly sympathetic accompaniment from Dutoit and the Montreal orchestra, amply recorded, the result is one of Chung's happiest records. The coupling of Bruch's G minor Concerto and Scottish Fantasy in Decca's 'Legends' series is ideal.

Unlike the Sibelius with which it is coupled, Sarah Chang's account of the Mendelssohn was recorded under studio conditions in the Philharmonie, Berlin. Here too she offers an astonishingly mature reading, more restrained than some, but still magnetic in its thoughtfulness and spontaneous poetry. Warm, atmospheric sound.

McDuffie's Mendelssohn is a performance of disarming simplicity, with natural phrasing and the most beautiful tone. This is a less passionate work than the Bruch coupling, and Swensen provides an orchestral backcloth on a comparable scale, but, as with the Bruch, the interchanges between soloist and orchestra have the natural spontaneity of live music-making, and the slow movement brings a flowing cantilena of touching beauty and raptly gentle feeling at the close, before the finale dashes off, the orchestra matching McDuffie's sparkle with comparable vivacity and colour. The Telarc recording, full textured and with a believable perspective, is well up to the high standards of the house.

Perlman's 1993 Chicago version, strong and volatile, was recorded live and originally issued in coupling with the second Prokofiev. It makes an excellent, more generous coupling in the new format with the powerful Perlman/Ma version of the Brahms Double Concerto.

Perlman's 1972 recording was very highly regarded in its day. He gives a performance as full of flair as almost any, and he is superbly matched by the LSO under Previn, at that time at their very peak. With ripe recording, this remains competitive in its mid-priced reissue in the 'Perlman Edition', although the Tchaikovsky coupling is not quite its match.

The lightness and resilience of Renaud Capuçon's playing at the very start of the Mendelssohn, matched by the transparent textures of the Mahler Chamber Orchestra under Daniel Harding, instantly establish the distinctive character of his version of a much-recorded concerto. The urgency of the main Allegro still allows the crystalline precision of Capuçon's playing of rapid passage-work to come over without any hint of rush. The chamber scale works well, but Capuçon's formidable virtuosity ensures that there is no feeling of a small-scale performance. With free, open sound, recorded in the Jugendstilltheather in Vienna, this makes an outstanding version of an apt and rare coupling.

Milstein's later DG version is a highly distinguished performance, very well accompanied. His account of the slow movement is more patrician than Menuhin's and his slight reserve is projected by sound which is bright, clean and clear in its CD remastering. This now comes on a DG Double which also includes the Beethoven and Brahms concertos.

Milstein made four recordings of the Mendelssohn, and this Naxos reissue, his first, comes from May 1945. There is a sense of exhilaration and a freshness that is very persuasive and the engineers capture Milstein's tone with great fidelity. When transferred to LP in the early 1950s there was a much wider frequency-range as well as quieter surfaces. Mark Obert-Thorn's transfers are exemplary; the performance should be snapped up, particularly at so competitive a price.

Takako Nishizaki gives an inspired reading of the concerto, warm, spontaneous and full of temperament. The central Andante is on the slow side, but well shaped, not sentimental, while the outer movements are exhilarating, with excellent playing from the Slovak Philharmonic. Though the forwardly placed violin sounds over-bright, the recording is full and warm. A splendid coupling at superbargain price.

Ronald Thomas's account is in many ways the opposite of a dashing virtuoso approach, yet his apt, unforced choice of speeds, his glowing purity of intonation and the fine coordination with the orchestra he leads (an amazing achievement in this often complex, fast-flowing music) put this among the most satisfying versions available. It is intensely refreshing from first to last, and is helped by excellent recording and fine couplings.

The freshness of Anne-Sophie Mutter's approach communicates vividly to the listener, creating the feeling of hearing the work anew. Her gentleness and radiant simplicity in the Andante are very appealing, and the light, sparkling finale is a delight. Mutter is given a small-scale image, projected forward from the orchestral backcloth; the sound is both full and refined. This fine performance comes alternatively coupled with either Brahms or Bruch.

Kennedy establishes a positive, masculine view of the work from the very start, but fantasy here goes with firm control. The slow movement brings a simple, songful view of the haunting melody, and the finale sparkles winningly, with no feeling of rush. With a bonus in the rare Schubert Rondo and clear, warm recording, it makes an excellent recommendation.

The restrained nobility of Menuhin's phrasing of the famous principal melody of the slow movement has long been a hallmark of his reading with Efrem Kurtz, who provides polished and sympathetic support. The sound of the CD transfer is bright, with the soloist dominating but the orchestral texture well detailed.

Menuhin's coupling with Bruch also comes in EMI's new Legend series with a bonus DVD of Mozart's Third (G major) Concerto, which was filmed with the Orchestre de Chambre de l'ORTF in Paris in 1967 and makes an interesting, but not exceptional, bonus.

As one might expect, Heifetz gives a fabulous performance. His speeds are consistently fast, yet in the slow movement his flexible phrasing sounds so inevitable and easy that it is hard not to be convinced. The finale is a tour de force, light and sparkling, with every note in place, and Munch's accompaniment throughout is outstanding. The 1959 recording is very good for its period and sounds well on CD, where it is paired with Tchaikovsky. But the new SACD transfer brings an added warmth, and the new coupling, the Beethoven Concerto, is eminently recommendable.

Mintz's version is powerfully conceived, less reticent than Mutter, less spontaneous than Perlman. It is not quite the equal of the Bruch coupling, although Abbado gives fine support. The Kreisler encores make a welcome bonus.

Jaime Laredo's version on a budget CD brings an attractively direct reading, fresh and alert but avoiding mannerism, marked by consistently sweet and true tone from the soloist. The orchestral ensemble is amazingly good when you remember that the soloist himself is directing. Vivid recording. (Regis RRC 1152)

2 Concert Pieces for Clarinet & Basset Horn: in F min., Op. 113; in D min., Op. 114

🔑  EMI 5 57359-2. S. Meyer, W. Meyer, ASMF, Sillito – BAERMANN: Clarinet Quintet 3; WEBER: Clarinet Quintet ***

Ⓑ  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22017 (2). King, Dobrée, LSO, Francis (with Concert – see below ***)

 Sup. SU 3554-2. Peterkova, Prague Philh. O, Bělohlávek – BRUCH: Double Concerto; ROSSINI: Introduction, Theme and Variations; Variations in C ***

These two delightful pieces for clarinet and basset horn are miniature concertos in all but name, each in three tiny movements. They are perfect vehicles for the brother-and-sister team of Sabine and Wolfgang Meyer, here opting for string orchestra accompaniment rather than the original piano. The perfect coupling for the Weber and Baermann Quintets, very well recorded.

They are also played with a nice blend of expressive spontaneity and high spirits by Georgina Dobrée, who proves a nimble partner for the ever-sensitive Thea King. This is part of an excellent two-disc set, including other attractive concertante works by Max Bruch, Crusell, Spohr and other less familar names.

Ludmila Peterkova also brings out the charm of these two miniature concertos as well as the wit, with Jiří Bělohlávek and the Prague Philharmonia sensitive partners. Excellent, full-bodied sound.

The Hebrides (Fingal's Cave) Overture

Ⓜ () Beulah mono 3PD12. BBC SO, Boult – SCHUBERT: Symphony 9 ((*)); WAGNER: Die Meistersinger: Overture ()

Boult, recording the Hebrides Overture in 1933 with the recently founded BBC Symphony Orchestra, takes a fresh, generally brisk view, which allows a degree of flexibility in the build-up of ostinatos and in the lovely reprise of the second subject, but with no romantic excess. The Beulah transfer is dry, with no added reverberation, not helped by a high but even surface hiss; but the body of sound makes one readily forget the limitations.

Symphonies for Strings 1–12; 13 in C min. (single movement)

 BIS CD 938/940. Amsterdam New Sinf., Markiz

 BIS-SACD 1738 (equivalent to 3 CDs) as above: Amsterdam New Sinf., Markiz

Symphonies for Strings 1–12

🔑 Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44081/3. L. Festival O, Pople

Symphonies for String Orchestra 1–6 (Naxos 8.553161)

Symphonies for String Orchestra 7–9 (Naxos 8.553162)

Symphonies for String Orchestra 10–13 (Sinfoniesatz) (Naxos 8.553163)

🔑 (BB)  N. CO, Ward

Mendelssohn's early symphonies for strings, lost for 150 years, were rediscovered in 1950. The first ten were student works and the last two, together with the virtually unknown Symphony Movement in C minor (13), had all been completed before their young composer reached the age of 14. The playing of the Amsterdam New Sinfonietta is vibrant and alive, and the recording has a warmth and clarity that give the set the edge over almost all its current rivals. This music is full of charm, and the quality of Mendelssohn's youthful invention is little short of astonishing.

Like the BIS collection of concertos above, this extraordinary alternative 'single layer' SACD (obviously the shape of things to come) plays normally on any SACD player (but not on a CD deck). The quality is comparable with that of normal CDs but there are 4 hours, 16 minutes playing time on this single disc, with cues for all the individual movements of the symphonies included.

Originally issued in 1991/2 on three separate discs, Ross Pople's set is among his finest recordings. He achieves modern-instrument performances that are as polished and spirited as they are lyrically persuasive and dramatic. Slow movements are both gracious and with genuine gravitas and much depth of feeling, often elegiac (sample 9). The contrapuntal interplay of the Allegros has an attractive lightness of touch (as in the splendid opening movement of 12), yet the music is never made to sound trivial. The recordings, made between 1985 and 1990 in the Church of Edward the Confessor, Mottingham, Kent, are warm and natural, and detail is not clouded.

Nicholas Ward and the Northern Chamber Orchestra match rivals at whatever price. The freshness and incisiveness of the performances are enhanced by bright, clean recording, made in the Concert Hall of Broadcasting House in Manchester. Not only does Ward bring out the exhilarating sparkle and vigour of the fast movements – with Mendelssohn, even at the age of 11, giving clear anticipations of his mature style – but he also gives apt emotional weight to such beautiful lyrical movements as the Andante of 2 or the darkly slow introduction to the one-movement 10 in B minor. All three discs can be warmly recommended to everyone.

Symphonies 1 in C min., Op. 11; (i) 2 in B flat, Op. 52 (Hymn of Praise); 3 in A min. (Scottish), Op. 56; 4 in A (Italian), Op. 91; 5 in D min. (Reformation), Op. 107

Ⓝ Ⓑ  DG 477 7581. BPO, Karajan; (i) with Mathis, Rehmann, Hollweg, Deutschen Op. Ch.

Ⓑ  Decca Trio 470 946-2 (3). (i) Banse, Rubens, Cole, Berlin R. Ch.; Deutsches SO, Berlin, Ashkenazy

Symphonies 1–5; Overture: The Hebrides

Ⓜ  Chan. 10224X (3). Philh. O, Weller (with Haymon, Hagley, Straka, Philh. Ch. in Symphony 2)

Karajan's distinguished set of the Mendelssohn Symphonies was recorded in 1971/2 in the Berlin Jesus-Christus-Kirche. The early C minor work sounds particularly fresh and the Hymn of Praise brings the fullest sound of all; the very fine choral singing is vividly caught. The soloists make a good team, rather than showing any memorable individuality; but overall Karajan's performance is most satisfying. The Scottish Symphony is a particularly remarkable account and the Italian shows the Berlin Philharmonic in sparkling form; the only drawback is Karajan's characteristic omission of both first-movement exposition repeats. There are few reservations to be made about the Reformation Symphony and the sound has been effectively clarified without too much loss of weight.

Weller's set of the Mendelssohn symphonies can stand comparison with the finest alternatives. Certainly it is the most beautifully recorded, the Chandos sound richly full-bodied, though not sharply defined.These are warm, affectionate readings which include exposition repeats and build excitingly to climaxes. In the Reformation Symphony and in Fingal's Cave, which follows, there is an emotional thrust that is very involving, leading to a joyfully exultant conclusion in the finale. Again in the Hymn of Praise (2) from the opening trombone solo onwards it is the warmth and weight of the recorded sound that tells, with a large chorus set against full-bodied, satisfyingly string-based orchestral sound. Though again speeds are often dangerously slow, the sense of spontaneity in the performance makes it compelling throughout. A considerable achievement.

The alternative tastefully presented Trio box collects Ashkenazy's Decca Mendelssohn symphonies, recorded at various times between 1993 and 1997 with the Deutsches Symphonie-Orchester, Berlin (the reborn Radio Symphony Orchestra). The set has a great deal going for it, particularly at this attractive price, with characterfully shaped phrasing and vital playing. Ashkenazy is unfailingly musical and fresh in his approach, and both the playing of this fine orchestra and the Decca recording are first rate.

Symphonies 1; 5 (Reformation)

(BB)  Warner Apex 256460370-2. Leipzig GO, Masur; (i) with Bonney, Schönheit, Leipzig R. Ch.

Masur's mastery in his later Mendelssohn recordings is due in good measure to his ability to adopt relatively fast speeds and make them sound easy and relaxed, not hurried and breathless, and in both symphonies here Masur is faster than his principal rivals on disc, not just in Allegros but in slower movements too. In 1 and 5 that works very well indeed, bringing an alert freshness with no hint of sentimentality.

(i) Symphony 2 (Hymn of Praise); Psalm 114; A Midsummer Night's Dream: Overture

 EuroArts DVD 2054668. Leipzig GO, Chailly; (i) with Schwanewilms, Schnitzer, Seifert, Leipzig Ch. (Dir: Michael Beyer) (with Documentary film: Chailly in Leipzig; RIHM: Verwandlung)

The EuroArts DVD offers the same performances as on the (deleted) Decca disc of the Hymn of Praise, but adds the other items in the concert celebrating Riccardo Chailly's arrival in Leipzig as the new music director of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra and of the opera. The original version of Lobgesang is in some ways disappointing next to Mendelssohn's own revised version. But seeing the performance as well as hearing it in the handsome modern Gewandhaus Hall minimizes the disappointment and, though the final chorus cannot match the revision, the visible enthusiasm of the singers and of the conductor (mouthing the words) makes it much more enjoyable. The extra items are also well worth hearing, Mendelssohn's strong and forthright setting of Psalm 114 for chorus and orchestra and the thoughtful and beautifully written orchestral work, composed expressly for this occasion by the distinguished German composer, Wolfgang Rihm. Even the sound seems better when accompanied by vision.

Symphony 2 (Hymn of Praise)

 DG 423 143-2. Connell, Mattila, Blochwitz, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Abbado

 Naïve OP 30-98. Isokoski, Bach, Lang, Ch. Musicus Köln, Das neue Orchester, Spering

Ⓝ (*) Carus 83.213. Karg, Gura, Maria Bernius, Stuttgart Ch., Deutsche Chamber Philharmonie Bremen, Frieder Bernius

Abbado's full-price digital version is very fine, brushing aside all sentimentality, both fresh and sympathetic and, though the recording is not ideally clear on inner detail, the brightness reinforces the conductor's view. The chorus, well focused, is particularly impressive, and the sweet-toned tenor, Hans-Peter Blochwitz, is outstanding among the soloists.

Spering presents a performance of the Hymn of Praise in period style. With clean, crisp textures this is most refreshing, full of incidental beauties. For example, the once-celebrated duet for the two soprano soloists, Ich harrete des Herrn ('I waited for the Lord'), is intensely beautiful in its simplicity, with Soile Isokoski (also in Herreweghe's Elijah) and Mechthild Bach both angelically sweet yet nicely contrasted. The tenor soloist, Frieder Lang, is also exceptionally sweet-toned, though his projection is keen enough to make the Huter, ist die Nacht bald hin? ('Watchman, what of the night?') episode very intense and dramatic. Though not always clear in inner definition, the freshness of the choral singing matches that of the whole performance.

In the Carus recording, though the soprano of Christiane Karg initially sounds too shallow in her first solo, she comes into her own in the duet, set to the words 'I waited for the Lord'. The great moment which follows is set to the words Die Nacht ist vergangen ('the night has departed'), a moment which sends a thrill through all performers, as it certainly does in this recording. The final fugue is impressive too, very clearly defined here, with a final resounding reference to the 'All that has life and breath' theme. The choral singing is of high quality throughout, but overall this Carus version would not be a first choice.

Symphony 3 (Scottish); Overtures: Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; The Hebrides; Ruy Blas

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550222. Slovak PO, Dohnányi

Symphony 3 in A min. (Scottish); (i) A Midsummer Night's Dream: Overture & Incidental Music

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * Decca (ADD) 466 990-2. LSO, Maag; (i) with Vyvyan, Lowe, ROHCG female ch.

Maag's classic account of the Scottish Symphony is remarkable for its freshness and natural spontaneity. The opening cantilena is poised and phrased very beautifully and sets the mood for what is to follow. A pity that the exposition repeat is not included, and though in the last movement the final Maestoso is measured, the effect remains most compelling, almost Klemperian in manner, with superb horn-playing. The Midsummer Night's Dream excerpts date from 1957 and sound equally fresh, and this new Legends mastering includes the vocal and choral numbers on the original LP, which were not included on the previous reissue. Strongly recommended – a wholly delightful disc.

Oliver Dohnányi conducts a joyful account of the Scottish Symphony on Naxos, given the more impact by forward recording. Mendelssohn's lilting rhythms in all the fast movements are delightfully bouncy, and though the slow movement brings few hushed pianissimos, its full warmth is brought out without sentimentality. The three overtures, also very well done, not least the under-appreciated Ruy Blas, make an excellent coupling.

Symphonies 3 in A min. (Scottish); 4 (Italian)

Ⓜ  DG 427 810-2. LSO, Abbado

(BB) * ASV Resonance CD RSN 3018. O of St John's, Lubbock

 Mer. CDE 84261. Apollo CO, Chernaik

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 3 49983-2 (2). LCP, Norrington – SCHUMANN: Symphonies 3 & 4 **(*)

Symphonies 3 (Scottish); 4 (Italian); Overture, Athalia

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA 82876 76234-2. Bamberg SO, Flor

Symphonies 3 (Scottish); 4 (Italian); Hebrides Overture

🔑 Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 449 743-2. BPO, Karajan

Karajan's 1971 account of the Scottish is justly included among DG's 'Originals', as it is one of his finest recordings. The coupling was originally the Fingal's Cave, a characterful and evocative account, but now the Italian Symphony has been added, recorded two years later. This is also played very beautifully and brilliantly but, good though the performance is, it does not quite match that of the Scottish and it is just a shade wanting in spontaneity and sparkle.

As we have often said, Claus Peter Flor is a truly natural Mendelssohnian, and in this coupling of the two favourite symphonies he finds every bit of charm in the composer's delightful scoring, notably so in the lead-back in the first-movement exposition repeat of the Italian, and in the delectable Scherzo of the Scottish, where every detail is remarkably clear – you can even hear the horn arpeggios. He brings an easy warmth throughout, his pacing is nigh on perfect, there is sparkle and energy here, without the music ever being over-driven, the coda is beautifully prepared, then the horns sing out with great richness and dignity leading firmly to the symphony's very satisfying close. The Athalia Overture makes an exciting pendant, but the symphonies are truly memorable.

Abbado's fine DG digital recordings of the Scottish and Italian Symphonies, coupled together from his complete set, make a splendid mid-price bargain. The recording is admirably fresh and bright – atmospheric, too – and the ambience, if not absolutely sharply defined, is very attractive. Both first-movement exposition repeats are included.

Lubbock's coupling of the Scottish and Italian Symphonies makes an outstanding super-bargain reissue, offering performances of delightful lightness and point, warmly and cleanly recorded. The string section may be of chamber size but, amplified by a warm acoustic, the result sparkles, with rhythms lifted exhilaratingly. The slow movements are both on the slow side but flow easily with no suspicion of sentimentality, while the Saltarello finale of the Fourth, with the flute part delectably pointed, comes close to Mendelssohnian fairy music.

David Chernaik, gives performances of these two symphonies which in their vitality and freshness are second to none. Although the recording is live, the audience is notably quiet and shows its presence only by clapping perfunctorily at the end of each work, a distraction which could and should have been edited out. The London-based Apollo Chamber Orchestra, on its toes throughout, is exactly the right size for these two symphonies, and the recording (in St John's, Smith Square) has been beautifully balanced. Chernaik includes the essential exposition repeats in both symphonies.

When it appeared in 1990, Norrington's was the first CD to offer both the Scottish and Italian Symphonies on period instruments. As in the Schumann coupling, Norrington opts for unexaggerated speeds in the outer movements, relatively brisk ones for the middle movements. The results are similarly exhilarating, particularly the clipped and bouncy account of the first movement of the Italian. The Scottish Symphony is far lighter than usual, with no hint of excessive sweetness. The Scherzo has rarely sounded happier, and the finale closes in a fast galop for the 6/8 coda, with the horns whooping gloriously. Good, warm recording, only occasionally masking detail in tuttis.

(i) Symphonies 3 (Scottish); 4 (Italian); 5 (Reformation); (ii) Overtures: Athalie; Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; Son and Stranger (Die Heimkehr und gluckliche Fahrt); Ruy Blas

🔑 (BB) * EMI Gemini (ADD) 381788-2 (2). New Philh. O, (i) Muti; (ii) Atzmon

In his performances of the three key symphonies Muti emerges as a natural interpreter of this composer. He gives a smiling performance of the Scottish Symphony, with delicate rhythmic pointing, but one which with its wide dynamic range gives Mendelssohn his due weight. The glowing, exhilarating performance of the Italian Symphony, with well-chosen tempi – not rushed in the neatly articulated first movement – is also among the finest accounts available. If his relatively fast view of the third movement (marked con moto) allows less shaping, he takes a strikingly effective view of the finale, underlining a diabolic quality in the tarantella (Saltarello) of legend rather than giving the movement wit. Then to cap his triptych, Muti gives one of the most commanding accounts of the Reformation Symphony in the catalogue, again given the composer due weight in the outer movements, but finding an elegantly light touch for the Scherzo, and an expansive dignity for the apotheosis of the great chorale in the finale. Throughout the 1970s recordings are rich and warm. The set is completed with Moshe Atzmon's outstanding collection of Overtures, including two favourites and a pair of relatively rare offerings, all beautifully played and recorded.

Symphony 4 (Italian)

🔑 (M) * Cala CACD 0531. Nat. PO, Stokowski – BRAHMS: Symphony 2 ****

() Testament mono SBT 1173. Philh. O, Cantelli – BRAHMS: Symphony 3 ()

(BB) (*) EMI Encore 5 09022-2. BPO, Tennstedt – SCHUBERT: Symphony 9 (Great) ***

Like the coupled Brahms, this was one of the last recordings Stokowski made, with a first-class orchestra of London's top musicians. The result is a fizzingly brilliant acount of the Italian Symphony, exhilarating, yet with never any sense of the music being rushed. Stokowski observes the all-important first-movement exposition repeat, and the elegant Andante and the colourful Minuet, with delightful playing from the horns in the Trio, show him at his most beguiling. The new transfer of the 1978 recording is splendidly done.

Cantelli recorded Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony twice with the Philharmonia and this 1951 version on Testament is even finer than the later version, a degree more biting and urgent in the first movement with more light and shade, more spontaneously expressive in the middle movements, and clearer and lighter in the Presto finale. In first-rate mono sound it makes a very welcome coupling for Cantelli's glowing account of the Brahms.

Tennstedt's account of the Italian is vividly articulated and obviously felt. He is not quite as spontaneous as Stokowski, though the quality of the Berliners' playing is very fine. The early digital recording has admirable body and clarity to commend it, and at Encore price this version is well worth considering for its outstanding Schubert coupling.

Symphonies 4 (Italian; original & revised versions); 5 (Reformation)

 DG 459 156-2. VPO, Gardiner

In both versions of the Italian and in the live recording of the Reformation – with all Victorian cobwebs blown away – John Eliot Gardiner brings out both the transparency and the urgency of Mendelssohn's inspiration, generally preferring fast but never breathless speeds. The coup is that the revised versions of the last three movements of the Italian have never been recorded before. The composer made the revisions in the year following the London première. Surprisingly for so discriminating a composer, he undermined the exuberant inspiration of the original, smoothing over melodic lines (as in the Pilgrim's March) and extending linking passages. Even so, a fascinating insight into the creative process and the danger of second thoughts on what was originally white-hot inspiration.

Symphony 5 (Reformation)

(M)  DG (ADD) 449 720-2. BPO, Maazel – FRANCK: Symphony in D min. ***

The Reformation Symphony springs grippingly to life in Maazel's hands. The Berlin Philharmonic brass make an immediate impact in the commanding introduction and the orchestral playing throughout continues on this level of high tension. The finale is splendidly vigorous, the chorale, Ein' feste Burg is unser Gott, ringing out resplendently. Maazel's interpretation was aptly chosen for reissue in DG's series of 'Originals', and the Franck coupling is hardly less impressive. The recording is spacious and has been vividly enhanced by the DG CD transfer.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonatas 1 in B flat, Op. 45; 2 in D, Op. 58

(B)  EMI (ADD) 5 74333-2 (2). Tortelier, De la Pau – CHOPIN; FAURÉ; RACHMANINOV: Cello Sonatas ***

Cello Sonatas 1–2; Assai tranquillo; Songs without Words, Op. 109; Frühlingslied, Op. 19a/1 (arr. Piatti); Jägerlied Op. 19a/3; Venetian Gondola Song, Op. 19a/6 (arr. Piatti); Variations concertantes

 Avie AV 2140. Meneses, Wyss

Cello Sonatas 1–2; Assai Tranquillo; Song without Words, Op. 109; Variations concertantes, Op. 17

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55064. Lester, Tomes

Cello Sonatas 1–2; Song without Words, Op. 109; Variations concertantes, Op. 17

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550655 (without Assai tranquillo). Kliegel, Merscher

It was an excellent idea for Antonio Meneses, cellist of the Beaux Arts Trio since 1998, with his regular chamber-music partner, the pianist Gerard Wyss, to offer the collected cello music of Mendelssohn. The Sonatas are arguably the greatest works in the genre written between those of Beethoven and Brahms, notably 2 with its skipping compound time in the first movement, exhilaratingly done in this performance at brilliant high speed. The clarity of articulation in the virtuoso piano part is astonishing. The Variations Concertantes, the other substantial piece Mendelssohn wrote specifically for cello and piano, is straightforward in its use of variation form, and the Opus 109 Song without Words, the only one not designed for piano solo, is fresh and vigorous, and the Piatti transcriptions are strong in their adaptation for the medium. The playing of both cello and piano is immaculate, with a clean balance between the instruments, nicely separated.

Susan Tomes, the inspired pianist of the group Domus, and her cellist colleague, Richard Lester, give performances full of flair on this ideally compiled disc of Mendelssohn's collected works for cello and piano, brimming with charming ideas. As well as the works with opus number they include a delightful fragment, Assai tranquillo, never previously recorded.

Naxos's star cellist, Maria Kliegel, together with Kristine Merscher also give enjoyably fresh and spontaneous accounts of the two Sonatas, and they certainly charm the ear with the Variations concertantes. Their naturally recorded Naxos disc is every bit as enjoyable as the Helios collection, except, of course, they omit the Assai tranquillo.

Paul Tortelier is wholly in sympathy with these two sonatas, and even if he is partnered less expertly by his daughter Maria de la Pau this is still a thoroughly worthwhile collection. Good recording.

Cello Sonata 2 in D, Op. 58

Ⓝ  Testament SBT 1419. Piatigorsky, Pennario (with CHOPIN: Sonata in G min., Op. 65) – STRAUSS: Cello Sonata ***

Gregor Piatigorsky was the greatest cellist of his generation. The first movement of the D major Sonata has something of the atmosphere of the Italian Symphony, though it is the middle movements that offer Mendelssohn at his best. The playing is of the highest quality. In the Chopin coupling the pianist is Firkušny and, leaving aside the Rostropovich–Argerich set on DG, this has an unsurpassed eloquence.

Octet in E flat, Op. 20

🔑 Ⓜ  Wigmore Hall Live WHLive 001. Nash Ens. (with BEETHOVEN: Clarinet Trio in B flat, Op. 11 ***)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55043. Divertimenti – BARGIEL: Octet ***

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 50864-2 (2). Melos Ens. of L. – BEETHOVEN: Octet & Septet; SCHUBERT: Octet ***

The Nash performance offers the most vivid and warmhearted playing, and all the live communication that one expects from music-making in this ideal-sized venue for chamber and instrumental music. The delicate Scherzo truly evokes the 'swirling mists' and 'sighing breezes' that Mendelssohn pictured in his imagination. The recording's producer, Andrew Keener placed his microphones fairly close, and the effect is to rob the sound of a good deal of its natural hall ambience in order to give the group a clearer projection.

Divertimenti give a very natural and unforced account of the celebrated Octet which, though it may not be the most distinguished in the catalogue, still gives great pleasure. Excellent recorded sound.

The EMI Melos recording dates from the late 1960s, but it has a rather hard, bright edge on the leader's tone, immediately noticeable in the first movement. The stereo is remarkably clear and detailed, without loss of warmth. The finale is bright and gains from the clear recording, but the edge on the sound remains a drawback.

Octet in E flat, Op. 20; String Quintets 1 in A, Op. 18; 2 in B flat, Op. 87; String Quartet 2 in A min., Op. 13

🔑 Ⓜ  Virgin 2x1 5 61809-2 (2). Hausmusik

A highly desirable bargain set. The Octet and String Quintet 1 were recorded in the Concert Hall of York University in 1989, and the recording, balanced by Mike Hatch, is outstanding, clear and transparent, with an attractively warm ambience giving extra weight to the lower lines. The period-instrument performance of the Octet, with Monica Huggett leading the violins and Anthony Pleeth the cellos, is most refreshing, as is the account of the Second String Quintet, another miraculous masterpiece of Mendelssohn's boyhood. The coupling of the Second Quartet and Second Quintet was made four years later in an ecclesiastical acoustic, and the balance engineer, Mike Clements, had to put his microphones closer to the players. Playing is alert and, above all, these players communicate delight in all this music, and their account of the Octet is second to none.

Piano Quartet 1 in C min., Op. 1; Piano Sextet in D, Op. 110

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550966. Bartholdy Piano Qt (augmented)

Piano Quartets 2 in F min., Op. 2; 3 in B min., Op. 3

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550967. Bartholdy Piano Qt

The Bartholdy Quartet have an excellent pianist in Pier Narciso Masi, and his mercurial style is just right for these early works. The string players are always fluent and show a light-hearted vivacity in Mendelssohn's scherzos (especially in the very winning Allegro molto of 3) and finales, and they play the simple slow movements gracefully. The Piano Sextet has an engaging immediacy and the piano well caught.

Piano Trio 1 in D min., Op. 49

🔑  Warner 2564 61492-2. Beaux Arts Trio – DVOŘÁK: Piano Trio 4 (Dumky)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110185. Thibaud, Casals, Cortot – SCHUMANN: Piano Trio 1 ()

When the Beaux Arts Trio made their début on LP, some fifty years ago, it was with this coupling and, although the personnel has changed, the youthfulness and grace of the playing has not. Menahem Pressler is every bit as mercurial and fleet-of-finger as he was in the mid-1950s. The new recording is, of course, far more realistic and wide-ranging, balanced and is a very happy tribute to this wonderful ensemble.

The partnership of Jacques Thibaud, Pablo Casals and Alfred Cortot was perhaps the most celebrated of its kind – and certainly the most famous pre-war trio. They are technically immaculate, supremely lyrical, and their apparent spontaneity of feeling is born of firm musical discipline. Ward Marston's transfer gives this exalted performance, with its miraculously characterized Scherzo, a new lease of life.

Piano Trios 1 in D min., Op. 49; 2 in C min., Op. 66

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67485. Florestan Trio

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555063. Gould Piano Trio

Dazzling playing from this ensemble puts the Florestan at the very top of the list in this repertoire. The freshness of response and the virtuosity of the pianist Susan Tomes make this pretty irresistible. Excellent recorded sound, too.

The young players of the Gould Trio give performances as fine as any on disc. Not just the violinist, Lucy Gould, but the cellist, Martin Storey, and above all the pianist, Benjamin Frith, prove to be inspired recording artists, offering passage-work of sparkling evenness and clarity. At Naxos price an outstanding bargain.

String Quartets: in E flat; 1–6; 4 Pieces, Op. 81

Ⓜ  Hyp. CDS 44051/3. Coull Qt

String Quartets 1–6; 4 Pieces, Op. 81

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca Trio 473 255-2 (3). Ysaÿe Quartet

Ⓑ  Arte Nova 82876 64009-2 (3). Henschel Qt

The fine Decca set from the Ysaÿe Quartet in its new Trio box format becomes a marginal first choice for the Quartets alone, though the three Naxos discs (below) remain a highly recommendable alternative and they include more extra items (see below). In essence these Decca performances are warm, urbane and cultured, as befits this civilized and endearing music, and the recording is eminently satisfactory, with fine presence set within a warm acoustic.

The three Henschel siblings also rank with the very finest, so that, for instance, the Adagio and Intermezzo of Op. 13 have an endearing simplicity, and the Adagio of Op. 44/3 has a touching depth of feeling, readily contrasting with the dancing Scherzo and bravura virtuosity of the finale. The third disc pairs the remaining Op. 44 Quartets, adding the Four Movements of Op. 81, played with similar perception. Decent sound and handsome packaging too.

The Coull survey is also eminently satisfactory and includes the early (1823) Quartet in E flat, the playing alive and spontaneous, well paced and musically penetrating. The quietly intense playing in slow movements shows the group's affinity with this repertoire. The recording is realistic and well balanced.

String Quartets: in E flat; 1 in E flat, Op. 12; 4 in E min., Op. 44/2 (Naxos 8.550862)

String Quartets 2 in A min., Op. 13; 5 in E flat, Op. 44/3; Scherzo in A min., Op. 81/2; Theme & Variations in E, Op. 81/1 (Naxos 8.550863)

String Quartets 3 in D, Op. 44/1; 6 in F min., Op. 80; Capriccio in E min., Op. 81/3; Fugue in E flat, Op. 81/4 (Naxos 8.550861)

🔑 (BB) * Aurora Qt

At Naxos price, the new Aurora set of Mendelssohn's complete music for string quartet is a genuine bargain. The performances have a natural Mendelssohnian charm and elegance, but their strength and passion acknowledge the fact that the young composer in his teens wrote them under the influence of the Beethoven quartets. Indeed, the account of the F minor work, composed after his sister Fanny's death, is perhaps the highlight of the set. The recording is first class.

String Quartets 1 in E flat, Op. 12; 2 in A min., Op. 13 (MDG 307 1055-2)

String Quartets 3–4; Capriccio (1843); Fugue (1827) (MDG 307 1168-2)

String Quartets 5 in E flat, Op. 44/3; 6 in F min., Op. 80; Scherzo & Theme and Variations, Op. 81 (MDG 307 1056-2)

* Leipzig Qt

String Quartet in E flat; Octet, Op. 20.

(*) MDG 307 105-2. (Augmented) Leipzig Qt

The excellent Leipzig Quartet, with their warm, richly blended tone and natural finesse, give superbly polished accounts of these delightful works. Their lightness of touch and elegance are balanced by great (but not exaggerated) depth of feeling. They also have a naturalness and warmth that is most satisfying. Their performances serve as a reminder that this is great music which is all too often taken for granted by critics. Not surprisingly, the Leipzig players also give a beautifully turned and graceful account of the remarkable early Quartet in E flat without opus number, but when they are joined by four undoubtedly excellent colleagues for the Octet, the effect is less refined, not helped by a recording which tends to emphasize both treble and bass at the expense of a detailed overall sound-picture. The central movements are the most successful, with the Scherzo fleet and delicate and the Andante appealingly phrased.

String Quartets 1 in E flat, Op. 12; 4 in E min., Op. 44/2; 6 in F min., Op. 80

🔑 * Naxos 8.570001. New Zealand Qt

The New Zealand Quartet's performances are very compelling indeed, distinctly looking forward to Beethoven in their urgency and strength. However, they don't miss the charm of the First Quartet (especially the engagingly played Canzonetta), although by no means do they treat it as an immature work. They are enormously arresting in the F minor Quartet. The recording is state-of-the-art. We hope this is to be the first of a complete survey; if so, it will be hard to beat.

String Quartets 1–6; 4 Pieces, Op. 81; (with CD-ROM: Quartet in E flat (1823); Octet for Strings in E flat, Op. 20 and DVD documentary: Recording the Octet)

(*) DG 477 5370 (4). Emerson Qt

The Emerson Quartet are flawless in their unanimity of ensemble and tonal finesse. Indeed, in terms of technical prowess and sheer polish, all these Mendelssohn performances could hardly be bettered, and the DG recording is bright and well focused. If there is any reservation, it is a certain want of period sensibility. The playing is virtuosic – Manhattan rather than Weimar. The performances have the public profile of modern concert-giving and convey little sense of intimacy and too little sense of grace. But, of course, they are expert and masterly.

String Quintets 1 in A, Op. 18; 2 in B flat, Op. 87

SACD BIS-SACD 1254. Mendelssohn Qt with R. Mann

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570488. Fine Arts Qt, Danilo Rossi

Ⓝ  CPO 777 389-2. Augmented Mannheim Qt

Anyone wanting modern-instrument recordings of two of Mendelssohn's finest chamber works could not better this BIS-SACD. The performances are full of sparkle and vitality: the outer movements have great spirit and energy while the finales with their brilliant contrapuntal writing are played with thrilling virtuosity, and the Scherzo of Op. 87 is like quicksilver. Yet the Intermezzo of the same work is touchingly simple in its natural warmth. On a DVD/SACD player there is added fullness and resonance in the bass, at the same time producing a very slightly less transparent blend of timbre.

The performances by the Mannheim Quartet are of fine quality, cultured, full of character and presence. But they are upstaged by the augmented Fine Arts Quartet on Naxos, who have the advantage of economy and strike a splendid balance between vitality and elegance, The Intermezzo of the A major Quartet is engagingly played, the Scherzo is crisp and brilliant, and the Adagio of the B flat Quartet is most warmly and stylishly played, and both finales sparkle. The recording is excellent.

Violin Sonatas: in F (1820); in F min., Op. 4 (1823); in F (1838); Allegro in C; Andante in D min.; Fugues: in C min.; in D min.; Movement in G min.

(BB)  Naxos 8.554725. Nomos Duo

Two of these Sonatas date from Mendelssohn's early years, but are attractively crafted. The mature work is notable for its brilliant vivace finale in which the Nomos Duo (Nicholas Milton and Nina-Margret Grimsdöttir) really let rip. Some may feel that a little more poise here would have been welcome, but that is the only reservation. They are a fine team and make a good case for the earliest work (more of a Sonatina), especially the closing moto perpetuo Presto, which is neatly paced. The shorter pieces come from a book of exercises but are rather pleasing miniatures. Excellent recording in a friendly acoustic.

PIANO MUSIC

Capriccio in F sharp min., Op. 5; 7 Characteristic Pieces, Op. 7; Fantasia (Sonata écossaise) in F sharp min., Op. 28; Prelude & Fugue in E min.; Sonata Movement in B flat

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8. 553541. Frith

This collection gives a very different idea of Mendelssohn's piano-writing from that in the Songs without Words. The Characteristic Pieces present fascinating evidence of the influence of Bach on the young composer, with some impressive contrapuntal writing in fugues both brilliant and thoughtful. Also some echoes of Scarlatti. The three-movement Fantasia and the Capriccio, as well, inspire Benjamin Frith to sparkling playing, vividly recorded.

Preludes & Fugues 1-6, Op. 35; 3 Caprices, Op. 33; Perpetuum mobile in C, Op. 33

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550939. Frith

Benjamin Frith offers a highly imaginative set of the Op. 35 Preludes and Fugues, full of diversity, from the flamboyant opening Prelude in E minor to the expansive Prelude 6 in B flat. The three Caprices are equally varied in mood and colour and are most sensitively presented. The Perpetuum mobile makes a scintillating encore. Acceptably full if not remarkable piano-sound.

Scherzo from A Midsummer Night's Dream, Op. 61 (trans. Rachmaninov)

* Hyp. CDA 66009. Shelley – RACHMANINOV: Variations, etc. ****

Howard Shelley, with fabulously clear articulation and delectably sprung rhythms, gives a performance of which Rachmaninov himself would not have been ashamed.

Piano Sonatas: in E, Op. 6; in G min., Op. 105; in B flat, Op. 106; Rondo capriccioso, Op. 14

(BB)  HM HMX 395117. Chiu

Frederic Chiu is a delightful Mendelssohnian and he plays these three early Piano Sonatas with a winning mixture of brilliance and tranquillity, and the more familiar Rondo capriccioso sparkles with wit. The recording is too close and a bit hard, but one can accept this at budget price when the playing is as remarkable as the control of colour.

Piano Sonata in G min., Op. 105; Capriccio in E, Op. 118; Etude in F min.; Fantasia on 'The Last Rose of Summer', Op. 15; 2 Pieces: Andante cantabile; Presto agitato; Scherzo a capriccio in F sharp min.; Variations in B flat, Op. 83

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553358. Frith

The G minor Sonata, Op. 105, is distinctly Haydnesque, and there is perhaps more charm than individuality. Although the Fantasia on 'The Last Rose of Summer' is pretty thin stuff, in such imaginative fingers, it sounds delightful and marvellously fresh. Naxos provide quite excellent recording, and the series so far is touched with distinction.

Piano Sonata in B flat, Op. 106; Albumblatt, Op. 117; Andante cantabile e presto agitato in B; 3 Fantasies et Caprices, Op. 16; Rondo capriccioso in E, Op. 14; Variations in E flat, Op. 82

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553186. Frith

The B flat Sonata has been called 'a comfortable and domestic' version of Beethoven's Hammerklavier. However, Benjamin Frith is so persuasive that he dispels this impression. His playing is nothing less than a delight, and in the celebrated Rondo capriccioso and the more conventional Variations in E flat of 1841 he is as light of touch as one could possibly wish.

Songs without Words, Books 1–8 (complete); Albumblatt, Op. 117; Gondellied; Kinderstücke, Op. 72; 2 Klavierstücke

🔑 (B) * DG Double (ADD) 453 061-2 (2). Barenboim

This 1974 set of Mendelssohn's complete Songs without Words, which Barenboim plays with such affectionate finesse, has dominated the catalogue for nearly two decades. The sound is first class. At DG Double price, this sweeps the board in this repertoire.

Songs without Words, Opp. 19/1, 3, 5; 30/2, 4, 6; 38/2, 3, 6; 53/4; 62/2; 67/1–2, 4; 103/5

🔑 ❀  Sony SK 66511. Perahia – BACH/BUSONI: Chorales; LISZT: Concert Paraphrases of Schubert Lieder *** ❀

As his earlier records have so amply demonstrated, Murray Perahia has a quite unique feeling for Mendelssohn. He invests these pieces with a depth of poetic feeling that is quite special.

VOCAL MUSIC

Choral Music: 6 Anthems for different times of the year; Ave Maria; Ehre sei Gott in der Höh; Heilig, heilig is Gott, der Herr Zebaoth; Hör mein Bitten; Kyrie eleison; Mein Gott, warum hast du?; Mitten wir im Leben sind; Richte mich Gott; Verleih' uns Freiden; Warum toben die Heiden?

🔑 (BB) * Hyp. Helios CDH 55268. Dawson, Covey-Crump, Scott, Corydon Singers, ECO, Best

We missed this record on its original, premium-priced issue, but the reviewer in the American Record Guide did not, declaring it 'One of the most enriching listening experiences I have had for some time.' In short, the singing here is glorious, and so is the music. One of the surprises is the three-section Ave Maria, its radiant outer sections framing an exultant, contrapuntal middle section, which here springs thrillingly into life after the serenity of the opening. But every number shows Mendelssohn's inspiration at its most endearing, ending with a ravishing performance of the justly famous Hör mein Bitten ('Hear my Prayer') in which Ann Dawson soars heavenwards (translated here as 'Ah could I fly away with the dove'). Truly splendid singing throughout from the Corydon Singers and their soloists, and fine accompaniments from the ECO with Matthew Best directing the whole programme with exactly the right touch. Excellent recording, as one would expect from this source, and full texts and translations provided.

(i) Ave Maria; Beati mortui; Die deutsche Liturgie; Hear my Prayer; 100th Psalm (Jauchzet dem Herrn, alle Welt); (i; ii) Laudate pueri; Magnificat (My Soul doth Magnify the Lord); 3 Psalms (2, 22 & 43), Op. 78; 6 Sprüche (Maxims for the Church Year), Op. 79

* Chan. 10363. Trinity College, Cambridge, Ch., Marlow; with (i) Bennett; (ii) Cheng, Wilkinson

Although Hear my Prayer is justly top favourite (with 'O for the wings of a dove' sung by Rachel Bennett with glorious confidence, especially the gentle coda), there is much other truly memorable choral music here, not least the beautiful motet, Laudate pueri, for female choir, contrasted with a celestial trio of soloists. The three sections of the German Liturgy for a cappella double choir are hardly less memorable, featuring a quartet of soloists. Most ambitious of all is the a cappella English Magnificat, opening quite jauntily and, after changing mood flexibly, the penultimate section moves into a fugato, before the majestic closing Amen. Richard Marlow directs this Mendelssohnian choral galaxy with sure understanding, not a hint of sentimentality and superb control. Needless to say, the Chandos recording is first class, and so is the documentation, with full texts and translations.

6 Choruses, Op. 88; 4 Choruses, Op. 100; Der Erste Frühlingstag; Im Freinen zu singen; In Grünen

(N)  HM HMC 90 1992. Berlin RIAS Chamber Ch., Rademann

Mendelssohn was particularly adept at writing a cappella choral music, as this collection shows admirably, centring on pastoral inspirations and with unfailingly attractive invention for every item. They are superbly sung and excellently recorded and Mendelssohnians should not miss this anthology.

Elijah (oratorio), Op. 70

🔑  Chan. 8774/5. White, Plowright, Finnie, A. Davies, L. Symphony Ch., LSO, Hickox

(BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 5 86257-2 (2). G. Jones, J. Baker, Gedda, Fischer-Dieskau, Woolf, Wandsworth School Boys' Ch., New Philh. Ch. & O, Frühbeck de Burgos

(BB)  EMI Gemini 3 50884-2 (2). Schmidt, Rost, Kallisch, Van der Walt, Dietzel, Düsseldorf State Musikvereins Ch., Cologne Gürzenich O, Conlon

(*) Decca 455 688-2 (2). Terfel, Fleming, Bardon, Mark Ainsley, Edinburgh Festival Ch., OAE, Daniel

Richard Hickox with the London Symphony Chorus and the LSO secures a performance that both pays tribute to the English choral tradition in this work and presents it dramatically as a kind of religious opera. Willard White may not be ideally steady in his delivery, sometimes attacking notes from below, but he sings consistently with fervour. Rosalind Plowright and Arthur Davies combine purity of tone with operatic expressiveness, and Linda Finnie, while not matching the example of Dame Janet Baker in the classic EMI recording, sings with comparable dedication and directness in the solo, O rest in the Lord. The chorus fearlessly underlines the high contrasts of dynamic demanded in the score. The Chandos recording, full and immediate yet atmospheric too, enhances the drama.

Frühbeck de Burgos proves an excellent Mendelssohnian. The choice of Fischer-Dieskau as the prophet is more controversial. His pointing of English words is not always idiomatic, but his sense of drama is infallible and goes well with this Mendelssohnian new look. Gwyneth Jones and Nicolai Gedda similarly provide mixed enjoyment, but the splendid work of the chorus and, above all, the gorgeous singing of Dame Janet Baker make this a memorable and enjoyable set, very well recorded (in the late 1960s) and spaciously and realistically transferred to CD. A real bargain.

James Conlon's Elijah comes directly into competition with the Frühbeck de Burgos New Philharmonia set, also reissued on EMI's budget Gemini label. That has rather more famous soloists, but not necessarily more successful ones, except for Dame Janet Baker, whose contribution is unique. Even so, Cornelia Kallisch's O rest in the Lord is beautifully sung, as is Elijah's affecting It is enough O Lord (the excellent Andreas Schmidt). Above all else, Elijah depends on the chorus and, from the opening Help Lord!, the choral singing in Cologne, digitally recorded and superbly present, has tremendous drama and bite, and throughout Conlon's vibrant direction easily matches that of Frühbeck de Burgos. So, unless the presence of Dame Janet is essential, then the newer bargain version wins on points, though first choice at premium price rests with Richard Hickox on Chandos.

The glory of Paul Daniel's Decca set is the fiercely dramatic portrayal of the central character by Bryn Terfel. This Elijah is the very personification of an Old Testament prophet. Renée Fleming sings most beautifully as the principal soprano, strong rather than reflective in Hear ye, Israel. There are no weak links among the others, even if there are no stars either, with Patricia Bardon'sO rest in the Lord* sounding rather matter-of-fact. Many will find it refreshing that with a period orchestra Paul Daniel takes a crisp, direct view of the work, helped by fresh, cleanly focused singing from the Edinburgh Festival Chorus. Yet Daniel is at times too metrical to conceal the squareness of some of the work's weaker passages. Clean, well-separated sound.

Hymn: Hor mein Bitten, Herr (Hymn of Praise); Motets: Ehre sei Gott in der Höhe; Herr, nun lässest du deinen Diener in Frieden fahren; Mein Gott, warum hast du mich verlassen; Mitten wir im Leben sind; Warum toben die Heiden; 6 Sprüche, Op. 79

(BB)  HM (ADD) HMA 1951142. Paris Chapelle Royale, Coll. Voc. de Ghent, Herreweghe; Huys

Herreweghe's motet performances are splendidly fresh and vital, bringing out the composer's acknowledged debt to earlier models. Mitten wir im Leben sind features antiphonal alternation of male and female choirs and uses a chorale previously used by Bach. The part-writing is made admirably clear. Their account (in German) of the famous Hymn of Praise is very dramatic, shedding Anglican sentimental associations, with the excellent soloist, Greta de Reyghere, clear and true in the famous 'Oh for the wings of a dove'. The recording is excellent, cleanly focused within a non-blurring ecclesiastical ambience. The documentation is good, but the German texts and the English translations are not placed side by side. This now comes at budget price.

Infelice; Psalm 47 (As pants the hart), Op. 42

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 5 61469-2 (2). Baker, City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox – BERLIOZ: Les Nuits d'été, etc.; BRAHMS: Alto Rhapsody, etc.; RESPIGHI: La sensitiva ***

The scena, Infelice – a piece that harks back to an earlier tradition – and the Psalm-setting both have the solos prescribed for soprano, but they suit Dame Janet Baker well, here making a welcome foray out of official retirement for a recording. The voice is in superb condition, with the weight of expressiveness as compelling as ever. The Psalm sounds very like an extra item from Elijah.

40 Lieder

Ⓜ (*) EMI (ADD) 3 91990-2 (2). Fischer-Dieskau, Sawallisch – LOEWE: Ballads ***

Though Mendelssohn generally reserved his finest song-like inspirations for the Songs without Words, the lyrical directness of these varied settings of Heine, Ebert, Eichendorff, Lenau, Lichtenstein, Klingmann and others (there are three settings of Frühlingslied and two of Reislied) assures him of a niche of his own among contemporary composers of Lieder. Fischer-Dieskau, recorded at his finest in 1970, conveys the joy of fresh discovery; but in some of the well-known songs, Grüss or Auf Flügeln des Gesanges, he tends to overlay his singing with heavy expressiveness. Lightness should be the keynote, and that happily is wonderfully represented in the superb accompaniments of Sawallisch. Excellent, natural recording. This reissue, as one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century', brings full texts and translations.

Lieder

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55150. M. Price, Johnson

There is a delightfully light touch to the famous 'On Wings of Song' (Auf Flügeln). Frühlingslied ('Spring Song') is equally appealing, and Minnelied soars. The vivid portrayal of a witches' dance (Hexenlied) and Neue Liebe with its 'riding elves in the moonlight' are both very much in the spirit of the Midsummer Night's Dream music, even if the former, with the fiendishly complex piano part so brilliantly played by Graham Johnson, has a slightly sinister air. In between comes the lovely Gruss, a gentle 'Greeting'. In short, this is a particularly rewarding collection, with Margaret Price and her partner Graham Johnson in splendid form and made vividly present by the recording. Even though this is a bargain reissue, full texts and translations are provided, plus excellent notes by Richard Wigmore.

A Midsummer Night's Dream (ballet; complete; choreography by George Balanchine)

🔑 * BBC Opus Arte DVD OA 0810D. Pacific Northwest Ballet, BBC Concert O, Steven Kershaw. Producer: Francia Russell (V/D: Nigel Shepherd)

Balanchine's 1962 ballet was created for the New York City Ballet, and based not only on the inspired score to Shakespeare's play of Mendelssohn's A Midsummer Night's Dream but also on other Mendelssohn scores, including the overtures Athalia, Die schöne Melusine and Son and Stranger, plus two movements of the Ninth of his early symphonies for strings.

This performance was recorded in 1999 at the then newly reopened Sadler's Wells Theatre while the Pacific Northwest Ballet were on tour. It is a fine company with an enviable reputation and some altogether excellent principal dancers: Lisa Apple's Helena and Julie Tobiason's Hermia are particularly fine, and the scene between Titania and Bottom is most affecting. The fairy scenes are imaginatively handled and staged.

Mendelssohn's music is well served by the ever underrated BBC Concert Orchestra, who always excel when given a chance to play repertoire of quality. The camerawork and the quality of colour are very high. An enchanting ninety minutes.

A Midsummer Night's Dream: Overture, Op. 21; Incidental Music, Op. 61 (complete; with melodramas and text)

🔑 * DG 439 897-2. Battle, von Stade, Tanglewood Festival Ch., Boston SO, Ozawa (with excerpts from play spoken by Dame Judi Dench)

A Midsummer Night's Dream: Overture, Op. 21; Incidental Music, Op. 61 (complete)

Ⓑ  CfP 575 142-2. Wiens, Walker, LPO Ch. & O, Litton (with GRIEG: Peer Gynt: excerpts; cond. Pritchard **)

A Midsummer Night's Dream: Overture, Op. 21; Incidental Music, Op. 61 (complete); Overtures: Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage; The Hebrides; Ruy Blas.

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 60864-2. Popp, Lipovšek, Bamberg Ch. & SO, Flor

Ozawa's virtually complete performance presents Mendelssohn's enchanting incidental music – which is most beautifully played throughout by the Boston Symphony Orchestra – complete with the Shakespearean text, which is spoken over the melodramas by Judi Dench. With two excellent soloists and a fine choral contribution, the only omission here is the brief excerpt which is No. 6 in the score; but the fragmentary reprise of the Wedding March, and the two little comic snippets, the Bergomask (Dance of the Clowns) and ironic little Funeral March, intended for the Rude Mechanicals' 'Pyramus and Thisbe' playlet are included. Judi Dench speaks the Shakespeare text in the simplest way, and in her performance Shakespeare's words seem to glow as magically as Mendelssohn's music. The recording is first class, and the balance, with Dench's narration quite intimate but with every word clear, is very well judged indeed.

The RCA disc is Claus Peter Flor's finest record. His account of the incidental music omits the little melodramas, which is a pity, but otherwise this could be a first choice, particularly as the three Overtures are equally recommendable. Recorded in the warmly resonant acoustics of the Dominikanerbau, Bamberg, the orchestra is given glowingly radiant textures; but Flor's stylish yet relaxed control in A Midsummer Night's Dream brings the kind of intimacy one expects from a chamber ensemble. Lucia Popp's vocal contribution is delightful, especially when she blends her voice so naturally with that of Marjana Lipovšek in You spotted snakes.

Andrew Litton also includes the melodramas and, like Previn, he uses them most effectively as links, making them seem an essential part of the structure. He too has very good soloists; in the Overture and Scherzo he displays an engagingly light touch, securing very fine wind and string playing from the LPO. The wide dynamic range of the recording brings an element of drama to offset the fairy music. Both the Nocturne, with a fine horn solo, and the temperamental Intermezzo are good examples of the spontaneity of feeling that permeates this performance throughout and makes this disc another bargain. However, Sir John Pritchard's account of the excerpts from Peer Gynt, although well played, is rather matter-of-fact.

St Paul, Op. 36

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Chan. 10516 (2). Gritton, Rigby, Banks, Coleman-Wright, BBC Nat. Ch. & O of Wales, Hickox

Ⓝ  Carus CARUS 83214 (2). Kiehr, Güra, Volle, Stuttgart Chamber Ch., Deutsch Kammerphilharmonie, Bremen, Bernius

Richard Hickox's version, recorded live in Cardiff with BBC Welsh forces, completely avoids sentimentality, finding a freshness which effectively echoes the Bach Passions in punctuating the story of St Paul with chorales and the occasional 'turba' or crowd chorus. In brushing any Victorian cobwebs away Hickox tends to favour speeds on the fast side, never sounding hurried but, more importantly, never sounding heavy or pompous as other German versions often do. Choral singing is excellent and, among the soloists, Susan Gritton and Jean Rigby are first rate, though the tenor, Barry Banks, is a little strained and Peter Coleman-Wright sounds rather gritty as recorded, though never wobbly. The warmth and clarity of the recording add to the freshness. It is now offered at mid-price with full texts and translations.

The Bremen performance conducted by Frieder Bernius is also enjoyably fresh, both in the choral singing and in the orchestral backing. Among the soloists, Maria Cristina Kiehr stands out for her vocal purity and depth and, with no contralto, she takes over the alto solos, which is the set's one drawback. However, the tenor Werner Güra sings beautifully, and his colleague Michael Volle is also excellent – which gives the Carus set one advantage over the Chandos. The recording is excellent too, but Hickox remains a first choice.

MENOTTI, Gian-Carlo
(1911–2007)

(i) Violin Concerto; Cantatas; (ii) The Death of Orpheus; (iii) Muero porque no muero; (iv) Oh llama de amor viva

 Chan. 9979. (i) Koh; (ii) MacDougall; (iii) Melinek; (iv) Roberts; Spoleto Ch. & O, Hickox

Richard Hickox once more draws from his fine Spoleto team warmly persuasive readings of eclectic works which are powerfully convincing in committed performances like these. The young American violinist, Jennifer Koh, is the excellent soloist in the Concerto. The slow movement, played with hushed dedication, has a tender poignancy, while the vigorous finale with its jaunty main theme predictably ends with virtuoso fireworks.

The two cantatas, using Spanish texts by the mystics St Teresa of Avila and St John of the Cross, offer sensuous music closer to Puccini's opera, Suor Angelica, than to any religious model. The chorus in each dramatically enhances the meditative solos representing each saint. Julia Melinek is the vibrant soloist in the St Teresa cantata, though Stephen Roberts is sadly unsteady in the St John of the Cross setting. The Death of Orpheus, to an English text by Menotti himself, is similarly dramatic. Orpheus's song emerges as a broad diatonic melody, with choral writing of Delian sensuousness. Jamie MacDougall is the expressive soloist, with the chorus fresh and incisive in all three cantatas.

OPERA

Amahl and the Night Visitors (opera; complete)

🔑  That's Entertainment CDTER 1124. Haywood, Dobson, Watson, Painter, Rainbird, ROHCG Ch. & O, Syrus

Recorded under the supervision of the composer himself, this is a fresh and highly dramatic performance, very well sung and marked by atmospheric digital sound of striking realism. Central to the success of the performance is the astonishingly assured and sensitively musical singing of the boy treble, James Rainbird, as Amahl, while Lorna Haywood sings warmly and strongly as the Mother, with a strong trio of Kings.

The Consul (complete)

🔑  Chan. 9706 (2). Bullock, Otley, Kreitzer, Livengood, Austin, Broadbent, 1998 Spoleto Festival O, Hickox

This ripely red-blooded performance, recorded live at the Spoleto Festival in 1998, finds Richard Hickox a passionate interpreter of this early response to the Cold War and the human tragedies involved. Hickox builds the structure masterfully, firmly controlling tension. He is helped by an excellent orchestra and a good cast, led by Susan Bullock in the central role of Magda. Her big outburst against bureaucracy at the end of Act II brings the emotional high point of the whole opera, an overwhelming moment worthy of Puccini. None of the others quite matches Bullock vocally, with some voices rather unsteady. Jacalyn Kreitzer is warmly affecting as the Mother, and Charles Austin sings strongly as the Secret Agent, giving a rounded portrait. Full-toned, vivid recording, with ample detail.

(i) Martin's Lie (complete); (ii) Canti della lontananza: Impossible Lovers; The Letter; Pegasus Asleep; Resignation; The Seventh Glass of Wine; Snowy Morning; The Spectre; (iii) 5 songs: The eternal prisoner; My ghost; The idle gift; The longest wait; The swing

 Chan. 9605. (i) Tees Valley Boys' Ch., N. Sinfonia, Hickox; (ii) Leggate, Martineau; (iii) Howarth, Martineau

Martin's Lie was written as a follow-up to the children's piece for TV, Amahl and the Night Visitors, a sinister medieval story with a moral, fluently told in 45 minutes; warmly involving singing and playing. Judith Howarth and Robin Leggate are the singers in the two brief song-cycles, with Menotti's writing all the richer in the Italian settings.

The Saint of Bleecker Street (opera; complete)

 Chan. 9971(2). Melinek, Richards, Stephen, Bindel, Zeltzer, Farrugia, Howard, Rozynko, Spoleto Festival Ch. & O, Hickox

Overlook the melodramatic plot, even forget the variable casting of solo singers – not Italianate enough with too many wobblers – for this pioneering recording of Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera, The Saint of Bleecker Street, demonstrates that this is one of the composer's most powerful scores, colourful, atmospheric and tuneful, with telling dramatic effects, often involving genuine Italian tunes. Set in New York's Little Italy, it revolves round the dying Annina, a would-be nun with a gift for faith-healing, and her boorish agnostic brother, Michele. For Menotti, a Catholic who lost his faith, the story aims to symbolize the clash between faith and doubt. In this performance, recorded live, the red-blooded feelings involved are passionately brought out by Richard Hickox, with talented young performers from the Festival Choir and Orchestra of Menotti's summer music festival at Spoleto. Full, brilliant sound.

MESSAGER, André (1853–1929)

Les Deux Pigeons

 Australian Decca Eloquence 476 2448. Welsh Nat. Op. O, Bonynge

Messager's charming gypsy ballet was premièred at the Paris Opéra in 1886 on the same bill as Donizetti's La Favorita. But it swiftly established its independence, to remain on the repertoire and be revived (with new choreography by Fredrick Ashton) by the Sadler's Wells Company in 1961. The music is light but cleverly scored, after the manner of Delibes; agreeably tuneful, it does not wear out its welcome. Bonynge secures playing from the Welsh National Opera Orchestra that is consistently graceful and sparkling, and if the sound is vivid and naturally balanced, it is not quite out of Decca's very top drawer.

Véronique (opera; complete)

(BB) (*) EMI (ADD) 5 74073-2 (2). Mesplé, Guiot, Benoit, Dens, Dunand, Pruvost, René Duclos Ch., LOP, Hartemann

Messager's gentle charms are well displayed in his 1898 opera, Véronique. The story of Hélène de Solanges, who works in disguise in a Parisian florist's in the 1840s under the assumed name Véronique, produces plenty of romantic complications, which are all sorted out by the end. There are several numbers that understandably became Edwardian favourites, including the two duets from Act I: the 'Donkey duet' (De ci, de l') and the 'Swing duet' (Poussez, poussez, l'escarpolette). The Act I quartet with the refrain 'Charmant, charmant' is another highlight of the utmost piquancy. The performance here is excellent, Mady Mesplé again showing her supremacy in this repertoire, while the rest of the cast and the conductor understand Messager's idiom perfectly. The 1969 recording has transferred very well to CD, with the voices clear and vivid. But as ever in this bargain operetta series, no texts or translations are provided, which will be a distinct drawback for many collectors.

MESSIAEN, Olivier (1908–92)

(i) L'Ascension; (ii) Couleurs de la cité céleste; Et exspecto resurectionem mortuorum

 Erato (ADD) 2564 60225-2. (i) French R. & TV O, Constant; (ii) Loriod, Strasbourg Instrumental & Percussion Group, Boulez

L'Ascension (an early work from 1933) may be static in feeling but it is highly personal in flavour. The performance from Marius Constant and the French Radio Orchestra is most persuasive, and they are admirably served by the engineers. Et exspecto draws liberally on the composer's beloved birdsong, Les Couleurs de la cité céleste represented the composer's ideal of 'stained-glass music' and 'ends no more than it begins, and turns on itself like a rose-window of blazing and invisible colours'. It sounds very impressive here in demonstrating the extraordinary sonorities the composer draws from piano, wind and percussion, with Boulez ensuring that every detail is clear.

(i) L'Ascension; Et exspecto resurrectionem mortuorum; (ii) Turangalîla Symphony; (iii) Quatuor pour la fin du temps; (iv) (2 Pianos) Visions de l'amen; (Piano) (v) Rondeau; (vi) Chants de terre et de ciel; (vii) Cinq Rechants; (vi) Harawi. Poèmes pour Mi (with (viii) orchestra and with (vi) piano); (ix) La Transfiguration de Notre seigneur Jesus Christ

Ⓑ  Decca 478 0352 (6). (i) LSO, Stokowski; (ii) Thibaudet, Harada, Concg. O, Chailly; (iii) Bell, Collins, Isserlis, Mustonen; (iv) Ogdon, Lucas; (v) Crossley; (vi) Barker, Sherlaw Johnson; (vii) Alldis Ch.; (viii) Palmer, BBC SO, Boulez; (ix) Loriod & instrumental soloists, Westminster Symphony Ch., Washington Nat. SO, Dorati

Decca have decided to issue a pair of centenary boxes, and this is devoted to orchestral and instrumental works. The performances are virtually all noteworthy and (like its companion below) this could make a useful cornerstone of any Messiaen collection.

Des Canyons aux étoiles

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 471 617-2 (2). Muraro, Justafre, Fr. R. PO, Chung

Myung-Whun Chung, who studied with the composer, conducts a warmly expressive, free-flowing reading of Messiaen's tribute to the United States on its bicentenary in 1976. The set offers a striking contrast with the now deleted Sony version under Salonen, which is more severe in its precise registering of Messiaen's evocation of birdsong in each movement. Chung, together with his brilliant soloists, is freer and therefore more evocative in his readings of movements directly inspired by a sequence of venues in the American south-west, mainly the deserts and canyons of Utah and Arizona. In place of weight Jean-Jacques Justafre offers a volatile reading which spans an extraordinary tonal and dynamic range. Like the others, he brilliantly demonstrates that this is music to love and embrace. The DG two-disc package comes at upper mid-price.

(i) Chronochromie; (ii) Eclairs sur l'au-delà; (iii) Et exspecto resurrectionem mortuorum; Les offrandes oubliées; (iv) Turangalîla Symphony; (v) Le merle noir; (vi) Quatuor pour la fin du temps; (vii) Theme & Variations; 2-Piano music: (viii) Visions de l'amen; Piano music: (ix) Cantéyodjayâ; (x) 4 Etudes de rhthme; Préludes; Vingt regards sur l'enfant Jésus. Organ music: (xi) Apparition de l'église éternelle; L'Ascension; Le banquet céleste; Le corps glorieux; Diptyque; Livre d'orgue; Messe de la Pentecôte; La Nativité du Seigneur. Vocal music: (xii) Chants de terre et de ciel; (xiii) Cinq rechants; (xii) Harawi; (xiv) 3 Mélodies; La mort du nombre; (xiii) O sacrum convivium!; 3 Petites Liturgies de la Présence divine; (xii) Poèmes pour Mi

Ⓝ (BB)  EMI Stereo/mono 2 17466-2 (14). (i) BBC SO, Dorati; (ii) BPO, Rattle; (iii) O de Paris, Baudo; (iv) Loriod, Beroff, LSO, Previn; (v) Pahud; (vi) Loriod, Poppen, M. Fischer-Dieskau, Meyer; (vii) Poppen, Loriod; (viii) Rabinovitch, Argerich; (ix) Ogdon; (x) Béroff; (xi) composer; (xii) Command & Petit; (xiii) L. Sinf. Ch. & Voices, L. Sinf., Edwards

This is EMI's budget compilation for the Messiaen centenary. The performances and recordings are of a generally high standard, although the Quatuor pour la fin du temps is not high on the list of recommendations. But the box is well worth its modest cost, if you don't mind limited documentation.

Couleurs de la cité céleste; Hymne pour grand orchestre; (i) 3 Petites Liturgies de la Présence divine

Ⓝ * DG 477 7944. R. France PO, Myung Wha-Chung, with Maîtrise de R. France

This is the first of two outstanding single-CD collections of Messiaen's music especially recorded by DG for the centenary of the composer's birth. (The other is a recital by Pierre-Laurent Aimard – see below.) We already know the extraordinary patina of Couleurs de la cité céleste from the Boulez version, but Myung Wha-Chung's version is if anything even more multi-coloured and atmospheric. The Hymne, with its long serene opening theme on the strings, in the words of Paul le Flem, 'evokes a mysticism where ecstasy and fervour are combined'. The Trois Petites Liturgies are even more ambitious, intended, in the composer's words, 'to bring a kind of organized act of praise into the concert room', dominated by ecstatic singing from the female chorus, but bringing in a repeated chorale on the strings based on the love theme we know in Turangalîla. The scoring includes tuned percussion, the gamelan, ondes martenot and piano and, in the finale, semi-spoken incantations. The work shows the composer at his most imaginative and most haunting, and it is given an inspired performance and superb recording, appropriately in Radio France's Salle Olivier Messiaen.

Turangalîla Symphony

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA (ADD) 82876 59418-2. Leanne Loriod (ondes martenot), Yvonne Loriod (piano), Toronto SO, Ozawa

 Decca 436 626-2. Thibaudet, Harada, Concg. O, Chailly

 Erato 8573 82043-2. Almard, Kim, BPO, Nagano

(i; ii) Turangalîla Symphony; (i; iii; iv; v) Quatuor pour la fin du temps; (i; iv) Theme & Variations

Ⓝ Ⓑ  EMI 2-CD 20686727. (i) Loriod; (ii) Béroff, LSO, Previn; (iii) Meyer; (iv) Poppen; (v) Manuel Fischer-Dieskau

Previn made two recordings of Turangalîla but in his LSO version his vividly direct approach, helped by spectacular recording, has much electricity. He is at his best in the work's more robust moments, for instance the jazzy fifth movement, and he catches the wit at the beginning of the Chant d'amour 2. The idyllic Garden of the Sleep of Love is both serene and poetically sensuous, and the apotheosis of the love theme in the closing pages is both jubilant and life-enhancing. Unfortunately, although the composer was supposed to have been present at the recording, the Quatuor performance is disappointing. This a work that depends on atmosphere and dynamic contrast, and the other recordings listed below do the music much greater justice in this respect. The Theme and Variations are much more successful, but are not as fine as the Chandos version listed below.

Ozawa's performance comes from 1967, but you would never guess that from the brilliantly atmospheric sound, which is just as vivid as some of the newer versions, such as Nagano's Erato version, and has that bit more warmth and atmosphere. Yvonne Loriod's piano is placed too forward, but her contribution is undoubtedly seminal, and the overall balance is otherwise well managed. The performance itself is brilliantly played: it has plenty of electricity, and a warm sensuality too. It was and remains one of Ozawa's best recordings and is now economically reissued on a single CD as part of RCA's 'Classic Collection'.

Chailly's full-priced Decca account may have the advantage of even finer, digital recording, but it costs more; being (just) fitted on to a single full-priced CD; however, it is without Rattle's considerable bonus.

Simon Rattle conducts a winning performance of Turangalîla, not only brilliant and dramatic but atmospheric and convincing. The recording is warm and richly coordinated, while losing nothing in detail. Peter Donohoe and Tristan Murail play with comparable warmth and flair. The performance of the Quatuor pour la fin du temps, led by Erich Gruenberg and with Gervase de Peyer the inspirational solo clarinettist, is in the very highest class, the players meeting every demand the composer makes on them, and the fine, clear, Abbey Road recording gives the group striking presence while affording the proper background ambience. The bonus, Le Merle noir, exploits the composer's love of birdsong and is splendidly played and recorded here.

Nagano seems determined to emphasize all the bizarre qualities of the score, including glissando whoops among the brilliant percussive effects. The Joie du sang des étoiles is jazzily, joyously extrovert, and this high level of tension (and noise) persists throughout. The Final is almost overwhelming in its energetic flamboyance and its culmination certainly has the sense of absolute finality. But although the sensuous aspects of the score are fully realized in the Jardin du sommeil d'amour, the contrasting element of repose seldom surfaces, and such a consistent clamour for most of the 73 minutes needs a fair degree of stamina. The recording itself has remarkable range and vividness.

Quatuor pour la fin du temps

🔑 * DG 469 052-2. Shaham, Meyer, Jian Wang, Chung

 Call. CAL 9898. Sajot, Naganuma, Broutin, Gastaldi

 Delos D/CD 3043. Chamber Music Northwest – BARTÓK: Contrasts ***

(i) Quatuor pour la fin du temps; (ii) Chronochromie

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 2 12688-2. (i) Gruenberg, de Peyer, Pleeth, Béroff; (ii) BBC SO, Dorati

Quatuor pour la fin du temps; Fantaisie for Violin & Piano; Piece for Piano Quintet; Morceau de lecture à vue

Ⓝ  Signum SIGCD 126. Soloists of the Philh. O

(i; ii) Quatuor pour la fin du temps; (i) Les offrandes oubliées; (i; ii) Theme and Variations

Ⓝ  Chan. 10480. (i) Plane; (ii) Gould Piano Trio

Messiaen's visionary and often inspired piece was composed during his days in a Silesian prison camp. Among his fellow-prisoners were a violinist, a clarinettist and a cellist, who, with the composer at the piano, made its creation possible. The newest DG account must now take pride of place among its rivals. It is a performance of the highest quality, with a level of concentration and intensity that grips the listener from first to last, and is superbly recorded. There are notes by both Messiaen and the cellist Etienne Pasquier, who was interned with Messiaen and took part in the première at the German prisoner-of-war camp in January 1941.

The EMI account, now reissued at mid-price as one of the 'Great Recordings of the Century', is led by Erich Gruenberg and, with Gervase de Peyer the inspirational clarinettist, is also in the very highest class, the players meeting every demand the composer makes upon them; and the fine, clear, Abbey Road recording gives the group striking presence, while affording the proper background ambience. Dorati's fine performance of Chronochromie has been added as an apt bonus. The work has its inspiration in nature, the composer's long established preoccupation with birdsong and the culminating Epode, readily understandable as a climactic representation of the birds' dawn chorus. The immensely vivid recording is worthy of the music.

Both Signum and Chandos have also issued outstanding new recordings of the Quatuor, each full of intensity and sensitively meeting the music's atmospheric needs and contrasts. In each case the clarinettist (Barnaby Robson on Signum, Robert Plane on Chandos), plays very sensitively, and with both CDs there are generous bonuses. The Theme and Variations and Fantaisie (each for violin and piano) were written in consecutive years (1931 and 1932). They are immature but rewarding short works and, while the Variations are also characteristically inventive, we are inclined to like the Fantaisie better. On Chandos Les offrandes oubliées is heard in an effective piano transcription by the composer; on Signum, Le merle noir is one of the most catchy of Messiaen's bird simulations, while the Piece for Piano Quartet and the tiny Morceau are attractive rare miniatures.

Like the DG version, which it readily matches, the Calliope performance is inspirational. The CD plays for only just over 43 minutes, which makes it very expensive; but many will think it worth it. Jean-Louis Sajot's clarinet tone is not soft-centred, but he plays with great character, and Yuriko Naganuma's violin solos are very beautiful, with the work closing in Elysian serenity. It is these two players who dominate the ensemble, without dwarfing their fine colleagues. The recording is very immediate and real.

David Shifrin, like his colleagues, fully captures the work's sensuous mysticism, while the solos of Warren Lash (cello) and Williams Doppmann have a wistful, improvisatory quality: both Louange à l'éternité de Jésus and the closing Louange à l'immortalité de Jésus are played very beautifully. The Delos recording is naturally balanced and very realistic, while the ambience is suitably evocative.

(i) Oiseaux exotiques (for piano and orchestra). Piano music: (ii) Cantéyodjayâ; Catalogue d'oiseaux (complete); 4 Etudes de rhythme; (iii) Vingt regards sur l'enfant Jésus. Organ music: (iv) Apparition de l'église éternelle; L'Ascension; Le banquet céleste; Les corps glorieux; Diptyque; Messe de la Pentocôte; (v) La Nativité du Seigneur; (iv) Verset pour la fête de la dédicace; (v) (Vocal) O sacrum convivium!

Ⓝ Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 478 0353 (7). (i) Thibaudet, Concg. O, Chailly; (ii) Sherlaw Johnson; (iii) Ogdon; (iv) Trotter; (v) Preston; King's College, Cambridge, Ch., Guest

This is Decca's other back-catalogue collection reissued for the Messiaen centennial, including the rare Oiseaux exotiques for piano and orchestra with Thibaudet and Chailly making a fine partnership. Robert Sherlaw Johnson contributes a good deal of the piano music, including the Cantéyodjayâ with its serial influences, but also with a distinct association with Debussy. The opening of the work immediately introduces a striking idea, which is used as a kind of refrain against a collage of other ideas. The basic raw material of the Catalogue d'oiseaux is birdsong, as heard and remembered by the composer in his homeland, but what we hear is far removed from an imitative set of bird calls. Sherlaw Johnson's playing is poetic in feeling, and with a natural understanding of the music's atmosphere. The (originally Argo) recording is very fine. John Ogdon is allotted the Vingt regards sur l'enfant Jésus and while he is thoughtful and unfailingly conscientious, other versions have more spontaneity and insight. Simon Preston, however, is a convinced advocate of La Nativité du Seigneur and conveys its hypnotic power most successfully, and the (again Argo) recording reproduces with great fidelity. Thomas Trotter, too, is thoroughly at home in this repertoire and is an organ virtuoso of the highest order, while the King's performance of O sacrum convivium! completes a remarkably wide-ranging selection.

PIANO MUSIC

Complete piano music

Disc 1: Catalogue d'oiseaux, Books 1–3 (RRC 1108)

Disc 2: Catalogue d'oiseaux, Books 4–6 (RRC 1109)

Disc 3: Catalogue d'oiseaux, Book 7; Supplément: La Fauvette des jardins; Petites esquisses d'oiseaux (RRC 1110)

Disc 4: 20 Regards sur l'enfant-Jésus (RRC 2055 (2))

Disc 5: Cantéyodjayâ; 4 Etudes de rythme; Fantaisie burlesque; Pièce pour le tombeau de Paul Dukas; Préludes; Rondeau; (i) Visions de l'Amen (RRC 2056 (2))

🔑 (BB) * Regis RRC 7001 (7). Hill; (i) with Frith

Catalogue d'oiseaux

🔑 (BB) * RRC 3008 (3). Hill (from above set)

Peter Hill made his outstanding collection of Messiaen's piano music between 1986 and 1992 for Unicorn. Those recordings now appear at bargain price on the Regis label, admirably documented. They come complete in a slip-case, but are available separately as listed above. The complete Catalogue d'oiseaux is also available as a separate collection. Peter Hill prepared this music in Paris with the composer himself and thus has his imprimatur. The Petites esquisses d'oiseaux, written in 1985, formed a belated postlude to the series.

With his inherent feeling for the colour and atmosphere of Messiaen's sound-world, Hill makes an excellent case for all this repertoire, save perhaps for the somewhat repetitive Fantaisie burlesque of 1932, which outstays its welcome. His playing is consistently sensitive and has great finesse, with the Cantéyodjayâ (1948) particularly refined. For the Vingt regards sur l'enfant-Jésus, recorded in 1991 in St Paul's, Southgate, it is the contemplative, lyrical writing that one remembers, the moments of calm, rather than the vibrant climaxes. Which is not to say that the playing is not vividly alive, but rather that bravura is never the first consideration, even though the pianism shows complete mastery. The composer himself has spoken with great warmth of the artist and he has every reason. Bob Auger's recordings, too, are a splendid memento of one of Britain's most musically perceptive sound-engineers.

Cantéyodjayâ; 4 Etudes de rythme; Préludes: Chant d'extase dans une paysage triste; Cloches d'angoisse et larmes d'adieu; La Colombe; Instants défunts; Le Nombre léger; Plainte calme; Un Reflet dans le vent; Les Sons impalpables du rêve (Naxos 8.554090)

Fantaisie burlesque; La Fauvette des jardins; Les Offrandes; Pièce pour le tombeau de Paul Dukas; Prélude; Rondeau (Naxos 8.554655)

Catalogue d'oiseaux (complete); Petites esquisses d'oiseaux (Naxos 8.553532/4 (3))

(BB)  Austbø

This impressive Norwegian pianist (who is domiciled in the Netherlands) is totally in sympathy with Messiaen's elusive idiom.

Whatever one's reactions to Messiaen's music, he creates a world entirely his own. Håkan Austbø is completely attuned to this sensibility, and the recording is exemplary. Aficionados of Messiaen need not hesitate.

Catalogue d'oiseaux, Book 3: L'alouette lulu. Book 5: La bouscarle. Etudes de rythme: Île de feu I & II. 8 Préludes

(N) 🔑 * DG 477 7452. Aimard

This is another of the key records of the Messiaen centenary celebrations. Pierre-Laurent Aimard had a personal relationship with the composer and studied with Yvonne Loriod, and his performances have rare authority. He plays all eight of the early Préludes (of 1928–9), readily finding Messiaen's special brand of intimate and extrovert impressionism, both highly original and underpinned by a Debussian inheritance; but Song of ecstasy in a sad landscape, The impalpable sounds of a dream and A reflection in the wind are very much Messiaen's own conceptions. The two excerpts from Catalogue d'oiseaux are completely contrasted, both unpredictable and both requiring real virtuosity; they are marvellously played. Similarly, the extraordinary, exotic, even jazzy rhythms of Île de feu are controlled with amazing sharpness of articulation. The piano recording is wonderfully clear – very much in the demonstration bracket.

Catalogue d'oiseaux: La Rousserolle effarvatte

 MDG 604 1141-2. von Eckardstein – JANÁČEK: Sonata 1.X.1905; PROKOFIEV: Sonata 8 ***

Severin von Eckardstein's account of La Rousserolle effarvatte, the seventh of the Catalogue d'oiseaux, is both sensitive and brilliant.

8 Préludes pour piano; 20 Regards sur l'enfant-Jésus

(BB) (*) EMI Gemini (ADD) 4 76915-2 (2). Béroff

Béroff is totally at home in this repertoire and his performances are inspirational. Clean, well-focused sound – but a little wanting in richness and clarity. However, this set is very tempting at Gemini price.

20 Regards sur l'enfant-Jésus

🔑 * Teldec 3984 26868-2 (2). Aimard (piano)

🔑  Hyp. CDA 67351/2. Osborne

 Erato (ADD) 4509 91705-2 (2). Y. Loriod

(M)  RCA 82876 62316-2 (2). Serkin

(BB)  Naxos 8.550829/30. Austbø

Pierre-Laurent Aimard has received the composer's praise for his 'magnifique technique, sonorité claire et timbrée, et interprétations d'une rare intelligence'. Aimard's performance on disc is technically remarkable (although the virtuosity is always at the service of the music) and atmospherically perceptive. Fascinatingly, he is very relaxed at the opening, but evocation is in no doubt and the concentration steadily grows and with it the tension. The piano is very well recorded indeed, and this can be strongly recommended.

Steven Osborne's performance has much in common with that of Pierre-Laurent Aimard. It too is deeply sensitive and full of atmospheric feeling. The Hyperion recording is first class, and to make a choice between these two versions is almost impossible: both are very distinguished indeed.

The 1973 recording by Yvonne Loriod – the composer's second wife – of Vingt regards has long been considered very special in its understanding and feeling for the composer's musical sound-world. The piano recording is full but is otherwise acceptable rather than outstanding – yet the magnetism of the playing overcomes the lack of the sharpest focus.

Peter Serkin's remains among the finest versions at mid-price. He has an intense feeling for atmosphere and superb keyboard control. His recording is well lit and clear.

Håkon Austbø has excellent credentials in this repertoire. His is an individual view, with a wider range of tempi and dynamic than Loriod. His account of the opening Regard du père and the later Regard du fils sur le fils is paced much more slowly, but his playing has great concentration and evocative feeling so that he readily carries the slower tempo, and in Par lui tout a été fait articulation is bolder, giving the music a stronger profile, helped by the clearer, Naxos digital focus. This is undoubtedly a performance that grips the listener and can be strongly recommended as an alternative view.

ORGAN MUSIC

Complete Organ Music: (i) Apparition de l'église éternelle; L'Ascension; Le banquet céleste; Les corps glorieux; Diptyque; Livre d'orgue; Livre du Saint

Sacrement; Méditations sur le mystère de la Sainte Trinité; Messse de la Pentecôte; La Nativité du Seigneur; Verset pour la fête de la dédicace;* (ii) 3 Posthumous works: Monodie; Offrande au Saint Sacrement; Prélude (with Birdsong in Messiaen's music)

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓑ * BIS CD 1770/72 (7). Ericsson ((i) Grönlund organ of Luleå Cathedral, Sweden; (ii) Gerald Woehl organ of Katharinenkirche in Oppenheim, Germany)

The outstanding new complete survey of Messiaen's organ music by Hans-Ola Ericsson on BIS is of outstanding quality, musically and technically. It includes recordings of the three posthumous pieces, a 232-page booklet documenting the music; and as an appendix there are recordings of the bird calls indicated in Messaien's organ scores. The seven CDs come for the cost of three.

Complete organ music (including unpublished works): Monodie; Prélude; Offrande du Saint Sacrement

Ⓜ  DG 471 480-2 (6). Latry (organ of Notre-Dame de Paris)

Disc 1: L'Apparition de l'église éternelle; Le Banquet céleste; La Nativité du Seigneur (9 Méditations) (RRC 1086)

Disc 2: L'Ascension (4 Méditations); Les Corps glorieux (7 Visions de la vie des ressuscités) (RRC 1087)

Discs 3–4: Livre d'orgue (1951); 9 Méditations sur le mystère de la Sainte Trinité; Messe de la Pentecôte (RRC 2051) (2)

Discs 5–6: Diptyque (Essai sur la vie terrestre); (i) Livre du Saint Sacrement; Verset pour la Fête de la Dédicace (RRC 2052) (2)

Ⓑ * Regis RRC 6001 (6). Bate (organ of Cathedral of Saint-Pierre, Beauvais, or (i) L'Eglise de la Sainte-Trinité, Paris)

Volume 1: Apparition de l'église éternelle; Le Banquet céleste; La Nativité du Seigneur (Priory PRCD 921)

Volume 2: Méditations sur le mystère de la Sainte Trinité (Priory PRCD 922)

Volume 3: Le Corps glorieux; Messe de la Pentecôte (Priory PRCD 923)

Volume 4: L'Ascension; Livre d'orgue (Priory PRDC 924)

Volumes 5 & 6: Livre du Saint Sacrement. Early Pieces: Diptyque; Monodie; Offrande au Saint Sacrement; Prélude; Verset pour la Fête de la Dédicace (Priory Double PRDC 925/6)

Volumes 1–6 (complete) (PRMESSIAENSET (6))

Ⓜ * Weir

'C'est vraiment parfait!' said Messiaen after hearing Jennifer Bate's recording of La Nativité du Seigneur, one of his most extended, most beautiful and most moving works, with the nine movements each hypnotically compelling in their atmospheric commentaries on the Nativity story. But the composer also gave his imprimatur to every one of these recordings, all but one of which were made between 1979 and 1981 on the Beauvais organ, endorsing the performances with great enthusiasm. He then sent Jennifer Bate the manuscript of his last masterpiece, Livre du Saint Sacrement, which she premièred at Westminster Cathedral in 1986 and went on to record at Sainte-Trinité in 1987. Of the other pieces, Le Banquet céleste and Diptyque are both early works, the former already intense in its religious feeling, the latter dedicated to Messiaen's teachers, Dukas and Dupré.

The recordings were superbly engineered by the late Bob Auger and are all in the demonstration bracket. Jennifer Bate is completely at home in Messiaen's sound-world and readily identifies with the religious experience which has inspired all of the composer's organ music. In every way this inexpensive reissue of recordings originally made by Unicorn is definitive.

Gillian Weir's magnificently recorded coverage of Messiaen's organ music was recorded on the superb organ of Aarhus Cathedral, Denmark, in association with BBC Radio 3, and was originally issued on Collins. Now it returns on Priory, and its excellence is confirmed. Like Jennifer Bate, Weir was a personal friend and confidante of the composer, and the authority and conviction of her playing shines out through the entire project: its concentration and power are immediately apparent in the opening Apparition de l'église éternelle, while Le Banquet céleste and the remarkably diverse Le Corps glorieux show the strength of her characterization. Only in the Méditations sur le mystère de la Sainte Trinité does one feel that, although she still holds the music in a firm grip, her approach is a little static. But this remains very compelling, if only for the rich and sometimes piquant palette of sound she commands on her Danish organ. The records are available individually at mid-price (with the fourth and fifth discs together, treated as a double), whereas Bate's recording is on the budget Regis label. But Gillian Weir's set is in every way a recommendable alternative, and it is well documented, including her personal reminiscences of the composer.

Olivier Latry's survey is also distinguished and is very well recorded indeed in Notre-Dame. The result has great atmosphere, especially effective in conveying the composer's spiritual mysticism which is at the heart of Latry's essentially thoughtful interpretations. Jennifer Bate is more vividly extrovert and this is clear when comparing the two accounts of La Nativité du Seigneur, which also demonstrates the special suitability of the Beauvais organ. Both approaches are valid, of course, and the DG set has the advantage of offering some more unpublished items. But it is offered on six mid-priced CDs, whereas Bate's Regis reissue is in the budget range, and Gillian Weir is at mid-price.

L'Apparition de l'église éternelle; L'Ascension (4 Méditations); Le Banquet céleste; Le Corps glorieux (7 Visions de la vie des ressuscités); Diptyque (Essai sur la vie terrestre et l'éternité religieuse); Livre d'Orgue (Reprises par interversion; Première pièce en trio; Les Mains de l'abîme; Chants des oiseaux; Deuxième pièce en trio; Les Yeux dans les roues; Soixante-quatre durées); Messe de la Pentecôte; La Nativité du Seigneur (9 Méditations)

Ⓜ  EMI mono 7 67400-2 (4). Composer (Cavaillé-Coll organ of L'Eglise de la Sainte-Trinité, Paris)

In an intensive series of sessions which began at the end of May and continued through June and July of 1956, Olivier Messiaen returned to the organ in Sainte-Trinité, with which all his music is associated, and recorded everything he had written and published before that date. These performances not only carry the imprint of the composer's authority but also the inspiration of the occasion. The large-scale works have a concentration and compelling atmosphere that are unforgettable. No apologies at all need be made for the range, breadth and faithfulness of the recording, although some must be made for the organ itself, which is not always perfectly tuned. There is minor background hiss, which is not troublesome, and technically the CD transfers are a remarkable achievement.

VOCAL MUSIC

Cinq Rechants; O sacrum convivium

 HM HMC 901834. RIAS Kammerchor, Reuss – MARTIN: Mass for Double Choir; Songs of Ariel ***

The Cinq Rechants or 'Refrains' of 1948 is the last element in Messiaen's so-called Tristan trilogy, which includes Turangalîla. It is his last a cappella work, and he thought of it as one of his very finest. It embraces elements of Peruvian folksong, the alba or dawn songs of the troubadours and the chansons of Claude le Jeune, as well as Indian rhythms. The Berlin Choir meet its formidable vocal demands with a performance of remarkable virtuosity, and add a serene account of the earlier O sacrum convivium. Superb and responsive singing throughout.

OPERA

Saint François d'Assise* (complete)

 DG 445 176-2 (4). van Dam, Upshaw, Aler, Krause, Arnold Schoenberg Ch., Hallé O, Nagano

It was a labour of love over a full eight years, writing this massive four-hour opera. The live recording, made in the Felsenreitschule in Salzburg during the 1998 Festival, is astonishingly vivid, with voices and orchestra clear and immediate but with ample bloom in the helpful acoustic. The discs actually improve on the live experience, not only in the extra clarity but in the audibility of words, with the libretto an extra help in following the measured progress of a work that tells the story of St Francis in eight tableaux that fight shy of conventional dramatic design, predominantly meditative at measured speeds. In such a performance as this the result is magnetic, with Nagano drawing inspired playing from the Hallé, with José van Dam masterly in the title-role and Dawn Upshaw radiant in the role of the Angel. The rest of the cast is comparably strong. Messiaen himself regarded this as his greatest achievement, a synthesis of what he represented musically and a supreme expression of his Catholic faith. His characteristic use of birdsong here reaches its zenith – aptly so with such a subject – when in his hypnotic patterning he claims to have used every example he had ever notated.

MEYER, Edgar (born 1960)

Violin Concerto

 Sony SK 89029. Hahn, St Paul CO, Wolff – BARBER: Violin Concerto ***

Edgar Meyer wrote this Violin Concerto specially for Hilary Hahn, providing an unusual but apt coupling for the Barber Concerto, equally an example of American late romanticism. Unashamedly tonal and freely lyrical, it opens with a yearning folk-like melody that echoes Vaughan Williams, and there is also a folk-like pentatonic cut to some of the writing in both of the two substantial movements. The first is a free set of variations, leading to a virtuoso exercise in using a persistent pedal note, while avoiding monotony. The second movement, in clearly defined sections, easily erupts at times into a rustic dance, and ends on a dazzling coda. Hahn plays with passionate commitment, amply justifying her choice of coupling.

MEYERBEER, Giacomo (1791–1864)

Les Patineurs* (ballet suite; arr. & orch. Lambert)

🔑 ✿ * Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2742. Israel PO, Martinon – DVOŘÁK: Slavonic Dances; MASSENET: Le Cid Ballet Music ✿ ***

This 1958 coupling of Meyerbeer and Massenet was justly famous in its day. The sheer vividness of the opening number, with its growling cellos, the swagger of the string rhythms and the thundering timpani strokes, are still startling – and, praise be, the CD transfer is superb. No less astonishing is the quality of the playing, with Martinon inducing the Israeli Orchestra to catch the full inflexion of the French ballet style: the performance overflows with colour, and the tunes come tumbling out, bursting with joie de vivre.

Il Crociato in Egitto* (complete)

 Opera Rara (ADD) OR 10 (4). Kenny, Montague, D. Jones, Ford, Kitchen, Benelli, Platt, Geoffrey Mitchell Ch., RPO, Parry

This was the sixth and last opera which Meyerbeer wrote for Italy. The musical invention may not often be very distinctive, but the writing is consistently lively, notably in the ensembles. With one exception – Ian Platt, ill-focused in the role of the Sultan – the cast is a strong one, with Diana Montague outstanding in the castrato role of the Crusader-Knight, Armando. Della Jones, too, in the mezzo role of Felicia, whom Armando has abandoned in favour of Palmide, the Sultan's daughter, sings superbly, with agile coloratura and a rich chest register. Yvonne Kenny is brilliant as Palmide. Bruce Ford, with his firm, heroic tone, and Ugo Benelli are very well contrasted in the two tenor roles. Though the chorus is small, the recording is clear and fresh.

Margherita d'Anjou (complete)

(*) Opera Rara ORC 25 (2). Massis, Ford, Barcellona, Miles, Previati, LPO, Parry

Dating from 1820, Margherita d'Anjou, set on the Scottish borders in 1462, was a milestone in Meyerbeer's career, pointing forward not only to the last of his Italian operas, Il Crociato in Egitto, but to the grand historical epics of his Paris years. The heroine of the title is Margaret of Anjou, widow of Henry VI, a formidable role commandingly taken in this recording by Annick Massis. Starting with a military overture, the piece involves many lively choruses and ensembles, well controlled by David Parry, who has an excellent team. Opposite Massis as Lavarenne, Grand Senechal of Normandy, is the tenor Bruce Ford, exploiting his impressive vocal range, if sometimes with rough tone, while the mezzo Daniella Barcellona is strongly cast as Lavarenne's wife, and Alastair Miles is impressive too as the banished general, Belmonte. The full, clear sound is marred by piano continuo in recitative, set far too close.

Semiramide (complete)

(BB)  Naxos 8.660205/6. Riedel, Adami, James, Gierlach, Peretyatyarko, Silva, Altensteig, Rossini Ch., Württemberg PO, Bonynge

Who would have expected to see Bonynge conducting a new recording on Naxos? But he is directing a first recording of a recently rediscovered score, not a masterpiece by any means, but agreeable enough. Deborah Riedel is impressive in the title-role, in vocal partnership with Fiona James as Prince Scitalce, while her other suitor, Prince Ircano (Filippo Adami), sings ardently enough. The rest of the cast are sound, and Bonynge, as is his gift, keeps the pot on the boil throughout, and gets good support from the men's chorus. A worthwhile novelty, competitively priced.

MIASKOVSKY, Nikolay

(1881–1950)

Cello Concerto in C min., Op. 66

🔑 ❀ * EMI (ADD) 3 80013-2. Rostropovich, Philh. O, Sargent – PROKOFIEV: Sinfonia concertante; RACHMANINOV: Vocalise ****

 Signum SUGCD116. Walton, Philh. O, Briger (with ELGAR: Cello Concerto ***)

The Cello Concerto of 1944 is one of Miaskovsky's most poignant works. It radiates an all-pervasive nostalgia, a longing for a world lost beyond recall, and its gentle, elegiac sentiment is haunting. Rostropovich remains its most persuasive and authoritative exponent, and he is given sensitive support from the Philharmonia Orchestra under Sir Malcolm Sargent.

On Signum a highly appropriate coupling of two profoundly elegiac (and, for that matter, simply profound) concertos by two major composers, and Jamie Walton's recording is a welcome and eloquent newcomer.

(i) Cello Concerto; Symphony 27 in C min., Op. 85

 Chan. 10025. (i) Ivashkin; Russian State SO, Polyansky

Alexander Ivashkin's is another eloquent account which judges to perfection the concerto's melancholy and nobility, and the recording is very natural. As a coupling, Chandos offer the Twenty-Seventh Symphony, his last, completed in 1949, less than a year before he died. Yet it is a work which, far from reflecting the approach of death (he was already suffering from cancer), conveys an amiable warmth in the outer movements and a moving serenity in the lovely central slow movement, only briefly interrupted by a tender violin melody that is almost Elgarian in its nobility, while Miaskovsky paid necessary homage to his Soviet masters in the stirring march themes of the extrovert finale.

Violin Concerto

(BB)  Naxos 8.557194. Grubert, Russian PO, Yablonsky – VAINBERG: Violin Concerto ***

Miaskovsky's Violin Concerto of 1939 is one of the most appealing and lyrical of all Russian concertos. Its neglect is quite unaccountable. The Lithuanian violinist Ilya Grubert offers the Concerto coupled enterprisingly with the Vainberg and at a remarkably competitive price. Grubert plays it with appropriate affection and grace, and he is well supported by his Russian players. At the price this must be self-recommending, and readers who have not acquired the even finer deleted Repin version should lose no time in snapping this up.

Divertissement, Op. 80; Silence, Op. 9; Sinfonietta in B min., Op. 32/2

(N) (BB)  Regis Alto ALC 1042. Russian Federation Ac. SO, Svetlanov

Silence is an early tone-poem based on Edgar Allan Poe and dating from 1909. Miaskovsky played it through with his friend Prokofiev. The influence of Wagner and Rachmaninov (particularly Isle of the Dead) is to be felt. The Sinfonietta for strings of 1929 acted as a kind of calling card for him during the 1930s and was widely heard in Europe and America. The Divertissement comes from 1948, the year in which Zhdanov launched his attack on all the leading Soviet composers of the day including Miaskovsky. There is a poignant lyricism here and in the first movement an endearing waltz theme that recalls those in Prokofiev's War and Peace. Dedicated performances. The disc is well worth its modest cost.

Lyric Concertino, Op. 32/3; Salutation Overture, Op. 48; Serenade in E flat, Op. 32/1; Sinfonietta in B min., Op. 32/2

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1244. Soloists, Moscow New Opera O, Samoilov

The Serenade has great charm and strong lyrical appeal; the Lyric Concerto (for flute, clarinet, horn, bassoon, harp and strings), and particularly its slow movement, has considerable harmonic subtlety. The performances under Yevgeny Samoilov are of fine quality and he gives a sensitive reading of the Sinfonietta for strings. These are enduring pieces; not so the Salutation Overture, written for Stalin's 60th birthday, which is worth giving a miss. Very good recording. A bargain.

Sinfonietta for Strings in B min., Op. 32/2; Theme & Variations; 2 Pieces, Op. 46/1; Napeve

🔑  ASV CDDCA 928. St Petersburg CO, Melia

The Sinfonietta for Strings will appeal to anyone of a nostalgic disposition. The players give an affectionate, well-prepared account of it and convey the wistful, endearing nature of the slow movement to perfection. The Theme and Variations (on a theme of Grieg) also has the same streak of melancholy. The first of the Two Pieces, Op. 46, No. 1, is a transcription and reworking for strings of the inner movements, reversing their order, of Miaskovsky's Symphony 19 for Military Band, composed in 1939. The St Petersburg Chamber Orchestra is an expert and responsive ensemble, and the ASV recording does them proud.

Symphonies (complete). Divertimento, Op. 80; Silence, Op. 9; Sinfonietta in B min., Op. 32/2

Ⓝ  Warner Classics 256469689-8. Russian Federation SO, Svetlanov

A warm welcome for the complete Miaskovsky cycle – or, rather, not-quite-complete cycle, as the Eighteenth Symphony is missing in all of the sets we have seen. Not that Warner seemed particularly concerned, for when the omission was pointed out, they did not even bother to return the call. The set went on to collect an award – and rightly so, for Miaskovsky is a master symphonist and Yevgeni Svetlanov believes in this music ardently. This empathy shines through all these performances. (But the Eighteenth in C major, composed in 1937, was recorded digitally by Svetlanov and coupled with the Second Symphony in C sharp minor, a big piece twice as long as its companion, on Olympia OCD732. It may still be possible to find this in some outlets.)

The First Symphony (also recorded by Rozhdestvensky), is very much in the received tradition, as are its immediate successors; it is in the massive hour-long Sixth of 1922 with a choral finale that Miaskovsky finds his real voice: the delicacy and intense nostalgia of the trio section of the Scherzo is wonderfully affecting and unlike any of his contemporaries. Explore its successors from the interwar years, and each has its own distinctive sound-world. 22, 'Ballade' in B minor, has a combined richness of vision and breadth of canvas. The pervasive melancholy of 25 (a close neighbour of the Cello Concerto) and one of the finest and most expressive is totally and refreshingly out-of-keeping with the spirit of its times, though it is 27, which the composer never lived to hear, that sounds as if it is a contemporary work of Borodin or Arensky – and none the worse for that! In its separate format, the series had extensive and authoritative notes by Per Skans but the boxed set has only the sketchiest of presentation. But this is a treasure house that will reward the exploratory listener: dedicated performances, music of great humanity and integrity and acceptable if not distinguished recorded sound. Many of the symphonies are also available separately on the Regis Alto label.

Symphonies (i) 1 in C min., Op. 3; (ii) 19 in E flat for Wind Band, Op. 46

(*) Russian Disc (ADD) RDCD 11 007. (i) USSR MoC SO, Rozhdestvensky; (ii) Russian State Brass O, Sergeyev

Miaskovsky's First Symphony is very much in the received tradition. It is obvious from the very start that Miaskovsky was a composer who could think on a big scale. The Nineteenth Symphony in B flat for military band is a slighter piece, worth hearing for its inner movements, a wistful Moderato and a well-written Andante. The First Symphony is well played by the Ministry of Culture Orchestra under Gennady Rozhdestvensky, though the brass sound a bit raw, as indeed do the upper strings. The Nineteenth is played with great brio and genuine affection. The less-than-three-star recording-quality should not deter collectors from investigating this work.

Symphonies 5 in D, Op. 18; 9 in E min., Op. 28

(*) Marco Polo 8.223499. BBC PO, Downes

The Fifth Symphony is a sunny, pastoral score dating from 1918, very much in the tradition of Glazunov and Glière. Downes's recording with the BBC Philharmonic, recorded in an admittedly over-resonant venue in Derby, is to be preferred both artistically and sonically to its earlier rival by the USSR Symphony Orchestra under Ivanov on Olympia (now deleted). The Ninth Symphony is somewhat better served than 5 so far as the sound is concerned. It is vintage Miaskovsky, more cogently argued and more interesting in thematic substance than the Eighth. Very good performances and good enough recording – just – to make three stars.

Symphony 6 in E flat min. (Revolutionary), Op. 23

((*)) Russian Disc mono RDCD 15008. Yurlov Russian Ch., USSR SO, Kondrashin

The Sixth is Miaskovsky's longest symphony (it takes nearly 65 minutes) and is arguably his masterpiece. The work occupied him over a two-year period (1921–3). It encompasses a wide range of feeling and has dignity and an epic sweep reminiscent of Eisenstein. Miaskovsky subsequently retouched its scoring and made further revisions in 1947. The 1959 Kondrashin recording had a special authority and dramatic intensity; it is still in circulation and remains a benchmark account.

Symphony 12 in G min., Op. 35; Silence (symphonic poem after Poe), Op. 9

(*) Marco Polo 8.223302. Slovak RSO (Bratislava), Stankovsky

The Twelfth Symphony is endearingly old-fashioned. It is highly enjoyable, particularly when it is as well played as it is here by the Bratislava Radio Orchestra under their gifted young conductor, Robert Stankovsky. The tone-poem Silence draws for its inspiration on Edgar Allan Poe's The Raven and has a strongly atmospheric quality with a distinctly fin-de-siècle air: if you enjoy Rachmaninov's Isle of the Dead, you should investigate it. The orchestra play with enthusiasm and they are decently recorded.

Symphonies 24 in F min., Op. 63; 25 in D flat, Op. 69

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.555376. Moscow PO, Yablonsky

Very worthwhile accounts of both symphonies from Dmitri Yablonsky and the Moscow Philharmonic. Yablonsky's account of 25, Miaskovsky's first post-war symphony, holds up well against Svetlanov's (coupled with 1). He is less expansive in the glorious first movement but no less heartfelt. This is particularly haunting and moving, full of the all-pervasive melancholy which is echt-Miaskovsky. The recording is decent and, although those collecting the Svetlanov cycle will want to complete it, those who cannot wait will find the modest outlay here well worth while.

Symphony 27 – see Cello Concerto

CHAMBER MUSIC

Cello Sonata 1 in D, Op. 12

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 2x1 4 82067-2 (2). Mørk, Thibaudet – PROKOFIEV; RACHMANINOV; SHOSTAKOVICH: Cello Sonatas; STRAVINSKY: Suite italienne ***

This is an outstandingly desirable and generous bargain collection. The Norwegian cellist Truls Mørk plays the lovely Miaskovsky Sonata with both feeling and restraint, and the couplings are no less desirable. The recording is truthful and well balanced.

Cello Sonata 2 in A min., Op. 81

🔑 (M)  Somm CD 029. Walton, Grimwood – KABALEVSKY: Sonata in B flat; PROKOFIEV: Cello Sonata ***

What a glorious work the Second Sonata of 1949 is! Its invention flows freely and naturally, and although the idiom was thought of as highly conservative (and it would have been for 1890, let alone the 1940s) the ideas are distinguished and have an eloquence that is most appealing. The trouble is that the opening tune is difficult to dislodge from the memory, as is the Fauréan contrasting idea. Impeccable playing from these little-known young artists, who more than repay the confidence Somm has placed in them. Good recording.

PIANO MUSIC

Piano Sonatas: 4 in C min., Op. 27; 5 in B, Op. 64/1; Sonatine in E min., Op. 57

(BB)  Regis RRC 1245. McLachlan

It is good to see that Regis are beginning to reissue (at budget price) Murray McLachlan's survey of the piano music of Miaskovsky. In a scholarly note he tells us that 2 was actually the Seventh and that many more may come to light. If they are as interesting as the Fourth or the E minor Sonatine, so much the better. The middle movement of the latter, marked Narrante e lugubre, is dark and pessimistic, and quite haunting. McLachlan speaks of the 'enormous tactile pleasure' it gives to the performer, but it also grips the listener. This gifted young artist readily communicates his own enthusiasm for this music, and his playing is both authoritative and persuasive. Good recording, too.

Piano Sonatas 6 in A flat, Op. 62/2; 7 in C, Op. 82; 8 in D min., Op. 83; 9 in F, Op. 84

(*) Marco Polo 8.223178. Hegedüs

The Marco Polo disc brings the last four sonatas. The young Hungarian pianist, Endre Hegedüs, is an imaginative interpreter: he colours the second theme of the Barcarolle section of the Eighth Sonata with great tenderness and subtlety. The sound is a little wanting in bloom.

MILHAUD, Darius (1892–1974)

L'Apothéose de Molière, Op. 286; Le Bœuf sur le toit, Op. 58; (i) Le Carnaval d'Aix, Op. 83b; Le Carnaval de Londres, Op. 172

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55168. (i) Gibbons; New L. O, Corp

Le Carnaval d'Aix is a carefree work, full of high spirits, and is very expertly played by Jack Gibbons and the New London Orchestra under Ronald Corp. They also convey the Satie-like circus-music character of Le Bœuf sur le toit to excellent effect. What delightful music this is, and so expertly fashioned by this lovable composer. The Molière pastiche and the arrangement of melodies from The Beggar's Opera are not top-drawer Milhaud, but they are still worth having. Very good recording from the Hyperion team.

(i) Ballade for Piano and Orchestra; Piano Concerto 4, Op. 295; (ii) Symphonies 4, Op. 281; 8 in D (Rhodanienne), Op. 362

🔑 (BB) * Warner Apex 0927 49982-2. (i) Helffer, O Nat. de France, Robertson; (ii) Fr. R. & TV PO, composer

An immensely valuable budget reissue. The Ballade (1920) was composed for Roussel, and Milhaud made his piano début at its première in New York: its languorous opening seems to hark back to his days in Brazil. The Fourth Piano Concerto (1949), written for the virtuoso, Sadel Zkolowsky, is an inventive piece of some substance, with a particularly imaginative and evocative slow movement. Claude Helffer is an admirable exponent of both works, and he and David Robertson readily catch the music's special atmosphere.

The Fourth Symphony was commissioned by French Radio in commemoration of the centenary of the 1848 uprising and revolution, and its four movements offer a vivid portrayal of those events. It is scored for unusually large forces, including two saxophones and a vast array of percussion, all heard to good effect in the first movement, which depicts the uprising with massive polytonal and dissonant clashes; the second laments the fallen, the third describes liberty rediscovered, and the finale is almost festive. The Eighth Symphony, written in the late 1950s for a new concert hall at the University of California, is subtitled Rhodanienne and evokes the course of the river Rhône from its beginnings in the Alps down to the Carmargue. Rich in instrumental resource, it is full of imaginative colours and textures, and the playing of the Orchestre Philharmonique de l'ORTF for Milhaud himself is absolutely first rate. These performances date from 1968, and the sound is much cleaned up for this CD, which commands an unqualified recommendation.

(i) Le Boeuf sur le toit, Op. 58; (iv; ii) Le Carnaval d'Aix, Op. 83b; (i) La création du monde, Op. 81a; Saudades do Brasil, Nos. 7–9 & 11; (ii) Suite française, Op. 248; Suite provençale, Op. 152b; (iii) Le bal martiniquais, Op. 249; (iii–v) Paris, Op. 284; (iii) Scaramouche, Op. 165b

Ⓝ (BB)  Brilliant 90071/2. (i) O Nat. de France, Bernstein; (ii) Monte Carlo O, Prêtre; (iii) Lee, Ivaldi; (iv) Béroff, (v) Collard

An ideal introduction to this genial composer at a very modest outlay. It brings Bernstein's exhilarating 1971 HMV recordings of La création du monde and Le Boeuf sur le toit, still unsurpassed in their flair, together with slightly later recordings by four distinguished French pianists. In the adorable Carnaval d'Aix, Michel Béroff is the soloist with the Monte Carlo Orchestra under Georges Prêtre, an ideal conductor in this repertoire. Altogether outstanding value.

Le Bœuf sur le toit; Concertino de printemps; (i) Violin Concertos 1, Op. 93; 2, Op. 263; Op. 135

 Orfeo C646051A. (i) Steinbacher; Munich R. O, Steinberg

The First and Second Violin Concertos return to the catalogue to be strongly welcomed, particularly in such fluent performances by Suzanne Steinbacher and these Bavarian musicians. These are both inventive and finely wrought pieces that deserve a place in the wider concert repertoire, not just in the CD catalogue. The adorable Concertino de printemps and Le Bœuf sur le toit are splendid makeweights.

Le Bœuf sur le toit, Op. 58; La Création du monde, Op. 81

* Chan. 9023. Ulster O, Y. P. Tortelier – IBERT: Divertissement; POULENC: Les Biches ****

Le Boeuf sur le toit; La Création du monde; (i) L'Homme et son désir; Suite provençale

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.557287. Lille Nat. O, Casadesus; (i) with Makuuchi, Zhao, Vidal, Deletre

The Naxos issue, vividly recorded, makes an ideal Milhaud collection, surveying a wide range of his long career. Jean-Claude Casadesus conducts the Lille Orchestra in warmly idiomatic performances which combine refinement with rhythmic bite. The rarity is an even earlier ballet, L'Homme et son désir, written in 1917–18 to a scenario by Paul Claudel, set in the primeval Amazonian forest. The exotic scoring is for solo wind and strings, with a very large percussion section and four solo voices singing wordlessly. The atmospheric colours of the piece are brilliantly caught, with the eight brief movements of the Suite provençale as an attractive makeweight, taken in 1936 from incidental music to a play.

A most engaging account of Le Bœuf sur le toit from Yan Pascal Tortelier and his Ulster players, full of colourful detail, admirably flexible and infectiously rhythmic. Perhaps La Création du monde is without the degree of plangent jazzy emphasis of a French performance, but its gentle, desperate melancholy is well caught, and the playing has plenty of colour and does not lack rhythmic subtlety. The Chandos recording, although resonant, is splendid in every other respect, and so are the couplings.

Le Carnaval d'Aix, Op. 83b; Ballade, Op. 61; Piano Concertos 1, Op. 127; 2, Op. 228; 3, Op. 270; 4, Op. 295; 5, Op. 346; 5 Études for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 63; Fantaisie Pastorale, Op. 188

 CPO 777 162-2 (2). Korstick, Basle RSO, Francis

Milhaud recorded the First Concerto with Marguerite Long in the days of 78-r.p.m. discs but there are few alternative versions of the remaining four. Together, the pieces on these two CDs comprise Milhaud's complete output for piano and orchestra. At its best it is sunny and irresistible music, though elsewhere it is fluent rather than inspired. Very persuasive and strongly recommended.

(i; ii) Concertino de printemps (2 versions); (iii) Piano Concerto; (ii) Violin Concerto 2; (iv) Suite française; (v) Scaramouche (suite for 2 pianos)

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9711. (i) Astruc with O; (ii) Kaufman, French R. O (members); (iii) Long, O Nat. de France; (iv) NYPO; all cond. composer; (v) Sellick and Smith

Milhaud regarded melody as 'the only living element in music' and turned all his resources to the expression of melodic ideas, often spring-like in their freshness and charm. No more so than in the vivacious Concertino de printemps which, in a Dutton scoop, is given here, first in its brilliant (1933) première recording by Yvone Astruc, and also in an even more breathtaking later version (1949), dazzlingly played by Louis Kaufman. Yet both performances reveal the music's underlying expressive nostalgia, and this is found again in the 'Slow and sombre' middle movement of the Second Violin Concerto, which Kaufman also plays superbly, delivering the finale with sparkling virtuosity. He is recorded closely but truthfully.

Marguerite Long (in 1935) scintillates in the small-scale Piano Concerto, and the composer delivers the full bonhomie of the Suite française, even if here the dated New York recording is brash and two-dimensional. For the most part, however, the splendid Dutton transfers make one forget the early provenance of these always vivid recordings. The performance of Scaramouche by Cyril Smith and Phyllis Sellick is unsurpassed, with the light-hearted Brazilian syncopations of the finale especially infectious, and here the 1948 Abbey Road recording sounds very realistic.

(i; ii) 5 Études for Piano & Orchestra, Op. 63; (ii) Sérénade, Op. 62; (iii) Symphony 3 (Sérénade), Op. 71; (ii) Suite de l'opéra, Maximilien, Op. 110b; (iv) Suite symphonique 2 (Protée); (v) Suite for Violin, Clarinet & Piano, Op. 157b; (i) 3 Rag Caprices, Op. 78

Ⓜ () Divine Art CD 27807. (i) Badura-Skoda; (ii) VSO, Swoboda; (iii) Ens., Goehr; (iv) San Francisco SO, Monteux; (v) Parrenin, Delécluse, Haas-Hamburger

The Sérénade, Op. 71, with Walter Goehr conducting an eminent group of soloists including Jean Pougnet, Anthony Pini, Reginald Kell, Paul Draper and George Eskdale, was first issued in the 'Columbia History of Music' and, so far as we know, was never reissued on LP or CD. Monteux's account of Protée comes from his time with the San Francisco orchestra in 1945, and the Swoboda records, made in Vienna in 1950, originally appeared on Westminster and have an authentic feel to them.

Symphonies: 1, Op. 10; 2, Op. 247; 3 (Te Deum), Op. 271; 4, Op. 281; 5, Op. 322; 6, Op. 343; 7, Op. 344; 8 (Rhodanienne), Op. 362; 9, Op. 380; 10, Op. 382; 11 (Romantique), Op. 384; 12 (Rurale), Op. 390

Ⓜ  CPO 999 656-2 (5). Basle RSO, Francis

Although he was celebrated for his Petites symphonies, Milhaud did not turn to the large-scale form until 1939 after the outbreak of war. The First was written in response to a commission from the Chicago Symphony Orchestra; Milhaud conducted its première recording after he had fled France in 1940. The Second was composed for Boston in 1944, a work of great resource and diversity. With the liberation of France in the same year, the composer Henri Barraud, then head of French Radio, commissioned the Third and Fourth, which celebrated the hard-won peace. Of the symphonies that were to come over the next two decades, it was the Sixth that has created the most lasting impression. Written for Charles Munch and the Boston Orchestra, it enjoyed consistent exposure during the 1950s – Milhaud conducted it with the BBC Symphony at that time – and it is like so much of Milhaud's best music, relaxed and sunny, like his native Aix-en-Provence, but a work of compelling substance. During the 1990s Alun Francis recorded all the symphonies with the Basle Radio Symphony Orchestra, and with the deletion of the individual CDs they are now gathered in this five-CD set. Get it while it is still in circulation, for the music is rewarding and the performances very well prepared and convincingly delivered. Good sound too.

CHAMBER MUSIC

La Cheminée du Roi René

() BBC mono BBCL 4066-2. Dennis Brain Wind Quintet (with instrumental recital ())

The account by the Dennis Brain Wind Quintet of Milhaud's Cheminée du Roi René, with its pastiche Provençal flavour, is sheer delight, making it seem like a minor masterpiece. How beguiling are the Aubade, La Maousinglade and the finale, a Madrigal-nocturne. The sound too has a pleasing ambient glow.

Duo for 2 Violins, Op. 243; (i) Sonata for 2 Violins & Piano, Op. 15

(*) Hyp. CDA 66473. Osostowicz, Kovacic, (i) with Tomes – MARTINŮ: Violin Sonata (*); PROKOFIEV: Violin Sonata *

The Sonata for Two Violins and Piano of 1914 is beautifully crafted and has a charming slow movement but is very slight. Not as slight, though, as the Duo, the first two movements of which were composed at a dinner party; the finale was written the following morning. Elegant performances from Krysia Osostowicz and Ernst Kovacic and, in the Sonata, Susan Tomes.

Music for wind: La Cheminée du Roi René, Op. 105; Divertissement en trois parties, Op. 399b; Pastorale, Op. 47; 2 Sketches, Op. 227b; Suite d'après Corrette, Op. 161b

Ⓜ (*) Chan. 6536. Athena Ens., McNichol

Though none of this is first-class Milhaud, it is still full of pleasing and attractive ideas, and the general air of easygoing, life-loving enjoyment is well conveyed by the alert playing of the Athena Ensemble. One's only quarrel is with the somewhat close balance.

Scaramouche (arr. for clarinet & piano)

 EMI 3 79787-2. Meyer, Maisenberg – DEVIENNE; POULENC; SAINT-SAËNS: Sonatas ***

Written for piano duo, Scaramouche is one of Milhaud's audacious minor masterpieces, and it is irresistible here with Sabine Meyer leading the piano with her dashing roulades. There is wit, too, plus captivating élan in its infectious Brazilian finale. A most winning performance, realistically recorded, with the clarinet dominating.

String Quartets 1, Op. 5; 7 in B flat, Op. 87; 10, Op. 218; 16, Op. 303

 Cybella CY 804. Aquitaine Nat. Qt

The Seventh Quartet speaks Milhaud's familiar, distinctive language; its four short movements are delightful, full of melody and colour. The Tenth, too, is attractive; the Sixteenth was a wedding anniversary present for his wife: its first movement has great tenderness and warmth. The Aquitaine Quartet have excellent ensemble, intonation is good and their playing is polished. The recording has a wide dynamic range and a spacious tonal spectrum.

String Quartets 5, Op. 64; 8, Op. 121; 11, Op. 232; 13, Op. 268

 Cybella CY 805. Aquitaine Nat. Qt

The Fifth Quartet is not one of Milhaud's most inspired; the Eighth, on the other hand, has much to commend it, including a poignant slow movement. 11 has a splendid pastoral third movement and a lively jazzy finale; 13 has overtones of Mexico in its finale and a beguiling and charming Barcarolle. Both performance and recording are very good.

PIANO MUSIC

Music for 2 pianos: Le Bal martiniquais, Op. 249; Le Bœuf sur le toit, Op. 58a; Carnaval à la Nouvelle-Orléans, Op. 275; Kentuckiana, Op. 287; La libertadora, Op. 236; Scaramouche, Op. 165b; Songes, Op. 237

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 67014. Coombs, Pizarro

Hyperion assemble the bulk of Milhaud's music for two pianos from the popular and irresistible Scaramouche through to the duet arrangement of Le Bœuf sur le toit. An entertaining and delightful issue which brings some high-spirited pianism from these fine players and very good recorded sound.

MILNER, Anthony (1925–2002)

Roman Spring* (cantata); Salutatio Angelica, Op. 1

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 267. Hodgson, Palmer, Tear, L. Sinf. & Ch., Atherton – MAW: Scenes and Arias ***

Anthony Milner, an academic and lecturer as well as a composer, writes civilized, well-constructed music that deserves a place in the catalogue. Salutatio Angelica uses the text of the Angelus, with each of the three settings of the Ave Maria given to the mezzo soloist (most beautifully sung by Alfreda Hodgson). The other cantata, written 21 years later, is more ambitious and more lively, a setting of five well-contrasted Latin poems, grouped in three separate movements. The writing is generously lyrical and often vigorously rhythmic – no suspicion here that Latin is a dead language. Excellent performance and recording.

MINKUS, Léon (1826–1917)

La Bayadère* (ballet; complete. Choreography: Natalia Makarova after Marius Petita)

* TDK DVD DVWW-BLLBSC. Zakharova, Bolle, Brusson, Hewison, Sutera, La Scala, Milan, Ballet & O, Colman (V/D: Tina Protasoni)

* TDK DVD DVWW-BLLBM. Asylmuratova, Mukhamedov, Bussell, Dowell, Kumakawa, Royal Ballet, ROHCG O, Lanchbery

La Bayadère (which may be translated as 'The Temple Dancer') arrived in St Petersburg in 1877, three decades after Adam's Giselle. Musically it is not its match, and the plot is unconvincingly melodramatic (drawing on both Giselle and Aida!). But for balletomanes the galaxy of marvellous choreography is a continual visual delight, for Petipa was at his peak and his invention throughout is constantly and engagingly fresh. So this is an ideal work for DVD, as Minkus's score, for all its moments of charm, does not really stand up on its own. The ballet's narrative line with its melodramatic climaxes needs a good deal of mime, and Natalia Makarova's Covent Garden production treats it in a stylized way (to match the handsome, stylized decor), whereas Olga Evreinoff at La Scala goes for realism, to match the more traditionally realistic La Scala settings. As for the dancing, it is superlative both at Covent Garden and at La Scala, with Altynai Asylmuratova and Svetlana Zakharova equally ravishing as Nikita. Darcey Bussell (at the Garden) is a particularly seductive Gamzatti, but Isabelle Brusson is sensuous too; and some may like Roberto Bolle's athletic, long-legged bravura portrayal of Solor, rather than Irek Mukhamedov's more overtly masculine persona. In both productions the corps de ballet are eye-catchingly graceful and elegantly precise as they make their patterned movements. One final point that tips the balance towards the Scala version is that David Colman's reading of the score comes over as that bit more racily romantic than Lanchbery's; but he is helped by a more open acoustic and a recording of greater range, giving the strings more radiance and bite.

La Bayadère* (complete; arr. Lanchbery)

 Decca 436 917-2 (2). ECO, Bonynge

Lanchbery has provided the present score, and he is responsible for the orchestration. Unlike Adam's rather disappointing Le Corsaire (also recorded by the same forces), this work is full of pleasing melody and first rate orchestral effects. If you like late 19th-century ballet music, then here is nearly two hours of it, played with much vivacity, elegance and drama, and given Decca's top-quality sound.

Don Quichotte* (ballet: complete, with music arr. John Lanchbery). Choreography Rudolf Nureyev, after Maris Petipa

Ⓝ (*) Arthaus DVD 107 009. Dupont, Legris, Bart, Didière, Corps de Ballet & O de l'Opéra Nat. de Paris, Florio

Minkus created his ballet Don Quichotte in 1869, but in 1966 Rudolf Nureyev staged a new, abbreviated version, reducing the original five Acts to three and a Prologue. But, like Petipa, the original choreographer, he concentrated on episodes from the second part of the novel, centring on the loving couple, Kitri and Basile. The Don becomes a minor, rather grotesque and peripheral figure introduced in the Prologue. However, in Act II he believes the heroine is his Dulcinea and, coming to her rescue, he attacks the windmill which dominates the stage, while in Act III he fights a brief duel to aid the loving couple as they prepare for their wedding. The ballet itself, for the most part, exists outside the story, with Act I virtually a continuing divertissement. It is full of lively dances to conventional choreography, and the two principals here, Aurélie Dupont as Kitri and Manuel Legris as Basile, have plenty of spectacular solos and pas de deux, supported by the Paris Opéra Corps de Ballet. Don Quixote, rather well portrayed by Jean-Marie Didière, is essentially a non-dancing role and remains his rather melancholy self. The score is agreeably melodic if not distinctive. Well crafted and colourfully orchestrated, it has a few set-pieces, including a group of Spanish Dances, but is without the genius of Tchaikovsky or Delibes. Those wanting just the music alone can get an acceptable Naxos CD set of the full original (1869) score, played by the Sofia National Opera Orchestra (8.557065/6).

MOERAN, Ernest J. (1894–1950)

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii; iii) Violin Concerto; (iii) 2 Pieces for Small Orchestra: Lonely Waters; Whythorne's Shadow

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 10168X. (i) Wallfisch, Bournemouth Sinf., Del Mar; (ii) Mordkovitch; (iii) Ulster O, Handley

The Cello Concerto (1945) is a pastoral work with elegiac overtones, save in its rather folksy finale. Raphael Wallfisch brings an eloquence of tone and a masterly technical address to this neglected piece, and he receives very responsive orchestral support from Norman Del Mar and the Bournemouth players. The Violin Concerto is also strongly lyrical in feeling. The first movement is thoughtful and rhapsodic, its inspiration drawn from Moeran's love of the west coast of Ireland; the middle movement makes use of folk music; while the finale, a ruminative elegy of great beauty, is the most haunting of the three. Lydia Mordkovitch plays with great natural feeling for this music and, quite apart from his sensitive support in the Concerto, Vernon Handley gives an outstanding account of Lonely Waters. Superb recording.

(i) Cello Concerto; (ii) Cello Sonata in A min.; Prelude for Cello & Piano

Ⓝ  Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 299. Coetmore, with (i) LPO, Boult; (ii) Parkin

Peers Coetmore, widow of E. J. Moeran, is the dedicatee of the Cello Concerto, a fine lyrical work written as a wedding present in 1945, the year of their marriage. One cannot miss the intensity of feeling in her playing. This is a deeply felt offering to a once long-neglected composer, but the solo playing falls short of the virtuoso standard one demands on record. One has to listen with a sympathetic ear. In the Cello Sonata, the soloist brings a dedicated intensity to the work, also written for her (in 1948), not long before he died. It is a thoughtful, introspective piece, well worth getting to know. The Prelude for Cello and Piano makes a nice bonus, though the soloist's intonation is not totally secure. First-class late-1960s sound.

Violin Concerto

Ⓜ () Divine Art mono 27806. Campoli, BBC SO, Boult – DOUGLAS COATES: Violin Concerto ()

In his accompanying note, Andrew Rose makes strong claims for Alfredo Campoli's reading of the Moeran Concerto – and rightly so! There is an inwardness, a rhapsodic freedom and intensity about his playing which makes this a moving experience, and Sir Adrian Boult and the BBC Symphony Orchestra also play with great sensitivity. The recording comes from 1954 and calls for tolerance, but it is very acceptable, and the performance is really quite special. What a wonderful player Campoli was when he was at his best. He was never better than at this exalted level.

(i) Violin Concerto; (ii) Rhapsody for Piano & Orchestra; (iii) Rhapsody 2

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 248. (i) Georgiadis, LSO, Handley; (ii) McCabe, New Philh. O, Braithwaite; (iii) LPO, Boult

Moeran's delectable Violin Concerto, dating from 1942, reflects the composer's devotion to Delius more than most; two lyrical movements frame a central Scherzo with something of an Irish flavour. It receives a superb performance from John Georgiadis, strongly backed by the LSO under Vernon Handley. The Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra is fresh and spontaneous, as one would expect from this composer. His art offers directness of utterance and a disarming sincerity, and he is well served by John McCabe and the New Philharmonia under Nicholas Braithwaite. The colourful Second Rhapsody (for orchestra only) is an early work, dating from 1924. Boult proves, as always, an intensely sympathetic conductor, and the recording quality matches Lyrita's excellent standards throughout.

In the Mountain Country; Rhapsodies 1–2; Serenade in G; (i) Nocturne

Ⓜ  Chan. 10235X. Ulster O, Handley, (i) with Mackey, Renaissance Singers – WARLOCK: Capriol Suite, etc. ***

The Serenade in G has a good deal in common with Warlock's Capriol Suite. Both use dance forms from a previous age and transform them with new colours and harmonic touches. Handley and the Ulster Orchestra present it with striking freshness and warmth in its original version. In the Mountain Country and the pair of Rhapsodies (the First Holstian in its quirky rhythms and colourful brass, the Second Irish in inflexion with a memorable main tune) are unashamedly folk-inspired and have great vitality and lyrical appeal. The Nocturne, a setting of a poem by Robert Nichols for baritone and eight-part chorus, much admired by Britten, receives a wholly sympathetic performance and recording here, and the resonant acoustics of the Ulster Hall, Belfast, provide a warmly atmospheric ambient glow.

Symphony in G min.; Overture for a Masque; (i) Rhapsody for Piano & Orchestra

Ⓜ  Chan. 10169X. (i) Fingerhut; Ulster O, Handley

Symphony in G min.; Sinfonietta

(BB)  Naxos 8.555837. Bournemouth SO, Lloyd-Jones

(i) Symphony in G min.; (ii) Sinfonietta; (i) Overture for a Masque

🔑 ✿ * Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 247. (i) New Philh. O; LPO; Boult

Built confidently on strikingly memorable ideas, and first heard in 1937, Moeran's G minor Symphony is in the best English tradition of symphonic writing and is worthy to rank with the symphonies of Vaughan Williams and Walton. But for all the echoes of these composers, and of Sibelius too, it has a strongly individual voice. Boult's radiant mid-1970s performance is spacious, the recording not as opulent as Handley's Chandos version (very much cast in the Boult mould) but still very impressive. Characteristically, he refuses to push too hard too soon, but the ebb and flow of tension are superbly controlled to build the most powerful possible climaxes. Rarely, even in Vaughan Williams, has Boult adopted so overtly expressive a style, especially in the glorious slow movement, and the 1975 recording quality, although refined, allows the widest dynamic range down to the gentlest pianissimo for the hushed, intense opening of the slow movement. The Sinfonietta is a fresh and attractive work, written a decade later. More extrovert than the symphony, it shows its composer as less ready to write in long paragraphs. It is nevertheless an attractive work and, alongside the Overture, given Boult's persuasive advocacy it makes an apt coupling.

Chandos have reissued at mid-price Vernon Handley's compelling performance with the exuberant, syncopated Overture thrown in for good measure. An outstanding disc in every way, with superb recording sounding better than ever.

The Naxos version, warmly and idiomatically conducted by David Lloyd-Jones, could hardly be more persuasive, well played by the Bournemouth Orchestra and treated to a full-range recording, with transparent textures bringing out the fine detail of the orchestration. The jolly, vigorous Sinfonietta, equally well played, makes an apt coupling. In the Symphony, Handley might be marginally more bitingly powerful, but this new version has a considerable price advantage and is certainly not second best.

(i) Symphony in G min.; (ii) String Trio; (iii) Can't you Dance the Polka; Sheep sheering; Sweet fa's the eve

() Divine Art mono 27808. (i) Hallé O, Heward; (ii) Pougnet, Riddle, Pini; (iii) Goss, H. Nash, Cathedral Male Voice Ch., Moore

Dutton originally transferred Leslie Heward's pioneering recording of the Moeran Symphony to CD, coupling it with the John Ireland Piano Concerto, but this issue is no less valuable, for much trouble has been taken over it, and it brings the 1941 records of the String Trio and Heddle Nash singing Diaphenia and The Sweet of the Year in 1945. As one returns to Moeran's music, the fresher it seems, and the performances are wonderfully invigorating.

Fantasy Quartet for Oboe & Strings

 Chan. 8392. Francis, English Qt – BAX: Quintet; HOLST: Air & Variations, etc.; JACOB: Quartet ***

Moeran's folk-influenced Fantasy Quartet, an attractively rhapsodic single-movement work, is played admirably here, and the recording is excellent, well balanced too.

(i) Fantasy Quartet for Oboe & Strings; (ii) String Quartet 2 in A min.; (iii) Violin Sonata

Ⓜ  Chan. 10170X. (i) Francis, English String Qt (members); (ii) Melbourne Qt; (iii) Scotts, Talbot

Sarah Francis's admirable account with the English String Quartet of Moeran's Fantasy Quartet is here re-coupled with the String Quartet in A minor of 1921, together with the more intense and forward-looking Violin Sonata (written a year later). The performance from Donald Scotts and John Talbot is full of rough-hewn energy, with plenty of contrast in the central Lento. While the Maggini–Naxos coupling with the earlier E flat Quartet is more logical, the Chandos disc is very attractive in its own right.

String Quartets 1 in E flat; 2 in A min.; String Trio

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.554079. Maggini Qt

The String Quartet in A minor (1921) has a certain pastoral quality, with Irish echoes in the dance rhythms and ending on a flamboyant Rondo. The String Trio of 1931, beautifully written with no feeling of thinness, is even subtler, with the pastoral idiom more equivocal in its tonal shiftings. The Naxos CD also offers something of a discovery in the form of an earlier Quartet in E flat. Although it is not a masterpiece, there are some quite inspired things in it and the Maggini play throughout with great dedication and commitment. The recording is very lifelike and present. A first-class bargain.

COMPLETE PIANO MUSIC

Bank Holiday; 3 Fancies (Windmills; Elegy; Burlesque); 2 Legends (Folk Story; Rune); On a May Morning; 3 Pieces (The Lake Island; Autumn Woods; At a Horse Fair); 2 Pieces (Prelude; Berceuse); Stalham River; Summer Valley; Theme and Variations; Toccata. Trad. arr. Moeran: Irish Love Song; The White Mountain

 ASV CDDCA 1138. Hunt

Moeran was born in Middlesex but was buried in County Kerry in his beloved Ireland. Much of this music is unashamedly folksy. Bank Holiday, which opens the programme genially, 'tips its hat' to Percy Grainger, but most of the pieces are evocative and atmospheric, even the arrangement of the Irish tune, best known as 'Star of the County Down', which he called The White Mountain. The other arrangement, Irish Love Song, is simpler, a lovely melody which was later to become an Irish Lament for cello and piano. On a May Morning opens dreamily but has a lively central dance; on the other hand, the iridescent Toccata has a soft centre. Summer Valley, in lilting 6/8, has a Delian air. The most ambitious piece here is the Theme and (six) Variations. The theme is reminiscent of another folk tune, the variations flow into each other naturally and the work is in some ways more like a Fantasia. Fine, sensitive performances throughout from Una Hunt, well recorded. Generous measure too (77 minutes): a delightful disc to dip into rather than play all through.

Piano pieces: Bank Holiday; 2 Legends; Prelude and Berceuse; Stalham River; Toccata; The White Mountain

 Lyrita (ADD) SRCD 266. Parkin – BAINES: Piano music ***

These piano pieces, which date from the 1920s, are highly agreeable, fresh and enjoyable in their English adaptation of Debussian trends. The White Mountain is a charmingly simple setting of a very familiar Irish folk tune. Excellent recording.

MOMPOU, Federico (1893–1987)

Complete Piano Music

Canciónes y danzas 1–12, 14; Cants mágics; Chanson de berceuse; Charmes; Dialogues; Fêtes lointaines; Impresiones intimas; Musica callada, Books 1–4; Pessebres; Préludes; Scènes d'enfants; Souvenirs de l'Exposition; Surburbis; 3 Variations; Variations sur un thème de Chopin

Ⓑ (*) Nim. NI 5724/7 (4). M.Jones

Martin Jones has already given us some fine recordings, including a first-rate set of the piano music of Percy Grainger. Now he turns to another miniaturist. Born in Barcelona, Mompou studied in Paris and his music is a fascinating mixture of Catalan and French influences, though in its colouring and textures the French influence is strong. There are plenty of fine individual CDs of this composer's music, but for collectors who want to explore the entire repertoire, Jones is a sound guide, at home in its diverse moods and colours. One feels at times he could be more chimerical and seek more translucent textures, but his simplicity of approach is a plus point and, with truthful recording, this can certainly be recommended to musical explorers.

Canciónes y danzas 1–12; 14; Cants mágics; Suburbis

(BB)  Warner Apex 8573 89228-2. Heisser

Jean-François Heisser displays a natural sympathy for Mompou's elusive world, and besides the Canciónes y danzas and Cants mágics he offers also the rarer early work, Suburbis (1916/17), which evokes the suburbs of Barcelona. The second and third of the five pieces are concerned with the gypsies, followed by a touching portrait of a little blind girl (La ceguetta), while the last is a lively picture of a street organ player. At its modest cost and very well recorded, this is well worth having.

Canciónes y danzas 1–12, 14; Charmes; Scènes d'enfants

(BB)  Naxos 8.554332. Masó

In many ways Jordi Masó's excellent Naxos collection is not upstaged by the competition. Moreover this is to be the first of a continuing series. He gives us the complete Canciónes y danzas (except for 13, which is for guitar), plus the engagingly diverse, but at times almost mystical Charmes, and his playing is imbued with gentle poetic feeling. Masó's pianistic sensibility is never self-aware, always at the service of the composer, and the music's soft-hued colours are perceptively graduated. The unostentatious innocence of the Scènes d'enfants is beautifully caught. Excellent recording makes this a disc to recommend even if it cost far more than it does.

Canciónes y danzas 1, 3, 5, 7, 8–9; Cants mágics; Charmes; Dialogues I–II; Paisajes; Preludios 1, 5 (Palmier d'étoiles), 6 (for the left hand), 7, 9–10; 3 Variations

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66963. Hough

This exceptionally generous (77 minutes) and wide-ranging Gramophone Award-winning recital makes an obvious first choice for those wanting to explore, on a single CD, the fullest possible range of Mompou's piano music. Stephen Hough, who provides the illuminating notes, imaginatively describes this as 'the music of evaporation ... There is no development of material, little counterpoint, no drama or climaxes to speak of; and this simplicity of expression – elusive, evasive and shy – is strangely disarming.' He is completely inside Mompou's fastidious, Satie-esque sound-world and understands the absorbed influences which make this music as much French as Spanish. The recording too is excellent if a little reverberant. Not even Mompou himself equalled, let alone surpassed, Hough in this repertoire.

Musica callada, Books I–IV; 3 Variations

Ⓜ  HM HMI 987070. Perianes

Musica callada, Books I–IV; El pont; Muntanya (Dansa)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.554727. Masó

Jordi Masó's survey of Mompou's piano music continues with the Musica callada – 28 pieces which appeared in four volumes between 1959 and 1967. The title comes from the Cántico espiritual and means 'music without sound' although this is complemented with the additional description Soledad sonora ('insistent solitude'). The very first piece, Angelico, creates the work's atmosphere and other pieces are called Placid, Tranquillo – trè calme, Luminoso and so on. The problem for the performer is that almost all this music is slow and reflective (the Lento marking reappears frequently), and it has to be said that this is not entirely solved here. Jordi Masó is by no means insensitive, but although he is well recorded, the colouring remains monochrome. The two impressionistic pieces which close the recital are El pont ('The Bridge') and Muntanya ('Mountain'). They have not been recorded before and make successful encores.

The Spanish pianist Javier Perianes is obviously completely at home in this extraordinarily static repertoire and – provided one does not listen to more than a few of the pieces at a time – he holds the listener's attention and is very well recorded. Moreover, he finds more colour in the music than his Naxos competitor.

MONDONVILLE, Jean-Joseph Cassanéa de (1711–72)

VOCAL MUSIC

Grands motets: De profundis; Venite exultemus; Petits motets: Benefac Domine; In decachordo psalterio; Regna terrae

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55038. Fisher, Daniels, Varcoe, New College, Oxford, Ch., L. Bar. Ens., Higginbottom

Mondonville's Grands Motets were modelled on those of Delalande, but are even finer and more individual. This outstanding CD includes his De profundis, a remarkably diverse setting of verses 1–8 of Psalm 129. The performance is of very high quality. The opening De profundis clamavi is wonderfully ethereal, with boy trebles set back in the atmospheric Oxford acoustic. Their refined approach is matched by the ravishingly pure soprano line of Gillian Fisher, while the closing Requiem aeternam floats celestially.

Higginbottom's Helios collection then offers another rather less grand motet, but one which alongside De profundis was greatly popular and frequently performed in its day. It is more lyrical, less dramatic and textually simpler – a radiant expression of praise.

The three solo Petits motets with their modest harpsichord and continuo accompaniments are altogether more intimate but no less valuable, each showing Gillian Fisher in glorious voice (indeed this CD is worth having for her contribution alone), while Edward Higginbottom exchanges his baton for the harpsichord keyboard. Altogether this is a delightful bargain collection, given state-of-the-art sound.

MONIUSZKO, Stanislaw
(1819–72)

The Haunted Manor (opera; complete)

Ⓜ  EMI 5 57489-2 (2). Kruszewski, Hossa, Lubańska, Stachura, Nowacki, Toczyska, Polish Nat. Op. Ch. & O, Kaspszyk

Moniuszko, the leading Polish romantic after Chopin, is generally remembered, if at all, by his opera Halka, a tragic story set against a peasant background. Yet in almost every way The Haunted Manor, one of the hidden treasures of Polish opera, is more original, more inventive and, above all, more attractive with its tuneful sequence of ensembles.

Two shuddering chords at the very start reflect the title, but then the first scene sets quite a different tone of voice in a rousing military ensemble, when two brothers, Stefan and Zbigniev, on leaving their comrades, swear they will never marry, so as always to be ready to fight for their country. The manner is as close to Gilbert and Sullivan as to Smetana, with a dash of Donizetti thrown in. The main haunting scene anticipates the G. & S. 'Ghosts' High Noon Scene' in Ruddigore, with portraits coming to life. The brothers wake up to the fact that they are both in love, Stefan with Hanna, Zbigniev with Jadwiga.

Though ensembles predominate, each of the main characters is given a big showpiece aria. The one for Hanna is particularly impressive, with its Donizettian coloratura brilliantly sung by the bright-toned Iwona Hossa. Anna Lubańska with her firm, warm mezzo is also impressive as Jadwiga; but the casting of the two brothers is not so strong, with the lusty tenor Dariusz Stachura strained as Stefan, not attacking notes cleanly, and Piotr Nowacki as Zbigniev happier in fast music than sustained melody. Best of all is Adam Kruszewski in the central role of Miecznik, the Sword-Bearer, a fine baritone with a timbre not unlike Sir Thomas Allen's. Add on a few buffo characters and a formidable aunt figure, strongly taken by Stefania Toczyska, and you have a splendidly successful entertainment, with superb playing and singing from the Polish National Opera Chorus and Orchestra, dynamically conducted from first to last by Jacek Kaspszyk.

MONTEVERDI, Claudio
(1567–1643)

'The Full Monteverdi' (A film by John La Bouchardière), including Madrigals: Book IV

Ⓝ Ⓑ * Naxos DVD 2.110224. I Fagiolini, Hollingworth (Director of photography: Nick Gordon Smith)

Do you want to listen to Monteverdi's Fourth Book of Madrigals – superbly sung as it is by I Fagiolini – against a film backcloth centring on six vulnerable couples in a restaurant (and elsewhere) whose relationships are falling apart? Each couple features a singer and a (non-singing) actor, with the singer miming to the music. Amazingly (or perhaps not amazingly) the singers are often as dramatically convincing as their theatrical partners, and the result can be very touching, particularly as the cameras are beautifully handled. Subtitles are available.

Canzonette (1584)

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.553316. Concerto delle Dame di Ferrara, Vartolo

Monteverdi's very first publication in 1582 was the Sacrae cantiunculae tribus vocibus, and a collection of Madrigali spirituali in four parts followed in 1585. The following year brought the present set of Canzonette, delightful works for three voices. Their title-page makes the point that Monteverdi was just 17, and they are dedicated to the composer's 'master and patron', Pietro Ambrosisi of Cremona, and the music itself is fresh and engaging, as indeed are all these comparatively simple settings of poems about love (mostly unrequited) and consequent desperate longing. But Monteverdi has a twinkle in his eye in giving Godi pur dei bei sen an appropriate jumping rhythm, for the poem begins: 'Delight, happy flea, in the fair bosom where you leap and ever sweetly bite.'

This is very lightweight repertoire, to be sure, but the performances by the singers and string ensemble of Concerto delle Dame di Ferrara, directed by Sergio Vartolo, are most felicitous. A most enjoyable introduction to the early music of a composer who was later to write much greater music, but none with more charm. Excellent recording and full documentation, with texts and translations provided.

Madrigals, Books 1 (1587); 2 (1590); 3 (1592); 6 (1614) (all complete); 7, excerpts: Tempo la cetra; Tirsi e Clori. 8: Madrigali guerrieri; Madrigali amorosi; Opera-ballets: Il ballo delle ingrate; Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda; Volgendo il ciel (1638) (complete)

(BB) (*) Virgin 5 62268-2 (7). Kirkby, Tubb, Nichols, Agnew, King, Ewing and soloists, Cons. of Musicke, Rooley

Anthony Rooley recorded almost all the Monteverdi

Madrigals between 1990 and 1996. Two-thirds of the texts in Book 1 are concerned with love's disappointments, the words full of torments, which gives Monteverdi plenty of opportunity for expressive dolour. This first disc also includes two excerpts from Book 7, including the charming pastoral ballet, Tirsi e Clori, written for the Mantuan court and extolling the joys of requited love and faithfulness. Book 2 is also more simple in its appeal and imagery than the later writing but, like Book 1, it all comes to life freshly, including the very effective Tasso settings.

With Books 3 and 4 we move to some of Monteverdi's finest madrigals, often dazzling, in which his originality began to make itself felt to the full. Moreover these are masterly performances, the flexibility and control of dramatic contrasts conveying consistent commitment. Book 6 includes the five-part transcription of the Lamento d'Arianna and Zefiro torno, two of the composer's masterpieces, and also works from Monteverdi's years at Mantua.

Monteverdi published his ambitious Volume 8 after a long gap in his madrigal output. It includes one of the very greatest examples in Lamento della ninfa, in what the composer described as the stile rappresentativo or theatre style, plus the well-known opera-ballets. The performances here continue to be polished and distinctive, and the cast-list is strong.

For the most part, however, this reissued collection represents a considerable achievement for Rooley and his singers and instrumentalists, with first-class recording throughout. The set is most inexpensive, but the documentation is sparse, with no texts and translations.

Madrigals, Book 2 (complete)

🔑 * Opus 111 OP 30-111. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini
 Glossa GCD 920922. La Venexiana, Cavina

Rinaldo Alessandrini and his superb Concerto Italiano are singing their sunny Italianate way through Monteverdi's complete madrigal sequence. Apart from being of Italian birth, all the performers here have studied early Italian and therefore bring a special idiomatic feeling to the words. The Second Book, about half of whose five-part settings are from Tasso, demands and receives a simpler style of presentation than the later works, and there is radiant freshness about the singing here which is particularly appealing. The recording has the most pleasing acoustic.

The alternative performances from La Venexiana directed by Claudio Cavina have similar Italian flair and hardly less eloquence. They are particularly strong in bringing out the rich lyricism of the Second Book with its poetic evocations of nature, yet the love songs have a fine delicacy of passionate feeling (Dolcemente, dormiva la mia Clori is delightful), while the depth of distress expressed in Crudel, perché mi fuggi? is truly poignant. The generously expansive acoustic provides an admirable setting for a group in which individual voices can soar and blend with equal felicity. Excellent documentation and pleasing packaging.

Madrigals, Book 3 (complete)

 Glossa GCD 920910. La Venexiana, Cavina

At the heart of Book III is the so-called 'nuovo stile' which anticipates operatic recitativo and aria. The two dramatically expressive highlights of the Book are Vattene pur cudel, the lament of Armida, abandoned by Rinaldo, while the declamatory Vivrò fra i mieie tormenti (also a setting of Tasso) is the continuation of the celebrated Combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda, which Monteverdi was to set in full in Book VIII. These are sung quite dramatically by La Venexiana and with deep feeling, but their style is less histrionic than one would expect from the Concerto Italiano.

Madrigals, Book 4 (complete)

🔑  Naïve OP 30-81. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Madrigals, Books 4–5 (complete). Book 7: Con che soavità, labbra odorate; Tempro la cetra. Book 8: (Madrigali guerrieri et amorosi): Mentre vaga; Ogni amante è guerrier

Ⓑ  O-L Double 455 718-2 (2). Consort of Musicke, Rooley

Madrigals, Book 5 (complete)

🔑 ✿ * Naïve OPS 30-166. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

The Fourth Book, published in 1603 and again for five voices, marks an added richness of expressive feeling over Monteverdi's earlier settings, well recognized by Rinaldo Alessandrini and his superbly blended vocal group. This series goes from strength to strength and can be strongly recommended. The recording continues to match the singing in excellence.

Under Anthony Rooley, the well-integrated singers of the Consort of Musicke, led by Emma Kirkby, give masterly performances of the Fourth Book, which suits their vocal style especially well. Book 5 marked a turning point in Monteverdi's madrigal output, for the last six works bring an obligatory continuo and are much freer in style than their predecessors, even semi-operatic in their use of freely individual vocal solos. It might be said that the change of style in the singing from the Consort of Musicke is less marked than in the competing (full-priced) collection of these works by the Concerto Italiano directed by Rinaldo Alessandrini, whose singing is distinctly Italianate and more extrovert. Nevertheless the comparatively restrained approach of Rooley's group brings its own rewards, and their refinement is reflected in the delicate lute continuo in the later numbers.

Madrigals, Book 6 (1614)

🔑 * Naïve OP 30423. Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

In Book VI Rinaldo Alessandrini and the Concerto Italiano come completely into their own with their passionate account of the opening four-part scena, the famous Lamento d'Arianna, especially in their arrestingly plangent singing of Part 3: 'Where is the fidelity that so often you swore to me . . . Are these the crowns you place upon my brow?' The second number is the equally famous Zefiro torna, which with its dancing rhythms provides a lighter expressive contrast, but then produces an astonishingly dissonant ending, very powerfully sung. A Dio torna is a touching operatic dialogue between a pair of lovers with the larger concerto group giving the central narration and an encouraging comment, before the final parting. Batto, qui pianse Ergaste brings even more contrasts of mood and tempo, with the heroine, Clori (represented by a pair of sopranos in duet), chasing a fleeing doe, her devoted swain following. This is an outstanding disc in every way which it will be difficult to match, let alone surpass.

Madrigals, Book 7 (1619) (complete)

 Glossa GCD 920927 (2). La Venexiana, Instrumental Ens., Cavina

To describe the new style of his madrigals in Book 7 of 1619, Monteverdi used the term 'stile concitato' or concerto, and departed from his previous standard five-part format to embrace a wide variety of voicing: works for a solo voice are found alongside settings for two, three, four and six voices, with the duets often for two of the same genre: soprano, contralto or tenor. To introduce the listener to his use of instrumental accompaniments, he opens with a brief sinfonia, and to point to the future, he closes with a charming extended pastoral dance cantata, Tirsi e Clori, which is delightfully sung here. Indeed the enlarged La Venexiana and their accompanying instrumental group obviously relish the expanded style and the wide variety of mood, impassioned, joyful, dolorous and sensuous by turns; and again their standard of performance is consistently high, as is the quality of the warmly atmospheric recording. Full texts and translations are included.

Madrigals, Book 8: Madrigali guerrieri et amorosi: Volume I: Sinfonia: Altri canti d'amor; Lamento della ninfa; Vago augelletto; Perchè t'en fuggi, o Fillide?; Altri canti di Marte; Due belli occhi fur l'ami; Ogni amante è guerrier; Hor che'l ciel e la terra; Gira il nemico, insidioso Amore; Dolcissimo usignolo; Ardo, ardo avvampo

🔑 ❀ * Naïve OP 30435 (3). Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

 HM HMC 90 1736/7. Kiehr, Haller, Martins, Fink, Laporte, Bowen, Ovenden, Zeffiri, Rensberg, Torres, Abete, Delaigue, Concerto Vocale, Jacobs

(BB) (*) Virgin 2x1 5 61570-2 (2). Soloists, Consort of Musicke, Rooley

Rinaldo Alessandrini and his Concerto Italiano continued their superlative series of recordings of Monteverdi's madrigals with Book 8, Madrigals of War and Love. As before, the singing combines Italianate fire and lyricism in ideal proportions and the instrumental accompaniments could hardly be finer. The disc includes famous items like the three-part Lamento della ninfa and the two-part Hor che'l ciel el la terra. The recording too is first class. The second disc also includes the three-part Lamento della ninfa and the two-part Hor che'l ciel e la terra. Finally, the third disc includes some of Monteverdi's most adventurous and dramatically varied settings, ending with the spectacular Mentre vaga Angioletta and the equally complex Ninfa che scalza il piede ('Nymph who, barefoot, loose-locked and carefree') with its many changes of mood and metre. The recording is first class and this now makes a clear first choice.

René Jacobs and his Concerto Vocale, with a host of outstanding singers led by Maria Cristina Kiehr, now make a major contribution in this increasingly competitive field, and they come out with flying colours. That is not to say that they surpass Alessandrini and his Italian group, but they are very impressive in their own right, even in the demanding Lamento della ninfa and Hor che'l ciel et la terra. Jacobs and his singers are at their most dramatic in the famous opéra-ballets, Il ballo delle ingrate and Il combattimento. But here Alessandrini and his Concerto Italiano are even finer, a clear primary choice. However, overall this Harmonia Mundi set is very rewarding.

The Madrigali guerrieri are very theatrical and include Il ballo delle ingrate and Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda, which are also available separately in other individual versions (see below). The performances on Virgin are impressive, and anyone collecting Rooley's series should find this inexpensive Double well worth its modest cost. The cast list is strong, including Emma Kirkby and Evelyn Tubb, but Andrew King is the narrator in Il combattimento and his approach is less than robustly full-blooded, while in both works the performances under Christie (see below) are more dramatically arresting.

Madrigals, Book 8 (excerpts): Madrigali guerrieri et amorosi: Altri canti d'amor; Altri cante di marte; Il Gira il nemico; Hor che'l ciel e la terra; Lamento della ninfa; 2 Sinfonias; Volgendo il ciel movete al mio bel suon (Ballo)

Ⓜ  Astrée ES 9944. Figueras, Tiso, Banditelli, Climent, Carnovich, Garrigosa, Costa, La Capella Reial de Catalunya, Savall

Savall's way with Monteverdi's Book 8 is, above all tremendously vital: his singers emphasize the strong rhythmic contrasts of the Madrigali guerrieri. There are some very fine voices in his team, none lacking individuality of character, yet blending splendidly, as at the opening of Hor che'l ciel e la terra. Montserrat Figueras, Lambert Climent (tenor) and Daniele Carnovich (bass) stand out, and Figueras is at her glorious best in the famous Lamento della ninfa. This is an excellent anthology in all respects and full translations are included.

Madrigals, Book 8: Opera-Ballet

Altri canti d'Amor; Il ballo delle ingrate; Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda; Volgendo il ciel (Ballo movt)

(BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55165. Red Byrd, Parley of Instruments, Holman

(i) Il ballo delle ingrate; (ii) Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda

🔑 * Naïve OP 30-196. (i) Ermolli, Dominguez, Carnovich, Franzetti; (ii) Franzetti, Ferrarini, Abbondanza; Concerto Italiano, Alessandrini

Il ballo delle ingrate; Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda; Tirsi e Clori; Tempo la cetra

(BB) * Warner Apex 2564 6181-2. Tragicomedia, Stubbs

Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda

Ⓑ  HM HMA 195 1626. Semeliaz, Brand, Rovenq, Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda; Arias and Duets

🔑 * Virgin 3 63350-2. Villazón, Ciofi, Lehtipuu, Le Concert d'Astrée, Haim

There is no more commandingly dramatic account of Il combattimento on record than this Italianate version from Rinaldo Alessandrini, with superb singing from all three principals. Roberto Abbondanza is a splendidly histrionic narrator, and in the death scene Elisa Franzetti, singing her farewell, is exquisitely moving. Franzetti returns at the end of Il ballo delle ingrate to bid an eloquent adieu on behalf of the ungrateful souls, condemned for rebelling against earthly love, to be echoed by Monteverdi's infinitely poignant closing chorus from her companions. The performance overall is cast from strength. Daniele Carnovich is a true basso profundo and makes a superb Pluto, but Francesca Ermolli and Rosa Dominguez are equally fine as Amor and Venus, respectively. The vivid recording is warmly atmospheric.

Red Byrd is an impressive vocal group and in Il combattimento John Potter narrates more colloquially than his competitors, yet builds up plenty of excitement in the heat of the battle, while Catherine Pierard as Clorinda sings her closing threnody very touchingly. Il ballo is also characterized most effectively. Richard Wistrech makes a striking Pluto, his low notes resonating tellingly, and at the close, after the beautiful lament from Pierard's Ungrateful Spirit, the charming little closing chorus is made to fade into the distance as the Lost Souls (who were 'so esteemed in the world' for their chaste purity) return to their dark abode in Pluto's kingdom. The major works are interspersed with two short but unexpectedly appealing works, written in praise of the Austrian Emperor Ferdinand III, 'Let others sing of Love . . . You whose immortal crown is woven from the laurels of Caesar' and a light-hearted ballet with a Poet as soloist and chorus: 'Turning in the sky along its immortal path the wheels of glorious and serene light, the sun brings back the age of peace under the new King of the Roman Empire.' Excellent recording, and full texts and translations.

Besides Il ballo and Il combattimento, Stephen Stubbs and Tragicomedia offer another opera-ballet written for the Mantuan court, Tirsi e Clori, a dialogue between two lovers celebrating both the spirit of love and the dance, while the solo madrigal, Tempro la cetra, eloquently sung by John Potter, acts as a dramatic prelude, 'I tune the lyre', though it lines up with Il combattimento rather than Il ballo. These two major works are strongly cast: the female dialogues are delightfully sung, and Harry van der Kempe is a dramatically commanding Pluto, with splendid lower tessitura. Il combattimento could not be more moving, with Douglas Nasrawi's narration rising to fever-pitch at the climax of the battle itself, then eloquently expressing the tragedy of the result. Excellent recording and full texts and translations make this irresistible at super-budget price.

Rolando Villazón is a superbly histrionic narrator in Il combattimento, and there is thrilling vocal virtuosity at the climax of the battle, with Clorinda's poignant dying words sung very gently. This is as fine as any version on record, but it is surprising that Il ballo delle ingrate is not offered as a coupling. Instead, we have a spectacularly sung collection of arias and duets in which all three singers, Villazón, Patrizia Ciofi and Topi Lehtipuu, have ample opportunities to show their vocal prowess in some marvellously varied music. Standing out is Villazón's movingly expressive Sì dolci è 'l tormento with its melancholy downward scale, and Patrizia Ciofi's contrasting Ohimè ch'io cado Ohimè.

Christie's account of Il combattimento is also very dramatic, with the storytelling vividly projected and with Françoise Semeliaz a touching Clorinda in the tragic closing scene. The recording is admirably vivid too. The libretto is in Italian and French only, but the narrative is easy enough to follow.

Other Madrigal collections

Madrigals from Books 4, 5, 7 & 8; Orfeo: Prologue & Sinfonia

🔑 * Chan. 0730. I Fagiolini, Hollingworth

Madrigals from Books 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 & 8; Ballo: Tirsi e Clori; Ballo delle ingrate: Sinfonia

🔑 * Chan. 0749. I Faglioni, Hollingworth

In this new Chandos series, Robert Hollingworth and his vocal and instrumental group, I Fagiolini, have sought an individual approach to presenting Monteverdi's wealth of secular madrigals. Hollingworth argues that recordings of complete volumes of Monteverdi's madrigals is not the ideal way for the listener to approach them. He suggests instead creating individual programmes 'juxtaposing masterworks for different dispositions and, in so doing, aiming to keep the aural palette refreshed'. In addition care has been taken over the choice of continuo for individual items. For instance, one of the highlights of the first disc is Con che sovità, written for solo voice and three instrumental groups. There is not space to dwell on the beauty of individual madrigals. All of those here are gloriously sung and played. The second collection is, if anything, finer than the first, ranging from the sensuously explicit Sì ch'io vorrei morire, where the lover wishes to die in his moment of ecstasy, the adoring Chiome d'oro ('Golden tresses'), the ardent Ogni amante è guerrier ('Every lover is a warrior') to the extended lament at the beloved's tomb, Lagrime d'amante al sepolcro dell-amata. The collection ends with the familiar ballo, Thirsis and Cloris, where the pair unendingly dance together in increasing joy in the world around them.

Madrigals: Ab aeterno ordinata sum; Confitebor tibi, Domine (3 settings); Deus tuorum militum sors et corona; Iste confessor Domini sacratus; Laudate

Dominum, O omnes gentes; La Maddalena: Prologue: Su le penne de venti; Nisi Dominus aedificaverit domum

🔑 ✿ * Hyp. CDA 66021. Kirkby, Partridge, Thomas, Parley of Instruments

There are few recordings of Monteverdi's solo vocal music as persuasive as this. The three totally contrasted settings of Confitebor tibi (Psalm 110) reveal an extraordinary range of expression, each one drawing out different aspects of word-meaning. Even the brief trio, Deus tuorum militum, has a haunting memorability – it could become to Monteverdi what Jesu, joy of man's desiring is to Bach – and the performances are outstanding, with the edge on Emma Kirkby's voice attractively presented in an aptly reverberant acoustic. The accompaniment makes a persuasive case for authentic performance on original instruments. The CD sounds superb (but has been withdrawn).

Madrigals: Addio Florida bella; Ahi com'a un vago sol; E cosi a poco a poco torno farfella; Era l'anima mia; Luci serene e chiare; Mentre vaga Angioletta ogn'anima; Ninfa che scalza il piede; O mio bene, a mia vita; O Mirtillo, anima mia; Partenza amorosa; Se pur destina; Taci, Armelin deh taci; T'amo mia vita; Troppo ben può questo tiranno amore

(B)  HM (ADD) HMC 1951084. Concerto Vocale, Jacobs

A highly attractive collection of generally neglected items, briskly and stylishly performed. The most celebrated of the singers is the male alto, a fine director as well as a soloist. But since this disc was first issued in 1983, Barbara Schlick, Marius van Altena and Guy de Mey have also established themselves. With continuo accompaniment – the common factor in this programme, in which no a cappella madrigals are included – the contrasting of vocal timbres is superbly achieved. An excellent recording, well transferred to CD.

Madrigali concertati: Augelin, che la voce; Eccomi pronta ai baci; Ecco vicine, o belle tigre; Gira il nemico insidioso; Lamento della ninfa; Mentre vaga Angioletta; Ninfa, che scalza il piede; Ogni amante è guerrier; Perché fuggi; S'ei vostro cor, Madonna; Soave libertate; Tornate, o cari baci; Vaga su spina ascosa; Zefiro torna (Ciaccona)

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60710-2. Soloists, Tragicomedia, Stubbs

These concerted madrigals come from the Seventh and Eighth Books. Those from the Seventh are written in from one to six concerted parts, with the theme of love predominating. Such as the masterly vocal chaconne Zefiro torna ('Summer breezes'), which seems to be in all such collections. The madrigals from the Eighth Book include the extended Ogni amante è guerrier ('Every lover is a warrior') with its martial oratory, and the melancholy Lamento della ninfa, with its stabs of dissonance at the loss of a beloved. The members of Tragicomedia never disappoint, and this is a well-chosen collection, readily demonstrating the amazing range of Monteverdi's madrigals. As the essential texts and translations are included, this well-recorded disc is a bargain.

Madrigals (duets and solos): Chiome d'oro, bel thesoro; Il son pur vezzosetta pastorella; Non è gentil core; O come sei gentile, caro angellino; Ohimé dov'é il mio ben?; Se pur destina e vole il cielo, partenza amorosa. Sacred music: Cantate Domino; Exulta, filia Sion; Iste confessione II; Laudate Dominum in sanctis eius; O bone Jesu, o piissime Jesu; Sancta Maria, succurre miseris; Venite, siccientes ad aquas Domini. Opera: Il ritorno d'Ulisse in patria: Di misera regina (Penelope's Lament)

🔑 (BB)  Regis RRC 1060. Kirkby, Tubb, Consort of Musicke, Rooley

Admirers of Emma Kirkby will surely revel in this collection, mostly of duets, in which she is joined by Evelyn Tubb. The two voices are admirably matched and both artists ornament their lines attractively and judiciously. Tubb is given a solo opportunity in Penelope's lament from Il ritorno d'Ulisse, which she sings dramatically and touchingly. Anthony Rooley's simple accompaniments with members of the Consort of Musicke are also imaginatively stylish. We are pleased to report that this inexpensive reissue has been properly documented.

Lamento d'Olympia; Maladetto sia l'aspetto; Ohimè ch'io cado; Quel sdengosetto; Voglio di vita uscia

 Hyp. CDA 66106. Kirkby, Rooley (chittarone) – D'INDIA: Lamento d'Olympia, etc. ***

A well-planned recital from Hyperion contrasts the two settings of Lamento d'Olympia by Monteverdi and his younger contemporary, Sigismondo d'India. The performances by Emma Kirkby, sensitively supported by Anthony Rooley, could hardly be surpassed. Her admirers can be assured that this ranks among her best records.

Sacred Music, Vol. I: Beatus vir I; Christe redemptor omnium; Confitebor Primo; Dixit [Dominus] Primo; Laudate Dominum omnes gentes; Laudate pueri Primo; Magnificat Primo; Missa a 4

 Hyp. SACDA; CDA 67428. Outram, Covey-Crump, Mulroy, Auchincloss, Daniels, Gilchrist, Harvey, Evans, King's Consort Ch. & O, King

Sacred Music, Vol. II: Cantate Domino; Currite populi; Ego dormio; Exultent caeli; Laudate Dominum; Letaniae della Beata Vergine; Messa a 4 voci; O beatae viae; Venite, siccientes

 Hyp. SACDA; CDA 67438. Sampson, Outram, Covey-Crump, Daniels, Gilchrist, Harvey, King's Consort Ch. & O, King

Sacred Music, Vol. III: Cantate Domino; Christe, adoramus te; Confitebor tibi III alla francese; Dixit Dominus II; Ecca sacrum paratum; Gloria in excelsis Deo; Lauda Jerusalem; Memento Domine David; Nisi Dominus I; Salve Regina II; Sancta Maria

 Hyp. SACDA; CDA 67487. Sampson, Outram, Auchincloss, Covey-Crump, Daniels, Gilchrist, Harvey, Evans, King's Consort Ch. & O, King

Sacred Music, Vol. IV: Adoramus te, Christe; Beatus vir II; Dixit Dominus II; Domine, ne in furore tuo; Exulta, filia Sion; Laetatus sum I; Laudate Dominum omnes gentes III; Magnificat II; Salve, o Regina, o Mater; Salve Regina; Salve Regina I; Sanctorum mritis II

 Hyp. SACDA; CDA 67519. Sampson, Outram, Osmond, Covey-Crump, Daniels, Auchincloss, Gilchrist, Harvey, Evans, King's Consort Ch. & O, King

Robert King and his King's Consort here offer their invaluable and comprehesive series of a relatively neglected part of Monteverdi's output, with masterpieces well sprinkled throughout these four volumes. Most of the works are motets, i.e. not part of the fixed church liturgy, and might be sung as interludes within a Mass or between the Psalms of a Vespers service, as with Laetatus sum. This is spectacularly set and, while based on a four-note ostinato, yet expands gloriously and at times reminds the listener of other, more familiar works, like the Beatus vir (included in Volume I) and the well-known Gloria. The fourth volume also includes a fascinating echo Salve Regina, very effectively realized here. Performances and recording throughout this fine series are of the highest quality and, as can be seen, each volume also comes as an SACD with the sound further expanded.

Mass of Thanksgiving (Venice 1631)

Ⓑ  Virgin 2x1 3 49993-2 (2). Taverner Consort Ch. & Players, Parrott

Andrew Parrott here presents a reconstruction of the Mass of Thanksgiving as performed in Venice on 21 November 1611. At the heart of the celebration lies Monteverdi's magnificent seven-part Gloria from his great collection, Selva morale e spirituale. The Kyrie sections of the Credo (including an amazing chromatic Crucifixus), the Offertory, Sanctus, Agnus Dei and a final Salve regina also come from that great collection. The only parts of the actual Mass written by another composer are the sections of the Credo that Monteverdi did not set. They are by Giovanni Rovetta, while other contemporaries of Monteverdi contributed the additional items, including Girolami Fantini, Giuseppe Scarani and Francesco Usper, to make a very grand whole. The recording is warmly atmospheric, with the brassy music at the opening and close approaching and receding, and with appropriate sound effects punctuating the ceremony. The performance is superb; the only reservation to make is that with only a little less linking material it would have been possible to fit the whole on to a single CD.

Motets: Cantate domino a 6; Domine ne in furore a 6; Missa da cappella a 4; Missa da cappella a 6 (in illo tempore)

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55145. The Sixteen, Christophers; Phillips

Harry Christophers draws superb singing from his brilliant choir, highly polished in ensemble but dramatic and deeply expressive too, suitably adapted for the different character of each Mass-setting, when the four-part Mass involves stricter, more consistent contrapuntal writing and the six-part, in what was then an advanced way, uses homophonic writing to underline key passages. Vivid, atmospheric recording.

Motets for solo voice: 'Pianto della Madonna': Confitebor tibi Domini (Missa a 4 voci e salmi, 1650*); Currite populi; Ecce sacrum paratum; O quam pulchra es (Ghirlanda sacra,* 1645*); Exulta, Filia Sion (Sacri canti,* 1629*); Jubilet a voce sola in dialogo; Lamento dell'Arianna: Pianto della Madonna; Laudate Dominum* (all from Selva morale e spirituale, 1640); Salve, O Regina (Sacre canti, 1624); Venite, videte (1625)

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * HM HMC 901680. Kiehr, Concerto Soave, Aymes (with MARINI: 2 Sinfonias (from Church Sonatas); Costanto ATEGNATI: Ricercar; Claudio MERULO: Toccata con minute)

Maria Cristina Kiehr's compilation is very beautiful. With the vocal items contrasted with short instrumental ritornellos by other musicians from the same period, we cannot praise this recital too highly. Every work is glorious and is ravishingly sung. Currite populi introduces a lovely flowing Alleluia; O quam pulchra es ('How fair thou art, my love') is permeated with an exquisite melancholy which returns in several later items, and especially the famous excerpt from the Lamento dell'Arianna, which gives the CD its title. The fresh, spring-like Jubilet has a delightful echo effect, with a nice touch of added resonance, and Exulta, Filia Sion is another joyful song, with florid runs and a jubilant closing Alleluia. The closing Laudate Dominum makes a wonderful apotheosis, with alleluias and echoing phrases adding to its paean of praise. Superb music, superb singing and playing, and warmly atmospheric recording all here combine to bring the listener the very greatest musical rewards.

Selva morale e spirituale (complete)

 HM HMC 901718/20 (3). Cantus Cöln, Concerto Palatino, Konrad Junghänel

These are performances marked by keen perception as well as energy. In his presentation Junghänel effectively solves one of the main problems of the whole: the very variety of the pieces, which range widely in their styles from pure polyphony to the latest developments of the mid-17th century, plainly drawn from all periods of Monteverdi's career. The original publication also had them in higgledy-piggledy order, and Junghänel has perceptively reordered them to present the first and third of the three CDs roughly as Vespers collections, with miscellaneous items on the second disc. It works well, with the 12 singers of Cantus Cöln led by the fine soprano, Johanna Koslowsky, offering ample variety of colour and expression to keep concentration. A superb achievement, helped by fine, atmospheric recording.

Selva morale e spirituale: excerpts: Adoramus te; Beatus vir a 6 voci; Chi vol che m'innamori; Confitebor terzo alla francese; Confitebor tibi

Domine; E questa vita un lampo; Gloria a 7 voci; Laudate Dominum; O ciechi ciechi

Ⓑ  HM HMA 195 1250. Les Arts Florissants, Christie

Christie's programme here gives an idea of its range, from Beatus vir, the vivid large-scale Psalm-setting for six voices and violins, and the splendid seven-voiced Gloria, with its burst of vocal virtuosity at the opening, to the succinct Adoramus te, and the more modest Laudate Dominum for bass voice with continuo. All the performances here are imbued with a flowing vitality and combine breadth and devotional feeling with vocal and instrumental refinement. As usual from this source, the recording is admirably clear and spacious.

Vespro della Beata Vergine (Vespers) (DVD version)

🔑 ❀ * DG DVD 073 035-9; CD 429 565-2 (2). Monoyios, Pennicchi, Chance, Tucker, Robson, Naglia, Terfel, Miles, H.M. Sackbutts & Cornetts, Monteverdi Ch., L. Oratory Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

When in 1989 John Eliot Gardiner made his live recording in the grand setting of St Mark's, Venice, this film was made for BBC television. If on CD the reverberation and occasionally the balances of voices do not suit every listener, the video version makes everything plain, and the beauty and grandeur of the setting exactly match the glories of the music, superbly interpreted. It is good to find the young Bryn Terfel among the soloists, one of an outstanding team. Among the bonus items is an illuminating 20-minute introduction by Gardiner himself, also filmed in Venice. He outlines the music and its composition, with a brief portrait of the composer, and emphasizes his own devotion to this of all works, which played a key part in his emergence as a conductor, evoking a sense of joy in him whenever he returns to it.

Vespro della Beata Vergine (Vespers) (CD versions)

 DG 477 6147 (2). Gabrieli Consort & Players, McCreesh

 BIS CD 1071/2 (2). Midori Suzuki, Nonoshita, Hatano, Türk, Van Dyke, Taniguchi, MacLeod, Ogasawara, Bach Coll. Japan Ch. & O, Masaaki Suzuki

 Hyp. CDA 67531/2 (2). Sampson, Daniels, Gilchrist, Harvey, King's Consort and Ch., Robert King

Ⓝ Ⓜ  EMI 2 12685-2 (2). Kirkby, Covey-Crump, Rogers, Thomas, Taverner Consort & Players, Parrott

(BB)  Hyp. Dyad CDD 22028 (2). The Sixteen, Christophers

Like Sir John Eliot Gardiner on his version recorded in the ample acoustic of St Mark's, Venice, Paul McCreesh and the Gabrieli Consort offer a performance of the Vespers that attempts to follow liturgical practice. Yet where Gardiner's ample acoustic brings its inconsistencies of balance, McCreesh, recording in the helpful acoustic of Tonbridge Hall, has a much more controllable acoustic, while still conveying the impression of a live event. The result is a smaller-scale, more intimate reading of this iconic work, very well recorded.

Suzuki's fine set aims to include not just the Vespers, complete with the grand Magnificat in seven voices, but the other items in the collection which Monteverdi published in 1610. Following the example of Andrew Parrott, Suzuki has chosen to transpose the music down a fourth not only for the two settings of the Magnificat, but for the Mass and the Lauda Jerusalem, each written in a combination of high clefs. It makes a satisfying and generous package, very well performed and warmly recorded. The scale is not as grand as in Gardiner's version nor as intimate as Philip Pickett's. The reverberation often obscures detail in the big choral numbers, but the balance is excellent between solo voices and choir, and the approach is characteristically lively and well sprung in the way one expects of this fine choral conductor. A first-rate recommendation, particularly with such generous bonuses.

Robert King crowns his Monteverdi series for Hyperion including not only the usual text but also the other two works that appeared in the same 1610 publication, the six-part Magnificat and the Missa illo tempore. The six-part work is less elaborate than the seven-part Magnificat from the Vespers proper, but it offers a valuable alternative. As King points out, the six-part work offers the alternative of organ accompaniment on its own, instead of orchestral accompaniment. The opening may seem disconcertingly bare, when King rejects the idea of using material from the prelude to the opera, Orfeo, yet the result is tautly dramatic too. The soloists make an excellent team, all singers regularly associated with King and his outstanding work, notably Carolyn Sampson and James Gilchrist. Warmly atmospheric recording, that yet allows plenty of detail to be heard.

Though Andrew Parrott uses minimal forces, with generally one instrument and one voice per part, so putting the work on a chamber scale in a small church setting, its grandeur comes out superbly through its very intensity. Brilliant singing here by the virtuoso soloists, above all by Nigel Rogers, whose distinctive timbre may not suit every ear but who has an airy precision and flexibility to give expressive meaning to even the most taxing passages. Fine contributions too from Parrott's chosen groups of players and singers, and warm, atmospheric recording. This now at mid-price is one of EMI's 'Great Recordings of the Century'.

The Sixteen's version presents a liturgical performance of what Graham Dixon suggests as Monteverdi's original conception. In practice the occasional changes of text are minimal; the booklet accompanying the set even includes an order of tracks if anyone wishes to hear the Vespers in traditional form. As it is, the performance includes not only relevant Gregorian chant but antiphon substitutes, including a magnificent motet of Palestrina, obviously relevant, Gaude Barbara. The scale of the performance is very satisfying, with The Sixteen augmented to 22 singers (7.4.6.5) and with members of the group taking the eight solo roles.

OPERA

L'Incoronazione di Poppea; L'Orfeo; Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria (complete; DVD version)

(*) DG DVD 734 278 (5). Huttenlocher, Schmidt, Hermann, Linos; Hollweg, Schmidt, Estes, Perry, Huttenlocher; Tappy, Yakar, Schmidt, Esswood, Perry, Oliver; Zürich Op., Monteverdi Ensemble, Harnoncourt. (Dir: Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, V/D: Roland Ott)

DG's five-disc set brings together the three ground-breaking productions presented at the Zürich Opera House in 1978/9 with Nikolaus Harnoncourt conducting and with production and lavish designs by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle. They were each filmed in Vienna, with the sound recordings made in Zürich and with the singers miming to the film. These productions and performances are very much of their period. With a whole range of star singers in each opera, not normally associated with period performance, the results are still very involving. In L'Orfeo, Harnoncourt has in the title-role a weighty baritone, Philippe Huttenlocher, stylish but not the sort of voice one would latterly expect. Trudeliese Schmidt sings warmly as the allegorical figure of Music, and Detlinde Turban is a bright, pure Euridice. Roland Hermann is a fine Apollo, and the incidental roles of the Shepherds and others are well-taken. Il Ritorno d'Ulisse has Werner Hollweg expressive in the title-role, with Trudeliese Schmidt as a fresh, youthful Penelope, and with Simon Estes as Antinoo. The final reunion duet of Ulisse and Penelope is most moving.

Most successful of the three performances is L'Incoronazione di Poppea. Here even more strikingly there is an impressive line-up of stars not normally associated with period performance, led by the Swiss tenor, Eric Tappy, as Nerone and Rachel Yakar as Poppea, with Trudeliese Schmidt weightily tragic as Ottavia and Matti Salminen darkly intense as Seneca. The jolly duet of celebration between Nerone and Lucano after Seneca's suicide is sparkingly done. Memorable too is the singing of the counter-tenor, Paul Esswood as Ottone, one of the few counter-tenors in these productions. Excellent too are Janet Perry as Drusilla and above all Alexander Oliver, a favourite at Glyndebourne in the drag part of the Nurse Arnalta. Setting the seal on a fine performance is the final duet between Nerone and Poppea, the loveliest (and most immoral) in all Monteverdi.

L'Incoronazione di Poppea (complete DVD versions)

🔑 * Bel Air DVD BAC 004. Delunsch, von Otter, Brunet, Hellekant, Sedov, Fouchécourt, Les Musiciens du Louvre, Minkowski (V/D: Vincent Bataillon)

🔑 * Warner NVC Arts DVD 0630 16914-2. Ewing, Bailey, Clarey, Duesing, Lloyd, Gale, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Leppard (V/D: Peter Hall & Robin Lough)

(*) Arthaus DVD 100 108. Schumann, Croft, Kuhlmann, Gall, Peeters, Brooks, Concerto Köln, Jacobs. (Dir: Michael Hampe, V/D: José Montes-Baquer)

With an outstanding cast, Klaus Michael Gruber's production offers a staging with stylized sets and timeless costumes, effectively clarifying the story of the love of Nero and Poppea. Minkowski has opted basically for the Venice version of the score, but has added three instrumental interludes by Monteverdi's associate, Biagio Marini, to facilitate scene-changes. He has chosen instrumentation with ample bass continuo to suit the venue, and the result is a moving and beautiful account, which heightens the love scenes between Poppea and Nero, not least the ecstatic final duet – when, curiously, they are not seen to embrace – and the monologues of the deserted wife, Ottavia, powerfully sung by Sylvie Brunet. She emerges as an equal star with Anne Sofie von Otter as Nero and Mireille Delunsch ravishing as Poppea. Other roles are strongly taken by Charlotte Hellekant as Ottone, Denis Sedov as a handsome, young-looking Seneca and Jean-Paul Fouchécourt comically in drag as the nurse, Arnalta. A presentation that very effectively brings out the sharp contrasts of pathos and comedy in this masterpiece.

We have a very soft spot for the richly opulent Leppard version of Monteverdi's opera, at a far remove from today's scrupulously authentic versions. Here, not only are the strings gorgeous-sounding, but the castrati roles have been transposed, and the original three acts condensed into two. The cast of this faithful (1984) Glyndebourne production are watched by characters from the Prologue, Fortune, Virtue and Cupid, and, with Peter Hall directing, the drama is vividly projected (often with the camera observing the characters individually). Maria Ewing as a boldly self-confident Poppea is well matched vocally by Dennis Bailey's Nero, and Robert Lloyd is a tower of strength as Seneca. Cynthia Clarey, singing with passionate espressivo, is a sympathetic Ottavia and Dale Duesing completes a thoroughly convincing cast as Ottone. The setting is visually sumptuous, to match Leppard's luxuriant conception, and he directs the proceedings with panache. For those who don't care for authenticity in early opera, with all its visual contradictions concerning male and female personae, this well-recorded version should prove very rewarding.

The Arthaus performance from the 1993 Schwetzingen Festival is far more severe, both artistically and as a visual experience. It suffers from a less than ideal Poppea in Patricia Schumann but both Kathleen Kuhlmann's Ottavia and Darla Brooks's Drusilla are expressive and intelligent singers, and the Seneca of Harry Peeters is exemplary.

L'incoronazione di Poppea (opera; CD versions)

🔑 * DG 447 088-2 (3). McNair, von Otter, Hanchard, Chance, d'Artegna, E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Ⓜ  Virgin 5 61783-2 (3). Augér, D. Jones, Hirst, Reinart, Bowman, City of L. Bar. Sinfonia, Hickox

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) Warner 2564 69261-1 (3). Donath, Söderström, Berberian, Esswood, Luccardi, Hansmann, Langridge, VCM, Harnoncourt

With an exceptionally strong and consistent cast in which even minor roles are taken by star singers, Gardiner presents a purposeful, strongly characterized performance. He is helped by the full and immediate sound of the live recording, made in concert at the Queen Elizabeth Hall, London. Sylvia McNair is a seductive Poppea and Anne Sofie von Otter a deeply moving Ottavia, both singing ravishingly. Francesco d'Artegna, a robustly Italian-sounding bass, makes a stylish Seneca, and there are clear advantages in having a counter-tenor as Nero instead of a mezzo-soprano, particularly one with a slightly sinister timbre like Dana Hanchard. So in the sensuous duet which closes the opera, the clashing intervals of the voices are given a degree of abrasiveness, suggesting that, though this is a happy and beautiful ending, the characters still have their sinister side. The text has been modified with newly written ritornellos by Peter Holman, using the original, authentic bass-line, and aiming to be 'closer to what Monteverdi would have expected' than the usual flawed text.

On Virgin, the tender expressiveness of Arleen Augér in the title-role of Monteverdi's elusive masterpiece combines with a performance from Richard Hickox and the City of London Baroque Sinfonia which consistently reflects the fact that it was recorded in conjunction with a stage production in 1988. Hickox daringly uses a very spare accompaniment of continuo instruments, but he overcomes the problems of that self-imposed limitation by choosing the widest possible range of speeds. The purity of Augér's soprano may make Poppea less of a scheming seducer than she should be, but it is Monteverdi's music for the heroine which makes her so sympathetic in this oddly slanted, equivocal picture of Roman history, and one that has seldom sounded subtler or more lovely on record than this. Taking the castrato role of Nero, Della Jones sings very convincingly with full, rather boyish tone, while Gregory Reinart is magnificent in the bass role of Seneca. James Bowman is a fine Ottone, with smaller parts taken by such excellent singers as Catherine Denley, John Graham-Hall, Mark Tucker and Janice Watson. Linda Hirst sounds too raw of tone for Ottavia, making her a scold rather than a sympathetic suffering widow. Fitted on to three well-filled mid-priced CDs, the opera comes with libretto and translation and can be recommended alongside the Gardiner set.

Harnoncourt's pioneering version, dating from the 1970s, had the dual advantage of being both complete, and – according to the standards of the time – authentic. There is no question that the dramatic power of the music comes across. Helen Donath is commanding as Poppea, and she is extremely well supported by Paul Esswood as Ottone and Cathy Berberian, whose characterization of Ottavia is an imaginative one. Donath's singing has not the richness and dignity that Janet Baker gives to this role, but she brings the character fully to life. Elisabeth Söderström has the almost impossible task of creating a heroic image in the role of Nero, written for a high castrato, but her performance is excellent, even if she fails wholly to submerge her femininity. Harnoncourt brings plenty of vitality to the performance as a whole, and his instrumental group provide impressive and some times beautiful, if over-decorative accompaniments.

Orfeo (CD version; complete)

🔑 Ⓜ  Decca 476 7213-2 (2). Mark Ainsley, Gooding, Bott, Bonner, George, Grant, New L. Cons., Pickett

 DG 419 250-2 (2). Rolfe Johnson, Baird, Dawson, von Otter, Argenta, Robson, Monteverdi Ch., E. Bar. Sol., Gardiner

Pickett has not tried to treat Orfeo with kid gloves but has aimed above all to bring out its freshness. So, in the dark Sinfonia with its weird chromatic writing, which at the opening of Act III represents Orfeo's arrival in the underworld, Pickett cuts out strings and uses brass instruments alone. As Orfeo, John Mark Ainsley may have a less velvety tenor than Anthony Rolfe Johnson on the Gardiner set, but his voice is more flexible in the elaborate decorations of Possente spirito, Orfeo's plea to Charon. Outstanding among the others is Catherine Bott. In Orfeo she not only sings the elaborate role given to La Musica in the Prologue, sensuously beautiful and seductive in her coloration, but also the part of Proserpina and the key role of the Messenger who graphically describes the death of Euridice. This has now been reissued in Universal's 'Critics' Choice' series with full documentation including text and translation.

John Eliot Gardiner very effectively balances the often-conflicting demands of authentic performance – when this pioneering opera was originally presented intimately – and the obvious grandeur of the concept. So the 21-strong Monteverdi Choir conveys, on the one hand, high tragedy to the full, yet sings the lighter commentary from nymphs and shepherds with astonishing crispness, often at top speed. However, Gardiner is strong on pacing. This is a set to take you through the story with new involvement. Though editing is not always immaculate, the recording on CD is vivid and full of presence.

Il ritorno d'Ulisse in patria (DVD versions)

🔑 (*) Arthaus DVD 101 101. Luxon, J. Baker, Howles, Lloyd, Burrows, Popova, Caley, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Leppard (Director: Peter Hall, V/D: David Heather)

Raymond Leppard's lush arrangements of Monteverdi and Cavalli operas may have fallen completely out of fashion in an age devoted to period performance but, as with L'Incoronazione di Poppea (above), there is a great deal to enjoy in his account, recorded in 1973, with Benjamin Luxon robust as Ulisse, still in excellent voice, and, most strikingly of all, Dame Janet Baker as the ever-patient Penelope. Hers is a deeply moving performance, masterfully acted and sung. Others making strong contributions include Robert Lloyd as the Old Shepherd and Ian Caley as Ulisse's son, Telemaco. For Baker alone the DVD is worth hearing, and John Bury's stylized sets, with flying gods and goddesses, are a delight to the eye, backing up Peter Hall's stage direction. That said, the presentation on DVD is inadequate there is not even a complete cast list, except in the filmed credits at the end of the performance.

MONTSALVATGE, Xavier
(1912–2002)

Concerto brêve for Piano & Orchestra

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD) 476 2971. Larrocha, RPO, Frühbeck de Burgos – ALBENIZ: Rapsodia Española; SURINACH: Piano Concerto; TURINA: Rapsodia sinfónica ***

Xavier Montsalvatge's Concerto brêve is dedicated to Alicia de Larrocha, who plays it here with authority and conviction. While no masterpiece – there is no really memorable theme – it is nevertheless entertaining, especially with its colourful orchestration, which is well brought out by the first-class (1977) Decca engineering. The RPO under Frühbeck de Burgos are excellent, and this rarity makes a good bonus for the other concertante works offered here.

MOODY, James (1907–95)

(i) Quintet for Harmonica & String Quartet; (ii) Suite dans le style français

 Chan. 8802. Reilly; (i) Hindar Qt; (ii) Kanga – JACOB: Divertimento ***

James Moody's Suite in the French Style may be pastiche but its impressionism is highly beguiling. The Quintet is more ambitious, less charming perhaps, but likely to prove even more rewarding on investigation, especially the very diverse theme and variations of the finale, the longest movement. The performance and recording are hardly likely to be bettered.

MORALES, Cristóbal de (c. 1500–53)

Missa Si bona suseptimus

(*) Gimell CDGIM 033. Tallis Scholars, Phillips (with CRECQUILLON: Andreas Christi famulus; VERDELOT: Si bona suseptimus)

The Spanish Renaissance master Cristóbal de Morales began and ended his career in Spain, but he spent the decade between 1535 and 1545 singing with the Sistine Chapel Choir in Rome. The Missa Si bona suseptimus was almost certainly composed during this period, and its opulence of line owes something to Italian influence, yet Morales retained his own fluid style, as comparison with Mille regretz shows. The present Mass is a parody mass, using as its source Verdelot's motet, Si bona suseptimus, which is concerned with the theme of Job ('The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away'), although Morales's texture and polyphony are richer than his model. The Tallis Scholars' performance is appropriately prefaced by its source motet and followed by another work long credited to Morales, but now thought to be by Thomas Crecquillon. It is the splendid eight-part motet, Andreas Christi famulus, but its layout is denser, less supple than that of Morales. These are fine performances, beautifully and passionately sung and recorded, but in the main work the lack of variety of dynamic (though not of tempo) is a drawback for the non-specialist listener.

MORENO TORROBA, Federico (1891–1982)

Sonatina for Guitar & Orchestra; Interludes I & II

 Analekta Fleur de Lys FL 2 3049. Boucher, Amati Ens., Dessaints – ABRIL: Concierto Mudéjar ***

Moreno Torroba's Sonatina was written in the early years of the 20th century for Segovia; the composer made the concertante arrangement of the solo work not long before he died. The outer movements, with their Castilian atmosphere, are gay and engaging, and the Romance, which forms the central Andante, is quite captivating, especially when the performance has such a simple spontaneity and is not too overladen with expressive feeling. The two Interludes are also both highly evocative and they are most winning in their present format. Rémi Boucher is a splendid soloist, and Raymond Dessaints gives him affectionate support. The warmth of the truthful and very well-balanced recording adds to the listener's pleasure.

Luisa Fernanda (complete)

 Valois V 4759. Domingo, Villaroel, Pons, Rodrigo, Madrid University Ch., Madrid SO, Marba

This is an ideal recommendation for anyone wanting to investigate the zarzuela, the Spanish genre of operetta. Moreno Torroba, best known for his guitar music, here offers in three compact Acts a sequence of catchily tuneful numbers, brightly orchestrated. Led by Domingo in glowing form as the hero, Javier, an army colonel, the cast is as near ideal as possible, with Veronica Villaroel in the title-role and Juan Pons as Javier's rich rival. Bright, immediate sound.

MOSCHELES, Ignaz (1794–1870)

Piano Concertos 1 in F, Op. 45; 6 in B flat (Fantastique); 7 in C min. (Pathétique), Op. 93

 Hyp. CDA 67385. Shelley, Tasmanian SO

The First Piano Concerto arrived in 1818. It is not a particularly flamboyant work, and is not really distinctive until the jolly finale. The Sixth Concerto (1834) is altogether more fluent and mature, with all three sections planned to be played without interruption, the gentle slow movement joined to the rollicking gypsy finale by an agitato bridge passage derived from the opening movement. The Seventh Concerto dates from the following year and is notable in that the central movement is a Scherzo with the slow movement ingeniously interwoven. The reason for the nickname Pathétique is not clear, but in Howard Shelley's hands it emerges as an attractively inventive work. Indeed, all the concertos are entertaining when the solo playing is so brilliantly persuasive, the orchestra supportive, and the recording excellent.

Piano Concertos 2 in E flat, Op. 56; 3 in G min., Op. 58; Anticipations of Scotland (Grand Fantasia), Op. 75

 Hyp. CDA 67276. Shelley, Tasmanian SO

Both these piano concertos appeared in 1825. 2 in E flat is particularly attractive, with one striking idea after another bubbling up in the substantial outer movements – the finale a Chopin-like Polacca – and with a deeply meditative central Adagio. Though the thematic material of 3 in G minor is not so memorable, with passage-work that involves note-spinning reminiscent of a study by Czerny, the finale makes amends with a jolly Rondo in a galloping 6/8 time. Anticipations of Scotland, as the title suggests, was written before Moscheles ever visited the country. Scottish songs were freely available to him, however, and in this fantasia he uses three in particular, with characteristic Scottish snap-rhythms – Kelvin Grove, Auld Robin Gray and Lord Moira's Strathspey – for a sequence of variations. Again, this is a piece full of conventional passage-work, this time helped by the underlying melodies. Moscheles's writing is always winningly fluent, so that even when it is at its most predictable, it sparkles away in the hands of a fine pianist like Howard Shelley, who draws lively playing from the Tasmanian Orchestra, with vivid, immediate recording.

Piano Concertos 2 in E flat, Op. 56; 4 in E, Op. 64

🔑  Zephyr Z 116-99. Hobson, Sinfonia da Camera

The E flat Concerto opens with the timpani setting the mood for an imposing march, with a Hummelian dotted rhythm, and they later set off the jolly Polonaise of the finale. The E major work has a more expansively ambitious opening tutti, and its slow movement centres on a romantic horn solo. The horns then announce the closing set of bold variations on 'The British Grenadiers', which gives Ian Hobson plenty of opportunities for glittering bravura. He plays spiritedly throughout both works, yet obviously relishes their galant lyricism, while effectively directing the accompaniments from the keyboard. The recording is truthful and well balanced, and altogether this is a most enjoyable coupling.

MOZART, Leopold (1719–87)

Horn Concerto in D

 Ara. Z 6750. Rose, St Luke's Chamber Ens. – FORSTER; HAYDN; TELEMANN: Horn Concertos ***

Leopold Mozart's Horn Concerto of 1755 is enormously demanding of its soloist – far more difficult than the later concertos of Wolfgang Amadeus. The first movement gambols in a sprightly 6/8, but soon takes the horn up into its highest register, where it remains for the expressive minor-key Romanza. The third movement then sets off lustily and demands that the soloist trill his way up a major arpeggio. Stewart Rose's trills, whether relaxed as in the slow movement, or buoyant as here, are impressively clean: he is a true virtuoso and establishes the difference between this essentially classical work and the earlier Baroque concerto of Telemann. A supplemental Minuet completes the piece traditionally and offers more opportunities for bravura. This performance will be hard to surpass, and the recording is excellent.

Symphonies in C (C 1, C 4 & D 1); in D (D 17 & D 25); in G (G 14)

Ⓝ * Chan. 10496. LMP, Bamert

Leopold Mozart was a highly respected composer of symphonies before his famous son arrived on the scene and soon virtually eclipsed his output. But these excellent, lively and very well played performances show how inventive he was. All but two are in three movements, but the Andantes in the C major, C 4 (subtitled Partita), and the D major, D 25, are most engaging, while his very effective writing for horns in all four movements of the C major, D1, adds much to the music. The opening symphony here, again in C major and with four movements, is a most satisfyingly balanced work. Obviously young Wolfgang learned much from his father, but Leopold's symphonies are by no means a carbon copy of junior's music. A most attractive disc, full of elegant ideas and vitality, and very well recorded.

Symphonies in A (A 1); D (D 15); G (G 8); G (New Lambach); Toy Symphony

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570499. Toronto CO, Mallon

A somewhat disappointing collection, surprising from a group who have already given us some enjoyable Haydn symphonies. But Mallon treats these works almost as if they were divertimenti, playing them elegantly and in lively fashion, but with not quite enough robust vitality. Best is the Lambach Symphony, which is one of Leopold's finest. However, the Toy Symphony is meant to be fun and it is hardly that here, with little attempt to make the special effects sparkle.

MOZART, Wolfgang Amadeus (1756–91)

EMI COLLECTOR'S EDITION (50 CDS)

Bassoon Concerto, K.191* (Nakanishi); Clarinet Concerto, K.622 (A. Marriner; both with LMP, Glover); Flute Concerto 1, K.313 (Snowdon, LPO, Mackerras); Flute & Harp Concerto, K.299 (Snowdon, Thomas); Oboe Concerto, K. 314 (Hunt; both with LPO, Litton); Piano Concertos 9, 11–27; Concert Rondo 1 in D, K.382 (Barenboim, ECO); Violin Concertos 1–5; Rondo in C, K.373 (D. Oistrakh, BPO); Horn Concertos 1–4; Rondo, K.371 (Vladković, ECO, Tate); 3 String Divertimenti, K.136/8 (LMP, Glover); Serenades: 6 (Serenata notturna); 7 (Haffner) (Bath Festival O, Menuhin); 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik) (all LMP, Glover); 10–12. Symphonies 1; 4; in F, K.19a; 5; 7a (Lambach), K.45a; '43' in F, K.76; 25–30; 31 (Paris); 32–5 (Haffner); 36 (Linz); 38 (Prague); 39–41 (Jupiter) (ECO, Tate); Wind Divertimenti: 8, K.213; 9, K.240; 12, K.252; 14, K.270 (all Consortium Classicum); Clarinet Quintet (A. Marriner); Oboe Quartet (Hunt; both with Chilingirian Qt); String Quartets: 15–17 (Hunt); 18–19 (Dissonance); 22 (Heutling Qt); String Quintets: 3 in C, K.515; 4 in G min., K.516; (with Graf, viola); Violin Sonatas: 23 in D, K.306; 24 in B flat, K.372; 26 in B flat, K.378; Andante & Allegretto, K.404 (Kagan & S. Richter); Piano Sonatas: 10–17; Variations, K.24–5; 54; 179–180; 264–5; 352–4; 398; 455; 500; 573; 613 (Barenboim); Cantatas & Concert Arias: 12 Lieder (Hendricks, Pires or Söllscher (guitar)); Ch'io mi scordi (with Lausanne CO, Eichenholtz); *Exsultate

jubilate* (with ASMF, Marriner); Ave verum corpus (V. Singverein, Philh. O, Karajan); Masses: 14 (Coronation) & Vesperae solennes de confessore (Soloists, Bav. R. Ch. & SO, Jochum); 18 in C min. (Soloists, Alldis Ch., New Philh. O, Leppard); 19 (Requiem) (Soloists, New Philh. Ch. & O, Frühbeck de Burgos); Vesperae de Domenica (Soloists, King's College Ch. & Cambridge Classical Players, Cleobury). Complete operas: Così fan tutte (Vanesse, Ziegler, Watson, Aler, Duesing, Desderi, Glyndebourne Ch., LPO, Haitink); Don Giovanni (Soyer, Sgourda, Harper, Donath, G. Evans, Rinaldi, Alva, Scottish Op. Ch., ECO, Barenboim); Die Entführung aus dem Serail (Rothenberger, Popp, Gedda, Unger, Frick, V. State Op. Ch., VPO, Krips); Le nozze di Figaro (Fischer-Dieskau, Harper, Blegen, G. Evans, Berganza, John Alldis Ch., ECO, Barenboim); Die Zauberflöte (Rothenberger, Schreier, Moser, Moll, Berry, Miljacovik, Brokmeier, Bav. State Op. Ch. & O, Sawallisch)

Ⓑ * EMI (ADD) 3 87894-2 (50) Artists as above

This extraordinary set of 50 CDs is the Mozartian bargain of all time and would serve admirably to accompany a castaway to a desert island. Alas, there is no documentation except titles and cast lists, but one can't have everything at this modest cost, and the set is still very desirable indeed – worthwhile alone for Barenboim's recordings of the piano music (concertos, sonatas and variations), and Jeffrey Tate's superb modern-instrument recordings of the symphonies with the ECO; and there is much else besides which is equally treasurable. Not all the artists are obvious choices, but the coverage is amazingly complete, including the five greatest operas (Barenboim's Don Giovanni is a disappointment, but he compensates with a first-rate Nozze di Figaro). Altogether this is very desirable indeed, with recording of excellent quality throughout.

Adagio and Fugue in C min., K.546; Violin Concerto 3 in G; Symphony 41 in C (Jupiter)

(*) EMI 5 57418-2. Perlman, BPO

Recorded in upfront sound, this vividly captures the atmosphere of a great occasion, defying received taste in offering unashamedly 'big-band' performances of Mozart. Weighted with double-basses, the opening of the Adagio and Fugue has a magnificence worthy of Stokowski, apt enough for such a massive inspiration, and the Jupiter Symphony, too, is Beethovenian in scale. In the G major Violin Concerto Perlman is even more persuasively spontaneous, directing from the violin, than he was in his 20-year-old studio recording with a conductor.

Cassations 1–3

Ⓑ  Naxos 8.550609. Salzburg CO, Nerat

All three early Cassations are given lively, nicely turned performances, very well – if resonantly – recorded. This admirable disc is certainly worth its modest cost and nicely fills a gap in the catalogue.

CONCERTOS

(i) Bassoon Concerto, K.191; (ii) Clarinet Concerto, K.622; (iii) Flute Concerto 1, K.313; Andante, K.315; (iii; iv) Flute and Harp Concerto in C, K.299; (v) Horn Concertos 1–4; (vi) Oboe Concerto, K.314; Sinfonia concertante, K.297b

Ⓑ  DG Trio 469 362-2 (3). (i) Morelli; (ii) Neidich; (iii) Palma; (iv) Allen; (v) Jolley or Purvis; (vi) Wolfgang; Orpheus CO

Frank Morelli chortles his way engagingly through the outer movements of the Bassoon Concerto and is contrastingly doleful in the Andante; Charles Neidich uses a basset clarinet in K.622 and his timbre is very appealing; Randall Wolfgang's plaintive, slightly reedy tone is especially telling in the Adagio of the Oboe Concerto and he plays the finale with the lightest possible touch, as does Susan Palma the charming Minuet which closes the Flute Concerto. The Sinfonia concertante for wind is pleasingly fresh; the players match their timbres beautifully in the Adagio, and again the last movement is delightful with its buoyant rhythmic spirit. The Divertimenti and Serenades also bring highly admirable performances. Alert, crisply rhythmic, with much finesse and imaginative use of light and shade. Eine kleine Nachtmusik is wonderfully light-hearted and fresh and among the finest on record; the Serenata notturna, which can easily sound bland, has a fine sparkle here, while the B flat Wind Divertimento, K.270, is notable for some felicitous oboe playing. All the works are given excellent recordings, probably a 'best buy' for all wanting this music in a digital format.

Bassoon Concerto in B flat, K.191

 Chan. 9656. Popov, Russian State SO, Polyansky – HUMMEL; WEBER: Bassoon Concertos ***

 Caprice CAP 21411. Sönstevold, Swedish RSO, Comissiona – PETTERSSON: Symphony 7 ***

Valeri Popov's playing has character and warmth. He is at his most personable in the Minuet Rondo finale. Polyansky's accompaniment is warmly supportive, and the Chandos recording is well up to standard.

Knut Sönstevold's is a good, big-band performance which gives pleasure, and is very well recorded.

(i; ii) Bassoon Concerto; (iii; iv) Clarinet Concerto; (v) Flute Concerto 1; (vi; iv) Horn Concertos 1–4; (vii; ii) Oboe Concerto

🔑 * Ⓑ Double Decca (DDD/ADD) 466 247-2 (2). (i) McGill; (ii) Cleveland O, Dohnányi; (iii) de Peyer; (iv) LSO, Maag; (v) Bennett, ECO, Malcolm; (vi) Tuckwell; (vii) Mack

These recordings readily demonstrate the ongoing excellence of the Decca coverage of the Mozart wind concertos over three decades. Gervase de Peyer is admirable in the Clarinet Concerto, and his account remains as fine as any available, fluent and lively, with masterly phrasing in the slow movement and a vivacious finale. Barry Tuckwell at the time was proving a natural inheritor of the mantle of Dennis Brain. His easy technique, smooth, warm tone and obvious musicianship command allegiance and give immediate pleasure. William Bennett a decade later, but again in the Kingsway Hall, is hardly less impressive in the G major Flute Concerto. For the Bassoon and Oboe Concertos we turn to Cleveland. The oboist, John Mack, has an appealingly sweet (but not too sweet) timbre; then David McGill, in the work for bassoon, immediately establishes his keen individuality. He does not overdo the humour in the finale. All in all, very enjoyable music-making by musicians from both sides of the Atlantic who are equally at one with Mozart.

(i) Bassoon Concerto; (ii) Clarinet Concerto; (iii) Flute Concerto 1

🔑 Ⓜ * DG 457 719-2. VPO, Boehm; with (i) Zeman; (ii) Prinz; (iii) Tripp

These are meltingly beautiful accounts. All three soloists perform with the utmost distinction under Boehm, who lets the music unfold in an unforced way, relaxed yet vital. Excellent mid-1970s sound makes this a highly recommendable DG 'Originals' disc.

(i) Bassoon Concerto; (ii) Flute Concerto 1; (ii; iii) Concerto for Flute & Harp

🔑 (BB) * ASV COE 813. (i) Wilkie; (ii) Fischer; (iii) Sprenkels; COE, cond. (i; ii) Végh; (iii) Fischer

On ASV comes the first of an outstanding series of bargain reissues of Mozart's wind concertos, recorded by soloists from the Chamber Orchestra of Europe on modern instruments in the early 1990s; they share an inimitable feeling for Mozartian grace and manners. In the Bassoon Concerto, the Australian soloist Matthew Wilkie immediately makes his mark with his engaging timbre and witty articulation, and in the Andante he is matched in graceful phasing by Sandor Végh in the orchestral accompaniment. Thierry Fischer plays the work for flute with captivating delicacy, with the closing Minuet quite delightful. He also directs as well as taking the solo role in the celestial work for flute and harp, where the balance is particularly felicitous. A most rewarding triptych, beautifully recorded.

(i) Bassoon Concerto, K.191; (ii) Flute Concerto 1; (ii; iii) Concerto for Flute & Harp; (ii) Andante for Flute & Orchestra, K.315

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Decca O/L 478 0021. (i) Bond; (ii) Beznosiuk; (iii) Kelly; AAM, Hogwood

This is another of Decca's Oiseau-Lyre reissues (from 1988), and very good it is too. The performances are peerless and have 'authentic' timbres, notably Danny Bond's bassoon. The Flute and Harp Concerto is remarkably and appealingly clear in texture, but the sound overall has plenty of body.

Clarinet Concerto in A, K.622 (DVD versions)

(*) EuroArts DVD 2055158. Kam (basset clarinet), Czech PO, Honeck (with Don Giovanni Overture; Symphony 38 (Prague) ) (Director: Adam Rezek)

(*) EuroArts DVD 2072088. Schmidl, VPO, Bernstein (with Symphony 25 in G min., K.183) (Director: Humphrey Burton)

There is no doubt that Sharon Kam's live performance of the Clarinet Concerto is the primary DVD recommendation. She plays a basset clarinet beautifully and with character. Her phrasing in the slow movement has an appealing simplicity, and her tone has the extra focus that the alto instrument can provide in the lower register, without losing the richness in the middle and upper range. The snag is visual. Throughout, she plays while moving her body in a circular movement with the music; at a concert-hall distance this would be acceptable, but in close-up it soon becomes distracting. Manfred Honeck opens the concert with a thrillingly dramatic account of the Don Giovanni Overture and closes it with a superb Prague Symphony, as vital and arresting as any in the catalogue. The camera angles, apart from dwelling on the soloist in the concerto, are acceptable, but the bird's-eye view of the performers, which is regularly featured, adds nothing to the music-making.

Although both Bernstein's performances are recorded live, they come from two separate concerts, the Clarinet Concerto recorded in the Vienna Konzerthaus in 1987, the Symphony in the Musikvereinsaal a year later. Humphrey Burton ensures that we see a great deal of Bernstein (even in the concerto) who continually conveys his sheer pleasure in the music, but the Adagio of the Clarinet Concerto is languorously slow. Peter Schmidl is the principal clarinet of the orchestra, and his mellow but patrician contribution, using a modern clarinet, is smoothly articulate and very warm and musical. The orchestral sound is rather more open and wider in range in the early symphony, which receives an affectionate performance but one with real vitality in the outer movements, even though the sound itself could have more bite.

Clarinet Concerto in A, K.622 (CD versions)

(BB)  ASV COE CD COE 811. Hosford, COE, Schneider – COPLAND: Clarinet Concerto; R. STRAUSS: Duet Concertino ***

 DG 457 652-2. Collins, Russian Nat. O, Pletnev – BEETHOVEN: Clarinet (Violin) Concerto in D, Op. 61 ***

() Testament mono SBT 1381. B. Walton, Philh. O, Karajan – BRAHMS: Clarinet Quintet ***

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Flute Concerto 1 in G; (ii; iii) Flute & Harp Concerto

* EMI 5 57128-2. (i) Meyer; (ii) Pahud; (iii) Langlamet, BPO, Abbado

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Flute & Harp Concerto

(BB)  Regis RRC 1061. (i) Campbell; (ii) Davies, Masters; City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox

David Campbell's agile and pointed performance of the clarinet work brings fastish speeds and a fresh, unmannered style in all three movements. His tonal shading is very beautiful. The earlier work for flute and harp is just as freshly and sympathetically done, with a direct, unmannered style sounding entirely spontaneous. A bargain.

Richard Hosford plays the basset clarinet most beautifully and clearly relishes its chalumeaux. His is an essentially lyrical approach and his Adagio is most sensitively phrased, especially the gentle reprise, while the finale is delightfully bouncy, the performance helped throughout by Schneider's elegantly matched backing and the first-rate sound. If the couplings are suitable, this is a fine bargain recommendation.

Michael Collins also uses a basset clarinet, relishing the extra downward range and richness of timbre. His speeds in the outer movements are fast, wonderfully agile and with the cleanest articulation and crisp rhythmic pointing, as well as fine detail. It is a reading not just elegant but powerful too, as well as deeply poetic in the slow movement. The playing of the Russian National Orchestra under Pletnev is refined and elegant to match, but the coupling is controversial.

Sabine Meyer's 1998 performance brings out how much her individual artistry has intensified. She also opts for speeds faster than usual, but finds time to point phrasing and shade dynamics with keen imagination and a feeling of spontaneity; where appropriate, she adds cadenza-like flourishes, as in the honeyed lead-back to the reprise in the central Largo. The two concertos with Pahud reveal him as an outstandingly individual artist, light and athletic, dominant over the rather reticent harpist in the Double Concerto, so the present triptych is highly recommendable.

Karajan recorded the Clarinet Concerto on three occasions (the other two with Leopold Wlach and Karl Leister) but the present (1957) version has strong claims to be considered the finest. Karajan's admiration for Bernard Walton is well known and his artistry shines through in this selfless and eloquent account. This cannot be too strongly recommended.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Oboe Concerto; (iii) Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364

(*) Guild GMCD 7181. (i) Lluna; (ii) Knights; (iii) Studt, Jvania; Bournemouth Sinf., Studt

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Oboe Concerto; (i–iii) Sinfonia concertante, K.297b

(BB)  ASV COE CD COE 814. (i) Hosford (basset clarinet); (ii) Boyd; (iii) O'Neill, Williams; COE, Schneider

(i) Clarinet Concerto in A, K.622; (ii) Piano Concerto 27 in B flat, K.595; Symphony 25 in G min., K.183

Ⓜ ((*)) Dutton mono CDSJB 1026. NYPO, Barbirolli, with (i) Goodman; (ii) Casadesus

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Clarinet Quintet, K.581

🔑 * Hyp. CDA 66199. King; (i) ECO, Tate; (ii) Gabrieli Qt

🔑 Ⓜ * RCA 82876 60866-2. Stoltzman; (i) ECO; (ii) Tokyo String Qt

 PentaTone SACD PTC 5186 048. Andrew Marriner; (i) ASMF, N. Marriner; (ii) ASMF Chamber Ens.

(i) Clarinet Concerto; (ii) Clarinet Quintet

 ASV Gold GLD 4001. Johnson; (i) ECO, Leppard; (ii) Takács-Nagy, Hirsch, Boulton, Shulman (with BAERMANN: Adagio ) – WEBER: Clarinet Concertino ***

(i) Clarinet Concerto; Overture: Die Entführung aus dem Serail (arr. Sargent)

Ⓑ () BBC Classics mono BBCM 5014-2. (i) Brymer; BBC SO, Sargent (with MENDELSSOHN: A Midsummer Night's Dream: Nocturne; Wedding March ()) – SCHUBERT: Symphony 8 (Unfinished) ()

(i) Clarinet Concerto, K.622; (ii) Clarinet Quintet, K.581; (iii) Exsultate, Jubilate, K.165

🔑 Ⓜ * ASV Platinum PLT 8514. (i) Johnson, ECO, Leppard; (ii) Hilton, Lindsay Qt; (iii) Lott, LMP, Glover

Thea King's coupling brings together winning performances of Mozart's two great clarinet masterpieces. She steers an ideal course between classical stylishness and expressive warmth, with the slow movement becoming the emotional heart of the piece. The Gabrieli Quartet is equally responsive in its finely tuned playing. For the Clarinet Concerto Thea King uses an authentically reconstructed basset clarinet. With Jeffrey Tate an inspired Mozartian, the performance – like that of the Quintet – is both stylish and expressive, with the finale given a captivating bucolic lilt. Excellent recording.

Richard Stoltzman gives equally outstanding performances of both works. The Concerto, full of spontaneity, brings a comparatively brisk, sparkling tempo in the first movement and a contrasting, leisurely Adagio, deeply felt, in which Stoltzman produces the most beautiful timbre and gently embroiders the reprise of the main theme. The Rondo is high-spirited, with the clarinet roulades delightfully bucolic. By directing the ECO himself, the soloist controls the work's structure as he wants, and then in the Quintet the silky-toned Tokyo Quartet provide a seductive backing tapestry and a performance equally full of subtle light and shade, especially striking in the finale. The recording is first class, bright and glowing in both works and admirably balanced.

The smiling faces of Sir Neville and Andrew Marriner shine forth on the front of their SACD, which offers performances of a comparably gracious warmth, full of affectionate touches and tender nuances. Tempi are relaxed, the lovely Larghetto of the Quintet is exquisitely and balmily played; but the effect is never bland and the finale has a pleasingly light rhythmic touch. The producer, Andrew Keener, has made good use of the acoustic of the Henry Wood Hall, and the SACD envelops the listener in its friendly ambience. The overall musical tapestry is richly upholstered, not as bright and transparent as the RCA/Stoltzman version, but very beguiling.

This Platinum collection fascinatingly contrasts the styles of two young British clarinettists. Emma Johnson has a sense of spontaneity, of natural magnetism which traps the ear from first to last, whether in the sparkle and flair of the outer movements or the inner intensity of the central slow movement. Leppard and the ECO are in bouncing form, and the recording is first rate. Janet Hilton then gives a disarmingly unaffected account of the Clarinet Quintet and gets excellent support from the Lindsays. The recording is forward, but well balanced and vivid. There are many delights in Felicity Lott's Exsultate, Jubilate: her clean and stylish singing is well supported by Jane Glover's sympathetic conducting, which elicits poised playing from the LMP.

This pairing has now been reissued on ASV's Gold label, more generously with Baermann's lovely Adagio (once attributed to Wagner) and Weber's delightful Concertino.

On the COE disc, Richard Hosford's fine account of the Clarinet Concerto (see above) is part of an all-Mozart collection where it would be hard to imagine an account of the Oboe Concerto that conveys more fun in the outer movements, infectiously pointed and phrased, both by the ever-imaginative Douglas Boyd and by his colleagues. The wind soloists in the live recording of the Sinfonia concertante are four COE artists who know when to take centre stage and when to hold back in turn. The variations of the finale are a delight.

Recorded live at a Promenade Concert in the 1960s, Jack Brymer gives a characteristically luscious account of the Clarinet Concerto, with his chalumeau delectably rich. The Mendelssohn encores are well played too, although the Wedding March has much more spirit than the comparatively lethargic Nocturne (well recognized by the Promenaders). But the surprise here is what appears to be Sargent's own arrangement of the Entführung Overture, to which is added an elaborately extended coda, exciting enough but sounding more like Beethoven than Mozart.

Joan Enric Lluna's basset-clarinet sounds fascinatingly different, with the lower chalumeau range drier and with more point on the articulation, the effect aurally intriguing. Andrew Knights's Oboe Concerto is both nimble and full-timbred, enjoyably vivacious. But what makes this triptych especially attractive is the outstanding account of the Sinfonia concertante, with Richard Studt leading persuasively on the violin and Nodar Jvania a most sympathetic partner. The Bournemouth Sinfonietta provide excellent accompaniments, but the one drawback here is the close balance, especially of the soloists.

More transfers from Dutton for the Barbirolli label, rescuing valuable performances from Sir John's years with the New York Philharmonic. Both the B flat Concerto, K.595, with that great Mozartian Robert Casadesus, and the 'little' G minor Symphony, K.183, recorded on 3 November 1940, were issued commercially on 78-r.p.m. discs, but the Clarinet Concerto, with Benny Goodman as soloist, from December of that year, has not been available before.

(i) Flute Concertos 1–2; (ii) Flute & Harp Concerto

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 59409-2. Galway; (ii) Robles; ASMF, Marriner

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 440 080-2. (i) Bennett, ECO, Malcolm; (ii) Tripp, Jellinek, VPO, Münchinger

James Galway and Marisa Robles take an expansive, warmly expressive view of the slow movement of the Flute and Harp Concerto; she also matches him in a delightfully bouncy account of the finale. In the solo concertos, too, Galway takes an expansive, expressive view of the slow movements and a winningly relaxed one of the Allegros.

William Bennett gives a beautiful account of the concertos, among the finest in the catalogue. Every phrase is shaped with both taste and affection, and the playing of the ECO under George Malcolm is fresh and vital. The earlier, Vienna recording of the Flute and Harp Concerto has also stood the test of time. Refinement and beauty of tone and phrasing are a hallmark throughout, and Münchinger provides most sensitive accompaniments.

(i; ii) Flute Concertos 1–2; (i–iii) Flute & Harp Concerto; (iv) Divertimento for Strings 1, K.136; 2 Marches, K.335; Serenades 6 (Serenata notturna); 9 (Posthorn); (v) Symphonies 35 (Haffner); 36 (Linz); 38 (Prague); 39 in E flat, K.543; 40 in G min., K.550; 41 in C (Jupiter)

🔑 ✿ (BB) * Virgin Classics 5x1 5 61678-2 (5). (i) Coles; (ii) ECO; (iii) Yoshino; (iv) Lausanne CO; (v) Sinfonia Varviso; Menuhin

This is an outstanding Mozartian CD bargain – five discs for the price of one! Moreover, the set would be highly desirable if it cost several times as much. Both the Flute Concertos are stylishly and pleasingly played by Samuel Coles, and when Naoko Yoshino joins him in the delectable Flute and Harp Concerto the interplay is fluently appealing. No complaints about the sound either and there is no doubting the character of these performances. The Serenata notturna and the Divertimento are graceful and fresh, and so is the Posthorn Serenade. Menuhin's approach is above all elegantly light-hearted and Crispian Steele-Perkins has his brief moment of glory as the posthorn soloist in the Minuet.

Yet when we turn to the last six symphonies, we encounter playing and interpretations of a very special order. The Sinfonia Varviso responds warmly to Menuhin as the group's chosen President. Though modern instruments are used, the scale is intimate, with textures beautifully clear, and the fresh, immediate sound highlights the refined purity of the string playing. In the last four symphonies speeds are on the fast side, yet he does not sound at all rushed. The G minor is especially memorable – among the finest ever recorded. With playing of precision, clarity and bite, one constantly has the feeling of live music-making. Exposition repeats are observed in both first and last movements of the Jupiter and this performance, like its partner, takes its place as a top recommendation for the two last symphonies, irrespective of cost.

Flute Concertos 1–2; (i) Flute & Harp Concerto; Andante in C, K.315; Rondo in D, K.Anh.184

Ⓝ 🔑 * BIS SACD 1539. Bezaly, (i) with Palloc; Ostrobothian CO, Kangas

If you begin listening to this superb BIS SACD with the opening G major Concerto, using the surround sound, you will surely be immediately seduced by the exquisite solo playing of Sharon Bezaly, most persuasively accompanied, and offered within a glowing acoustic. The Flute and Harp Concerto which follows, with Julie Palloc's delicate harp image, is equally captivating, the whole programme beautifully played and recorded; and it sounds pretty good, too, on normal CD equipment. Comparison with the equally natural Oiseau-Lyre recording of the Flute and Harp Concerto (see above) is fascinating, the latter sounding more transparent but not as resonantly seductive as the BIS textures.

(i) Flute Concertos 1–2; (ii) Flute Sonatas 4–6, K.13–15

(BB)  Regis RRC 1151. Hall; (i) Philh. O, Thomas; (ii) Alexander-Max

Judith Hall produces a radiantly full timbre; moreover she is a first-class Mozartian, as she demonstrates in her cadenzas as well as in the line of the slow movement, phrased with a simple eloquence that is disarming. There is plenty of vitality in the allegros and Peter Thomas provides polished, infectious accompaniments to match the solo playing. For the Regis reissue, three of the Flute Sonatas have been added. Once again Judith Hall's instrumental personality dominates the music-making, and she is appropriately accompanied by Susan Alexander-Max on an Erard pianoforte (c. 1846).

(i) Flute Concertos 1 & 2; Symphony 41 (Jupiter)

🔑  Telarc CD 80624. Boston Bar., Pearlman; (i) with Zoon

Jacques Zoon gives readings of both works that it would be hard to match for both sheer virtuosity and imagination, making the baroque flute sound more like a flute and less like a recorder than usual. Stylishly, he adds substantial cadenzas in both works to slow movements as well as to the first, with Martin Pearlman and the Boston Baroque sympathetic accompanists. In the Jupiter Symphony they come into their own in a most refreshing performance, with the snapping rhythms of the opening motif given a dry, military flavour, and with a military flavour returning at the very end of the finale. The woodwind are cleanly defined, with the strings relatively reticent, but the reading is far from small-scale. An unusual coupling, but a highly enjoyable disc.

(i; iii) Flute Concerto 1 in G, K.313; Andante in C, K.315; (ii; iii) Oboe Concerto in C, K.314; (iv) Sinfonia concertante in E flat, K.297b; Serenade 10 in B flat for 13 Wind Instruments, K.361

(BB)  EMI Gemini 4 76918-2 (2). (i) Debost; (ii) Bourgue; (iii) O de Paris; (iv) ECO; all cond. Barenboim

Michel Debost gives a charming, sprightly account of the Flute Concerto and Maurice Bourgue is hardly less appealing in the Oboe Concerto, although the resonant sound of the string tuttis tends to spread a little too much. But the importance of this reissue lies with Mozart's less well-known Sinfonia concertante and especially the so-called 'Gran Partita'. Here we have expertly blended wind-tone, free from the traces of self-indulgence that occasionally mar Barenboim's music-making. Tempi are a little on the brisk side, especially in the first movement – but none the worse for that when the playing itself is so resilient and the quality of the recorded sound so well focused, with excellent body and definition.

Flute & Harp Concerto in C, K.299

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 463 648-2. Zöller, Zabaleta, BPO, Märzendorfer – REINECKE: Harp Concerto; RODRIGO: Concierto serenata ❀ ***

Karlheinz Zöller is a most sensitive flautist, his phrasing a constant source of pleasure, while Zabaleta's contribution is equally distinguished. The 1963 recording is clear and clean, if not quite as rich as we would expect today.

(i) Flute & Harp Concerto in C, K.299; (ii) Oboe Concerto

 Chan. 9051. (i) Milan, Kanga; (ii) Theodore; City of L. Sinfonia, Hickox – SALIERI: Double Concerto ***

A warmly elegant modern-instrument account of this beguiling concerto, with the delicate interweaving of flute and harp given a delightful bloom by the resonant recording. The Oboe Concerto is equally sensitive, again with the line of the Adagio delectably sustained by David Theodore, whose creamy tone is so enticing. Both soloists play their own cadenzas.

(i) Flute & Harp Concerto; Overture Die Zauberflöte; Symphony 39 in E flat, K.543 (DVD version)

 EuroArts DVD 2054678. (i) Patrick Gallois, Fabrice Pierce; O della Svizzera Italia, Marriner (V/D: Mando Bernardinello)

The Flute and Harp Concerto, recorded live at the Palazzo dei Congressi in Lugano in 2005, makes a very winning visual experience, with the two distinguished soloists close alongside each other, warmly exchanging the phrases of Mozart's delectable dialogue. Marriner looks a shade stern, but the playing itself is elegant and smiling: both the Overture and Symphony are splendidly alive, and the whole concert is well recorded and perceptively photographed.

(i) Flute & Harp Concerto; Sinfonia concertante, K.297b

(BB)  Naxos 8.550159. (i) Válek, Müllerová; Capella Istropolitana, Edlinger

Richard Edlinger's account of the Flute and Harp Concerto is thoroughly fresh and stylish, and the two soloists are excellent. Although the Sinfonia concertante in E flat, K.297b, is not quite so successful, it is still very impressive, and it gives much pleasure. Both performances are very decently recorded; in the lowest price-range they are a real bargain.

Horn Concertos 1 in D, K.412; 2–4 in E flat, K.417, 447 & 495

Ⓑ  CfP 3 82227-2. Briggs, RLPO, Kovacevich – HAYDN: Trumpet Concerto ***

Horn Concertos 1 (with alternative versions of Rondo); 2–4; Allegro, K.370b & Concert Rondo in E flat (ed. Tuckwell); Fragment in E, K.494a

(BB)  Regis RRC 1007. Tuckwell, Philh. O

Horn Concertos 1–4; Concert Rondo in E flat, K.371* (ed. Civil or E. Smith)

 Chan. 9150. Lloyd, N. Sinfonia, Hickox

Horn Concertos 1–4; Concert Rondo in E flat, K.371; Fragment in E flat, K.494a;* (i) Concerto 4, K.495: Rondo (transcribed Flanders & Swan): *Ill Wind

Ⓜ * Telarc CD 80367. Ruske, SCO, Mackerras, (i) with Suart

Horn Concertos 1–4; Concert Rondos: in E flat, K.371* (completed John Humphries); in D, K.514 (completed Süssmayr); Fragment for Horn & Orchestra in E flat, K.370b (reconstructed Humphries)

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.553592. Thompson, Bournemouth Sinf.

Horn Concertos 1–4; Rondo, K.514* (completed by both Süssmayr & Tuckwell)

 ABC Classics ABC 476 5745. Jiang, West Australian SO, Tuckwell

Horn Concertos 1* (including Rondo in D, K.514, completed Süssmayr); 2–4; Concert Rondos in E flat, K.371; in D (alternative finale to K.412, completed Humphries)

 Häns. 98.316. T. Brown, ASMF, I. Brown

Horn Concertos 1–4; Concert Rondo in E flat, K.371* (reconstructed Greer); Rondo in D, K.485 (reconstructed Jeurisson)

🔑 (BB) * HM HCX 3957012. Greer, Philh. Bar. O, McGegan

Horn Concertos 1–4; Concert Rondo, K.371; Fragments: in E, K.Anh.98a; in E flat, K.370b; in D, K.514* (all ed. Tuckwell)

🔑 Ⓜ * Decca 458 607-2. Tuckwell, ECO

As well as offering superb performances of the four regular concertos using revised texts prepared by John Humphries, the outstanding Naxos issue includes reconstructions of two movements designed for a horn concerto dating from soon after Mozart arrived in Vienna. It is fascinating too to have extra passages in 4, again adding Mozartian inventiveness. Michael Thompson plays with delectable lightness and point, bringing out the wit in finales, as well as the tenderness in slow movements. He also draws sparkling and refined playing from the Bournemouth Sinfonietta, very well recorded in clear, atmospheric sound.

Another first-class super-bargain set comes from Lowell Greer, who uses a modern copy of a Raoux Parisian cor of 1818, which has a most attractive timbre. He plays with complete freedom, disguising the stopped notes skilfully, and his Mozartian line is impeccable. Slow movements are phrased with appealing simplicity and the rondo finales have splendid buoyancy. McGegan and his chamber orchestra accompany very stylishly and the recording is excellent.

Born in Shanghai, but a resident of Australia since he was five, Lin Jiang has become, under the tutelage of the veteran horn-player Barry Tuckwell, one of the leading instrumental soloists in Australia. Here, using a modern instrument, with Tuckwell taking on the role of conductor, he plays the four Mozart Horn Concertos, adding a rare alternative version of the Rondo finale of the so-called '1', in the key of D. Tuckwell here offers his own completion as well as Süssmayr's. Jiang plays with a rich, opulent sound, beautifully rounded, displaying fine tonal contrasts. His fluency is phenomenal with even the most elaborate passage-work cleanly articulated. There is an easy swing to the Rondo of the suspect 1 which is most engaging, and it is good to compare the two different versions offered here. The orchestral sound is fresh and clear, with the strings of the West Australian Symphony Orchestra playing with commendable refinement and purity.

For Hänssler, Timothy Brown chooses a modern instrument, and his persuasive lyrical line, imaginative phrasing and neat use of cadenzas show him as a true Mozartian. Another of the memorable features of this fine Hänssler disc is the warmth and finesse of Iona Brown's stylish accompaniments. The recording too is most natural in balance and sound-quality, and this CD stands high among modern versions of these ever-fresh concertos.

Eric Ruske, principal horn of the Cleveland Orchestra, gives outstandingly fresh performances of the four Mozart Concertos. Not only are the famous Rondos exceptionally buoyant and sharply rhythmic, but first-movement allegros combine elegance with a comparatively swift pacing which is naturally Mozartian in feeling. Slow movements, too, have an equally agreeable lift, as in the Larghetto of K.447, while the pointed articulation in the finale is a joy. Ruske is helped by truly vivacious accompaniments from Mackerras and the Scottish Chamber Orchestra. But what makes this special is the inclusion of Ill Wind, the famous Flanders and Swan poem, which exactly fits the Rondo of the Fourth Concerto. Here the reciter is the celebrated Gilbertian, Richard Suart. We feel sure that Mozart himself would have been delighted with the line 'I've lost my horn, lost my horn, found my horn . . . gorn!'

The Decca Ovation reissue (458 607-2) offers Barry Tuckwell's third set of the four concertos in excellent digital sound, recorded in the Henry Wood Hall in 1983. The orchestra provides crisp, polished and elegant accompaniments to make a perfectly scaled backcloth for full-timbred solo playing which again combines natural high spirits with a warmly expressive understanding of the Mozartian musical line. This reissue now includes the rest of Mozart's concertante horn music.

Barry Tuckwell's Regis (originally Collins) CD, his fourth recording of the Mozart Horn Concertos, remains a splendid alternative choice. They are fresh, without a suspicion of routine, and are played with rounded tone and consistently imaginative phrasing. Moreover the collection is complete.

Tuckwell's EMI Encore 1971 set offers strong, warm performances which have stood the test of time with Marriner's beautifully managed accompaniments. At budget price, with the two short fill-ups, this CD is well worth its modest cost. (EMI 5 74966-2)

Among the more recent versions is a fine Chandos set by Frank Lloyd, an outstanding soloist of the new generation. Like Tuckwell, he uses a modern German double horn with great skill and sensitivity. Hickox provides admirable accompaniments, and the Chandos recording is well up to the high standards of the house. (Chan. 9150)

Claire Briggs (at the time principal horn of the CBSO) gives brilliant performances of all four concertos, with the celebrated finale of 4 taken exceptionally fast. Even that is superbly articulated without any feeling of breathlessness, though it lacks some of the fun others have brought. This inexpensive disc also includes a first-class account of Haydn's Trumpet Concerto.

(i) Horn Concertos 1–4; (ii) Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat, K.452

🔑 Ⓑ (*) EMI mono 3 38603-2. Brain; (i) Philh. O, Karajan; (ii) Horsley, Brain Wind Ens. (members)

() Naxos mono 8.111070. (i) Brain, Philh. O, Karajan; (ii) Gieseking, Philh. Wind Ens.

An EMI bargain reissue of Dennis Brain's famous (1954) mono record of the concertos, coupled with the Quintet, and this is self-recommending.

The Naxos coupling chooses a different but no less attractive early version of the Quintet with Gieseking, which many will prefer. Good transfers of these still unsurpassed classic performances.

Oboe Concerto in C, K.314

🔑 (BB)  ASV CD COE 808. Boyd, COE, Berglund – R. STRAUSS: Oboe Concerto ***

Ⓑ  Hyp. Helios CDH 55080. Francis, LMP, Shelley – KROMMER: Oboe Concertos ***

Anyone wanting the delightful and very apt coupling of Oboe Concertos by Mozart and Richard Strauss will find Douglas Boyd infectiously imaginative in both works – see above. The sound is full and vivid.

Sarah Francis has already given us distinguished performances of oboe concertos by Handel and Telemann. Here she turns to Mozart with equal elegance and is persuasively accompanied by Howard Shelley and the London Mozart Players who, like their soloist, are completely satisfying in their stylish playing using modern instruments. The closing Rondo is particularly engaging.

Keyboard concertos

(i) Harpsichord Concertos 1–3, K.107; 2 Klavierstück, K.33b; Minuets, K.1–5; Sonatas: in E flat, K.26; in D, K.29 in B flat, K.31

 Naïve OPS 30-9003. Fernandez, (i) with Le Concert Français, Hantaï

Very slight pieces by the child Mozart, but very elegantly played and decently recorded.

Piano concertos

(with list of keys and Köchel numbers)

1 in F, K.37; 2 in B flat, K.39; 3 in D, K.40; 4 in G, K.41; 5 in D, K.175; 6 in B flat, K.238; 8 in C, K.246; 9 in E flat, K.271; 11 in F, K.413; 12 in A, K.414; 13 in C, K.415; 14 in E flat, K.449; 15 in B flat, K.450; 16 in D, K.451; 17 in G, K.453; 18 in B flat, K.456; 19 in F, K.459; 20 in D min., K.466; 21 in C, K.467; 22 in E flat, K.482; 23 in A, K.488; 24 in C min., K.491; 25 in C, K.503; 26 in D, K.537 (Coronation); 27 in B flat, K.595; 2 Pianos: E flat, K.365; 3 Pianos: F, K.242; Concert Rondo in D, K.382; in A, K.386

Piano Concertos 1–6; 8–9; 11–27; Rondo in D, K.382

🔑 (BB)  EMI (ADD) 5 72930-2 (10). Barenboim, ECO

Ⓑ (*) DG 469 510-2 (without Rondo) (8). Anda, Salzburg Mozarteum O

(i) Piano Concertos 1–6; 8–9, 11–27; Concert Rondos 1; (ii) 2; (iii) Double Piano Concerto in E flat, K.365; (iii; iv) Triple Piano Concerto in F, K.242

🔑 ✿ Ⓑ * Sony (ADD/DDD) 82876 872302 (12). Perahia, Lupu, ECO

Ⓑ  Decca (ADD/DDD) 443 727-2 (10). Ashkenazy, with (i) Philh. O; (ii) LSO, Kertész; (iii) Barenboim, ECO; (iv) Fou Ts'ong

The Perahia cycle is a remarkable achievement; in terms of poetic insight and musical spontaneity the performances are in a class of their own. There is a wonderful singing line and at the same time a sensuousness that is always tempered by spirituality. About half the recordings are digital and of excellent quality and, we are glad to report, the earlier, analogue recordings have been skilfully remastered with first-class results, both in this complete set and in the separate issues below. This is an indispensable set in every respect.

Ashkenazy's set with the Philharmonia appeared over more than a decade. The account of the E flat Concerto, K.365, with Barenboim and the ECO, and the Triple Concerto, with Fou Ts'ong to complete the trio, is earlier still (1972). These performances have won golden opinions over the years, and the clarity of both the performances and the recordings is refreshing: indeed, the fine Decca sound is one of their strongest features.

The sense of spontaneity in Barenboim's EMI performances of the Mozart concertos, his message that this is music hot off the inspiration line, is hard to resist, even though it occasionally leads to over-exuberance and idiosyncrasies. These are as nearly live performances as one could hope for on record, and the playing of the English Chamber Orchestra is splendidly geared to the approach of an artist with whom the players have worked regularly, and the sound is generally freshened very successfully in the remastering.

EMI are now beginning to reissue these recordings separately on Classics for Pleasure, and so far 20 in D min., K.466, and 24 in C min., K.491, plus the Piano Sonata in C, K.545, are available on 2 28278-2; and 22 in E flat, K.482, and 23 in A, K.488, are on CfP 5 21868-2.

Were the competition not so fierce, Anda's often very fine performances could carry a stronger recommendation. They are beautifully poised and have excellent feeling for style; some are quite memorable for their unidiosyncratic freshness. The recordings, made between 1962 and 1969, do not quite match those of Barenboim (the violin timbre is more dated) and Anda is a less individual artist, but the sound is clean and well balanced and the set gives consistent enjoyment.

Piano Concertos 5–6; 8–9; 11–27

Ⓜ  Decca 448 140-2 (9). Schiff, Salzburg Mozarteum Camerata Academica, Végh

András Schiff's cycle with the Salzburg Mozarteum Camerata Academica under Sándor Végh proves to be one of the most satisfying and arguably the finest since Murray Perahia's cycle of the late 1970s. Schiff plays a Bösendorfer piano, and its relatively gentle, cleanly focused timbre has something of the precision of a fortepiano without any loss of the colour which comes with a more modern instrument. The recording is consistently more beautiful than in Perahia's Sony set. Just occasionally Schiff dots his 'i's and crosses his 't's a little too precisely, but for the most part he is so musicianly and perceptive that this seems unimportant. In short, these are lovely performances, enhanced by the quality of the accompaniment under Végh, who is unfailingly supportive. For the most part Schiff plays his own cadenzas, but in the first movement of K.466 he uses a cadenza by Beethoven, and the finale of K.488 brings one by George Malcolm.

Piano Concertos 5–6; 8–9; 11–27; Rondo in D, K.382

Ⓑ (*) Ph. 475 7306 (8). Uchida, ECO, Tate

(i) Piano Concertos 5–6; 8–9; 11–27; Rondo in D, K.382. Bonus DVD: (ii) Double Piano Concerto in E flat, K.365; (ii; iii) Triple Piano Concerto in F, K.242

Ⓑ  Warner 2564 61919-2 (8 + Bonus DVD). Barenboim; (i) BPO; (ii; iii) Solti; (iii) Schiff, with ECO

Barenboim rerecorded the Piano Concertos for Warner Classics between 1986 and 1998, a number of them at live concerts. The performances are consistently of the highest quality, the earlier concertos made to sound both fresh and mature by the distinction of the playing, not only of Barenboim but also the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, which he directs from the keyboard. In some of the later works the result is weighty in a way which sometimes makes the music look forward to Beethoven. Overall these performances, which have rather more gravitas than his EMI series, yet remain spontaneous-sounding, are very satisfying in a different way. Moreover to make a very special bonus for this well-documented boxed set Warner have provided a splendid DVD of the Double and Triple Concertos with Solti and András Schiff as Barenboim's excellent colleagues. Barenboim leads in the Double Concerto and Solti conducts. Solti leads in the Triple Concerto and persuades the ECO to play very beautifully indeed. Excellent recording and effectively straightforward camera-work.

Mitsuko Uchida's cycle, which she began in 1985, is now complete, with playing of considerable beauty and performances of the earlier concertos guaranteed never to offend and most likely to delight. She is unfailingly elegant but a little over-civilized, consistently alive and imaginative, although at times one would welcome a greater robustness of spirit, a livelier inner current. Throughout, Jeffrey Tate draws splendid playing from the ECO, and these artists have the benefit of exceptionally good recorded sound; although the perspective favours the piano, the timbre of the solo instrument is beautifully captured. As one would expect from two artists of this calibre, there are many felicities, but individually none of the performances of the major works here would be a first choice, and 16 is split between two CDs after the first movement.

Piano Concertos (i) 5 in D, K.175; (ii) 8 in C, K.246; (iii) 17 in G, K.453; (iv) 27 in B flat, K.595 (DVD Recordings)

🔑  EuroArts DVD 2010248. (i) Frager, Swiss R. & TV O, Andreae (recorded in Teatro Bibiena, Mantua); (ii) Zacharias, Stuttgart RSO, Gelmetti (recorded at the Schwetzingen Palace); (iii) Ránki, ECO, Tate; (iv) Aleksandar Madžar, RPO, Previn (both recorded at the Imperial Palace of Schönbrunn, Vienna) (V/D: János Darvas)

This is one of a series of DVD groups of live Mozart piano concerto recordings using different soloists, conductors, orchestras and venues, with stimulating results. The present collection happily frames early and middle-period works with the composer's very first, entirely original concerto. The partnership of Malcolm Frager and Marc Andreae seems ideal for the earliest concerto, while the playing of the Swiss Orchestra is fresh, polished and vibrant, and the lively recording, brightly transferred, is just right for the music. When we turn to the C major, the bearded conductor, Gianluigi Gelmetti, has a rather imposing image, but he is a natural Mozartian and persuasively matches the warmly sensitive Stuttgart accompaniment to Christian Zacharias's comparatively intimate style, within a mellower acoustic, so suitable for the graceful Andante and delectable finale.

Jeffrey Tate provides a strong, vivid opening ritornello for the G major work, and Deszö Ránki's playing has both vitality and delicacy, especially in the exquisite Andante, where the fine woodwind playing of the ECO so sensitively creates the opening mood. Mozart's last concerto shares the same venue but features the Royal Phiharmonic Orchestra, directed by André Previn in relaxed rather than valedictory mood. In this work, the camera often centres on the pianist, Aleksandar Madžar. All four concertos are beautifully recorded and the camerawork varies in emphasis, but generally the shots of the orchestra, pianist and conductor are well judged. A most rewarding collection in every respect.

Piano Concertos 5, K.175; 9 (Jeunehomme), K.271; 16, K.451

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 0927 49827-2. Barenboim, BPO

Barenboim opens his cycle with the Berlin Philharmonic with these three comparatively early concertos which show him at his very finest form, free from affectation, both at the keyboard and in directing the Berlin Philharmonic, who are also on top Mozartean form.

Piano Concertos 6, K.238; 8, K.246; 19, K.459

(BB)  Naxos 8.550208. Jandó, Concentus Hungaricus, Antal

19 in F is a delightful concerto and it receives a most attractive performance, aptly paced, with fine woodwind playing, the finale crisply sparkling. 6 is hardly less successful; if 8 seems plainer, it is still admirably fresh. With excellently balanced recording this is a genuine bargain.

Piano Concertos in B flat: 6, K.238; 15, K.450; 27, K.595

 Warner 2564 62259-2. Aimard, COE

It is not often one gets three Mozart piano concertos on a single disc – and all in the same key, too. They are all engagingly spontaneous works, and the performances sunny and cultivated to match. Pierre-Laurent Aimard directs the orchestra from the keyboard, but the only way that shows is in the unity with the soloist and this collection is very easy to enjoy.

Piano Concertos 6, K.238; 17, K.453; 21, K.467

(M)  DG (ADD) 447 436-2. Anda, Salzburg Mozarteum Camerata Academica

Géza Anda's poetic account of the C major Concerto, K.467, is one of the most impressive from his cycle, notably for a beautifully poised account of the slow movement. In the G major, K.453, there is both strength and poetry, while the DG recording is excellent in both balance and clarity. The B flat Concerto, K.238, is played simply and eloquently and this remains a most enjoyable triptych.

Piano Concertos (i) 6 in B flat, K.238; (ii) 19 in F, K.459; (iii) 20 in D min., K.466 (DVD Recordings)

 EuroArts DVD 2010238. (i) Zacharias, Stuttgart RSO, Gelmetti (recorded at the Schwetzingen Palace); (ii) Lupu, Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie, Zinman (recorded at the Sophiensaal, Munich); (iii) Ivan Klánský, Virtuoso di Praga, Jiří Bělohlávek (recorded at the Rittersaal of Palais Waldstein) (V/D: János Darvas)

Zacharias and Gelmetti have already given us a fine account of K.246, and their performance of the comparatively mild K.238 is hardly less felicitous.

It is then a great pleasure to sit and identify with the audience's welcome for Radu Lupu when he comes on to the platform for his distinguished account of the F major Concerto. We see a great deal of him (and of his hands) during the performance, and his intensity of concentration is formidable. The conductor David Zinman is a pleasure to watch too, as he conjures wonderfully sensitive playing from the Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie.

After this excellence, the D minor could well have been an anticlimax, but Bělohlávek's intense, stormy opening sets the scene dramatically so that Ivan Klánský's piano entry can provide the poetic contrast mirrored in his calm facial expression. The same contrast between serenity and turbulence is caught in the Romance, and the finale then overflows with energy.

Piano Concertos 8 in C, K.246; 9 (Jeunehomme), K.271

🔑 (M)  Ph. 475 7777. Uchida, ECO, Tate

This is one of the most successful of Mitsuko Uchida's Mozart concerto couplings and, as it happens, the so-called Jeunehomme Concerto, K.271, was written for a woman pianist of that name. But these are works that suit Uchida's flowing style, with both slow movements sensitively played and no lack of momentum in outer movements. Some may like greater robustness, but there is no lack of freshness or subtlety of colour. The recording too is first class, beautifully balanced, with a very real piano image. It is now reissued in Universal's series of Originals.

Piano Concertos (i) 9 in E flat (Jeunehomme), K.271; (ii) 12 in A, K.414; (i) 17 in G, K.453; (ii) 19 in F, K.459; Rondos: in D, K.382; A min., K.511

(B)  Erato (ADD) 0927 41397-2 (2). Pires, with (i) Gulbenkian Foundation O, Guschlbauer; (ii) Lausanne CO, Jordan

Piano Concertos 12, K.414; 19, K.459

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60161-2. Pires, Lausanne CO, Jordan

Piano Concertos 13 in C, K.415; 14 in E flat, K.449; 21 in C, K.467; 23 in A, K.488; 26 in D (Coronation), K.537; Rondo in A, K.386

(B)  Erato (ADD) 0927-41396-2 (2). Pires, Gulbenkian Foundation O, Guschlbauer

Maria João Pires recorded these Mozart concertos in the 1970s, before fame had overtaken her. They are refreshingly musical and full of character, and no allowances need be made for the sound. Readers wanting bargain accounts of these concertos can rest assured that these are far more than serviceable – indeed, they have style as well as the accomplished musicianship one expects from her. Eminently recommendable.

Piano Concertos (i) 9 in E flat (Jeunehomme), K.271; (ii) 12 in A, K.414; (iii) 26 (Coronation), K.537 (DVD Recordings)

 EuroArts DVD 2010218. (i) Uchida, Salzburg Mozarteum O, Tate (recorded at the Mozarteum, Salzburg); (ii) Ashkenazy, RPO (recorded at Hampton Court Palace, London); (iii) Francsch, Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie, Albrecht (V/D: János Darvas)

We already have a recording of the Jeunehomme Concerto from Uchida, on CD, but this Salzburg account with Jeffrey Tate is finer. She is at her freshest and plays with appealing simplicity. Tate and the Salzburg Mozarteum Orchestra are splendid partners, and Uchida can concentrate on her own solo role, and here she is a pleasure to watch.

Pianists almost always tend to look awkward conducting from the keyboard when the camera takes a frontal view. But Ashkenazy manages better than most in the introduction to the A major Concerto, K.414, and of course the orchestra plays very stylishly, with the full beauty of the Andante shared equally by the keyboard and the orchestra. The finale is rhythmically irresistible in its light-hearted brio, and the recording is remarkably successful, considering the venue.

Homero Francsch is the least known of the soloists in this series so far, but, although he is visually a little restless to watch, he is an excellent Mozartian, and so is Gerd Albrecht, who draws elegant and polished playing from the Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie in the Coronation Concerto. The performance is beautifully proportioned, with a serene slow movement framed by outer movements of striking vitality.

Piano Concertos (i) 9 (Jeunehomme), K.271; (ii) 14, K.449; (iii) 22, K.482; (iv) 27, K.595; Serenade 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik), K.525

() Pearl mono GEMS 0167 (2). Perpignan Festival O, Casals, with (i) Hess; (ii) Istomin; (iii) Serkin; (iv) Horszowski

A welcome two-CD set of four Mozart concertos from the 1951 Perpignan Festival with Horszowski and Dame Myra Hess both inspired, with Casals conducting. Casals brought humanity and wisdom to all his music-making.

Piano Concertos 9, K.271; 15, K.450

Ⓜ () DG mono 474 024-2 (5). Kempff, SRO, Munchinger – BEETHOVEN: Concertos 1–5; BRAHMS: Concerto 1; LISZT: Concertos 1–2; SCHUMANN: Concerto ()

These long-forgotten mono recordings, made in 1953 for Decca, provide a valuable successor to DG's limited-edition box of Kempff's 1950s concerto recordings. The clarity and sparkle of his playing, making for consistently transparent textures, is matched by the tender poetry of such movements as the C minor slow movement of K.271.

Piano Concertos 9, K.271; 15, K.450; 22, K.482; 25, K.503; 27, K.595

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. Duo (ADD) 442 571-2 (2). Brendel, ASMF, Marriner

The account of the opening Jeunehomme is finely proportioned and cleanly articulated, with a ravishing account of the slow movement. Brendel is hardly less fine in K.450, and the E flat Concerto has both vitality and depth. 25 (there is well-deserved applause at the close) was recorded at a live performance and has life and concentration, and a real sense of scale. Here as elsewhere the playing of the ASMF under Marriner is alert and supportive. K.595 is also among Brendel's best Mozart performances, with a beautifully poised Larghetto and a graceful, spirited finale. Highly recommended.

Piano Concertos 9, K.271; 17, K.453

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 9068. Shelley, LMP

Howard Shelley's playing is a delight and is possessed of a refreshing naturalness which should win many friends. There is spontaneity and elegance, a strong vein of poetic feeling and extrovert high spirits. His G major Concerto belongs in the most exalted company and can withstand comparison with almost any rival. But both performances are touched by distinction, and they are beautifully recorded too.

Piano Concertos 9 (Jeunehomme); 18 in B flat, K.456

🔑 ✿ * EMI 5 57803-2. Andsnes, Norwegian CO

Outstanding Mozart playing from Leif Ove Andsnes and the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra, and first-rate sound too. This is one of the most natural in style and completely musical accounts of Mozart that we have had recently.

Piano Concertos 9 in E flat (Jeunehomme), K.271; 20 in D min., K.466; 23 in A, K.488; 24 in C min., K.491

🔑 (BB) * Virgin 4-CD 5 62259-2 (4). Pletnev, Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie – HAYDN: Piano Concertos & Sonatas ****

Piano Concertos 9 in E flat (Jeunehomme), K.271; 24 in C min., K.491

Ⓑ * Virgin 3 65467. Pletnev, Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie

Pletnev and the Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie have obviously established a close rapport, and each of these performances is individually and positively characterized. The Jeunehomme certainly sounds youthful, bringing crisp, precise articulation in the first movement and a poised Andante, yet with real expressive depth, followed by a brisk, attractively jaunty finale. The cadenzas are Mozart's own.

The uneasy, sotto voce opening of the D minor, K.466, is full of underlying tension, which is maintained throughout the strong tuttis, but Pletnev relaxes completely for the delicate lyrical secondary theme. In this concerto he uses Beethoven's cadenzas, which bring a sudden striking change of mood in the finale, otherwise light-hearted. In Pletnev's hands the slow movement of K.488 is among the most beautiful on record, the finale the most rushed. Here he returns to Mozart's cadenzas. But in the C minor Concerto (K.491) he is again intensely dramatic, Beethovenian in feeling and powerful in conception. Excellent recording throughout. This now comes recoupled in a budget box with equally impressive performances of piano concertos and sonatas of Haydn.

Piano Concertos 9, K.271; 25, K.503

* None. 7559 79454-2. Goode, Orpheus CO

Richard Goode is now embarking on a Mozart concerto series. The Orpheus Chamber Orchestra are consistently at one with him in matters of phrasing and style, and they immediately establish the boldly expansive character of the great C major Concerto, K.503. These are performances of much character, beautifully recorded. Mozart's cadenzas are used in K.271, but Goode uses his own in K.503.

Piano Concertos 9 in E flat (Jeunehomme), K.271; 25 in C, K.503; Rondo in A, K.386

 Onyx 4013. Rogé, Indianapolis SO, Leppard

Pascal Rogé is sensitive and a subtle Mozartian – as, it goes without saying, is Raymond Leppard. A thoroughly recommendable disc, which will give much musical satisfaction to those who invest in it.

Piano Concertos 11 in F, K.413; 12 in A, K.414; 13 in C, K.415 (chamber versions)

 Hyp. CDA 67358. Tomes, Gaudier Ens.

There are few recording pianists to match Susan Tomes in clarity of articulation, and here she leads performances which sparkle from beginning to end, with every note cleanly defined. Speeds are relatively fast, with slow movements kept moving to bring out their soaring lyricism.

Piano Concertos 11, K.413; 14, K.449; 15, K.450

🔑 ✿ (M)  Warner Elatus 2564 60116-2. Barenboim, BPO

All three works show Barenboim in his very finest Mozartian style, both at the keyboard and in directing the Berlin Philharmonic. The orchestral contributions in opening movements are imposing without being too heavy, and they bring much grace to slow movements. Finales are no less engaging, particularly in K.413; and witness the string-playing at the opening of the superb Rondo of K.449. The B flat Concerto is a live performance, but the others are by no means studio-bound. Barenboim's keyboard articulation is a constant joy, as is his pearly tone; and somehow he manages to give the first movement of the F major, K.413, an extra youthful freshness that places it before the others in the development of the composer's style. But it is the joyous spontaneity of the music-making throughout that makes this triptych so cherishable.

Piano Concertos 12, K.414; 14, K.449; 21, K.467

(BB)  Naxos 8.550202. Jandó, Concentus Hungaricus, Ligeti

In Jenö Jandó's hands the first movement of K.449 sounds properly forward-looking; the brightly vivacious K.414 also sounds very fresh here, and its Andante is beautifully shaped. The excellent orchestral response distinguishes the first movement of K.467: both grace and weight are here, and some fine wind-playing. An added interest in this work is provided by Jandó's use of cadenzas provided by Robert Casadesus. Jandó is at his most spontaneous throughout these performances and this is altogether an excellent disc, well recorded.

Piano Concertos 12, K.414; 19, K.459

🔑 (M)  Chan. 9256. Shelley, LMP

Another fine disc in Howard Shelley's musically rewarding and beautifully recorded series. Admirers of this artist need not hesitate in investing here, with the music's expressive range fully encompassed without mannerism, slow movements eloquently shaped and outer movements aptly paced and alive with vitality.

Piano Concertos 12, K.414; 20, K.466; Rondo in D, K.382

 RCA 09026 60400-2. Kissin, Moscow Virtuosi, Spivakov

The D major Rondo, K.382, has an elegance and delicacy worthy of the greatest Mozart players of the day. The A major Concerto, K.414, shows the same immaculate technical finesse and musical judgement (save, perhaps, in the slow movement, which some could find a little oversweet). There are perhaps greater depths in the D minor Concerto than Kissin finds but, even so, the playing is musical through and through and gives unfailing pleasure. The recorded sound is very good and the disc as a whole deserves the attention of any Mozartian.

Piano Concerto 13 in C, K.415 (DVD version)

🔑 ✿ * TDK DVD DV-VERSA. Barenboim, BPO (with Concert ***)

This outstanding DVD brings a captivating account of this early concerto, greatly enhanced on video, with the empathy between pianist/conductor and his players communicating directly and magically to the viewer. The other works in the programme are Ravel's Le Tombeau de Couperin and Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, also very finely played.

Piano Concertos 13, K.415; 14 in E flat, K.449; 23 in A, K.488

(BB)  Warner Apex 2564 60448-2. Pires, Gulbenkian Foundation CO of Lisbon, Guschlbauer

Maria João Pires, in a triptych of her earliest recordings (1973–4) for Erato, plays with spirit and taste as well as immaculate small-scale fingerwork. Her playing at that time reminds one a little of Ingrid Haebler's earliest records for Vox, and she offers many personal insights. Guschlbauer gives her most musical support and provides robust orchestral tuttis in the outer movements of the two early concertos. The recording can hardly be faulted, for the engineers provide a realistic balance and the sound is warm and pleasingly intimate. An enjoyable bargain.

Piano Concertos 13, K.415; 24, K.491

🔑 (M) * Chan. 9326. Shelley, LMP

Howard Shelley has immaculate keyboard manners and his strong, natural musicianship is always in evidence. An instinctive yet thoughtful Mozartian whose consummate artistry places his cycle among the very finest now on the market.

Piano Concertos 14, K.449; 17, K.453; 21, K. 467

(M)  DG 477574-7. Pires, COE or VPO, Abbado.

This is a reissue of Pires's coupling of Concertos 17 and 21 (see below) with the E flat major concerto, added, and a reduction to mid-price in the Mozart Collection.

Piano Concertos 14 in E flat, K.449; 21 in C, K.467; 6 German Dances, K.571; March, K.335

() BBC Legends mono BBCL 4227-3. Serkin, ECO, Schneider

Rudolf Serkin's performance, along with the Dances, comes from the 1964 Edinburgh Festival, and is full of delight and freshness. The C major Concerto comes from the Guildhall two years later and also conveys the lightness of touch and depth you would expect. Alexander Schneider is as always a supreme Mozartian and the sound, if a little distant in balance, is still very acceptable.

Piano Concertos 14, K.449; 27, K.595

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 9137. Shelley, LMP

Admirable performances, stylish and with a fine Mozartian sensibility. This is altogether most refreshing, and the recording is very good indeed.

Piano Concertos 15 in B flat, K.450; 23 in A, K.488

(*) Arte Nova 82876 64014-2. Kirschnereit, Bamberg SO, Bermann

The B flat Concerto is one of the finest performances so far in Matthias Kirschnereit's Bamberg cycle. The opening movement is attractively spirited and robust, while the central theme and variations is played with warmth and elegance, and the bouncing finale is highly infectious. The first movement of the A major, too, is fresh and strong rather than mellow, but the lovely Adagio, taken very gently and slowly, makes the fullest contrast; and the finale again sparkles, with attractive woodwind detail, yet with no lack of weight. Throughout, Frank Bermann provides a vivid orchestral profile, with a realistic balance.

Piano Concertos (i) 15 in B flat, K.450; (ii) 23 in A, K.488; 24 in C min., K.491

🔑 ✿ * Testament mono SBT 1222. Solomon, Philh. O; (i) Ackermann, (ii) Menges

This is quite exceptional Mozart playing: it has depth and serenity, impeccable grace and wit, and an incomparable sense of style. Almost half a century has passed since these recordings were made, and they have been out of circulation most of that time. They are in a class of their own. Remarkably good sound.

Piano Concertos (i) 15, K.450; (ii) 24, K.491

(BB) () Dutton mono CDBP 9714. Kathleen Long; (i) Nat. SO, Boyd Neel; (ii) Concg. O, Van Beinum – FAURÉ: Ballade; LEIGH: Concertino ()

These two vintage recordings of Mozart concertos, together with the works by Fauré and Walter Leigh, provide a superb memorial to a British pianist who has not been given credit for her inspired artistry. In Mozart the pearly clarity of her articulation is a delight throughout, not least in the lilting finale of K.450. Excellent Decca ffrr sound, superbly transferred.

Piano Concertos 16, K.451; 24–5; 26 (Coronation); 27

Ⓑ (*) Double Decca 475 181-2 (2). Schiff, Camerata Academica des Mozarteum, Salzburg, Végh

András Schiff's playing has exemplary taste and is distinguished by refined musicianship. There is a wonderful unanimity of phrasing and musical thinking from the strings and some superb wind-playing, every note finely placed and every phrase shaped with keen sensitivity. One snag is that the rare D major Concerto, K.451, is split between the two CDs.

Piano Concertos 16, K.451; 25, K.503; Rondo in A, K.386

(BB)  Naxos 8.550207. Jandó, Concentus Hungaricus, Antal

Jenö Jandó gives a very spirited and intelligent account of the relatively neglected D major Concerto, K.451, in which he receives sensitive and attentive support from the excellent Concentus Hungaricus under Mátyás Antal. The players sound as if they are enjoying themselves and, although there are greater performances of the C major Concerto, K.503, on record, few are at this extraordinarily competitive price.

(i) Piano Concerto 17 in G, K.453; Symphony 39 in E flat, K.543 (DVD version)

✿ * EuroArts DVD 2072098. Bernstein, VPO (Director: Humphrey Burton)

Bernstein's approach is different in each work. He plays the concerto with wonderfully affectionate warmth, indulging himself in the sheer pleasure of the music, especially in the magically seductive slow movement, and, with a minimum of gesture, encouraging the great Vienna orchestra to match his response. Then the finale unwinds into sheer joy with one of Mozart's most engaging rondo themes. The Symphony then follows, bursting with incandescent energy and power (all repeats taken) and, in the Andante, rich, expressive feeling. Fortunately, Humphrey Burton is in charge and he directs the cameras with characteristic prescience (at one point he catches Bernstein when he stops conducting altogether and lets the orchestra play on by themselves). The sound is absolutely first class and this is not to be missed.

Piano Concertos 17, K.453; 18, K.456

(BB)  Naxos 8.550205. Jandó, Concentus Hungaricus, Antal

This is one of the finest in Jandó's excellent super-bargain series. Tempi are admirably judged and both slow movements are most sensitively played. Jandó uses Mozart's original cadenzas for the first two movements of K.453 and the composer's alternative cadenzas for K.456. Excellent sound.

Piano Concertos 17 in G, K.453; 20 in D min., K.466

🔑 ✿  EMI 5 00281-2. Andsnes, Norwegian CO

 Virgin 3 44696-2. Anderszewski, Scottish CO

Andsnes's account of the G major, K.453, has everything that this glorious score calls for: sparkle in its first movement, poignancy in the second and a sense of joy in the finale. It has been hailed as 'great playing by any standards' and ranks among the most exalted company, Edwin Fischer and Perahia. Similarly the D minor is a performance of stature and depth. The recording is expertly balanced, lifelike and natural.

Piotr Anderszewski is an artist whose approach to music-making is fresh yet well thought out, sensitive, touched by distinction and without the slightest trace of fussiness or preciosity. There is a blend of musical imagination and pianistic finesse that makes this unfailingly illuminating.

Piano Concertos 17 in G, K.453; 21 in C, K.467

 DG 439 941-2. Pires, COE, Abbado

Maria João Pires's playing, both in the mercurial G major Concerto and in its more ceremonial C major companion, is elegant, searching and intelligent. She has taste and fine musicianship, and the Chamber Orchestra of Europe under Abbado give excellent support. Good recording. But see also under Concerto 14.

Piano Concertos 17, K.453; 27, K.595

(BB)  Regis (ADD) RRC 1154. Brendel, V. Volksoper O, Angerer

Brendel was an inspired Mozartian when he made his earlier Mozart recordings for the Vox Turnabout label at the end of the 1950s and beginning of the 1960s; these performances have a radiant freshness and spontaneity which he did not always match in his later, Philips versions. The recording is thin in the matter of violin-tone, though it has good ambience, and at Brendel's first entry one forgets this fault, for the piano is realistically recorded and convincingly balanced in relation to the orchestra. Brendel is helped by a vivacious orchestral contribution in both works. 27 is very distinguished and can be spoken of in the same breath as Gilels's version.

Piano Concertos 18, K.456; 19, K.459

 HM HMX 3957138. Tan (fortepiano), Philh. Bar. O, McGegan

Piano Concertos 18 in B flat, K.456; 19 in F, K.459; Rondo in D, K.382

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60810-2. Barenboim, BPO

Barenboim immediately puts his personal seal on this CD with his captivating account of the D major Rondo, a work of much charm but also repetitive, which lends itself to flexibility. Here, by imaginative variation of tempo and dynamic, it sounds wonderfully fresh. But so do both the Concertos. They are brimming over with Barenboim's joy in the music, with delightfully sprung rhythms and winningly felicitous slow movements. The totally infectious finales end each work in a mood of blissful happiness. The Berlin Philharmonic respond to Barenboim's flair and affectionate elegance with especially elegant woodwind playing, and the recording balance could not be improved on. A treasure of a disc – and Barenboim uses Mozart's own cadenzas.

No one is more convincing on the fortepiano than Melvyn Tan. The pointedly rhythmic main theme of the F major Concerto suits the fortepiano particularly well – which is not to say that the Allegretto isn't equally winning, with some delightful wind-playing from these characterful period instrumentalists. The B flat Concerto is hardly less successful. McGegan and his players are clearly completely at one with their soloist. The recording is more intimate, slightly drier than in Malcolm Bilson's DG series, and the result is most persuasive.

Piano Concertos 18, K.456; 20, K.466

🔑 * None. 7559 79439-2. Goode, Orpheus CO

Yet another entirely captivating coupling in Richard Goode's outstanding series with the Orpheus Chamber Orchestra. The lightly sprung opening movement of the B flat Concerto, K.456, is sheer delight. There is no finer performance in the catalogue. The mood then changes completely for the dark opening of the D minor Concerto. The piano enters simply, but then engages in a dialogue which readily hints at the music's histrionic associations with Don Giovanni, and the dynamic finale is suitably impassioned. Goode uses Mozart's second cadenza in the first movement of K.456 and Beethoven's in the equivalent movement of K.466, composing one of his own for the finale. A superb disc, splendidly balanced and recorded.

Piano Concertos 19, K.459; 23, K.488 (DVD Recording)

(*) DG DVD 073 4097. Pollini, VPO, Boehm – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concertos 3 & 5; BRAHMS: Piano Concerto 2 **(*)

Pollini's Mozart always has style and pianistic distinction, and Böhm was a wonderful Mozartian. These recordings were made at the Musikvereinsaal in April 1976 and the video direction of Hugo Käch is eminently discreet and unobtrusive. It is difficult to find fault with playing of this distinction and dedication, shorn as it is of any expressive exaggeration, but it is not always possible to warm to it. There is no want of pianistic or orchestral beauty, but there is an aloof quality to which not everyone will respond.

Piano Concertos 19 in F, K.459; 27 in B flat, K.595

🔑 * None. 7559 79608-2. Goode, Orpheus CO

What shines out here is the illusion of live performance, even though these come from the studio. Goode's approach is purposeful and direct, as well as magnetically individual, with natural weight and gravity reflecting his equivalent mastery as a Beethovenian. At such a moment as the hushed B minor opening of the development in the first movement of K.595, Goode has you marvelling afresh at a modulation that is quite extraordinary for a movement in B flat major. Not that Goode's Mozart has anything heavy about it, with the finales of both works marked by lightness, wit and sparklingly clear passage-work. The piano-tone is firm and full, though the orchestra could be more forwardly placed after the opening tuttis.

Piano Concerto 20 in D min., K.466

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 463 649-2. S. Richter, Warsaw PO, Wislocki (with BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 3; Rondo ())

Richter proves his virtuosity by restraint, and this is the quality running right through his extremely fine performance of the D minor Concerto. He lets Mozart's music speak for itself, but whether in the choice of tempo, a touch of rubato or some finely moulded phrase, his mastery is always apparent. The slow movement is beautifully shaped, its opening theme phrased with perfect grace, and the closing pages are exquisite. The buoyancy of the finale is a joy. Wislocki and the Warsaw Orchestra provide an accompaniment of character, and although the recording sounds dated in the matter of string-tone, the piano image remains realistic. This reissue is fully worthy to take a place among DG's 'Originals', and it is a pity that the coupling is so disappointing.

Piano Concertos 20, K.466; 21, K.467; 23, K.488; 24, K.491; 25, K.503

Ⓑ  Double Decca (DDD/ADD) 452 958-2 (2). Ashkenazy, Philh. O

This Double Decca set, reissued for Ashkenazy's sixtieth birthday, now includes both the D minor and C minor masterpieces, but not K.595 (27), which, however, remains available on a slightly different permutation at a similar cost – see below. K.491 and K.503 are among the finest in his series, so the present grouping is particularly attractive. The Kingsway Hall recordings cannot be faulted. They were made between 1977 and 1983; 20, 23 and 25 are digital.

(i) Piano Concertos 20–21; 23; 27; Sonata 17 in D; Rondo in A min., K.511

Ⓑ  Double Decca (ADD/DDD) 436 383-2 (2). Ashkenazy, (i) Philh. O

This alternative set, with slightly different contents, is also highly recommendable on all counts, with the four favourite Mozart Piano Concertos included, plus a splendid Sonata and a charming Rondo. Ashkenazy's performance of the B flat Concerto is as finely characterized as one would expect. The Sonata and Rondo were recorded earlier (in 1967); the playing is equally fine.

Piano Concertos 20 in D min., K.466; 22 in E flat, K.482

🔑 (BB) * Regis RRC 1273. Tirimo, Prague CO

There is no other bargain coupling of Mozart piano concertos to surpass this Regis disc, splendidly recorded in Athens in 2004. In both the D minor Concerto, with its atmospheric sotto voce opening, and the winningly fresh E flat Concerto, the slow movements are played by Tirimo with an appealing delicacy of feeling, yet not a hint of precocity, and outer movements are crisply articulated and full of vitality. The finale of K.482 is irresistibly vivacious, helped by superb accompaniments from the Prague Chamber Orchestra (the woodwind excel themselves), directed with élan from the keyboard by the pianist. Not to be missed, even if duplication is involved.

Piano Concertos 20, K.466; 23, K.488

🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 8992. Shelley, LMP

Those wanting this coupling with modern instruments will find Howard Shelley's performances immensely rewarding. Characterization is strong, yet the slow movement of K.488 is very beautiful and touching. Splendid Chandos recording.

Piano Concertos (i) 20; (ii) 23; 24; 26 (Coronation); (i) 27

Ⓜ  Decca (ADD) 468 491-2 (2). Curzon; (i) ECO, Britten; (ii) LSO, Kertész

Always a perfectionist and especially so in Mozart, Curzon was seldom satisfied with his performances, always feeling he could do better. Initially only K.466 and K.491 were approved by the soloist for release, yet K.595 was hardly less distinguished, while K.488 and K.491 were eventually released together. Even if they are slightly less fine and as such bear out Curzon's doubts, by any normal standards this is pianism of distinction. The additional attraction of the present set is the inclusion of K.537 (hitherto unavailable on CD) where Curzon is completely seductive in the Larghetto and sparkles happily in the finale. Strong support from the LSO, although Kertész perhaps proved a rather less imaginative accompanist than Britten. The recordings, made in the Kingsway Hall or the Maltings, are up to Decca's highest standards.

Piano Concertos 20, K.466; 24, K.491

🔑 * Sony 82876 73714-2. Stadtfeld, NDR SO, Weil

 Ph. 462 622-2. Brendel, SCO, Mackerras

The prize-winning German pianist, Martin Stadtfeld, gives electrifying accounts of both these concertos in a true partnership with Bruno Weil and the North German Symphony Orchestra. Both concertos here have darkly dramatic openings, the C minor work especially so, and Weil brings out their tragic feeling with orchestral tuttis of great power and tempi which carry the music strongly forward. When Stadtfeld enters in K.491, the tension is maintained, yet the secondary theme emerges with true Mozartian lyricism. At the end of the first movement he plays a subjective and musing cadenza of his own, slowing the tempo right down, which some may feel is intrusive. But the performance has such conviction and character that it is easy to forgive this indulgence which would be fully acceptable at a concert. The Larghetto has an appealing simplicity, while the mood of the finale is perfectly judged.

Brendel recorded this coupling with Neville Marriner in 1974 and now, more than a quarter of a century later, he gives accounts that are hardly less thoughtful without being wanting in spontaneity and which, if anything, are more searching and articulate. Moreover, in Mackerras he here has a partner who is one of the most experienced of Mozartians. This is a popular coupling: it is recorded with great realism and can be accommodated among top recommendations.

(i) Piano Concerto 20 in D min., K.466; (ii) Triple Piano Concerto in F, K.242; (iii) Symphony 32 in G, K.318; (iv) Rondo in C, K.373; Adagio in E, K.261

Ⓝ  Opus Arte DVD OA 1004D. (i–ii) Argerich, (ii) Paul & Rico Gulda; (i–iii) New Japan PO, Arming; (iv) Renaud Capuçon

Martha Argerich and her musical companions radiate a delight in music-making that makes this concert, recorded in Tokyo, a highly enjoyable and satisfying musical experience. The camerawork is devoid of gimmickry and places the listener to good advantage throughout. What a fine and expressive player Renaud Capuçon is! In the D minor Concerto Argerich is magisterial.

Piano Concertos 21, K.467; 22 in E flat, K.482

🔑 * Chan. 9404. Shelley, LMP

Ⓜ  EMI (ADD) 5 62750-2. Fischer, Philh. O, Sawallisch

Ⓝ Ⓜ (*) EMI 2 17270-3. Biss, Orpheus CO

Howard Shelley's cycle continues to delight, and the C major has dignity, intelligence and poetic feeling. The E flat has poise and breadth, and the winds of the London Mozart

Players are heard to good advantage. These performances can be confidently recommended alongside the very finest rivals.

Miss Fischer's gentle, limpid touch, with its frequent use of half-tones, still gives much pleasure. The slow movements of both concertos are beautifully done, and the pianist's intimate manner is often shared by the Philharmonia wind soloists, who offer playing of polish and delicacy. Sawallisch's contribution is also considerable, and his firm directing hand ensures that neither performance becomes effete and the recording is nicely balanced, the piano full in tone, and the orchestra does not sound too dated.

Jonathan Biss has been collecting golden opinions in recent years, and this coupling of two Mozart concertos will enhance his standing. He has good taste and fine musicianship, and though this splendidly recorded disc would not supplant our top recommendations, it is certainly worth considering alongside them.

Piano Concertos 21, K.467; 23, K.488

Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63292-2. Pommier, Sinfonia Varsovia

Piano Concertos 21; 23; Rondos for Piano & Orchestra 1 in D, K.382; 2 in A, K.386

🔑 Ⓜ * Sony (DDD/ADD) SMK 89876. Perahia, ECO

Both concertos capture Perahia's very special Mozartian sensibility and are beautifully recorded. The C major, K.467, is given delicacy and charm with an exquisite slow movement and spirited finale. The slow movement of K.488 has an elevation of spirit that reaffirms one's conviction that this is indeed a classic recording. The two Concert Rondos incorporated for the first time on record the closing bars newly rediscovered by Professor Alan Tyson.

Both Virgin performances have plenty of sparkle in outer movements – the first movement of K.467 is particularly arresting – and both slow movements are played simply and beautifully. Jean-Bernard Pommier's Adagio in K.488 compares favourably with Brendel's, and the string-playing at the famous opening of the Andante of K.467 is ravishing in its transparent delicacy and gentle warmth. The finale of the same work is brisk but never sounds rushed. The sound is first class.

Piano Concertos 21, K.467; 24, K.491

(BB)  Regis RRC 1067. Shelley, City of L Sinfonia

Howard Shelley's delightfully fresh and characterful readings of these fine concertos are outstanding value at budget price.

Piano Concertos (i) 21 in C; (ii) 24 in C min., K.491

Ⓜ (*()) EMI mono 4 76884-2. (i) Lipatti, Lucerne Festival O; (ii) Gieseking, Philh. O; both cond. Karajan

Lipatti's performance derives from a broadcast from the 1960 Lucerne Festival; the orchestral sound is not well focused and there is some discoloration and distortion at climaxes. However, nothing can detract from the distinction of Lipatti's playing or its immaculate control. This is now reissued with Gieseking's poised, aristocratic (1953) account of the C minor Concerto, K.491. Here the Kingsway Hall recording is excellent. But it would surely have been better to keep this an all-Lipatti CD.

Piano Concertos 21, K.467; 26 (Coronation)

Ⓜ  DG Entrée 471 738-2. Pires, COE or VPO, Abbado

Pires's playing in the C major Concerto is elegant, searching and intelligent. She has taste and fine musicianship, and the Chamber Orchestra of Europe under Abbado give excellent support. The Coronation Concerto is, if anything, even finer. Recorded at a live performance (with a virtually silent, spellbound audience), this is completely captivating, especially the slow movement.

(i) Piano Concertos 21, K.467; 26 (Coronation), K.537; (ii) 12 Variations on 'Ah, vous dirai-je, Maman', K.265

🔑 ✿ (BB)  Sony SBK 67178. (i) Casadesus, Columbia SO or Cleveland O, Szell; (ii) Previn (piano)

The ravishing slow movement of K.467 has never sounded more magical than here, and Robert Casadesus then takes the finale at a tremendous speed; but, for the most part, this is exquisite Mozart playing, beautifully paced and articulated. Casadesus's Mozart may at first seem understated, but the imagination behind his readings is apparent in every phrase.

(i) Piano Concerto 22, K.482; Adagio & Fugue in C min., K.546; (ii) Sinfonia concertante, K.364

 BBC (ADD) BBCB 8010-2. (i) Richter; (ii) Brainin, Schidlof; ECO, Britten

With Britten as partner, Sviatoslav Richter gives an inspired reading of the Mozart concerto, for which Britten specially wrote new cadenzas, which are in use here. Though the sound is not as cleanly focused as in a studio recording, it is warmly atmospheric, as it is in the other two works. In the Sinfonia concertante Britten equally charms his two soloists from the Amadeus Quartet, making them relax in spontaneously expressive playing, with the lightness of the finale a special delight.

Piano Concertos 22 in E flat, K.482; 27 in B flat, K.595; Adagio & Fugue in C min.

🔑 (*) BBC Legends (mono) BBCL 4206-2. Richter, ECO, Britten

Recorded at Aldeburgh Festivals these two BBC radio recordings, superbly engineered by James Burnett are far more revealing than any of Richter's studio recordings. Not only are his agility and clarity of articulation a marvel, the beauty of his legato is magical. In this he is accompanied by Benjamin Britten, always an inspired partner of artists he admires, fresh and vigorous. The great C minor Adagio and Fugue, with Britten conducting the ECO, is darkly tragic in its power.

(i) Piano Concerto 23 in A, K.488; Adagio in B min. K.540; Rondo in D, K.485

((*)) BBC mono BBCL 4111-2. Hess, (i) with LPO, Boult – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 4 **(*)

Dame Myra Hess recorded disappointingly little commercially. Dating from October 1961, the Mozart concerto performance was her very last in public, following her decision after a stroke to retire. You would never know that she was in anything but the most robust health from the vigour of her performance, with the finale taken at such a lick that the LPO under Boult finds it hard to keep up. The two separate solo pieces, which come as a valuable makeweight, are taken from studio recordings made in 1958.

Piano Concertos 23, K.488; 24, K.491

🔑 * None. 7559 79489-2. Goode, Orpheus CO

Richard Goode gives an outstandingly fresh and satisfying account of Mozart's most lovable A major Concerto, the slow movement serenely beautiful and the finale delightfully vivacious. The opening tutti of K.491 is formidably strong and forward-looking, but the movement unfolds with a natural Mozartian flexibility, and Goode's playing in the Larghetto has a ravishing simplicity. The jaunty finale is nicely paced and gets attractively bolder as it proceeds. Throughout both works, the ear notices the sensitive contributions of the Orpheus woodwind as well as the elegant finish and warmth of the strings. Goode uses Mozart's cadenza in K.488 and, enterprisingly, one by Paul Badura-Skoda in K.491.

Piano Concerto 24 in C min., K.491

((*)) VAI mono VAIA 1192-2 (2). Tureck, Oslo PO, Güner-Hegge – BACH: Clavier Concertos 1, 5 & 7; in D min. **(*)

Needless to say, Rosalyn Tureck's account, recorded live, is full of character, as is the accompaniment, although the actual orchestral playing could be more polished. Her style is both direct and flexible. She plays her own cadenzas and overall this is certainly an enjoyable account, the solo part beautifully articulated, if not as distinctive as her Bach. The finale is particularly strong. The mono recording is in every way excellent and well balanced too.

Piano Concertos 24 in C min., K.491; 25 in C, K.503. Fantasia in D min., K.397

Ⓝ 🔑 * Avie AV 2175. Cooper, N Sinf., Creswick

This is certainly one of the key Mozart concerto couplings of 2008. Imogen Cooper plays with ravishing delicacy and refinement, and many engaging touches of detail. She is listed as co-director of the orchestra with Bradley Creswick, and certainly the orchestra plays very beautifully too. The account of the (solo) Fantasia in C minor is equally magical, taken at a hauntingly slow tempo. Outstanding recording too: this is a CD not to be missed.

Piano Concertos 24 in C min., K.491; 27 in B flat, K.595

Ⓜ  Medici Masters MM010-2. Casadesus, Cologne RSO, Szell (with WEBER: Konzertstück in F min., cond. Hubertus ())

Casadesus and Szell often recorded Mozart together in Cleveland during the 1950s and early '60s, but these two concertos were made in 1958 and 1960 with the Cologne Radio Orchestra and have the same distinction and aristocratic grace that we find in their collaboration for CBS. The Weber Konzertstück is marvellously done with wit, finesse and felicitous finger-work and comes from 1954 (in mono) with the same orchestra under Romanus Hubertus. The sparkle of the performances outweighs the inevitable sonic limitations.

(i) Piano Concerto 25, K.503; Symphony 38 (Prague); (i; ii) Concert aria: Ch'io mi scordi di te

 MDG 340 0967-2. (i) Zacharias (piano); Lausanne CO, Zacharias; (ii) with Fink

Christian Zacharias, in consistently refreshing performances, relishes his multiple roles, not just conducting a fresh and lively account of the Prague Symphony, but also acting as piano soloist; in the Concerto, he directs the weighty K.503 from the keyboard and also provides a crisply pointed obbligato in the most taxing of Mozart's concert arias, Ch'io mi scordi di te. Bernarda Fink with her firm, creamy voice, officially a mezzo, is untroubled by the soprano tessitura, giving the most characterful interpretation, imaginatively pointing words and phrases. The sense of freedom and spontaneous enjoyment is here enhanced by the clarity of the recording, made in the Metropole, Lausanne.

Piano Concertos 25 in C, K.503; 27 in B flat, K.595; Rondo in A, K.386

(BB)  Arte Nova 82876 64016-2. Kirschnereit, Bamberg SO, Beerman

Matthias Kirschnereit plays with vitality and elegance and Frank Beerman and the Bamberg Symphony Orchestra give him persuasive support. The playing is full of spontaneous vitality and the recording is excellent. With a vivacious account of the Rondo for good measure, this is excellent value.

Piano Concerto 26 (Coronation), K.537

 BBC (ADD) BBCL 4020-2. Curzon, BBC SO, Boulez – BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto 5 (Emperor) ***

Curzon and Boulez in this 1974 Prom performance of the Coronation Concerto make rewarding partners. The combination of introspection and intellectual rigour results in an inspired reading of one of the more problematic Mozart piano concertos, fresh, bright and resilient in the outer movements with pearly passage-work, and thoughtfully unmannered in the slow movement. Full-bodied sound, set in the warm acoustic of the Royal Albert Hall.

Piano Concertos 26, K.537; 27, K.595

🔑 Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60679-2. Barenboim, BPO

This 1988–9 coupling from Barenboim is first class in every way, beautifully played, with warm, vigorous accompaniments from the Berlin Philharmonic which do not sound inflated. There is a hint of sobriety in both slow movements, but they are both memorable and each is perfectly offset by the light-hearted contrast of the finale which follows. A most enjoyable coupling, drawn from a highly distinguished cycle.

Piano Concerto 27; (i) Double Piano Concerto, K.365

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG (ADD) 463 652-2. Emil Gilels, VPO, Boehm, (i) with Elena Gilels (with SCHUBERT: Fantasy in F min., D. 940)

Gilels's is supremely lyrical playing that evinces all the classical virtues. All the points are made by means of articulation and tone, and each phrase is marvellously alive, while Boehm and the Vienna Philharmonic provide excellent support. The performance of the marvellous Double Concerto is no less enjoyable. Its mood is comparatively serious, but this is not to suggest that the music's sunny qualities are not brought out. The Schubert bonus has been added for the CD's rightful reissue as one of DG's 'Legendary Originals'.

(i; iv) Piano Concerto 27, K.595; (i; ii; iv) Double Piano Concerto, K.365; (i; iii) Double Piano Sonata in D, K.448

() BBC (ADD) stereo/mono BBCL 4037-2. (i) Curzon; (ii) Barenboim (piano); (iii) Britten; (iv) ECO, Barenboim

The two concertos, set in the warm Royal Albert Hall acoustic, come from a Prom concert in 1979, with Barenboim directing from the keyboard in the Double Concerto and conducting in Mozart's last Piano Concerto, K.595, Curzon's favourite. This is Mozart at his most joyous. The Duo Sonata finds Curzon in 1960 in a partnership with Britten at Jubilee Hall, Aldeburgh, and though the mono sound is far drier, it is firm and immediate, letting one appreciate another exuberant performance with the middle movement bringing delectable interplay between the players.

(i) Piano Concerto 27, K.595; (ii) Double Piano Concerto in E flat, K.365. Rondo in A min., K.511

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos mono 8.111294. Schnabel, with (i) LSO, Barbirolli; (ii) Karl-Ulrich Schnabel, LSO, Boult

Artur Schnabel's account of the B flat Concerto with Barbirolli conducting the LSO was one of the mainstays of the pre-war HMV catalogue, and it is good to hear its virtues so vividly restored. Good, too, to have the 1936 version of the Double Concerto with Schnabel's son, Karl-Ulrich, and Boult. The A minor Rondo was a post-war recording, marvellously played, and one of the products of Schnabel père's 1946 visit to London. Mandatory listening.

(i; ii) Piano Concerto 27, K.595; (iii) Piano Quartet in G min., K.478; (iv; ii) Exsultate, jubilate, K.165

 BBC (ADD) BBCB 8005-2. (i) S. Richter; (ii) ECO, Britten; (iii) Britten, Sillito, Aronowitz, Heath; (iv) Ameling

Britten as conductor in Richter's reading of K.595 is warmer in his Mozart style than his soloist, just as persuasive as he is in his recording with Clifford Curzon. Best of all is the Piano Quartet, where Britten's expressiveness even in the simplest scale passage has one magnetized, a great performance. Though the string sound in the concerto is a little thin, the other two recordings are excellent. As an encore Elly Ameling has never sounded more sweetly radiant on disc than in this account of Exsultate, jubilate, technically immaculate.

Double Piano Concerto in E flat, K.365

 Chan. 9711. G. and S. Pekinel, Philh. O, Marriner – BRUCH; MENDELSSOHN: Double Piano Concerto ***

This unique coupling of the Double Piano Concertos, devised by the Pekinel sisters, is an inspired one, even though the Mozart is the only masterpiece among the three works. It receives a fresh, alert reading, marked by superb ensemble from the two soloists, helped by vivid Chandos sound.

(i) Double Piano Concerto in E flat, K.365; Triple Piano Concerto in F (Lodron), K.242 (arr. for 2 pianos); Andante & Variations in G, K.501; Fantasia in F min., K.608 (arr. Busoni)

🔑 Ⓜ  Sony 518811 [SK 92735]. Perahia, Lupu; (i) with ECO

Murray Perahia and Radu Lupu are in good form in both concertos. The performances emanated from public concerts at The Maltings, Snape, between 1987 and 1990, and they have much of the excitement and spontaneity of live music-making. The two pianists are beautifully matched in both works, and again in the Variations and Busoni's transcription of the F minor Fantasy, originally written for a musical clock.

(i) Double Piano Concerto in E flat, K.365; (ii) Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364a

Ⓝ 🔑 Ⓜ * Chan. 10507X. (i) Gimse, Anvik; (ii) Iona Brown, Tomter; Norwegian CO, I. Brown

It is surprising that these two greatest of Mozart's 'double concertos' are not more regularly coupled, occupying adjacent Köchel numbers, both dating from 1779. Before she left us, Iona Brown built the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra into a superb body. It is good to welcome two brilliant young Norwegian pianists in K.365, light and agile, each articulating with refreshing clarity, relishing the antiphonal effects. In the elegant, spontaneously expressive account of the Sinfonia concertante the contrast between the soloists is more striking, when Iona Brown's clear, bright violin tone is set against the nut-brown warmth of Lars Tomter's viola. They make the slow movement the central point of their interpretation, with the closing section particularly moving, and the sparkling finale then follows on naturally. Full, clear Chandos sound. Highly recommended, especially at mid-price.

Violin concertos

Violin Concertos 1–5 (DVD and CD versions)

🔑 * DG DVD 073 4210 (2); CD 474 215-2 (2). Mutter, Camerata Salzburg (V/D: Andy Sommer)

Violin Concertos 1–5; (i) Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364 (DVD version)

🔑  DG DVD 073 4157 (2). Kremer, VPO, Harnoncourt; (i) with Kashkashian (V/D: Klaus Lindemann, Rodney Greenberg or Horant Hohfeld)

Anne-Sophie Mutter has had the Violin Concertos of Mozart as part of her very being since the beginning of her career. 'He's the composer I have grown up with, who was always there waiting for me, at every juncture of my career.' But these recordings (made live in December 2005 in the Salzburg Mozarteum at the end of a long tour) are special. She hardly conducts at all, except to start a concerto; her body movements are enough, for she has already established a complete rapport with the players of the Salzburg Camerata, whose ensemble is marvellously crisp and who are at one with her expressively in every bar of the music. Her performances, as before, show complete mastery and total freshness, yet they have the added maturity of long experience without loss of spontaneity. The audience is remarkably silent; but the drawback is that the camera angles are very restless, constantly changing shots of her from various positions, as well as observing key parts of the orchestral contribution. But one adjusts, and this set can be strongly recommended. In a bonus film she talks about her performing life, and members of the orchestra comment on their experience of working with her.

Gidon Kremer unites exceptionally well with the wild-eyed but visibly involved Nikolaus Harnoncourt and, with the Vienna Philharmonic playing superbly, this is exceptionally vivid music-making. The solo concertos are played simply and stylishly, but Harnoncourt's always alive and richly expressive accompaniments give the music-making the kind of lift which ensures that Kremer's playing never slips into routine. But the highlight of the set is Mozart's masterly Sinfonia concertante, where Kim Kashkashian joins the partnership and adds to the intensity of feeling. She has a glorious tone and the interplay between the soloists in the slow movement is ravishing, followed by the gloriously infectious finale. The recording is splendidly balanced.

Adagio for Violin and Orchestra in E, K.261; Rondo for Violin and Orchestra in C, K.373

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110975. Milstein, RCA Victor SO, Golschmann – DVOŘÁK; GLAZUNOV: Violin Concerto ()

These Mozart pieces are given with all the elegance and finesse – and purity – that Milstein commanded, and make a splendid foil to the Dvořák and Glazunov Concertos.

Violin Concertos 1–5; Adagio in R, K.261; Rondo Concertante in B flat, K.268

🔑 * PentaTone Surround Sound SACD PTC 5186 044 (1,2,5); PTC 5186 064 (3-4 and Adagio, K.261; Rondo, K.269). Julia Fischer, Netherlands CO, Kreizberg

Violin Concertos 1–5; Adagio in E, K.261; Rondo in C, K.373; Rondo Concertante in B flat, K.269

🔑 Ⓑ * O-L Double 455 721-2 (2). Standage, AAM, Hogwood

(i) Violin Concertos 1–5; (ii) Adagio in E, K.261; Rondo in C, K.373; (i; iii) Sinfonia concertante, K.364

🔑 Ⓑ * Ph. (ADD) Duo 438 323-2 (2). Grumiaux, (i) LSO, C. Davis; (ii) New Philh. O, Leppard; (iii) with Pellicia

Violin Concertos 1–5; Adagio in E, K.261; Rondo Concertante in B flat, K.269

(BB)  Virgin 2x1 Double 5 61576-2 (2). Huggett, OAE

Violin Concertos 1-5; (i; ii) Concertone in C, K.190; (i) Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364

🔑 Ⓜ * Avie AV 2058 (3). Mintz, with (i) Shaham; (ii) Anderson; ECO

Violin Concertos 1–5; Rondos 1–2, K.269 & K.373

Ⓜ  Sony SM2K 89983 (2). Lin, ECO, Leppard

Violin Concertos 1–5; (i) Sinfonia concertante, K.364

Ⓝ  DG 477 371 (2). Carmignola, O Mozart, Abbado; (i) with Waskiewicz

(i) Violin Concertos 1–5; (ii) Violin Sonatas 32 in B flat, K.454; 34 in A, K.526

Ⓜ  Ph. (ADD) stereo/mono 464 722-2 (2). Grumiaux, (i) LSO, C. Davis; (ii) Haskil

Shlomo Mintz's naturally flowing classical simplicity of line and gleaming tone are a joy throughout, yet these performances are deeply felt. Mintz directs the ECO himself from the bow, and they provide the most polished, elegant and supportive accompaniments, with bouncing rhythms in Allegros and lovely, warm phrasing of slow movements. (One notices in passing the glowing contribution of the horns.) The Concertone, with a delightful oboe contribution from John Anderson, is captivating, agreeably lightweight, while both here and in the lyrically flexible account of the inspired Sinfonia concertante Hagai Shaham proves an admirable violin partner. Mintz chooses himself to take the viola part in the latter, which brings an almost improvisatory feeling. The recordings bring a clarity and intimacy as well as warmth in the sound which, thanks to clean separation, never feels constricted.

Masterly playing from the magnificent Netherlands ensemble and the impeccable Julia Fischer. Wonderfully musical performances, exceptionally well recorded, too. They have been highly praised, and rightly so, as splendid modern-instrument recordings, full of style and beautifully phrased, with ravishing slow movements especially in K.261 and K.281 (which makes the second CD particularly memorable). The recording, made in the Waalse Kerk, Amsterdam, has a pleasingly warm acoustic without blurring detail. Whether heard through two or four speakers, the expansive sound is very persuasive, with the soloist ideally balanced. The back speakers add a fine sense of sitting within the church itself.

The young Italian virtuoso Giuliano Carmignola was a semi-finalist at the 1974 International Tchaikovsky Competition, and members of the Orchestra della Scala who were there alerted Abbado to his talent. They played the Mozart concertos with the period-instrument Orchestra Mozart, and established a close rapport; and Carmignola joined them to record these concertos in 2007. With Abbado's agreement, he decided to choose bright tempi throughout and articulation which is 'very clean and spare', while vibrato had 'to be used in a controlled way and never as an end in itself'. Both soloist and conductor sought 'to convey a new feeling of energy, vitality and freshness'. Carmignola's partner in the Sinfonia concertante, Danushka Waskiewicz, is hardly less accomplished. These recordings were made at Bologna in 2007 and must be ranked among the finest in this repertoire, whether on period or modern instruments. Impeccable recording.

Grumiaux's accounts of the Mozart Violin Concertos come from the early 1960s and are still among the most beautifully played in the catalogue at any price. The orchestral accompaniments have sparkle and vitality, and Grumiaux's contribution has splendid poise and purity of tone. For this generous reissue on their bargain Duo label, Philips have added the Adagio, K.261, and Rondo, K.373, recorded later in 1967, and also a fine performance of the great Sinfonia concertante, K.364, with Arrigo Pellicia proving a sensitive partner for Grumiaux, especially in the Andante. Grumiaux's set comes alternatively with two late Violin Sonatas, where he is admirably partnered by Clara Haskil. This was a celebrated partnership and these classic vintage accounts are of the highest calibre. The recordings from the late 1950s are mono, and although the sound is remarkably vivid and true, this is not made clear on the packaging. Nevertheless these are treasurable performances.

Anyone seeking period-instrument performances need look no further than Standage's superb Oiseau-Lyre set. Standage's beautifully focused, silvery tone is a constant joy. Hogwood's accompaniments are beautifully sprung, with no lack of warmth, the orchestral violins articulating neatly and gracefully to match the soloist and the transparent textures revealing every detail of the orchestral scoring. The shorter pieces are also given fine performances and are never treated just as encores. The 1990 Abbey Road recording is first rate throughout, beautifully balanced and with not a trace of edginess anywhere.

Monica Huggett provides an admirable alternative. She directs from the bow and she is a superb soloist: spontaneous, vital, warm and elegant. She plays her own cadenzas, and very good they are too. Orchestral textures are fresh and transparent, ensemble is excellent, and the solo playing is without even a drop of vinegar; indeed, the violin timbre, if not opulent, is firm, well focused and sparkling.

Cho-Liang Lin creates a ready partnership with Leppard and the ECO, and his persuasive style brings a combination of effervescence and delicacy matched by the orchestra, with appealing tenderness in slow movements and plenty of dash in finales. Lin is full of fancy and imagination; there is an element of youthful lightness running through these performances, though there is no lack of bite or point either. But this is essentially sweet, elegant playing in a traditional but uninflated style. First-class recording.

Violin Concertos 1 in B flat, K.207; 2 in D, K.211; 3 in G, K.216

 Virgin 3 44706-2. Biondi, Europa Galante

Fabio Biondi's Virgin disc, almost certainly part of a projected complete cycle, is a stimulating demonstration of period performance of these concertos. Biondi plays with great vivacity and a balancing expressive feeling, and Europa Galante, which he directs from the bow, match his vitality and lyrical intensity. The recording has great presence and realism, and this is very recommendable indeed.

Violin Concertos (i) 1 in B flat, K.207; (ii) 2 in D, K.211; 4 in D, K.218; (i) Adagio in E, K.261

Ⓜ  EMI 5 62825-2. Mutter; (i) ASMF, Marriner; (ii) Philh. O, Muti

Anne-Sophie Mutter was given very sensitive support from both Muti and Marriner. Her playing combines purity and classical feeling, delicacy and incisiveness, and is admirably expressive. Its freshness is also most appealing. Moreover, the digital recording is consistently good, the images clearly defined and the balance very satisfactory.

Violin Concertos 1 in B flat, K.207; 3 in G, K.216; 5 in A, K.219

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 476 2748. Brown, ASMF

Violin Concertos 1 in B flat, K.207; 3 in G, K.216; (i) Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364

Ⓝ Ⓜ  Virgin 502112-2. Renaud Capuçon, SCO, Langrée; (i) with Tamestit

Violin Concertos 2 in D, K.211; 4 in D, K.218; (i) Sinfonia concertante in E flat, K.364

 EMI 3 78374-2. Vengerov, UBS Verbier O, (i) with Power

 Australian Decca Eloquence (ADD/DDD) 476 2747. Brown, ASMF; (i) with Suk

Maxim Vengerov here beautifully scales his powerful tone down to suit the talented young players of the UBS Verbier Orchestra. Vengerov's rapport with them results in fresh and spontaneous-sounding performances throughout, very distinctive, if occasionally including idiosyncratic interpretative points, as in the slow start of the Sinfonia concertante. Vengerov builds a beautifully balanced partnership with the superb viola-player, Lawrence Power, in the Sinfonia concertante. Warm and full recording.

Renaud Capuçon favours brisk tempi – the finale of the B flat major Concerto in particular is played with sparkling bravura – but these are enjoyably alive performances, and in the Sinfonia concertante he is well partnered by Antoine Tamestit who has an attractively full viola timbre. They play the slow movement expressively, but not quite as movingly as Iona Brown and Lars Tomter on Chandos (see above).

Iona Brown's accounts of the Mozart Violin Concertos (originally on Argo) have the advantage of including another fine account of the great Sinfonia concertante, in which she is joined by Josef Suk. The performances of the solo concertos have a freshness and vigour that are winning, and, like the newer Avie set, the participants convey a sense of pleasure in what they are doing. There is a spring-like quality to this music-making. The only slight reservation concerns the Sinfonia concertante, where there is an element of restraint in the slow movement, which does not quite blossom here as it does in the finest versions. Nevertheless, these two CDs fully deserve a three-star recommendation.

Violin Concerto 3 in G

🔑 (BB)  EMI Gemini (ADD) 3 81487-2 (2). D. Oistrakh, Philh. O – BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto; BRAHMS: Double Concerto; PROKOFIEV: Violin Concerto 2 ***

 Warner 2564 61561-2. Rachlin, Bav. RSO, Jansons – BRAHMS: Violin Concerto in D ***

David Oistrakh's supple, rich-toned yet essentially classical style suits the melodic line of this youthful work and gives it the stature of maturity. The orchestral contribution is directed by the soloist himself and is eminently polished. EMI provide admirably smooth yet vivid sound, and this is just one of four marvellous performances which make up this superb Gemini compilation.

In Rachlin's version of K.216 it is striking that, though a full symphony orchestra is involved, Jansons keeps it in scale with the music. Even before the soloist enters, the brisk tempo and the lightness of texture establish the qualities of the reading, and despite the speed there is no feeling of rush, just of a persuasively taut interpretation. The central Adagio is marked by ultra-refined playing from soloist and orchestra alike. The finale, like the first movement, is fast, light and transparent, with a winning lilt.

Violin Concertos 3; 5 (Turkish)

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 457 746-2. Mutter, BPO, Karajan

(BB)  Naxos 8.550063. Nishizaki, Capella Istropolitana, Gunzenhauser

Extraordinarily mature and accomplished playing from Anne-Sophie Mutter, who was a mere fourteen years old when her recording was made. The instinctive mastery means that there is no hint of immaturity: the playing has polish, but fine artistry too and remarkable freshness. Karajan is at his most sympathetic and scales down the accompaniment to act as a perfect setting for his young soloist. The recording has been transferred brilliantly to CD, though some might feel that the orchestral strings are a shade too brightly lit.

This is the finest of Nishizaki's three discs of the Mozart Violin Concertos on Naxos. The readings are individual and possess the most engaging lyrical feeling and the natural response of the soloist to Mozartian line and phrase. A good balance, the soloist forward, but convincingly so, and the orchestral backcloth in natural perspective. A real bargain.

Violin Concerto 4, K.218

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110946. Szigeti, LPO, Beecham – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ()

Szigeti's account of this Mozart concerto comes in harness with his memorable Beethoven with Bruno Walter. Szigeti was in his prime when this was made, and his individuality shines through.

Violin Concertos (i) 4, K.218; (ii) 5 (Turkish) K.219

Ⓑ  Nim. NI 1735 (3). Shumsky, SCO, Y. P. Tortelier – BACH: Concertos; YSAŸE: Sonatas

Shumsky's performances are of the highest calibre. They are totally unaffected, spontaneous, and full of character. He has an excellent rapport with Yan Pascal Tortelier, who secures a warm, very alive and musical response from the Scottish Chamber Orchestra, with the players themselves conveying enthusiasm and pleasure. The recording is natural and nicely balanced. This now comes as part of a memorial box to profile the three major recordings which Shumsky made for Nimbus before he died in 2000. It is inexpensive and with good documentation; it is well worth acquiring.

Violin Concerto 5 (Turkish)

Ⓜ  DG (ADD) 447 403-2. Schneiderhan, BPO, Jochum – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto *** ✿

() Testament mono SBT 1228. Kogan, Conservatoire O, Vandernoot – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto ()

Ⓝ (BB) () Naxos 8.111288. Heifetz, LSO, Sargent – BACH: Violin Concertos (*)

This was perhaps the finest of the complete set of Mozart's Violin Concertos which Schneiderhan recorded with the Berlin Philharmonic in the late 1960s. The recording is realistically balanced, and this makes a generous coupling for his famous record of the Beethoven, made six years earlier.

Matching the outstanding account of the Beethoven Concerto with which it is coupled, Kogan's 1957 version of Mozart, recorded later in the same month, is comparably strong and purposeful in the first movement, positive in the expressive contrasts. The slow movement is sweet and tender, poetic without self-indulgence, and the finale sparkles in its contrasting sections. Excellent transfer to make one forget the absence of stereo.

Heifetz recorded the Turkish Concerto at least three times, once with Barbirolli and once with a chamber orchestra which he directed himself. The present account is predictably memorable, and Sargent proves a supportive partner. Mark Obert-Thorn's transfer of the 1951 Abbey Road recording is clear and clean but a little thin on top.

Concertone in C., K.190; Sinfonia concertante, K.364

🔑 ✿ Ⓜ * DG 477 575-5. Perlman, Zukerman, Israel PO, Mehta

The DG version of the Sinfonia concertante is in a special class and is an example of 'live' recording at its most magnetic, with the inspiration of the occasion caught on the wing. Zubin Mehta is drawn into the music-making and accompanies most sensitively. The Concertone is also splendidly done; the ear notices the improvement in the sound-balance of the studio recording of this work. But the Sinfonia concertante, with the audience incredibly quiet, conveys an electricity rarely caught on record.

Concertone; Sinfonia concertante, K.364; Rondo, K.373

🔑 ✿ * Pentatone Surround Sound SACD PTC 5186 098. Fisher, Nikolić, Netherlands CO, Kreizberg

The Pentatone coupling does not have the advantage of live recording in the Sinfonia concertante, but the surround sound is glorious, and Julia Fischer and Gordan Nikolić give a totally memorable account, easily matching that of Perlman and Zukerman on DG, fine as they are. So we see no reason for our 🏵 not to be shared by both discs. The Concertone (where Nikolić changes to violin) is plainer, but still most enjoyable, and Fischer offers the C major Rondo as a bonus between the two major works.

DANCES AND MARCHES

12 German Dances, K.586; 6 German Dances, K.600; 4 German Dances, K.602; 3 German Dances, K.605

(BB)  Naxos 8.550412. Capella Istropolitana, Wildner

Fresh, bright, unmannered performances of some of the dance music Mozart wrote right at the end of his life. The playing is excellent and the recording is bright and full. An excellent super-bargain.

DIVERTIMENTI

Divertimenti and serenades

Divertimenti for Strings 1–3, K.136–8; Serenades 6 in D (Serenata notturna), K.239; 13 in G (Eine kleine Nachtmusik), K.525

(M) (*) Classic fM 75605 57024-2. City of L. Sinfonia, Watkinson

These are delightful performances from the City of London Sinfonia: fresh, warm and polished. Eine kleine Nachtmusik is elegant, graceful and nicely paced, and the same can be said of the three engaging String Divertimenti. The Serenata notturna features the leaders of each section (two violins, viola and double bass) as a solo concertino group, and with the timpani not over-dominant. The resonance of the recording is rather excessive but, if you don't mind that, this Classic fM programme is very recommendable.

Divertimento 1 in D, K.236; Serenade in D (Serenata notturna), K.239; Serenade in D (Posthorn), K.328

🔑 (BB)  Virgin 2x1 4 82112-2 (2). Lausanne CO, Y. Menuhin – SCHOENBERG: Verklaerte Nacht; WAGNER: Siegfried Idyll; WOLF: Italian Serenade ***

An exceptionally attractive anthology of what is all essentially string music. The little Divertimento sparkles in Menuhin's hands and the Serenades are equally light-hearted and fresh, with Crispian Steele-Perkins in his element in his brief appearance in the Minuet of the Posthorn Serenade.

Divertimento 2 in D, K.131; 15 in B flat, K.287

(BB)  Naxos 8.550996. Capella Istropolitana, Nerat

The playing of the Capella Istropolitana under Harald Nerat is beautifully turned and polished. The D major Divertimento is charmingly scored for flute, oboe, bassoon, four horns and strings, but it has a gracious second-movement Adagio cantilena of disarming simplicity for strings alone. The B flat Divertimento was written five years later, in Salzburg, and is scored more simply for two horns and strings.

Divertimento 17 in D, K.334 (DVD version)

(*) Sony DVD SVD 46388. BPO, Karajan – RICHARD STRAUSS: Also sprach Zarathustra ***

By the time Karajan conducted these two celebratory concerts he was already ailing, but, once there, the electric intensity of his conducting is as striking as ever. Karajan gives brightly refreshing accounts of the outer movements, and determinedly traditional readings of the three middle movements omitting the march movement, K.445, latterly thought to belong to the piece. The celebrated Minuet, which comes third, prompts Karajan to a reading so slow and moulded one is reminded of Beecham's more eccentric interpretations of Mozart. The orchestra responds with total loyalty, and the wit and exhilaration of the finale make a delightful conclusion.

Wind divertimenti and serenades

Divertimenti for Wind 3, K.166; 4, K.186; 8, K.213; 9, K.240; 12, K.252; 13, K.253; 14, K.270; Serenades 10, K.361; 11, K.375; 12, K.388

(M)  Auvidis E 8627/29 (3). Zefiro Ens.

Astrée Auvidis offer a digital set at mid-price (three records for the cost of two), offering three major Serenades, plus seven of the Divertimenti, played on period instruments by a highly sensitive Italian group. The performances are very recommendable on all counts. The sounds of the period instruments are delightfully fresh and the blending of timbres most felicitous. The playing itself brings a characteristic Italianate sunny quality to Mozart yet is remarkably subtle in detail. The Gran Partita is particularly seductive, with only one tiny flaw. At the opening of its eloquent Adagio the initial oboe entry begins a little below the note: some ears might find this disturbing on repetition. Otherwise intonation is impeccable and the brilliant playing on natural horns by Raul Diaz and Dileno Baldin is most infectious; overall the Zefiro group play with such glowing finesse and spontaneity that this Auvidis set must marginally take pride of place.

Divertimenti in B flat, K.Anh.227 (K.196f); 12 in E flat, K.252; 13 in F, K.253; Serenade 12 in C min., K.388

🔑 (BB) * Naxos 8.555943. Oslo PO Wind Ens.

These 1997 performances show the Oslo Philharmonic wind on top form. They give the two Salzburg Divertimenti with finesse and grace, and bring great intensity to the C minor Serenade. The recording, made at the Lommedalen Church at Baerun, has splendid presence and bloom. An outstanding bargain.

6 German Dances, K.571; Les Petits riens: ballet music, K.299b; Serenade (Eine kleine Nachtmusik)

🔑 (BB)  Warner Apex 0927 48691-2. SCO, Leppard

The performance of Les Petits riens is delightful, spirited and polished, and the German Dances are no less lively and elegant; the famous Nachtmusik is nicely proportioned and very well played. The sound too is most believable, giving a tangible impression of the players sitting together out beyond the speakers.

A Musical Joke, K.522; Notturno in D for 4 Orchestras, K.286; Serenade 6 (Serenata notturna); 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik)

🔑 ✿ * Alia Vox SACD Surround Sound AVSA 9846. Le Concert des Nations, Savall

An outstanding disc in every way, which includes (by the grace of SACD) the first really convincing recorded performance of the Notturno for Four Orchestras, scored for four separate groups, each consisting of first and second violins, viola and double bass, plus a pair of horns. Mozart left the first group unnamed, but called the others 'Echo Primo', 'Echo Duo' and 'Echo Trio', and the music is written so that the first orchestra announces each theme and the others repeat it in increasingly brief and shortened echoes, while it is the resonant horns that bring the remarkable atmospheric effects. With SACD surround sound, the effect is greatly enhanced and would surely have brought a twinkle of pleasure to Mozart's eye if he could have heard it.

Musically it is a very fine performance, as indeed is the Musical Joke, played deadpan so that the jokey dissonances are all the more arresting. The performance of Eine kleine Nachtmusik is also refreshingly spirited and eloquent, with the use of one instrument to a part producing a pleasingly full texture; while in the equally successful Serenata notturna the balance with the timpani is splendidly managed, so that they outline the music without drowning it.

Masonic Music: Adagio & Fugue in C min., K.546 (arr. for strings); Adagios in F & B flat, K.410/11; Maurerische Trauermusik, K.477; Cantata: Eine kleine Freimaurer, K.623; Choruses: Die Maurerfreude, K.471; Dir, Seele des Weltalls, K.429; 4 Lieder

Ⓝ (BB)  Naxos 8.570897. Heo Young-Hoon, Kassel State Op. Ch. Male Voices, Kassel Spohr CO, Paternostro

A pleasing collection of music Mozart wrote after he joined the Viennese Lodge in 1784. The Adagio and Fugue is the most celebrated piece (arranged here for string orchestra) while the other two Adagios are for woodwind; the F major is very brief. The Trauermusik, also of modest length, for strings and woodwind; is rather fine. The collection opens with a jolly chorus (a hymn to the sun), and closes with a 'Little Masonic Cantata', Loudly proclaim our joy, for two tenors and chorus; the Lieder are well sung by a capable tenor, Heo Young-Hoon. Roberto Paternostro directs the Kassel Spohr Chamber Orchestra and Chorus persuasively, and the recording is most natural. Not essential repertoire, but still of interest.

Overtures

Overtures: Apollo et Hyacinthus; Bastien und Bastienne; La clemenza di Tito; Così fan tutte; Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; La finta giardiniera; Idomeneo; Lucio Silla; Mitridate, re di Ponto; Le nozze di Figaro; Il re pastore; Der Schauspieldirektor; Die Zauberflöte

🔑 (BB)  Naxos 8.550185. Capella Istropolitana, Wordsworth

Barry Wordsworth follows up his excellent series of Mozart symphonies for Naxos with this generous collection of overtures, no fewer than 14 of them, arranged in chronological order and given vigorous, stylish performances. In Italian overture form, Mitridate and Lucio Silla, like miniature symphonies, have separate tracks for each of their three contrasted sections. Very well recorded, the disc is highly recommendable at super-bargain price.

Overtures: Bastien und Bastienne; La clemenza di Tito; Così fan tutte; Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; La finta giardiniera; Idomeneo; Lucio Silla; Le nozze di Figaro; Il re pastore; Der Schauspieldirektor; Die Zauberflöte

Ⓜ  RCA 82876 76235-2. Dresden State O, C. Davis

A self-recommending set of Mozart overtures from Colin Davis here reappears in RCA's 'Classic Library' series at mid-price. Davis perfectly balances the full weight of the dramatic moments with the sparkle of the lighter ones, and the dynamic contrasts are very well judged. The recording is good. If occasionally the tuttis can seem a little bass-heavy because of the resonant Dresden acoustic, this is not a serious problem, and anyone wanting a budget collection of Mozart overtures on modern instruments in digital sound cannot go far wrong here.

Overtures: Bastien und Bastienne; Così fan tutte; La clemenza di Tito; Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; La finta giardiniera; Idomeneo; Le nozze di Figaro; Il re pastore; Lucio Silla; Der Schauspieldirektor; Die Zauberflöte

🔑 Ⓑ  Virgin 3 63284-2. Lausanne CO, Y. Menuhin

Menuhin's 1990 Lausanne collection is predictably stylish, the performances elegantly turned, with neat articulation from the strings. Yet there is ample life and drama, and very well recorded indeed, with textures clean, yet with a fine overall sonority. The order is felicitous, so it is possible to play the programme straight through and enjoy every piece.

Overtures: La clemenza di Tito; Così fan tutte; Don Giovanni; Die Entführung aus dem Serail; La finta giardiniera; Idomeneo; Lucio Silla; Le nozze di Figaro; Der Schauspieldirektor; Die Zauberflöte

Ⓜ  Warner Elatus 2564 60122-2. Zürich Opera House O; or Concg. O; or VCM; Harnoncourt

Harnoncourt draws splendidly polished and spirited playing from all these orchestras, and the result is consistently dramatic and satisfying, even if the CD is played straight through. And although the most familar overtures (Don Giovanni and Così fan tutte for instance) come up freshly, the lesser-known ones, for example La clemenza di Tito and the three-part Lucio Silla, are among the most stimulating. Of course, because many of these performances derive from his opera recordings, some are without their concert endings. But no matter; this is an excellent disc, and consistently well recorded too.

Serenades

Serenades 1 in D, K.100; 10 in B flat for 13 Wind Instruments (Gran Partita), K.361

🔑  BIS CD 1010. Tapiola Sinf., Kantorow

The Tapiola Sinfonietta under Jean-Jacques Kantorow gives a finely paced and splendidly phrased account of the great Wind Serenade and a delightfully vital account of the D major Serenade, K.100, lightly accented and full of character and wit. They make more of this piece than many of their rivals, and they get superb recording from the BIS team. Very recommendable.

Serenades 3, K.185; 4 (Colloredo), K.203

(BB)  Naxos 8.550413. Salzburg CO, Nerat

Well-played, nicely phrased and musical accounts on Naxos, recorded in a warm, reverberant acoustic, but one in which detail clearly registers. The Salzburg Chamber Orchestra has real vitality, and most readers will find these accounts musically satisfying and very enjoyable.

Serenades (i) 6 (Serenata notturna), K.239; 7 (Haffner), K.250; 9 (Posthorn), K.320

 Telarc CD 80161. Prague CO, Mackerras

In Mackerras's coupling the playing is lively and brilliant, helped by warm recorded sound, vivid in its sense of presence, except that the reverberant acoustic clouds the tuttis a little. The violin soloist, Oldrich Viček, is very much one of the team under the conductor rather than a virtuoso establishing his individual line. By omitting repeats in the Haffner, Mackerras leaves room for the other delightful Serenade, just as haunting, with the terracing between the solo string quartet (in close focus) and the full string band aptly underlined.

Serenade 7 (Haffner), K.250; Symphony 35 (Haffner), K.385

🔑  Häns. CD 98.173. ASMF, I. Brown

The coupling of the Haffner Symphony and Haffner Serenade, especially apt, is surprisingly rare. In the Symphony Iona Brown, unlike Marriner, follows the autograph in omitting an exposition repeat. Brown herself is the virtuoso soloist in the Serenade, as she was in the Marriner version on Philips, lighter than ever in the moto perpetuo scurryings of the fourth movement Rondo.

Serenades 9 (Posthorn), K.320; 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik), K.525

(*) Telarc CD 10108. Prague CO, Mackerras

(i) Serenades 9 (Posthorn), K.320; 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik), K.525; (ii) 6 German Dances, K.509; Minuet in C, K.409

Ⓑ (*) Sony (ADD) SBK 48266. (i) Cleveland O, Szell; (ii) LSO, Leinsdorf

Serenade 9 (Posthorn), K. 320; Symphony 33, K 319

🔑  Häns. CD 98.129. ASMF, I. Brown

Iona Brown here offers another popular Serenade alongside a symphony contemporary with it. The sound is outstandingly good, with plenty of bloom but with no excessive reverberation. These are attractively fresh Mozart performances, using modern instruments, which have concern for the crisper manners encouraged by period performance. Speeds are consistently brisker than those of the Marriner versions which we have used for comparison. The finale of Symphony 33, for example, brings a hectic speed which does not sound at all breathless, with feather-light triplets, and similarly in the finale of the Posthorn Serenade with which it is coupled.

The Prague strings have great warmth and Mackerras gets vital results from his Czech forces. Rhythms are lightly sprung and the phrasing is natural in every way. The Telarc acoustic is warm and spacious with a wide dynamic range (some might feel it is too wide for this music), though most ears will find the effect agreeable.

Marvellously vivacious playing from the Clevelanders in the Posthorn Serenade, especially in the exhilarating Presto finale, yet there is no lack of tenderness in the concertante third movement. Eine kleine Nachtmusik is similarly polished and vital, and in both works the Severance Hall acoustic provides a full ambience, but it is a pity that the close balance means a reduced dynamic range. Even so, this is music-making of great character. Leinsdorf's German Dances make a lively bonus, if not as distinctive as the Szell performances.

Serenade 10 in B flat for 13 wind instruments (Gran Partita), K.361

(BB) (*) Hyp. Helios CDH 55093. Albion Ens.

Ⓜ (*) Telarc CD 80359. St Luke's O (members), Mackerras

(*) Accent ACC 68642D. Octophorus, Kuijken

Serenade 10 in B flat (Gran Partita), K.361; Adagio in B flat for 2 Clarinets and 3 Basset Horns, K.484a

🔑  MDG 301 1077-2. Consortium Classicum

The Consortium Classicum's performance of the Gran Partita is among the finest on disc. The CD begins with a rarity, the Adagio in B flat for Two Clarinets and Three Basset Horns, K.484a, and K.361 is a serenade with a difference. There are unusual touches: the first trio of the second movement and the theme in the variation movement are for strings alone. They are very well recorded, too.

The Albion Ensemble give a most enjoyable account of Mozart's large-scale Serenade, finely blended and polished, and with the outer movements enjoyably robust and spirited. There is some very fine oboe-playing, and Andrew Marriner's clarinet is noticeably elegant in the penultimate Theme and Variations. Elsewhere there are moments when the mellifluous playing has rather less character, although it never becomes bland.

Sir Charles Mackerras here turns to an excellent group of players from Purchase, New York. They play expertly together, with good ensemble. The performance is warm and relaxed above all, with the penultimate set of variations particularly colourful and chirpy, and the closing Rondo (which Mozart marks Allegro molto) by contrast rumbustiously exhilarating. Excellent Telarc recording but, at 50 minutes 37 seconds, a coupling should surely have been added, even at mid-price.

On period instruments Barthold Kuijken directs his talented team in an authentic performance where the distinctive character of 18th-century instruments brings a sparer, lighter texture, as it should. Speeds tend to be on the cautious side but the liveliness of the playing makes up for that. The recording adds to the clarity but, again, there is no coupling.

Serenades 10, K.361; 11, K.375; 12, K.388; Wind Divertimenti: K.240; K.252; K.253; K.270

Ⓑ  Double Decca 458 096-2 (2). Amadeus Winds, Hogwood

Anyone wanting period performances of Mozart's three supreme Serenades for Wind will find that this collection offers a fascinating aural comparison. K.375 and K.388 were recorded first in 1985 in New York, and the effect is undoubtedly more plangent than in the later performances recorded in Boston in 1987 (K.361) and 1989 (the four Divertimenti). In the C minor Serenade the extra darkness of colour adds to the character of the music. The speeds are perhaps a recognition of the players' technical problems, coping with intonation and less sophisticated mechanisms, a point brought home in the clear, full, digital recording, with much clicking of keys. By the time they came to record the Gran Partita, two years later, the group's integration was much smoother and the effect is much more sophisticated. Indeed, this is an outstandingly characterful account, not lacking finesse, and making the strongest possible case for authenticity. Both the Adagio and Romance are lyrically mellow, and the Theme and Variations is almost Schubertian in its innocent charm. The jocular finale goes like the wind, pressed home with a virtuosity surmounting almost all difficulties. The four Divertimenti are also very successful, with the vivid colouring preventing any possible feeling of blandness.

Serenades for Wind Instruments: 10 in B flat (Gran Partita), K.361; 11 in E flat, K.375; 12 in C min., K.388; Sinfonia Concertante for Wind, K.297b

🔑 (BB) * COE CD COS 242 (2) (with Concert Rondo in E flat, K.371) – COE Wind Soloists, Schneider

The brilliant young wind soloists of the Chamber Orchestra of Europe, with Alexander Schneider a wise and experienced guide, give unusually positive and characterful readings of these supreme examples of wind music, performances which combine brilliance with warmth and a feeling of spontaneity. The only controversial point is that the second Adagio of K.361, phrased subtly, sounds rather heavier than usual, at a comparatively relaxed speed. The C minor opening of K.388 might have been more menacing; K.375, however, is a special delight, as genial as it is characterful. The Sinfonia concertante is a live performance, less immaculate than the rest of the collection; but it is a lively, stylish account, with atmospheric if imperfectly balanced sound, not helped by audience noises. However, this hardly detracts from the value of the reissued set as a whole, as elsewhere the sound is most persuasive, vivid and faithful, and set against a warm acoustic. The Gran Partita is also available separately on CD COE 804, and the E flat and C minor Serenades on CD COE 802.

Serenades 10 (Gran Partita), K.361; 13 (Eine kleine Nachtmusik)

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110994. VPO, Furtwängler (with GLUCK: Overture Alceste, BPO)

Furtwängler's 1947 recording of the great B flat Wind Serenade is a performance of enormous warmth, lightness of touch and tonal richness, which we have long treasured on the five original 78s. It is a reading of depth and, although the sonorities are at times weightier than we are used to nowadays, the phrasing of the Viennese players has enormous delicacy and grace. The Eine kleine Nachtmusik comes from 1949 and there is a bonus in the form of the Gluck Alceste Overture, one of the few wartime records Furtwängler made with the Berlin Philharmonic for the Telefunken label. A must.

Serenades 11, K.375; 12, K.388

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1180. L. Bar. Ens., Haas – DVOŘÁK: Serenade ((*))

Serenades 11, K.375; 12, K.388; Overtures: Le nozze di Figaro (arr. Vent); Don Giovanni (arr. Triebensee); Die Zauberflöte (arr. Heidenreich)

🔑 (BB)  Hyp. Helios CDH 55092. E. Concert Winds

Both Serenades on Helios are among the finest on disc and the Overtures are great fun. Fresh, spirited playing throughout, firmly focused and well-blended sound, both from the players and from the engineers. A delight.

This historic reissue of pioneering recordings from Karl Haas and the London Baroque Ensemble of three of the greatest of all wind works is valuable for performances that are ahead of their time in their brisk, no-nonsense manners and fast speeds, with the works often tackled impromptu. There is a brisk, military flavour in allegros, yet the mastery of individual players still defies the idea of over-rigid performances, with delectable interplay between the principals. Vivid and immediate transfers of recordings, set in a dry acoustic.

Sinfonias Concertantes and Epistle Sonatas – see also Concertone above

Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364 (DVD version)

(*) EMI DVD 490449-9. I. Oistrakh, D. Oistrakh, Moscow PO, Menuhin – BACH: Double Violin Concerto, etc.; BRAHMS: Double Concerto **(*)

Mozart's heavenly Sinfonia concertante is wonderfully played by Oistrakh père et fils at the Royal Albert Hall in September 1963 when the Moscow Philharmonic was on tour here, and in this item Menuhin rather than Kondrashin conducts. It is a valuable document and is splendidly produced by Anthony Craxton with appropriately discreet camera-work. David Nice's notes speak of 'the elegance and focused tone David Oistrakh draws from the viola', and this is a joy in itself. A moving record, in spite of the inevitable limitations of the sound.

Sinfonia concertante for Violin, Viola & Orchestra, K.364 (CD versions)

Ⓜ (*) RCA (ADD) SACD 88697 04605-2. Heifetz, Primrose, RCA Victor SO, Izler Solomon – BACH: Double Concerto; BRAHMS: Double Concerto ***

() BBC (ADD) BBCL 4019-2. D. and I. Oistrakh, Moscow PO, Menuhin – BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto in D, Op. 61 ()

(BB) () Naxos mono 8.110957. Sammons, Tertis, LPO, Harty (with: ELGAR: Violin Sonata in E min., Op. 82 (with Murdoch); SCHUBERT: Rosamunde: Entr'acte; DVOŘÁK: Humoresque, Op. 101/7; MASSENET: Thaïs: Méditation; NACHEZ: Passacaglia on a theme of Sammartini; SAMMONS: Bourrée; TRAD.: Londonderry Air (all with Moore))

((*)) Testament mono SBT 1157. Brainin, Schidlof, LMP, Blech – SCHUBERT: String Quintet in C. ()

The Heifetz/Primrose partnership is too closely balanced and the brisk pace of the finale may not suit all tastes, but the crisp interchange is fresh and joyful, and in the slow movement the warmly responsive interchange between the two great soloists is genuinely moving, with the cadenza outstanding. The SACD remastering has greatly improved the sound.

With David Oistrakh playing the viola and his son, Igor, the violin, the Mozart Sinfonia concertante under Menuhin's baton is a most spontaneous and vivid performance, and the BBC recording gives us truthful and natural sound. Self-recommending.

Albert Sammons was the greatest English violinist of his day, and he possessed a wonderful breadth of phrasing and sensitivity. His account of the E flat Sinfonia concertante, K.364 with Tertis, remains one of the greatest performances of this masterpiece on record. It comes closer to Mozart than most subsequent recordings, particularly in the rapt, inward exchanges between the two soloists in the slow movement. Quite wonderful in fact. The fill-ups complete a splendid further tribute to Sammons's artistry.

The Testament version of the Sinfonia concertante was recorded at Abbey Road in 1953. The studio recording, cleanly transferred, focuses the soloists sharply, giving warmth and body to the tone – exceptionally rich from Peter Schidlof on the viola. If the slow movement is a degree broad and heavy with Blech, the finale is jollier, at a marginally more relaxed tempo.

(i; ii) Sinfonia concertante in E flat, K.364; (ii) Duo for Violin and Viola in G, K.423

Ⓜ (*) Decca (ADD) 476 7288-2 (2). D. Oistrakh; (i) Moscow PO, Kondrashin; (ii) I. Oistrakh – BRUCH: Scottish Fantasia; HINDEMITH: Violin Concerto ***

The performance by the Oistrakh duo is not notable for its relaxed manner. Everything is shaped most musically, but sometimes the listener may feel that the performers in their care for detail and concern for the balance are less involved in the music itself. However, with solo playing of a high calibre the music-making is still rewarding, and the 1963 recording sounds well in this new transfer. This is now reissued in Universal's 'Critics' Choice' series.

Sinfonia concertante, K.297b

🔑  Warner 2564 621791-2. Saleh, Azmeh, Biron, Polyak, West-Eastern Divan O, Barenboim – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 5 ****

Ⓜ () Cala mono CACD 0523. Tabuteau, Portnoy, Schoenbach, Jones, Phd. O, Stokowski – BEETHOVEN: Symphony 6 (Pastoral) ()

With the brilliantly talented young players of the West-Eastern Divan Orchestra, both Arab and Israeli, Barenboim directs an unashamedly traditional reading of Mozart's concertante masterpiece, with a relatively large body of strings. In this live recording, made in the Palestinian town of Ramallah, the buoyancy of the playing is firmly established in the opening orchestral tutti, bright and brisk. The four wind soloists enhance that impression in the resilience and fine coordination of their interplay, led by the outstanding oboist, Mohamed Saleh. A delectable performance. Like the orchestra's first disc, this one is backed up by a documentary on DVD, this time issued separately.

Stokowski recorded the Sinfonia concertante in December 1940; it was his first and only Mozart recording made in his quarter-century directing the Philadelphia Orchestra. The result is sheer joy. His graceful string-phrasing may have romantic elements, but the warmth is ever persuasive. His expert group of orchestral soloists (balanced forwardly and clearly) blend well together – with the single proviso that the bassoonist at times produces a rather close vibrato. The transfer is excellent and the sound, though a bit subfusc, is always fully acceptable, with a wider dynamic range than on the coupled Beethoven. A disc to treasure for all Stokowskians.

(i) Sinfonia concertante, K.297b; (ii) Piano & Wind Quintet in E flat, K.452

🔑 ✿ () Testament mono SBT 1091. (i) Brain, James, Sutcliffe, Walton, Philh. O, Karajan; (ii) Gieseking, Philh. Wind Ens. – BEETHOVEN: Piano & Wind Quintet ✿ ()

The Mozart Quintet is one of the classic chamber-music recordings of all time. Gieseking and members of the Philharmonia Wind (Dennis Brain, Sidney Sutcliffe, Bernard Walton and Cecil James) recorded it over 40 years ago, and in terms of tonal blend and perfection of balance and ensemble it has few rivals. To the original quintet coupling Testament have added the Sinfonia concertante for wind, which these distinguished players recorded with Karajan in 1953, a performance of comparable stature. Not to be missed. The mono sound comes up wonderfully fresh in this Testament transfer. This is a full-price reissue and is worth every penny of the asking price.

Sonatas 1–17 (Epistle Sonatas)

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550512. Sebestyén, Budapest Ferenc Erkel CO

 MDG 605 0298. Ullman, V. Concillium Mus., Angerer

The Epistle Sonatas derive their name from the fact that they were intended to be heard between the Epistle and Gospel in the Mass. Admittedly they are not great music or even first-class Mozart; however, played with relish they make a strong impression. The final Sonata, K.263, becomes a fully fledged concerto.

While it is understood that, apart from 16 in C, K.329, which has a specific solo part, the organ is not intended as a solo instrument in these Chiesa Sonatas, it seems perverse to balance the instrument so that it blends in completely with the orchestral texture, as the Naxos engineers have done. Otherwise these alert, polished and nicely scaled performances could hardly be improved on and, apart from the controversial matter of the relationship of the organ to the orchestra, the recording is first class.

On the alternative MDG versions (as in the Naxos alternative recording) the organ is very much in the background. They are well played and recorded.

SYMPHONIES

Symphonies 1 in E flat, K.16; in F, K.19a; 4 in D, K.19; 5 in B flat, K.22; 6 in F, K.43; 7 in D, K.45; 7a (Alte Lambacher) in G, K.45a; in B flat, K.45b; 8 in D, K.48; 9 in C, K.73; 10 in G, K.74; in F, K.75; in F, K.76; in D, K.81; 11 in D, K.84; in D, K.95; in C, K.96; in D, K.97; in C, K.102; 12 in G, K.110; 13 in F, K.112; 14 in A, K.114; in D, K.120 & K.121; 15 in G, K.124; 16 in C, K.128; 17 in G, K.129; 18 in F, K.130; 19 in E flat, K.132; 20 in D, K.133; 21 in A, K.134; in D, K.161; 22 in C, K.162; 23 in D, K.181; 24 in B flat, K.182; 25 in G min., K.183; 26 in E flat, K.184; 27 in G, K.199; 28 in C, K.200; 29 in A, K.201; 30 in D, K.202; 31 in D (Paris), K.297; 32 in G, K.318; 33 in B flat, K.319; 34 in C, K.338; 35 in D (Haffner), K.385; 36 in C (Linz), K.425; 38 in D (Prague), K.504; 39 in E flat, K.543; 40 in G min., K.550; 41 in C (Jupiter), K.551

🔑 (BB) * EMI 5 85589-2 (12). ECO, Tate

Jeffrey Tate's survey of the Mozart symphonies is one of the finest things he has done for the gramophone. Recorded over a long period, from 1984 to 2003, his inspiration remained constant. Tate jumped in at the deep end by starting with 40 and 41, and they remain very impressive accounts. In the Jupiter, the apt scale of the ECO fully allows the grandeur of the work to come out: on the one hand, it has the clarity of a chamber orchestra performance, but on the other, with trumpets and drums, its weight of expression never underplays the scale of the argument, which originally prompted the unauthorized nickname. In both symphonies, exposition repeats are observed in outer movements, particularly important in the Jupiter finale which, with its miraculous fugal writing, bears even greater argumentative weight than the first movement, a point firmly established by Tate.

The first three CDs in the boxed set concentrate on his earliest symphonies, including many of the unnumbered symphonies (here given supplementary numbers, 42–52). Some of the rarer unnumbered works are adaptations of early opera overtures, and all of them are colourful pieces. These early works are full of vitality (even if the authenticity of one or two of them is doubtful). Tate finds fresh exhilaration in these scores where the young Mozart was finding his feet, exploring possibilities all the time. From 25 onwards, itself very well done, Tate's detailed articulation and fine detail are always telling. In all these works, he provides a winning combination of affectionate manners, freshness and elegance.

Both the Linz and the Prague receive strong but elegant readings, bringing out the operatic overtones in the latter, not just in the Don Giovanni-like progressions in the slow introduction, but also in the power of the development section and in the wonder of the chromatic progressions in the slow movement, as well as the often surprising mixture of timbres. In the Linz, Tate is attractively individual, putting rather more emphasis on elegance and finding tenderness in the slow movement, taken (like the Adagio of the Prague) at a very measured speed.

The recordings are fresh and warm throughout this stimulating and enjoyable set, which is strongly recommended, especially at super-bargain price.

Symphonies 1 in F, K.19a; 5 in G, K.45a; 6 ; 7 – 9 in F, K.75; in F, K.76; in B flat, K.45b; in D, K.81; in D, K.95; in D, K.97; 10 – 11 in B flat, K.Anh.214; in C, K.96; 12 – 29 ; 31 – 36; 38 – 41

(B) * DG 471 666-2 (11). E. Concert, Pinnock

Pinnock's Mozartian enterprise has the advantage of some years' experience of authentic performance, and certain exaggerated elements have been absorbed into a smoother, but not less vital, playing style. In the invigorating 'Salzburg' Symphonies (16–29) the playing has polish and sophistication, fine intonation, spontaneity and great vitality, balanced by warm, lyrical feeling in the slow movements. Indeed, the account of 29 in A is among the finest available and the earlier A major work (21) is very impressive too, as is the G minor, K.183, and the very 'operatic' 23 in D. In the later symphonies, the masterpieces from the Paris to the Jupiter can be warmly recommended, and not only to period enthusiasts. It is the joy and exhilaration in Mozart's inspiration that consistently bubble out from these accounts, even from the dark G minor or the weighty Jupiter. The rhythmic lift which Pinnock consistently finds is infectious throughout, and it is a measure of his mastery that when in a slow movement such as that of the Prague he chooses an unusually slow speed, there is no feeling of dragging. Clear, well-balanced sound throughout the series makes this set an obvious primary recommendation for those wanting period-instrument performances, especially at its new bargain price.

Symphonies 1; 4; in F, K.19a; 5; in G, K.45a; 6-36; 38–41

🔑 (M)  Telarc CD 80300 (10). Prague CO, Mackerras

Mackerras's is an outstanding series, with electrifying performances of the early as well as the later symphonies. There is not a suspicion of routine, with the playing full of dramatic contrasts in rhythm, texture or dynamic. Mackerras has a keen feeling for Mozart style, not least in the slow movements and minuets, which he regularly takes faster than usual. His flowing Andantes are consistently stylish too, with performances on modern instruments regularly related to period practice. An outstanding instance comes in the G minor Andante of 5 in B flat, K.22, where Mackerras, fastish and light, makes others seem heavy-handed in this anticipation of romanticism, underlining the harmonic surprises clearly and elegantly. Consistently Mackerras finds light and shade in Mozart's inspirations, both early and late, though some may feel that, with warm reverberation characteristic of this Prague orchestra's recording venue, the scale is too large, particularly in the early symphonies. Harpsichord continuo, where used, is usually well balanced.

Symphonies 6, K.43; 48, K111/120; 50, K161/163; 51 K.121; 52, K.208/102; 55 K.App.2140

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 139. ASMF, Marriner

Symphonies 7a in G, K.45a (Alte Lambacher); in G (Neue Lambacher); 12 in G, K.110; 18 in F, K.130

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 112. ASMF, Marriner

Symphonies 7 in D, K.45; 8 in D, K.48; 9 in C, K.72; 19 in E flat, K.132; Andante grazioso, K.132

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 138. ASMF, Marriner

Symphonies 20 in D, K.133; 45 in D, K.95; 46 in C, K.96; 47 in D, K.97; 51 in D, K.196

🔑 * Pentatone SACD PTC 5186 113. ASMF, Marriner

Marriner and the ASMF were at the top of their form in the early 1970s when they recorded these juvenile Mozart symphonies in London (in Brent Town Hall, Wembley). The Philips recordings have long been famous for their naturalness, and now we discover that they were originally 4-channel recordings; when heard in SACD format, with the back speakers properly balanced, the spatial effect of the sound is amazing. Marriner's survey has a splendid Mozartian vitality and yet has all the grace of Karl Boehm's early DG survey of the Mozart symphonies, yet with more freedom and sparkle. The Academy play with great style, warmth and polish, and the effect with such realistic sound is splendidly alive and vivid. These delightful recordings are thus given a wholly new lease of life. It has recently been confirmed that both the Lambach Symphonies were written in 1766 by Mozart père and fils when the latter was ten years old. Wolfgang then wrote K.45 alone, during a trip to Vienna in 1767/8, and K.48 at the end of 1768. But it is in K.132, composed in Salzburg in 1772, that Mozart's true symphonic style emerges, and included here too is its alternative slow movement, a delightful Andante grazioso. The symphonies on the third disc also come from the 1770s, probably written during the teenage composer's visit to Italy: distinct Italian influences can be discovered in the writing. 51 is identical to the Overture La finta giardiniera, with an added finale. It is all delightful music, and especially rewarding when played with such grace and spontaneous feeling.

Symphonies 14–18

 Telarc CD 80242. Prague CO, Mackerras

14 in A is a particularly fine work (as indeed are all Mozart's A major symphonies) and, like the others here, it receives an invigorating account with brisk Allegros and a strong, one-in-a-bar tempo for the Minuet (this suits the Minuet of 18 in F even better as it is very folksy). Slow movements, however, are very direct and are pressed onwards slightly unbendingly; here some might find Mackerras's approach too austere. The bright recording is resonant, which prevents absolute clarity, but the clean lines of the playing ensure plenty of stimulating impact.

Symphonies 15–18

(BB) (*) Naxos 8.550874. N. CO, Ward

Symphonies 19; 20; 37 in G: Introduction only (with remainder of the symphony by Michael Haydn)

(BB)  Naxos 8.550875. N. CO, Ward

Nicholas Ward's stylish Mozart series here offers six symphonies written in 1772. The orchestral string-phrasing is particularly elegant in slow movements (notably the wistful Andante of 15 in G and the charming melody which forms the centrepiece of 17), while the lively first movement of 18 in F effervesces neatly. Elsewhere Allegros are alert and strong. Excellent, full and well-balanced recording, though not ideally sharply detailed. 19 is scored for four horns, two in E flat alt, and they give added weight and character to the orchestral texture in outer movements. 20 is given extra brightness by a pair of trumpets. But it is the delectable Andante that catches the ear with its charming flute solo over muted violins. Mozart contributed just the rather grand opening Adagio maestoso to the symphony once mistakenly regarded as his 37. It is played most persuasively: this disc is well worth having on all counts.

Symphonies 19–23

🔑  Telarc CD 80217. Prague CO, Mackerras

Mackerras is equally lively in these early works from Mozart's Salzburg period. The surprising thing is how fast his speeds tend to be. In one instance the contrast is astonishing, when at a very brisk Andantino grazioso Mackerras turns the slow middle movement of 23 into a lilting Ländler, quite different from other performances. The recording is reverberant, as in the later symphonies, giving relatively weighty textures; with such light scoring, however, there is ample clarity, with braying horns riding beautifully over the rest.

Symphonies 24, K.173; 26, K.161a; 27, K.161b; 30, K.202

🔑  Telarc CD 80186. Prague CO, Mackerras

Where in later symphonies Mackerras chooses more relaxed speeds, here he tends to be more urgent, as in the finale of 26 or the Andantino grazioso slow movement of 27, where he avoids the questionable use of muted strings. The reverberation of the recording gives the impression of a fairly substantial orchestra, without loss of detail, and anyone fancying this particular group of early Mozart symphonies need not hesitate.

Symphonies 25, K.183; 32, K.318; 41 (Jupiter), K.551 (Naxos 8.550113)

Symphonies 27, K.199/161b; 33, K.319; 36 (Linz), K.425 (Naxos 8.550264)

